Supplement to The Weekly Kansas Chief

Father of Doniphan County

General A. W. Doniphan, in Whose Honor the County Was Named, Was Descended From a Spanish Cavalier—Ancestors Fought in the War of the Revolution—The General a Famous Soldier and One of the Greatest Criminal Advocates the Country Ever Produced—The Peer of All Orators of His Time and Generation.

In selecting a name for Doniphan County, the early settlers honored themselves by naming the county after one of the most famous characters in the annals of American history.

Subsequent events in the development and progress of the county have demonstrated the wisdom shown in selecting the name Doniphan, for time has proven that her citizens have been inspired by the name to live up to the highest ideals and lofty aspirations of the man in whose honor the county was named.

Away back in the long ago when the first settlers in this section of territorial Kansas were sufficiently numerous to organize a county, there was little hesitation in suggesting the name Doniphan to the proper authorities. The selection was a most appropriate one and it was a deserved tribute of honor to the distinguished and heroic gentleman who bore the name.

General A. W. Doniphan was a patriot, a warrior and an orator of the highest attainments. He was truly a gentleman of the old school. His deeds of valor in his country's cause stand out today as pre-eminent among the great military characters who have engraved their names on the pages of American history. Great national leaders of his time have said that his achievements during the Mexican war exceeded those of the great Xenophon and were unequalled in ancient or modern times.

The family from which General Doniphan was descended was powerful in the days when old Spain was practically mistress of the world. His great ancestor was a Spanish cavalier who gained marked distinction in the Moorish wars of Granada and he emigrated to Scotland while that country was under the rule of the Highland chieftains.

The original Cavalier Doniphan, of which there is any authentic record, had espoused the cause of Charles I and their loyalty to that unfortunate monarch caused the banishment to Virginia of the family. Two of Cavalier Doniphan's sons were with John Smith in Jamestown in 1607. They settled in the northern neck of Virginia, where Joseph Doniphan, the father of A. W. Doniphan, was born.

Patriotism was a commanding trait in the Doniphan character from the first generation down, and it was not surprising to see Joseph Doniphan take up arms under General George Washington in the Revolutionary war. He commanded a company of men from Fauquer County, Virginia, and at the battle of the Brandywine had a brother killed, who fell in his arms. When the American Republic had been established and the English forces thoroughly defeated, Captain Joseph Doniphan emigrated to Kentucky in 1791 and settled in Mason county, in the Blue Grass state.

Captain Joseph Doniphan married a granddaughter of the famous Englishman, Sir Sidney Smith, who came to Virginia in 1706 because he could not tolerate the degenerate and unholy actions of the ruling dynasty at home. The marriage of Captain Doniphan and Anne Smith took place during the year 1800 and the histories of the Kentucky families of those days state that "the bride was a most lovable and good woman who was destined to make a fine wife and mother."

The future General A. W. Doniphan was born in the Doniphan mansion in Mason county, Kentucky, July 8, 1808, and at the age of seven he was deprived of the guidance of his father through death in 1815. Captain Joseph Doniphan had been charitable and free hearted all his life and at his death his property had to be managed by somebody familiar with his affairs, as Mrs. Doniphan was not physically strong enough to supervise the management of the estate. Thomas S. Doniphan, the father of Col. John Doniphan, later of St. Joseph, took control of the family and sent A. W. Doniphan to live with friends at Augusta, Kentucky.

There the lad A. W. Doniphan went to school and grew to man's estate. At the age of twenty he was graduated from the Augusta college and in 1829 he was admitted to the bar as a lawyer. The next few months were given over to visiting the scenes of his childhood and looking about for the best locality in which to practice his chosen profession. The Western country was new at the time and his adventurous spirit urged his course toward Missouri.

About the middle of the year 1830 A. W. Doniphan came west and settled in Lexington, Mo. Nobody at his old home could reason out why he selected that town in which to settle, but in later years General Doniphan confided to personal friends that he settled there because the name of the town sounded kind of homelike, as there was a Lexington in Kentucky where he was born. After practicing law with remarkable success for a young advocate, A. W. Doniphan concluded there were better opportunities for a lawyer in Liberty, so he moved to the county seat of Clay county in 1833.

General Doniphan, although then but twenty-five years old, became eminent as a criminal lawyer soon after he settled in Liberty, and he had more business than he could very well attend. There was lots of crime around that section of Missouri at the time, and it seemed that murder was the order of the day. There were a few isolated cases of horse stealing, but the pastime was not much in favor with the criminal element, because they knew that if they got caught there would be no need of legal services, as instantaneous hanging was the unwritten law for such misdeeds at that time.

When the Mormons broke loose in the later '30's, A. W. Doniphan was appointed brigadier general in 1838, and after giving the forces of polygamy a sound whipping he received the surrender of Joseph Smith and all his cohorts. A peculiar incident in connection with the Mormon troubles was that after the surrender the General was retained by the Prophet to attend to all the law affairs of that obnoxious sect of fanatics.

Doniphan County Court House, Finished July 4, 1906

General Doniphan had considerable experience as a lawmaker also, for he was elected to the Missouri legislature in 1838 and 1840. His powerful personality and oratorical attainments commanded the respect of the members of the legislature to such a degree that his word was practically a law among them. No matter what General Doniphan wanted done or what kind of measure he wished enacted, the other members were so cowed by his manner and bearing that they invariably did his bidding.

At the breaking out of the Mexican War in 1846, General Doniphan was put in command of the First Missouri regiment, and marched his men, first to Santa Fe, now the capital of New Mexico, thence to Chihuahua, to Monterey and to the mouth of the Rio Grande. He fought several battles in the enemy's country, the most notable of which was at Sacramento on February 28, 1847, when, with 925 Missouri troops, he attacked 4,300 Mexicans in an intrenched position at the crossing of the Sacramento River eighteen miles from Chihuahua, and defeated them after a three hours' fight. General Doniphan's losses were insignificant, while the Mexicans lost over 300 in killed and had about the same number made prisoners. A special train and all the camp equipage of the Mexicans was also captured by the forces of General Doniphan.

With his command still intact, General Doniphan returned home by the Gulf of Mexico, the Mississippi and the Missouri rivers and arrived safe during the month of July, 1847, after having marched 3,200 miles by land and traveled over 3,000 miles by water, beside having fought and won a number of important battles in an enemy's country. The reception to General Doniphan and his men was a tremendous affair. His triumphs were heralded throughout the length and breadth, not only of Missouri, but all over the entire United States. The great military men of the day said that his famous march had no parallel in the history of the world, and Colonel Benton, in his speech of welcome to the Missouri veterans at St. Louis in July, 1847, said that General Doniphan and his men exceeded the achievements of Xenophon and was unequaled in either ancient or modern times.

In 1854 General Doniphan was again elected to the Missouri legislature, and he was a member of the peace conference in 1861. Since his return from the Mexican War he had followed the practice of his profession with unlimited success, at his home in Liberty, until 1862, when he moved to St. Louis and was appointed pension agent. Late in 1865 General Doniphan moved to Richmond, Mo., where he resided until his death in 1887, in the eightieth year of his age.

The career of General Doniphan was more wonderful as a lawyer than as a military man. He defended 182 men for murder and not one of them ever went within shadow of the gallows. Governor Woodson, of Missouri, in a public speech in St. Joseph, after the death of General Doniphan, said he had heard Clay, Webster, Marshall and Menifee and other great orators of national fame, but General Doniphan was the peer of them all.

First Printing Press

The first printing press set up west of the Missouri River, in Kansas, was brought to Doniphan County February 2, 1843, by Rev. S. M. Irvin, and put in operation at the old mission.

For some years Father Irvin and Rev. William Hamilton had realized the futility of trying to make headway in educating the Indians without elementary printed texts.

So the printing outfit was sent for to New York, and when the Indians saw it in operation, they called it an evil spirit and almost stampeded. It was only through the gentle persuasion of Father Irvin that they were induced to come close and examine the mechanism.

A number of grammars and text books in both English and the Indian language were set up and printed, the work, both literary and typographical, being done by Reverend Father Irvin and Rev. William Hamilton.

The title of one of the books printed at the mission, and now in the library of the Highland University, is as follows: "An Iowny Grammar, Illustrating the Principles of the Language Used By the Iowny, Otoe and Missouri. Prepared and Printed By Rev. William Hamilton and Rev. S. M. Irvin, Under the Direction of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, Iowny and Soc Mission, 1848. The book contains 152 pages, and is interleaved.

HENRY J. CALNAN

The cut above depicts a true likeness of Henry J. Calnan, the present editor and proprietor of the Weekly Kansas Chief. He is making a success of the paper and its financial standing is good. His success is attributed by the friends of The Chief to the fact that he has for several years been a strong advocate of close application. He is an able exponent of Kansas and tells others through the columns of his paper of his belief. He is not luke-warm in his party affiliations—during the troublous period in 1912 when Colonel Roosevelt formed the progressive faction of the Republican party, Mr. Calnan never swerved from his original devotions, but remained true to Mr. Taft, and Doniphan County returned a majority for that candidate. The most of The Chief's readers are people who comprise the best citizenship of Doniphan County.

The Chief Office and Its Force

The Chief is owned and edited by H. J. Calnan, who took charge of it about twelve years ago. Mr. Calnan learned the printer's trade when a boy. At the age of 19 he owned and edited a paper in a small town in Iowa for a short time. Two years later he entered the service of the Burlington Railway Company at Burlington, Iowa, as locomotive fireman, later being promoted to engineer. As a locomotive engineer he ran a locomotive on several of the leading railroads of the West. He also was engineer on the Mexican National, his run being from San Luis Portisi to Saltillo, Old Mexico. Returning from Mexico, he decided to return to the printing business and located at Powhattan, Kansas, where he bought a small newspaper. A year later he was married to Miss Martha Swisher. They have one son, Charles, now sixteen years of age, and his father fondly hopes that his son will succeed him as editor and proprietor of The Chief. Mr. Calnan assumed control of The Chief, April 1, 1904, on a lease. A year or so later he purchased the plant from Mrs. Sol Miller, whose husband had started the paper in 1857. Mr. Calnan has made some money in the newspaper business, most of which is invested in Troy property. The Chief plant has been improved from the day it passed into his hands and is now probably the best equipped newspaper office in Kansas. It is located on South Main street in a building owned by Mr. Calnan, and the picture shows the exterior of the office and the "force." In the center of the picture are Mr. and Mrs. Calnan. Mrs. Calnan has always helped her husband in the office. Next to Mrs. Calnan is Lester O. Hathaway, who has been in the employ of Mr. Calnan for over eighteen years. He is a capable and all around young man, who can run anything in the office from the linotype to the combination on the safe. To the right of the editor is Chester Woods, an all around printer, who has worked in The Chief office over two years. Next is Charles Calnan, who is becoming expert on the linotype and learning the business from the basement up. He is in High School and works in the office during vacation and at such other times when he is not in school. With the improved machinery less than half the force is required now than formerly. The Chief is the oldest newspaper in Kansas, all others preceding its birth having suspended or been absorbed by later papers.

The Calnan home is situated in the northwest part of Troy on a twelve acre tract. The house, which was built two years ago, is modern in every way and was built for comfort and convenience. One novelty is the garage for their automobile, under the porch, the cement floor of the porch and the brick walls that support it, making a warm, cozy garage in which nothing ever freezes. The place is stocked with cows, hogs, chickens, turkeys, etc., which the alfalfa and corn raised on the place, provide feed for, and the Calnans enjoy all the pleasures and comforts of the modern farm, while living but five blocks from their newspaper office.

WALTER B. MONTGOMERY

We herewith submit for your approval, the Pictorial Historical Supplement of The Weekly Kansas Chief. After long months of ceaseless toil and the expenditure of a large amount of money in its formation, it is with pride and satisfaction that we present this volume to the world. First of all we sincerely thank every one of those who so cheerfully contributed to its pages, for their generous assistance helped to make possible the culmination of this edition.

The object of this history is to advertise Doniphan County and her people and preserve from the oblivion to which it was too rapidly tending, some account of the experiences of the intrepid men and women who paved the way in Doniphan County, for the development of this part of Kansas; to give dates and statistics of importance, and to record other matters of interest, too valuable to be lost. Many of the actors in the drama of colonization have already passed from the stage, and with them has vanished all record of some of the exciting scenes in which they were participants during the territorial days of Kansas.

Not being content with mere statements of events, we pried into the past—delved into the family annals—scrutinized the files of the Weekly Kansas Chief and other newspapers, and the records of the Kansas State Historical Society, in order to gather accurate dates and information, and for the verification of same. Had it not been for the preservation of the files of the Weekly Kansas Chief, the compilation of this edition and the verification of dates would have been a much more difficult task. The editor predicts that many important events have been omitted, owing to the fact that the book would have been too voluminous had we covered every event. Extreme care has been exercised to make this record accurate, and it has necessitated an enormous amount of work and expense; much greater than we had anticipated. Many matters, however, could not be verified; and no doubt this record contains some errors, and we ask our readers to be lenient with us—and when a mistake is discovered, to write to us immediately, so that corrections may be made and announced in The Chief, for future compilation.

Like the grand old veteran for whom it was named, Doniphan County has never faced a crisis in any other than a spirit of willingness. It is rich in history, and the men and women of Doniphan County are immeasurably proud of the past and their own present accomplishments. The changes wrought in but a little more than three-fourths of a century have been marvelous, yet the development is only in its infancy.

We want this Historical Edition to tell to the entire nation the career of this county, where the editor and compiler of this edition was born and reared. We want it to be a historical work that will stand for all time and be a credit to Doniphan County. Copies will be placed in the libraries of historical associations throughout the United States, and sent to those interested who have left this county—sons and daughters who have cast their lot with other sections of the country from the Atlantic to the Pacifc, and from Canada to the Gulf of Mexico.

Therefore it is with a feeling of pleasurable pride that we present this publication. The work has been difficult and trying, but it has been a work of love and enjoyment. That it will be accepted by the people of Doniphan County in the same spirit, and that in some measure it will find its niche in the great story of the generations to come, is the wish of the editor and compiler; and if the editor of this work has done something worth while, it is because he has written of a worth-while domain, of a worth-while people and under the inspiration of a worth-while cause.

WALTER B. MONTGOMERY,
Troy, Kansas.

N. B.—We would be pleased to communicate with any newspaper man who contemplates the publication of a special or historical edition.

History of Doniphan County, Kansas

The object of this history is to preserve to the present and future residents of the county, some account of the experiences of the race of intrepid men and women who paved the way for that remarkable development which this country has so recently experienced; to give some dates and statistics of importance, and to record other matters of interest, too valuable to be lost. Many of the actors in the drama of colonization have already passed from the stage, and with them has vanished all record of some of the exciting scenes in which they were participants.

The history of the native Indian tribes is somewhat meager. That powerful nation of the Indians called the Pawnees, which in all probability, had once held almost undisputable sway over this country, had, long before the arrival of the white man, given place to a race of Indians known as Iowas. This people, too, soon vanished before the "onward march of civilization."

When first opened for immigration, much of eastern Kansas was in possession of various tribes of Indians, who had been removed from the East and placed upon reservations.

Aboriginal Owners of the Lands of Doniphan County, Kan.

The land of Doniphan County was part of the public domain, or of the "Great American Desert," as it was called until the year 1837, when it was ceded, by the general government, to the Kickapoo, Sac and Iowa Indians. The Kickapoos possessed that part lying south of a line running west from a point on the Missouri River, near where Bellemont was laid out. North of this line, the Sac held a reserve of fifty sections.

Their northern boundry ran through the section north of Highland, and extended west for quantity. North of this the Iowas owned all of what is now Doniphan County.

These respective tribes possessed and controlled this land until the year 1854, when, by treaty, all the lands belonging to these tribes in Doniphan County were relinquished to the government and became a part of the State of Kansas. The Kickapoos moved south. The Iowas and Sacs moved to that part of their own reserves which lies near the mouth of the Nemeha River, where they remained for several years.

The Iowas, at the time of their taking possession of this land, in 1837, numbered over 800 souls. On leaving this part of their lands, in 1854, they numbered about 300.

The Sacs, on coming in, numbered 300; on removal, in 1854, numbered only about 125.

The Iowas, in 1837, were led and governed by four chiefs, respectively, White Cloud, No-Heart, Walking-in-the-Rain and Walking Cloud. These chiefs all passed away during their sojourn in this part of the land.

The Sac band was under the leadership of a brave called Hesoquat or Bear-in-the-Fork-of-a-Tree, assisted by two so-called chiefs, all of whom have since disappeared.

The leading spirit and mind of the Kickapoos was Ken-e-kuk, who died near the village in Atchison County, which bears his name.

Early Explorers.

Sixty years ago there was scarcely a vestige of civilization in that part of Kansas known as Doniphan County. For untold ages it had been covered with a waving sea of wild grasses; vast herds of buffaloes had, for numberless years, wandered almost unmolested across it. Its solitude had been broken only by occasional bands of nomadic savages in search of prey or plunder. It was a part of that section of the country which old geographers had christened the "Great American Desert," "a barren waste, incapable of agricultural production and uninhabitable." But it could not always remain a terra incognita. The advancing wave of that great tide of civilization which had crossed the Atlantic, and transferred a wilderness into an empire, must at length reach this part of the American continent. That part of Kansas now known as Doniphan County was crossed by Major Stephen H. Long, in 1819 or 1820. We extract the following from a book entitled, "Account of an Expedition from Pittsburg to the Rocky Mountains, performed in the years 1819 and 1820, by order of John C. Calhoun, Secretary of War, under the command of Maj. Stephen H. Long:"

"The country southwest of the Missouri, between the Konzas and the Platte, is drained principally by Wolf River and the great Nemeha. These rivers, like the Nodaway and Nishnabotna, which enter the Missouri nearly opposite them, from the northeast, rise in the prairies at an elevation of probably forty to fifty feet above the level of the Missouri. As they descend their valleys become gradually wider, embosom a few trees, and at length, near their entrance into the Missouri Valley, are forests of considerable extent. The surface of these prairies present a constant succession of small rounded hills, becoming larger and more abrupt as you approach the beds of the rivers. The soil is deep, reposing usually on horizontal beds of argillaceous sandstone and secondary limestone. The soil superimposed upon these strata of limestone is a calcareous loam. Near the rivers it is intermixed with sand; this is also the case with the soil of the high prairies about the Konzas village.

The prairies for many miles on each side produce abundance of good pasturage, but as far as our observation has extended, the best soil is a margin from ten to twelve miles in breadth along the western bank of the river. In the summer, very little water is to be found in the prairies, all the smaller streams failing. Even though the season be not unusually dry, on account of the want of wood and water, the settlements will be for a long time confined to the immediate valleys of the Missouri, the Konzas and the larger rivers; but it is probable forests will hereafter be cultivated in these vast woodless regions, which now form so great a proportion of the country; and wells may be made to supply the deficiency of running water.

In 1804-5-6, Lewis and Clarke proceeded up the Missouri, thence across the Rocky Mountains and down the River Columbia to the Pacific Ocean.

Geographical and Topographical.

Doniphan is in the first tier of counties south of Nebraska, and west of the Missouri River. It is bounded on the north and east by the Missouri River, on the south by Atchison County, and on the west by Brown County. The Missouri River, bounding the county on the north and east, gives the county 92 miles of river front. The greatest length of the county north and south is 27 miles, and its greatest width is 25 miles.

The county contains 379 square miles, or 242,569 acres of land. About 110,000 acres are under cultivation. The bottom lands are about 25 per cent; the uplands, about 75 per cent; forest (government survey), 16 per cent; cultivation, 84 per cent; average width of bottoms, one mile.

The general surface of the county is undulating. A writer in the North American Review gives the following admirable description of the matchless topography of Kansas in general, but applicable in every sense to this county.

"The most perfect display of the prairies is found in the eastern parts of Kansas and Nebraska. It is no exaggeration to pronounce this region, as left by the hand of Nature, the most beautiful country in its landscape upon the face of the earth. Here the forest is restricted to narrow fringes along the rivers and streams, the courses of which are thus defined as far as the eye can reach, while all between is a broad expanse of meadow lands, carpeted with the richest verdure and wearing the appearance of artistically graded lawns. They are familiarly called the rolling prairies, because the land rises and falls in gentle swells, which attain an elevation of thirty feet, more or less, and descend again to within the original level within a distance of one or more miles. The crest lines of these motionless waves of land intersect each other at every conceivable angle, the effect of which is to bring into view the most extended landscape, and to show the dark green foliage of the forest trees skirting streams in pleasing contrast with the light green of the prairie grasses. In their spring covering of vegetation, these prairies wear the semblance of an old and once highly cultivated country, from the soil of which every inequality of surface, every stone and every brush has been carefully removed, and the surface rolled down to absolute uniformity. The marvel is suggested how Nature could have kept these verdant fields in such luxuriance after man had apparently abandoned them to waste."

The principal streams are as follows: Wolf River runs north, entering through the north and east portion of the county. Independence Creek and its tributaries drain the southern portion of the county, and Peter's Creek is the largest in the eastern part. Other small creeks flow into the Missouri River.

The county is well supplied with springs, and good well water can be reached from twenty to sixty feet.

The timber supply of Doniphan County is better than that of any other county in the state. All the streams have borders or belts of timber, varying from forty rods to three miles in width. These streams are so well distributed over the county that the distribution of timber could hardly be better equalized. The native varieties are cottonwood; white, black, red, swamp and burr oak; white and water elm; bass, sycamore, willow, maple, black walnut, box elder, hickory and numerous smaller varieties.

Organization

Doniphan County was organized on Monday, September 15, 1855. The County Court consisted at that time of J. P. Blair, A. Dunning, E. V. B. Rogers, County Commissioners; C. B. Whitehead, Sheriff, and J. A. Van Arsdale, Clerk pro tem.

The first order made by the board, dated September 15, 1855, was that J. A. Van Arsdale be appointed Clerk pro tem, to serve as such, until a Clerk be duly appointed and qualified.

The following is the oath of office of one of the first sheriffs:

United States of America,
Territory of Kansas, ss.

I, C. B. Whitehead, do solemnly swear upon the Holy Evangelists of Almighty God, that I will support and sustain the constitution of the United States; and that I will support and sustain the provisions of an act entitled to organize the Territories of Kansas and Nebraska, and the provisions of the law of the United States, commonly known as the Fugitive Slave Law, and faithfully and impartially, and to the best of our ability, demean myself in the discharge of my duties in the office of Sheriff in the County of Doniphan, in said Territory. So help me God.

C. B. Whitehead.

Sworn to and subscribed before the undersigned, this 29th day of September, A. D. 1855. (L. S.)

Joel P. Blair, Judge,
Probate Court, D. C. K. T.

On Monday, Sept. 17, 1855, the County of Doniphan was divided into five municipal townships, called Iowa, Wolf River, Burr Oak, Washington and Wayne.

In 1856, the county was re-organized into seven townships: Iowa, Wolf River, Burr Oak, Washington, Wayne, Center and Marion. Union Township was organized in 1878, making eight townships in the county at the present time.

The county, when organized, was named Doniphan, in honor of Gen. Alexander W. Doniphan, of Missouri, who commanded a regiment of Missouri cavalry during the Mexican war. Marching across the plains, he took a leading part in the conquest of New Mexico. He was a zealous partisan in the agitation which arose in the opening of Kansas Territory to settlement. The county seat was first established at a point called Whitehead, on the Missouri River, about six miles from St. Joseph. The name of the town was afterward changed to Bellemont.

Troy was selected as the County seat of justice in the fall of 1855, but the court house was not built until the summer of 1856. The first meeting of the County Commissioners at Troy was October 20, 1856. They met in the new court house, which was built on the north side of the public square, and was the first story of what was known as the Higby House.

Pioneer Life

Pioneer life, in all time, has been characterized by incidents peculiar either to the locality or the make-up of the pioneers themselves. Western pioneer life has been subjected to conditions common to the experience of all. The primary element in the composition of those who have battled successfully with the privations and hardships incident to the settlements on the frontier, without companions, save their "household gods," the inhabitants of the prairie or forest in human or animal form, away from the echoes of civilization, depending for protection from savage or border ruffian, and for the means of subsistence, upon his own right arm, inured to toil, was "pluck," backed by a deliberate purpose to succeed. Thus endowed, the pioneer, having first determined where his home should be, proceeds to the erection of his cabin after the prescribed model. Descriptively, it was composed of round logs, with a door cut out on one side large enough to permit ingress and egress, with a small section cut from an upper and a lower of two adjacent logs for a window on another side. Several logs were entirely cut away for a fireplace. The cabin was covered with clapboards kept down by weight poles, kept apart by the refuse of clapboard lumber.

The furniture was all unique and peculiar. Blocks of wood or benches, instead of chairs, the table being sometimes the "family chest." The cabin being complete and furnished, "breaking prairie" was the next thing in order; then preparing the ground for the first crop of wheat or corn. Before this crop was matured, supplies were necessarily drawn from other available sources which could be found at the trading posts and stores along the Missouri River.

At that time the prairies abounded with various kinds of game. Herds of buffalos, elk, antelope and other game were frequently seen as late as 1858. Since then Eastern hunters have made sad havoc with these animals, and very few of them can now be found in the State of Kansas.

The first settlement in Doniphan County was made in 1837, by the Rev. S. M. Irvin, at the "Mission," about two miles east of the present townsite of Highland. We give below the names of the oldest or first settlers, as far as they can be ascertained:

From 1847 to 1854. J. R. Whitehead, Peter Cadue, Z. Hays, Benj. Harding, J. N. Gibbins, J. F. W. H. and H. Forman, J. W. Pemberton, Joe Utt and others. In 1854, S. Anderson, H. N. Beauchamp, B. H. Brock, W. H. H. Curtis, R. P. Curtis, G. Gerardy, W. M. Hamner, J. H. Harper, J. Harding, N. Lancaster, C. Poirier, A. F. Payne, J. Randolph, W. K. Shaw, W. G. Tate, R. M. Williams, B. S. Wharton, Charles Rodgers and others.

In 1855 W. H. Bayless, W. H. Decker, S. D. M. and W. R. Gilmore, A. H. Groniger, M. J. Larson, D. Iee, D. Landis, A. J. Minier, J. McNemee, D. Miller, G. B. Nuzum, J. R. Pierson, P. Plank, L. D. Stocking, X. K. Stout, L. Rullman, R. Tracy, J. F. Wilson, W. T. Wood. In 1856, A. Bennett, E. Collins, N. T. Collins, W. Chapple, J. H. Earhart, W. H. Forbes, P. Groh, J. F. Hampson, W. Hill, C. Jackson, P. E. Iles, A. Kent, J. Kent, J. Leigh, S. B. Marcum, R. C. Mailer, J. F. Mauck, E. Moetinger, J. H. Martin, H. Swinney, A. R. Renfro, F. Sinker, J. L. Tallman, H. C. Wykert, Jap Calvert, W. D. Rippey, W. T. Wood, Mrs. Hester Ann Schaufler, Frederick S. Moser, Daniel Graves, Isaac Graves and J. J. Baker.

During the years 1857 and 1858, the county settled up very rapidly.

People of Doniphan County

It has been said that the people of Kansas are more thoroughly cosmoplitan in their make-up than those of any other country in the world. Doniphan County does not constitute an exception to this rule. The preponderating element in her population were born in the Eastern and Southern states. They left, it may be, better social and educational advantages ior the rich soil, the splendid native pasturage, cheaper lands and the superior climate of Kansas. They were mainly from western Pennsylvania, soutnern Ohio and Indiana, with a few from nearly all the Western states, from Kentucky and Tennessee, and some from New England and New York. Next is the German element, then natives of the British Isles, followed by people from almost every power and principality on the continent. The British-American provinces are also represented.

The people generally are noted for their industry, thrift, intelligence and morality.

Growth in Population.

In 1860 the population of Doniphan County was 8,083. In 1870, the United States census gave Doniphan County 13,969.

In 1875 the population was 13,943; in 1876 it was 12,831; in 1878 it was 15,122, and in 1880, 14,258; in 1910, 13,612, and in 1915, 16,544.

The increase in population between the years of 1860 and 1870 was 5,836; between 1870 and 1875, the decrease was 26; between 1875 and 1876, the decrease was 1,112; between 1876 and 1878, the increase was 2,291, and between 1878 and 1880, the decrease was 864. The increase between 1880 and 1910 was 564; between 1910 and 1915, 2,932.

Beginning with 1860, the increase in ten years was 5,836; in fifteen years, 5,860; in sixteen years, 4,748; in eighteen years, 7,042, and in twenty years, 6,175.

The Irvins and the Indians

Pioneer Presbyterian Missionaries Came to Doniphan County With the Iowa and Sac Indians When the Government Moved These Red People From Their Lands In Missouri and Located Them on the New Reservation at the Old Mission, Between Highland and Sparks, in 1837—Rev. Samuel M. Irvin and His Wife Established the First Permanent White Settlement in What Is Now Doniphan County.

Any written history of Doniphan County would lack the essential elements of interest which did not begin with the principal characters who were instrumental in the making of that history.

Consequently, it is but fitting and proper to primarily deal with the personalities whose courage and self-sacrifice is responsible for the establishment of the first permanent white settlement in what is now Doniphan County.

It is to the God-fearing zeal of the Rev. S. M. Irvin and his good wife, Eliza, that the residents of the county may give thanks for the unselfish labors which paved the way for its transformation from forbiddingly wild country to the beautiful land it is today.

Those pioneer missionaries suffered untold hardships and overcame difficulties that to the living generation would seem to be absolutely insurmountable. Their perseverance in the noble work to which they dedicated their lives has been rewarded by the advancement of civilization and the refining influences of the gospel they so faithfully spread.

Old Mission, Located Two Miles East of Highland, Kansas

The Irvins came to Doniphan County when the Iowa and the Sac tribes of Indians were transferred to the new reservation on the land which now stretches out from Highland. They had been with the Indians on the old tribal lands in Missouri, preaching the gospel and teaching the way to civilization. When the order for removal came, those good people realized the dangers and privations that confronted them in going to a frontier country with Indians that were both warlike and wild, but the Irvins had the true pioneer missionary spirit, and unhesitatingly accompanied the redmen to their new homes.

Reverend Mr. Irvin and his wife first took up missionary work among the Iowa band of Indians, on April 10, 1837, on the reservation then known as the Platte Purchase, in Missouri. They had been sent out by the Presbyterian board of foreign missions, to labor among the Indians, and were recognized in the work by the United States government.

By a treaty with the government the Indians were required to move to the new lands during that year, and the Irvins had plenty of time to become acquainted with the customs, habits and history of their new charges before the journey westward was undertaken. Upon their arrival at the Platte reservation the missionaries found the Indians in a deplorable condition. They were wild, warlike and roving and their habitations were of the most frail and temporary kind, consisting mainly of bark houses and skin tents.

But the Irvins were brave and resolved to do the work appointed or sacrifice their lives in the effort. The Iowa Indians, all told, numbered 830, and were distressingly poor. They had no property of a tangible nature, except ponies, dogs and scanty fragments of clothing. In describing the conditions of the Indians as he actually found them, Father Irvin said later: "With the men war was the chief employment and great delight. The women also entered considerably into the war spirit and took a large part in the war dance. The more honored in the circle would display on their person the mutilated parts of bodies of their enemies as evidence of their prowess."

With such terrible conditions confronting the Irvins it is wonderful that they had the fortitude to undertake the work of civilizing and teaching the Indians away West, in a still yet wilder country. But their noble spirits were inspired for the labor before them, and they cheerfully took up the journey to the new lands beyond the Missouri River.

The trip was slow and tedious, as the country through which they traversed was rough and the Indians were sullen and morose. The passage of the Missouri was fraught with much danger through the ponies balking and refusing to go on the frail craft that was tossing on the swiftly moving current. There are no records at hand which tell of the time occupied in making the journey, but it is thought to have been many weeks.

The Iowa Indians were led by their chief, White Cloud, with No-Hart, Little Wolf and The Stealer as sub-chiefs, and the Sacs and Foxes had as their chiefs The Bear, White Sturgeon, Hard Fish, Fox and Jumping Fish. On their arrival at the new reservation, which included a large section of the northern half of Doniphan County, the total number of Indians was 2,500. The first work of the missionaries was to provide themselves with some kind of shelter, but the Indians were indifferent to anything but their customary mode of habitation. They were satisfied to live in bark huts or any other primitive kind of shelter that suited their fancy and their dispositions.

The first building in which Reverend Mr. Irvin and his wife had put up at the Mission was constructed in true frontier style. The material was all of round logs as they came from the forest, and scalped afterward. It was one story high, covered with clapboards held in place with weight poles, and had a puncheon floor. The chimney was in harmony with the crudeness of the rest of the building, and was made of sticks and clay, and the openings between the logs with a mortar made of the same clay.

The first winter on the new reservation was marked by great suffering, as there was little game and the Indians almost reached the verge of starvation. The weather was bitterly cold and the Indians were either too improvident or too lazy to gather firewood sufficient to maintain warmth in their rude wigwams. When there was any wood cut or trees chopped down these household chores had to be performed by the squaws, unless they wanted to freeze to death. And the missionaries fared but little better than their uncivilized charges. In making his pilgrimages through the reservation or on trips to the trading post, where St. Joseph now is, Father Irvin suffered untold hardships, and not infrequently he was obliged to drive the yoke of oxen over snow banks which covered the growth of timber completely, to make a path through the wild country in that fashion.

In an account of his labors during the first few years among the Indians, written by Father Irvin, he states: "The year after the Iowas moved to their new homes, the government, under treaty stipulation, built for them at the Mission five double log houses, with a passage of ten feet between, being equal to ten houses of sixteen by eighteen feet, each with a shingle roof, glass windows, floors and doors, and with good stone chimneys; also fenced and broke 200 acres of ground, in ten-acre lots. The rails were soon used for camp fires and the houses, some of which were occupied for a short time, were eventually abandoned. The doors, floors, windows, and all that could be, were sold for whisky and trinkets, and the logs were eventually burned. Thus in a few years the houses were not to be found and the place where fields had been fenced, could not be distinguished from the prairie.

"Under the provisions of the same treaty 100 head of milch cows and the same number of stock hogs were delivered to them; also a large quantity of farming utensils. The cattle and hogs were soon devoured for food, and the farm tools were traded off for liquor and the like, so that in a very short time all was gone. A water mill, built by the government, at a cost of $2,800, was burned to ashes; whisky shops gathered around and drunkenness prevailed to a fearful extent. Under its demoralizing influence it was often the case that a brother would fall by the hand of a brother, or father by the hand of a son."

These conditions were sufficient to almost knock the heart out of any person less courageous and hopeful than the good Father Irvin, who never gave up, but with the utmost faith persevered in his work to the end

The water mill mentioned by Father Irvin as having been burned by the Indians, and which was provided for by the treaty of 1836, was situated on Mosquito Creek, about 16½ miles east of the mission. This mill was burned by the Indians in a spirit of pure wantonness. Another mill was erected by the government on Mill Creek, north of the mission. This was burned in the same manner. The Indians would get drunk and in a spirit of revenge would then destroy their own property because it smacked of governmental authority.

The Sacs had an old-fashioned treadmill at the agency, which was kept working for about ten years, or until the erection of a steam mill at Iowa Point, in 1857.

One of the saddest experiences of Father Irvin during his first few years at the mission was the difficulty he encountered in receiving any word from his home in Pennsylvania. He was a home-loving farmer boy always, and the fact that he was in delicate health when he sought the appointment to be an Indian missionary, caused his parents to worry their hearts out for his safety. This, coupled with their knowledge that his work of conversion and civilization among a warlike people added more to the burden of his labor, because he could not bear to have his dear old parents suffer any pangs of anxiety.

When Father Irvin first came to the mission the only way to get any mail was by going to Liberty, Clay County, Mo., after it. The distance was over one hundred miles, and few persons could make the round trip on horseback in less than seven or eight days, according to the state of the weather. The good Father could not afford to leave his charges for that length of time, as the Indian traders were neutralizing his work as a missionary by introducing liquor and other forms of dissipation among his people. So at the best, all he could do was take a week off twice a year and ride fast both ways, for his mail at Liberty. This journey was usually undertaken in the spring and fall.

The mail difficulty was, however, solved to a great extent in 1840, when the government, on June 10, of that year, established a postoffice at Robidoux's trading post, then called "Blacksnake Hills," and now known the world over as St. Joseph, Mo. While the distance was not great, even in those days it invariably took the mission folks from two to four days to get their mail, with ox teams.

The Irvins continued their good work with a fair average of success until 1842, when the great pathfinder, Gen. John C. Fremont, discovered the south pass through the Rocky Mountains, thus giving an open trail to the Pacific Coast. After that things began to pick up around the mission and in Doniphan County. The first emigrant train to the Golden West over the newly discovered trail passed through what is now Doniphan County in that year, going by the mission on its journey of 2,000 miles, which took six months, with ox teams.

The year 1843 saw a real improvement at the mission, when the first printing press to cross the Missouri River was installed there. The Rev. William Hamilton and his wife (Julia Ann McGiffin) had been associated with the Irvins at the mission since the winter after it was established, and upon the arrival of the printing outfit the work of civilization and education was carried on with renewed vigor. Mr. Hamilton was familiar with the language of the Iowas and Father Irvin had a rudimentary knowledge of the printing craft, gained while performing as a "devil" in his home village in Pennsylvania. So the two missionaries pooled their assets and set to work earnestly in the cause of progress and civilization.

The Iowas had as kindly a feeling for Mr. Hamilton as they had for the reverend Father, if such can be said, that they ever, as a body, had a kindly feeling for any white man. Mr. Irvin had taught them both English and Iowa while they were on their old reservation in Missouri, and the printing press gave him the opportunity to convert his knowledge to good advantage in the cause of education and civilization. So the missionaries decided to publish some godly and wholesome literature in the hope of advancing their red charges along the road to understanding the ways of the white man.

Reverend Mr. Hamilton at once turned editor and wrote "copy" in the Iowa tongue to conform with English pronounciation, and Father Irvin set the type. Then the two became real printers by striking off the sheets together, then folding and binding them. Reverend Mr. Hamilton next taught the children to read. The little books so uniquely printed in such a wild country consisted of an elementary translation of the children's catechism, containing 101 pages; a grammar of 150 pages, and a hymn book of 50 hymns in the Iowa tongue. The first sixteen chapters of Matthew's gospel were later printed

The mission assumed a real business-like aspect early in 1845, when the Presbyterian board of foreign missions began the erection of a fine building. It was three stories in height, 106 feet long and 37 feet wide, containing thirty rooms, two of which—the dining hall on the first floor, and the chapel on the second floor—were 34 by 30 feet each. The first story was of cut stone, the upper stories of brick, with a belfry over the center, the apex of which was fifty feet from the base.

The stone for the new building came from a quarry near where Highland Station now is, and the bricks were home-made on a spot a few hundred yards from the site of the building. The shingles, doors and windows and all the finishing lumber was shipped from Pittsburg, Pa., to St. Joseph, Mo., and hauled from there to the mission with ox teams. Work on the building consumed almost a year, and it was along in 1846 when it was ready for occupancy.

During the nine years previous to the erection of the new mission building the missionary work among the Indians was carried on by Father Irvin and his faithful assistants at their homes, or the crazy-looking wigwams they called their homes. Industry, morality, cleanliness and sobriety were the principal subjects taught, but the environment of the children was so rotten that one wonders how Father Irvin made any progress at all.

The new mission building worked a wonderful improvement in a short time, as the excitement created among the younger element of the Indians caused them to look with amazement at its magnificence. So it can readily be imagined that there was not much trouble in getting some of the more advanced pupils to go to school there. This was especially the case with a number of the girls who had been learning sewing and other domestic virtues under the tutelage of Mrs. Irvin and Mrs. Hamilton.

When business was started up in the new building special attention was given to the culinary department and several Indian girls flocked to the kitchen to see how the good things were cooked, and then eat most of them afterward. Harriet Wallace, a friend of the Indians, from away back East, held down the position of head cook, and she was assisted occasionally by Mrs. Higley, one of the assistant teachers in the school. The most difficult part of the instruction in the kitchen was to get the young Indian girls accustomed to the use of water, especially when it came to washing dishes. It seemed for awhile to be impossible to impress upon them the fact that a clean utensil should be furnished for use every time. The girls in their own original way, were inclined to the theory that it was useless to clean anything that would soon get dirty again. But they overcame all that in time and many good Indian housekeepers were graduated from the mission in the years that followed.

Work on the farm had been resuscitated, and by 1847 there were almost one hundred acres under cultivation. As has been the custom with all Indians, from time immemorial, all the work of the family, except hunting and fighting, was delegated to the women folks, and this situation continued in the cultivation of the mission farm. The boys who were large enough to work wouldn't, and the younger ones were too little to be of any use. So in those days of long ago at the mission, it was the rule to "let the women do the work."

As the mission was under the jurisdiction of the government, it was incumbent upon Father Irvin to make reports at stated intervals to the Indian agent regarding the progress of the missionary work among the younger Indians. All hope had been abandoned for reform or even decency among the old heads. In his report for 1848, Father Irvin stated that "one-half of the teaching and learning is done in the Iowa language and the other in the English. This seems to combine the advantages of giving them useful ideas in their own language, which they can understand, and at the same time of gradually introducing the English language. The scholars have memorized in their own language a number of hymns, which they sing with ease, and also a good collection of questions, which they answer with readiness. Most of the boys are small and unable to do much on the farm, but we find them as willing to do what they can as white boys of the same age. Our help for carrying on the school and mission, with the wages allowed, is as follows:

| William Hamilton and wife | $200 |
| S. M. Irvin and wife | 200 |
| John Myers and wife | 200 |
| Two hired girls, $50 each | 100 |

"There are also seven white children in the mission family, who have allowance of $25 each—$175."

These figures will give the reader a fair idea of the board's liberality to the missionaries who devoted their lives to the work of improving the condition of the Indian.

The efforts of Mr. Hamilton and Father Irvin to get the Indians to attend school in greater numbers met with indifferent success, and for the six years following 1848, little progress in either the educational or other work had been made. That year Col. Daniel Vanderslice was agent at the Great Nemaha agency and in his report to him, Father Irvin stated there were but forty-four children attending the mission school. These were from the tribes of the Blackfeet, Sioux, Pawnees, Sacs, Foxes and Iowas, a majority of which were from the latter tribe.

In this report Father Irvin plainly pointed out the difficulties of making better progress in the school until the Indians had more settled and industrious habits of living. There were 115 acres under fence at this time, half of which was under cultivation, and the other half pasture for the thirty cattle, three horses and one yoke of oxen. There were forty pork hogs on the mission grounds, also.

Letters written by Father Irvin in and after the year 1854, show that he was becoming somewhat disheartened over the prospects of making any better headway with his work in the years to come. He had been laboring for seventeen years when he made his report to Colonel Vanderslice, and the fact that the number of scholars had not materially increased for many years seemed to have a depressing effect on him. With only forty-four pupils from five tribes, ranging over a territory westward from the Missouri River for over 1,000 miles to Snake River, in Idaho, the good missionary seemed to realize that the splendid educational facilities at the mission had been wasted. It seems reasonable that had his zeal known no bounds, he would have given up in despair, but he persevered.

The Iowa and Sac mission ceased to exist in 1863, as such, when there seemed to be nothing further there to do. By the treaties of 1854, which diminished the two reserves, the Indians went north to their reservation on the Great Nemaha, between White Cloud and Rulo, Neb., where new and better agency buildings had been erected than had been at the disposal of the agent at the old agency on the Sac lands in Doniphan County. The Iowas, before their departure, and in fact before the treaties were signed, showed their gratitude to Father Irvin and the Presbyterian board of foreign missions for the efforts made to bring them to a condition so that they might help themselves. The Iowas, by provisions of their treaty, gave the Presbyterian board of foreign missions 320 acres of fine land where the mission building stood, together with 160 acres of well timbered land. This was subsequently divided into smaller tracts and long ago passed into other hands.

The Sacs and Foxes likewise remembered the sacrifices of Father Irvin in trying to lead them toward civilization, for Article 5 of their new treaty provided: "At the request of the Indians, it is hereby agreed that the Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church shall have a tract of 160 acres of land, to be selected by said board at a distance not exceeding two miles in a westerly direction from the grant made to said board at their mission by the Iowa Indians—and the President is authorized to issue a patent for the same to such person or persons as the said board may designate." The board of missions designated Father Irvin and the patent was issued to him.

The Iowas, although reduced to a membership of only a few hundred, are doing finely on their lands in Nebraska. They also own considerable land in Doniphan County. They are in a prosperous condition today, living in houses on their own reservation about White Cloud, where they cultivate the soil and have all kinds of live stock, like the white man. Old Chief White Cloud died many years ago, and the present head chief of the Iowas is James White Cloud, a lineal descendant of the famous old chief.

The true cause for the closing of the mission in 1863 may be strictly laid to the onrush of civilization as a result of the departure of the Indians and the throwing open of the territory to settlement. Even then the work was continued for a number of years after Indians had occupied their new lands, but the crowding of the settlers finally forced the Indians away altogether. The following extract from a communication written by Father Irvin to the editor of an Eastern paper regarding the removal of the Indians, gives a clear idea of how he felt twelve years after closing the mission:

"Away out here on the beautiful prairies, as beautiful as the Garden of the Lord, seventeen years of delightful and uninterrupted missionary labor was spent. Then followed six years of restlessness and change, treaty making, moving; claim jumping, grasping speculation, mammon worship; political strife, and great commotion. The clouds were gathering. Then came the dark, dark years of the war. Fear and trembling and anxiety filled the hearts of the people, and sorrow and bereavement reached every family circle. This state of things reached over a period of nearly six years. But the clouds broke away, and now we are in a period of wonderful activity, enterprise and improvement. Through all these vicissitudes and a lapse of thirty-three years, the full measure of an estimated age, your old friend and fellow laborer, having obtained help of God, remains even to this day, but with new surroundings and with new work to do."

After spending twenty-six of the best years of his own and of his devoted wife in a noble effort to civilize and Christianize the Indians, Father Irvin felt as if his labor had been all in vain. Years before finally winding up the affairs of the mission, Father Irvin founded Highland University, and devoted the remaining years of his life to advancing the interests of that great institution of learning, which is located in the beautiful town of Highland on the quarter section of land donated by his friends, the Sac Indians, two miles west of the site where he established the old mission in 1837.

Even after the settlements began to grow up around the old mission, it had not lost its usefulness and had continued to be the center of social life and activity. Frank A. Root, who was a printer in the Highlander office in the early days, remembers a Presbyterian social at the mission during the winter of 1858-59. Several loads of people went over from Highland and spent the evening delightfully with games and music, closing with a bountiful supper. Elliott, the oldest child of the Irvins had just returned from Pittsburg, Pa., with his bride, and the celebration was held in their honor.

Father Irvin and his wife both died in Highland, Mrs. Irvin in 1886, and her devoted husband a year later. They are buried side by side in the Highland cemetery near where they labored so long and so faithfully in trying to enlighten a wild people. Soon after their deaths, their loving friends placed a beautiful memorial window in the First Presbyterian Church of Highland as a testimonial to their worth, and on which the following record was made:

Mrs. Eliza Irvin, 1808-1886."

The old mission building, which was so closely associated with the early history of Doniphan County, is only a memory now. Had it been preserved it would be highly venerated as a landmark of the first permanent white settlement. After the mission had been permanently closed, part of the building was dismantled in order to utilize the material in the construction of a house at Highland, and during the summer of 1907, its destruction was completed by a severe windstorm, which swept over that section of Doniphan County.

There are evidences to be found in Doniphan County today that would indicate the territory comprising it had been the habitat of Indians for generations, or perhaps centuries, before the Iowas and the Sacs were moved here in 1837. Old Indian village sites have been uncovered where valuable historical relics were discovered. Recently ancient Indian mounds were found by Dr. R. S. Dinsmore, M. E. Zimmerman and George J. Remsburg, to contain implements of warfare typical of departed ages, and many learned scientists believe that further excavations would bring to light additional confirmation of the supposition that the country was inhabited by aborigines many centuries ago.

Doniphan County in 1837

Father Hamilton and Rev. S. M. Irvin Have Interesting Experience in the New Territory.

In December, 1837, Rev. William Hamilton, affectionately known as "Father Hamilton," arrived in what is now Doniphan County, and joined Rev. S. M. Irvin in missionary work at the Iowa and Sac Mission, about two miles east and north of where Highland now stands. In Father Hamilton's autobiography, published in Vol. I of "Transactions of the Nebraska State Historical Society," in 1885, he relates that forty-five miles of his journey from St. Louis to St. Joe was made on horseback, "reaching the old agency nine miles below east Blacksnake Hills, where St. Joseph now stands," on the 27th of December, 1837. "We were detained at the agency on account of there being no way to cross the Missouri River till it should freeze," he writes. Then he continues: "From the agency to St. Joseph I footed it, while my wife and a little Indian girl and white girl in Mr. Ballard's family rode horseback. The ice was only strong enough to cross on foot, and we waited till the trader borrowed a mule from an Indian, and hiring it and an Indian pony, my wife rode the mule and the two girls rode the pony, while I took it afoot. We had twenty-five miles to go to reach the Indians on Wolf Creek, and night overtook us at Mosquito Creek, still seven or eight miles from our place of destination. As it was intended for us to get through, no provision was made for camping out, or for dinner, supper or breakfast. It was very dark, and having no knowledge of the road, we encamped on that steam, and I spent most of the night in cutting wood, having an ax in my saddle bags, in which I fixed a temporary handle. The next morning we started breakfastless and reached Wolf Creek about 11 o'clock. The water at the ford lacked only three or four inches of coming over the pony's back, and the bank was very miry, and not till near 4 o'clock did we get over, all getting wet. Fortunately, though—it was the 29th of December—it was moderate for the time of the year, or we might have perished.

Mr. Irvin and wife were there in a log shanty, and we were most kindly received by them and shared their hospitality till we could fix up the other end of the log house for our home. He had a small quantity of flour, and we got some corn and beef from the trader at Iowa Point, six miles away, where it was issued to the Indians. I walked six miles on one occasion and ground corn on a handmill as long as it was prudent to stay, and carried the meal home on my back. On another occasion I went to Fort Leavenworth, fifty-one miles, to take the borrowed mule home, expecting to cross there and go thirty miles further to reach St. Joe that now is, over eighty miles, to get to a place only twenty-five miles from the mission, and return the same way, but when I got to the fort the cold of the preceding night rendered the river uncrossable, on account of the ice. About sundown, when I was nearly twenty miles from the garrison, though I then knew nothing of the distance, there came up suddenly what would now be called a blizzard, and it seemed as if I must perish if I had not had a buffalo robe on my saddle, which a trader, who traveled with us from St. Louis, when we left him at Fayette, gave to Mrs. H., saying we might need it.

"The next day I started back, having obtained a sack of flour at the garrison through the kindness of General Kearney, and got home on the third night, near midnight, having had to break the ice to cross Wolf Creek. It was February before we got our trunks, and then I had to make another trip which took ten days. During this absence my wife and Mr. Irvin and wife had the pleasure of trying to live on the siftings of corn meal. But I need not go further into particulars, as this is a specimen of much of similar nature.

"The Iowas then numbered about 800 souls, and the Missouri Sacs about 500. I do not suppose fifty of those then living are now alive (1884). It was a common thing for them to continue their drunken sprees for days together, or till they had killed some of their own number, when they would swear off, as it was called, for a certain number of days, but before the expiration of the allotted time some would break over the rule, and then it was like one sheep going to water, a signal for all to follow.

"I spent over fifteen years of missionary life among them, and Mr. Irvin, who had kept a diary, told me some time before I left, that they had then in their drunken sprees murdered about sixty of their own number, while not one was killed by any other tribe, though they killed others in cold blood. At first they were very jealous of us, thinking we came to trade, and when told that was not our object, they told us we might then go home, as they could conceive of no higher object. They, however, became our warm friends, and generally came to us when in difficulty. I was once nearly waylaid, as the interpreter told me, by the head chief, a very bad man, when I had to go to mill and was returning after night. I however, took a different road near his house, without knowing why, and thus avoided him. He had also been under their consultation when they wished to commit murder, but they crossed the river and shot a white man in the bottom. No-Heart, when a little drunk, told Mr. Irvin that we should not die—a remark not understood at the time—but plain enough when we heard of the shooting across the river. All this happened before the purchase of this country in 1854. I had a pistol and bowie knife drawn on me by a white man who had been blacksmith, and was then farmer—James Dunham by name—who was burned in Texas for shooting the prosecuting attorney in court, confessing at the stake the murder of several whites and Indians. I was transferred from the Iowa and Sac mission on Wolf River, to the Otoe and Omaha Mission at Bellevieu, Neb., in 1853, reaching Bellevieu on the 6th of June, that year."

Bayard Taylor in Doniphan County

(Contributed by George J. Remsburg.)

When Bayard Taylor, the distinguished American traveler, journalist and author, made his overland journey to Colorado in 1866, on his return trip he came by way of the Platte river and down across Doniphan County to Elwood. This was in July, 1866. In his book, "Colorado; a Summer Trip," he says:

"We stopped for breakfast at a place called Rulo (the true spelling would be Rouleau, after the first French settler), then pushed onward toward the Kansas line. Across a bottom of almost incredible fertility, then a ferry over the beautiful Nemaha river, and we left Nebraska behind us. An Indian reservation came next (the Iowa and Sac reservation in Doniphan County.—Remsburg.), and the sight of two gaily dressed squaws on horseback, and two naked boys trying to catch a pony, seemed to give a totally different character to the scenery. It became again the rich, free wilderness. * * * Traveling all day in a heat of more than 100 degrees in the shade—the 7th day of such an extreme temperature—I hailed our approach to Elwood, opposite St. Joseph, with inexpressable relief. During the afternoon we met a great many emigrant wagons, carrying 'poor whites' from Missouri, Kentucky and perhaps Tennessee, brown men stared at us from under their wild, bushy hair, with an expression of ignorant wonder; the mothers, with their four to six small, tow-headed children (usually 'one at the breast'), sat uncomfortably upon piles of antediluvian furniture, and patiently endured heat, flies and dust. All of these people were but one degree removed from pure barbarism, and their loyalty must have had its root in instinct rather than intelligence. * * * At 6 o'clock this evening (July 27, 1866) I reached the Missouri and crossed to this place (St. Joseph). Here I am at one of the terminals of railroad connection with the Atlantic coast, and may consider my travels at an end. Here the picturesque ceases and the tedious commonplace begins. So here I close my communication with my readers, very much more fatigued by my experiences than I trust they have been in the reading of them, and yet more refreshed and invigorated than the kindest of those who have followed me can possibly be."

The communication referred to by Mr. Taylor and which is embraced in his book, "Colorado; a Summer Trip," was originally printed in the New York Tribune of which he was a correspondent. The Indian and emigrant scenes witnessed by him in Doniphan County nearly fifty years ago present quite a contrast to those of today, and should be of interest to the younger generations residing in that county.

Greater Doniphan County—All Together With a Steady Pull

It is not up to the other fellow to make and keep Doniphan County red hot with civic pride, and to promote its commercial and industrial growth.

It is up to every citizen to do his full part in this endeavor, to stimulate the enthusiasm that builds a community and makes it pulsate with progress.

It Is Up to You.

If Doniphan County is destined to maintain her prominence in the fast-flowing tide of commercial and industrial development that is now sweeping the Middle West, each and every citizen must do his full share, and all must work together as a unit to promote and encourage home industry.

A larger market and greater variety of wares in our business establishments depends upon local patronage and the increase of the spirit of co-operation in all commercial affairs.

Confine your trading to Doniphan County when it is possible to do so. Buy from your home merchants, give them the preference at all times, and they will be able to do greater things for Doniphan County.

The promotion of the material prosperity of Doniphan County is the duty of every citizen. Shoulder your share of it.

DONIPHAN COUNTY

Great Garden Spot of the Northwest Is Noted for the Fertility of Its Soil and the Prosperity of Its People—Contains Within Its Borders Two Hundred and Forty-two Thousand Five Hundred and Sixty Acres of Prime Land, Seventy-five Per Cent of Which Is Upland and the Remaining Twenty-five Per Cent Bottom Land.

The history of Doniphan county goes back to the year 1837, when the Iowa and Sac and Fox tribes of Indians were moved from their old reservation in Missouri to the Territory of Kansas.

The first settlement of white people in what is now Doniphan County, was made at what was known to the first settlers as the "Missouri Farm," situated about three-quarters of a mile east of the present town of Highland, and on one of the branches of Wolf River.

The settlement was more generally known as the Mission to the pioneers who came to the Kansas Territory during the forties of the Nineteenth century. The Mission was established under the auspices of the American Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian church, and was in charge of Rev. S. M. Irvin, for six months, after which he was ably assisted by Rev. William Hamilton.

The first Mission building was constructed of crude logs and the discomforts endured by the two missionaries and their wives were intense. Four or five years after Rev. Mr. Irvin and Rev. Mr. Hamilton located at the Mission, a grand three-story building, one hundred and seventy by thirty-seven feet, was erected for a residence and a school combined. It was a monster structure for those early times. The material used in construction was native stone, quarried near the river, for the basement, and brick for the superstructure which was made on the spot. The lumber came all the way from Pittsburg, Pa., and made an exact steamer load and was discharged on the river bank opposite the Mission.

The first trading post in Doniphan county was established near the Mission under supervision of the government. This was the only settlement in the county until 1852, when a trading post was established at Whitehead, afterward known as Bellemont. In April of the same year a trading post was opened at Wathena and in the fall a similar institution was established at Roseport, now the present town of Elwood. The next settlement in Doniphan County was at the site of the present town of Doniphan, which was started in 1854.

The above mentioned settlements were nothing more than frontier trading posts and there was no attempt at development for some years. Some claims had been taken up by enterprising men, but they were scattered and no effort of any magnitude made toward improvement. The whole country was in possession of the Indians until the year 1854, when treaties were made with the Kickapoo, Iowa and Sac Indians whereby they relinquished their lands and moved to a decreased reservation to the Northwest. The treaties were signed with the Kickapoos at Doniphan, and with the Iowas and Sacs at the Mission. With the conclusion of the treaties the country was thrown open to settlement and the subsequent tide of emigration almost flooded Doniphan county and the entire eastern portion of the Kansas Territory.

Townsites were laid out along the river and in a short time there were a number of communities going in full blast. Iowa Point, Charlestown, Whitehead—later Bellemont—Wathena, Elwood and Doniphan were among the first towns to become rivals for trade and commerce. Town companies were being organized everywhere and new towns appeared in some instances over night. Upon the organization of the Territory of Kansas, May 31st, 1854, and during the first session of the legislature, a number of the young towns received city charters and gave great promise of rapid growth.

Doniphan is one of the original counties organized by the first Territorial legislature in 1855, and was named in honor of General Alexander W. Doniphan, of Missouri, who commanded a famous expedition from that state to northern Mexico during the Mexican war. It might be added that Doniphan is about the only one of the original counties, named for prominent men of that day, with which the residents have been content and have never applied to the legislature for a change of name.

The first county government of Doniphan was organized September 15, 1855, although there had been an organization known as "the Squatter Association of Kansas Territory," in existence since June 24, 1854. This body of men not only presumed to, but actually did rule the county and prescribed the methods to be pursued by all prospective settlers in locating their claims. The county court consisted of Joel P. Blair, Alexander Dunning and E. V. B. Rogers, as county commissioners. Cary B. Whitehead was appointed the first sheriff, and J. A. Van Arsdale, county clerk. These officers were solemnly sworn to support the Constitution of the United States, the act organizing the territories of Kansas and Nebraska, and the Fugitive Slave Law. The commissioners divided the county into five townships, namely, Iowa, Wolf River, Burr Oak, Washington and Wayne. In 1856 the townships were reorganized and Centre and Marion created. Union township was created out of the southern part of Wolf River in 1879.

The first county seat was located at Whitehead—Bellemont. The selection was only temporary and very little business was ever transacted there. Troy was selected as the site of the county seat a few months after the organization of the county government and all the official records and documents were moved here when a building had been erected during the latter part of the year 1856.

The early settlers in Doniphan came from all parts of the East and South, but a majority of them were from Missouri, either natives of that state or persons from other states who had lived for many years in Missouri. The Missouri folks generally selected claims along the streams where there was an abundance of timber, which offered both shelter and fuel. They did not take kindly to the prairie country, and that part of the land was left to be taken by settlers with more foresight and industry at a later day. Now the western part of the county is the wealthiest part of it. Splendidly cultivated farms and magnificent farm houses are to be seen everywhere and these holdings have a market value quadruple that of the farms along the streams and in the timber.

The present population of Doniphan county is made up of people from every part of the United States and many European countries. The North and South are both strongly represented, while the Germans predominate among the foreign portion of the population. Wolf River and Union townships contain a large number of Germans and people of the same nationality form a good part of the population in the eastern part of the country, from Doniphan to Burr Oak. There are a number of Irish settlements in the eastern portion of Wayne and the northern part of Washington townships, and the country where the townships of Iowa and Centre join has a considerable colony of sons of the Old Sod. The Emerald Isle is strongly represented in Union township also, and the southern part of Wolf River. There are a number of Norwegians in the eastern part of Wayne township, around Leona and at Moray. There is a large English element in the neighborhood of Denton and in other parts of Union township, while a few Scandinavians may be found settled in the country around Brenner, Bendena and Moray. The greatest number of French families now residents in Doniphan county, are to be found about Wathena, although some people of that nationality may be found in scattering numbers in other parts of the county.

Doniphan County has an area of three hundred and seventy-nine square miles, being the smallest of the original counties, with the exception of Wyandotte, and is still the smallest in area. This fact is directly traceable to the trickery and conniving of politicians at the time of the organization of the county. In order to be of proper size and proportions the county should have embraced the eastern range of Brown County, composing three full townships. It is a matter of history that Doniphan County would have contained that territory had it not been for the schemes and machinations of town owners and promoters. There were a number of influential men in the county at the time it was organized who had plans for a county seat, which would have been spoiled had the county been made to extend farther west. And they were spoiled anyway. Incidentally, a man named George Clayton, one of the earliest settlers of Brown County, had a town which he called Claytonville, that was designed to be the county seat of Brown County. Had Doniphan been extended six miles farther west, Mr. Clayton's town would have been taken into the county. The politicians and speculators were men of power and influence and in order to accommodate them the western boundary of Doniphan was curtailed to the extent of three congressional townships, and Clayton's scheme fell flat, too.

The soil of Doniphan county is fertile and the climate salubrious. The land is watered by Wolf River, Clear and Mission Creeks, Independence, Rock, Brush Creek, Peter's Creek, Cedar Creek and Mosquito Creek, and a number of small streams which have names of only local significance. When traffic on the Missouri River was at its highest plane, Doniphan County was believed to have a great advantage over other counties in Kansas, because it was bordered almost on three sides by the river. With the decline of navigation this feeling was dispelled and the people of the county have come to realize that railroad facilities such as Doniphan County possesses, are the surest and best means for development and improvement. In the old days the residents could not get along without the Missouri River, but now they seldom think of it unless it should happen to overflow its banks or change its channel.

There are two hundred and forty-two thousand five hundred and sixty acres of land in Doniphan County, about ninety percent of which is under cultivation. The county is not particularly rich in minerals, although in the early days of settlement claims were made that coal had been discovered east of Doniphan. Such might be a fact, but there is no record at the present time of any mines ever having been worked. There are stone quarries in abundance, but few of those have ever been extensively developed.

The resources of Doniphan County are varied. There is more timber to be had than can be found use for. It is stated in the official government survey that the county had twenty-five per cent of bottom and seventy-five per cent of upland. The forest covered sixteen per cent of the county in 1875, and bluffs and rolling prairie the other eighty-four per cent. Timber is found very plentifully along the Missouri River; along the minor streams and creeks it runs from one-quarter to one-half a mile in width. The principal varieties of forest trees are black walnut, oak, hickory and cottonwood.

The principal industries of the people are fruit-growing, agriculture, stock raising and feeding, and manufacturing. The agricultural products represent a great portion of the wealth of the county, although the live stock feature is one of the most profitable. The principal crops include wheat, corn, oats, rye, potatoes and all manner of vegetables. The fruit and berry crops of Doniphan are becoming more extensive each year. The apple crop alone brought the growers returns amounting to almost one million dollars in 1914. There were sixteen hundred and eighty-five carloads of apples shipped from the Doniphan County fruit belt and the output is expected to increase with the coming years. Many orchard men are setting out new trees and will have them in bearing when the old trees have outlived their usefulness. The berry crop of Doniphan County is annually becoming a better source of revenue to the growers. The bluffs along the river are admirably adapted to the raising of berries in many varieties, and the people are beginning to realize the importance and advisability of cultivating the berry crop more extensively. There is scarcely any expense attached to the growing of berries, and the profits are enormous. It is gratifying to know that land owners around White Cloud are contemplating a great expansion in the berry industry and it will not be surprising to see the bluffs around the town producing the luscious berry in immense quantities in the near future.

Doniphan County is noted for the high grade of live stock and poultry. The best of pedigreed horses, cattle and hogs are produced and fed in the county and the market value of this branch of industry runs into the millions. The grazing land is the best to be found anywhere and the fodder raised on the farms unequalled for putting animals in the best possible condition. Many of the farmers make a specialty of raising show stock, and Doniphan County has in recent years produced more prize winners at live stock exhibits than any other county in the state. Many of the residents of the county, esecially women folks, take great pride in the high quality of the poultry and fowls that are raised here. Almost every species of pedigreed poultry of the most fancy breeds is raised by the women of the county and the highest prices are obtained for

The surface of Doniphan County adjacent to the Missouri River is rough and bluffy, with heavy bodies of timber, while the western part is either rolling prairie or beautifully level. The soil all over the county is very productive and adapted to most any kind of cultivation. That on the bluffs especially is most fertile, and is particularly adapted to the raising of berries and small fruit. Doniphan County is little subject to drought. The latter advantage is, perhaps, due to the fact that it is surrounded on three sides by the Missouri River, and its bodies of timber, which induce frequent rains. The driest years in the history of Kansas caused much damage, and in many instances total destruction to crops in other counties, but Doniphan County has at all times produced sufficient to sustain its people.

The population of Doniphan County is estimated to be about 18,998 at the present time, and it is increasing every year. The census of 1910 placed the number of people at 17,020, and there were some legitimate residents of the county who had not been enumerated. The greatest centers of population are Highland, Troy, Wathena, Elwood and White Cloud, but the towns of Severance, Doniphan, Leona, Denton, Fanning, Bendena, Blair, Brenner, Moray, Purcell, Iowa Point and Sparks are most thriving communities, nearly all of which are destined to keep increasing in population.

The railroad interests in Doniphan County are a fair indication of its agricultural and commercial importance. The facilities for travel and transportation are not excelled by any other county in the state. The entire length and breadth of the county is traversed by three different lines of railroad, each directly connected with a great trunk line system. The Burlington & Missouri River Railroad passes through the county from north to south, entering at the northwest corner and passing out at the southeast corner. The St. Joseph & Grand Island Railroad, while under separate management, is supposed to be owned by the Union Pacific System. This line of road enters the county at Elwood and traverses the county in a westerly direction through Wathena, Blair, Troy, Moray, Severance and Leona. The stations of the Burlington road are White Cloud, Iowa Point, Sparks, Fanning, Troy, Brenner and Doniphan. The Chicago & Rock Island Railroad enters Doniphan County at Elwood and passes through Wathena, Troy, Bendena, Denton and Purcell. The traffic on each of these three lines of road is heavy all the year round, and the passenger service is the best that could possibly be furnished. The roadbed of each of the three lines is solid and the equipment is modern and up-to date in every respect.

The Doniphan County Agricultural, Horticultural and Mechanical Association was chartered under the laws of the state of Kansas on January 5, 1867, and completed its organization as an institution of public interest in January, 1868. It was a highly effective organization and during the many years of its existence gave a decided impetus to progress in all branches of agriculture. The membership at various times was made up of liberal-minded, public-spirited men whose efforts to promote the best interests of the county have given much encouragement to the residents in general. The capital stock of the association was placed at $5,000 at the time of its organization and shares were sold for $5 each, but this figure was soon raised to $10. The first fair was held in August, 1868, on grounds located a mile and a quarter south of Troy, which had been purchased from J. N. Zimmerman for $1,640. The first buildings erected on the twenty-one-acre tract included a floral hall, circular in shape and 100 feet in diameter. There were also stalls for horses and a half-mile track laid out. Shade trees were planted liberally and at the present day are one of the delightful features of the old fair grounds, affording great protection from the rays of the burning August sun. The first president of the association was Barney O'Driscol, the prominent "green-backer," and the first secretary was William H. Nesbit. Mr. Nesbit did not long remain connected with the office, however, and he was succeeded by J. N. Zimmerman. Financially the association was well managed and fortunate from its very inception. None of the annual fairs have failed to show a balance of profit. The buildings and grounds were sold to Cyrus Leland several years ago and since that time there has been no county fair. The annual premium list footed up into the thousands during the fair, and in no case did the management ever have to scale down when paying the specified premiums. The fair was self sustaining and its annual exhibitions accomplished incalculable results for the benefit of the farmers and the county in general.

The first officer of the law in Doniphan County was James R. Whitehead. When Governor Reeder issued his proclamation, November 8, 1854, dividing the territory of Kansas into eighteen election districts, what is now Doniphan County was designated as the "Fourteenth Council District" with three voting precincts — Doniphan, Wolf Creek and Burr Oak. James R. Whitehead was appointed constable of the district and commissioned by the governor as the first officer of Doniphan County, November 25, 1854. Mr. Whitehead held the office until the organization of the county government at Whitehead on September 15, 1855, when the office was abolished and that of sheriff created, with Cary B. Whitehead as the first county sheriff. Some of the old historians of the county insist that the first clerk named by the commissioners was James R. Whitehead, but from any data possible to obtain by the Chief, it is specifically stated that when the commissioners met to organize the county government, they appointed J. R. Van Arsdale clerk pro tem, and before the meeting adjourned, appointed him to the office for the first term.

Some people may not be aware that Troy was situated in Washington Township at one time. The commissioners appointed by the legislature to locate the seat of justice met, the records state, at Whitehead, on October 11 and 12, 1855, "and, driving a stake in the southwest quarter of Section 17, Washington Township, inscribed on one side thereof, 'The County Seat of Doniphan County Is Located on This Quarter Section.'" On the other side of the stake the commissioners signed their names, "A. Payne and Thomas J. B. Cramer, October 12." The site of the new county seat was in Washington Township, and it remained there until the reorganization of the original five townships in 1856, when the commissioners created Centre Township, locating the seat of justice within the new township. The laying out of a town and the erection of the court house was the first business attended to by the commissioners after selecting the site. James F. Foreman was directed to get busy on the plans for the new county seat and by November, 1855, he had laid off eighty acres into lots, and surveyed the public square of 300 feet "upon the summit of the eminence near where the commissioners erected the stake." A name had not yet been chosen for the new town and there were many fantastic suggestions along that line given to the commissioners. The business of selling lots in the townsite and the terms of purchase were first attended to by the commissioners. A public sale of lots was announced to be held on January 1, 1856, when purchasers should produce one-third cash in order to make the transaction binding. On December 17, 1855, the county commissioners authorized the clerk to advertise for bids for the construction of a one-story court house, 36x20 feet, with an "L" 18 feet square, to be completed by the third Monday in April; also a two-story jail building, 20 feet square, to be finished by the third Monday in June, 1856. The time specified for opening the bids was postponed, but the contract was eventually awarded to B. O'Driscol in April, 1856, for $1,760. The buildings were completed in the winter of 1856-1857. The county buildings were little more than a makeshift, and in 1860 bids for the erection of a new court house were invited. J. J. Johnson and Edward Straughn of St. Joseph, were given the contract. Work was begun at once and the building rushed to completion. It was a combination court house and jail affair and stood on the northern portion of the public square. All county business was transacted there until its destruction by fire Mch. 27, 1867. After the fire a substantial building was erected in the center of the public square which, as time went on and public business increased in volume, become too crowded for space and an addition was built so as to provide suitable vaults for the records. It was raised two stories, the upper floor having been used as the headquarters for the Young Ladies' Library Association. This county building was made to suffice, although inconveniently crowded for room, until ten years ago, when the legislature authorized the county commissioners to levy a tax for the purpose of raising sufficient money to erect the present handsome structure which now adorns the public square in Troy.

TWO TREACHEROUS DONIPHAN COUNTY STREAMS

How Mosquito Creek and Wolf River Derived Their Names.

Dozens of Doniphan County farmers who reside along the banks of Mosquito Creek and Wolf River have at some time in their lives asked the question: "Why were the above creeks so named?"

"Reverend Father" Hamilton, missionary to the Indians in Doniphan County, in the early days, is authority for the statement that Mosquito Creek took its name from the quantity of mosquitos that troubled those who encamped on it. He said that its Indian name was Eneshae, signifying "a ripple." Wolf River, he says, is simply a translation of the Iowa name for that stream, "Shun-ta-Nesh-nang-a.

EARLY SETTLERS NOW DEAD

Names of Some of the Hardy Pioneers Who Were Among the First Settlers in Doniphan County, All of Whom Are Now Dead, Recall Some of the Stirring Events of Those Early Days.

In writing of early times in Doniphan County and the principal characters who were among the courageous pioneers, The Chief feels that this issue would not be complete without some slight reference to several men long since passed to the great beyond.

Those old-timers were a hardy set of men who braved all manner of hardships in order to make a home in what has since proven to be the garden spot of not only the state of Kansas but of the great West. There are very, very few of the real old settlers who have not passed to their reward, and The Chief is indebted to C. A. Swinford, who resides twelve miles south of Troy, for the appended list of men who helped to settle Doniphan County originally. Mr. Swinford remembers their names distinctly and has a personal recollection of many of them. They are: William Shaw, William Symns, Joseph Symns, Barney Murphy, Frank McCoy, Sr., T. A. Shanks, Michael Langan, John Harding, John Campbell, Alfred Hartsock, Edward A. Ege, R. Dempsey, Benjamin Whorton, Thomas Langan, Edward Whorton.

On every page of this edition will be found the products and activities of leading men of the county, of varied pursuits, who have helped to make this publication a success.

SOL MILLER

Veteran Newspaper Man and Journalist—Founded The Chief, June 4, 1857—Born January 22, 1831—Died April 17, 1897.

Sol Miller, whose name will be handed down for generations to come as one of the most brilliant literary men who ever lived in the state of Kansas, wrote a biographical sketch of his life shortly before his death, and we produce it in its entirety below.

The achievement for which Sol Miller is most accredited in Doniphan County is the fact that he founded the Weekly Kansas Chief on June 4, 1857. The Chief had the advantage of all other country newspapers in having for its sponsor a man so full of vim and sticking qualities, and today the Chief has survived a score of newspapers that started about the same time and with as bright prospects.

Mr. Miller's literary style was in a class to itself, and while there were those who criticized his direct method of telling the news, the majority of his contemporaries enjoyed his refreshing vocabulary and frank explanations. He wrote some editorials that were masterpieces. He could soar into the heights and carry the reader away on the wings of his eloquence, but woe to the man or woman who inspired his wrath. An idea of his ability may be gained when it is known that Horace Greeley offered him what was considered a fabulous salary in those days if he would sell out the Chief and go to New York and work on his paper, the New York Tribune. Sol Miller never sacrificed a principle for anybody. If he believed in the advocacy of a certain policy, he could not be swerved in his stand, no matter how much pressure was brought to bear on the other side.

Sol Miller had two children, Miss Leliah Miller, and a son, William K. Miller, who live in Kansas City, Mo. They are two of the finest young people who were ever reared in Doniphan County. William worked in the Chief office from boyhood, in Troy, and it was said that there was no one else in the state who could fold papers with such rapidity. Both of the above have many friends in Troy who are always glad to welcome them to the city where they spent their youthful days.

To begin, we will say that we belong to what may be called a hereditary family of pioneers, on both sides of the house. They were always in the pioneer business, from the earliest times down to ourself. They were most of their lives venturing out to new countries, where their scalps were seldom safe, and, strange to say, we never knew a bald-headed member of the family, on either side. Our father's grandfather was one of the pioneer German settlers in Pennsylvania. But along about one hundred and fifty years ago, the country become too old for him, and he struck out for the Valley of Virginia, well up the Shenandoah. Readers of Irving's "Life of Washington" will remember that it was related that when young Washington, at the age of sixteen, struck out into the wilderness west of the Blue Ridge, to survey the lands of Lord Fairfax, his party came upon the scattered cabins of German settlers, who could scarcely speak English, and that these settlers were frequently compelled to do some brisk dodging, to escape Indian foragers. Well, our father's grandfather, that is, our great-grandfather, was one of those settlers. He finally located in what is now Rockingham County, where, in 1760, our grandfather, Frederick Miller, was born.

Our mother's side of the house was named Runyon. They were among the early Dutch settlers of New Jersey, and were no doubt connected with the Runyon family, whose descendants are now prominent in New Jersey politics. Here our grandfather on the other side, Michael Runyon, was born, a few years before the outbreak of the Revolutionary War. But the country was also becoming too populous for his father's comfort, so he pulled up and emigrated to North Carolina, settling in Guilford County, where our grandfather, when a chunk of a boy of eleven or twelve years, dodged around in the brush, watching the British army as it marched to the battle of Guilford Court House, his father being in the Continental army. The neighborhood in which he lived has been famous for more than a century, and was formerly described as "Beard's Hatter Shop, Deep River Ford, near Guilford Court House, North Carolina."

Our grandfather on our father's side, who was born in Rockingham, when about eighteen years of age, joined the Continental army, and served during the last half of the war. He was in Washington's army at the surrender of Cornwallis, at Yorktown. We were less than five years old when he died, yet we can distinctly remember when he used to play horse by galloping us on his knee, singing a German nursery song, and would then tell us about General Washington and the British. After the close of the war, he married a lady named Sharp, from near Christiansburg, in Montgomery County. She was of Welsh descent. Our other grandfather, Runyon, in the meantime grew up, and also married. His wife, as it happened, was a native of Rockingham County, Virginia. Her name was Blackford, and she was of Scotch descent. Here, then, we find ourself descended on the one side from German and Welsh stock, and on the other from Holland Dutch and Scotch. We figure it out that from the Germans we inherited those sturdy qualities which manifest themselves in an abiding love for apple dumplings and buttermilk; from the Welsh, we get the "l" that is in us; from the Holland Dutch, the winning way about us that causes so many people to "dam" us; and from the Scotch, our blather, and our foggy ideas.

William K. Miller

Long before the close of the last century, our grandfather Miller began to hanker for the pioneer business. So he loaded up his traps, and struck out for the new country of Tennessee. He pitched his tent in what is now Anderson County, near the County Seat, which was called Burrville, in honor of the brave Col. Aaron Burr, who had fought so gallantly in the Revolution. But after Burr killed Alexander Hamilton, and began going to the dogs, the name of the town was changed to Clinton, in honor of Vice-President George Clinton, and retains the name to this day. Our grandfather Runyon, about the same time, or perhaps a little later, also took the pioneer fever, and loaded up for the new country of Kentucky, settling in Barren County, near Glasgow.

So time passed for a few years, when both grandfathers became restless to go on the pioneer business to new countries; and both had an eye on the wonderful new state of Ohio. In the fall of 1803, Grandfather Miller set out for the North, until he reached Lebanon, Ohio, where he left his family, and went out prospecting. He located a claim on Twin Creek, in what is now Preble County, near the present town of West Alexandria, and where he removed his family early in the spring of 1804, being among the very first settlers in that part of the country; on which farm he died, in 1835. About the same time our Grandfather Runyon emigrated to Ohio, and took a claim in the western part of the same county, a few miles southwest of Eaton. Now, just look at the series of circumstances: The families starting from the adjoining states of Pennsylvania and New Jersey, both going South, and the sons growing up in the adjoining states of Virginia and North Carolina; marrying, and emigrating to the adjoining states of Tennessee and Kentucky; then both, about the same time, emigrating to the same county in Ohio. That it was providential as leading to our existence, who can doubt?

Our father, for whom they invented the name of John, was born in Anderson County, Tennessee, September 19, 1800; our mother, in Preble County, Ohio, September 29, 1800. They gave her the name of Dicey. Rather an odd name; but before and for many years after the Revolution it was a popular name in the Carolinas, and some other parts of the South. We do not know of any person now who bears that name. We never knew of but two. One was our mother, and the other was the wife of one of our father's brothers. We used to think that family had a corner on the Diceys. Our parents were married March 4, 1824. After that, the road that led to us was easy. But just think of the chances we ran previous to that time!

Soon after coming to Kansas, a gentleman sat eyeing us long and attentively, until we began to imagine that he was a detective, and were upon the point of confessing all, and throwing ourself upon his mercy, when he suddenly asked, "Are you related to the Blackfords, of Rockingham County, Virginia?" We owned up, and he said he knew it, from our looks. But we were a long way removed from the Blackford stock of Rockingham County. It must have been blooded stock.

But Ohio settled up too fast, and our Grandfather Runyon began to pine for the pioneer business in a new country. About the year 1833 he pulled out for Illinois, locating near Joliet, in Will County, where he died, sometime from 1854 to 1856. Thus ends the grandfather business.

Our father, a few years after his marriage, took the pioneer disease. Some of his friends had moved to a famous new country called "the Wabash," and he determined to follow, which he did in 1830, settling in the new town of Lafayette, Tippecanoe County. There used to be a mysterious disease in that country, known as "milk sickness." The traveler, on inquiry at stopping places, was never able to find it. The disease was never in the neighborhood, but always "just six miles further on." But our father was a man of great energy and research, and had better luck than most of them. He found it! It laid him up, that fall and winter, and almost killed him. So he decided that as soon as pleasant weather came, he would quit being a pioneer "on the Wabash," and get back to God's country, in Ohio. He did so; but we had taken the precaution to be born on the 22d of January, 1831, and were a few months old when the back track to Ohio was struck. This is how we came to be an Ohioan, although born in Indiana. This is how our earliest memories came to be associated with the hills and meadows, the mills, and the fishing and swimming holes along old Twin Creek—bless God!

Our father was not long in again venturing in the pioneer business. Attention was directed to "the St. Joe," as northern Indiana was called, and in 1836 he made a trip to that region, entering a quarter section of land in Elkhart County, which he intended soon moving to; but affairs so happened that he never went, but lived and died at West Alexandria. This event occurred August 4, 1876; the death of our mother, September 19, 1884.

This leaves us to paddle through our own history. The history of our youth is the history of almost every boy. Fighting bumble-bees and yellow-jackets, fishing and swimming, and all the fun and mischief going, were the events, all of which we saw, and most of which we were. We had an unusual share of being thrown, kicked, and tramped on by horses, which made us so much afraid of horses that we are just getting over it, and venturing in the horse business once more. Had we lived among the Indians, we would have been entitled to the name, "Man-Afraid-of-His-Horse." One incident of our very early youth we shall never forget. On the woodpile was a hollow cut of gum tree, cordwood length, which had been rolled aside, as being impossible to split. One day, being at play, we conceived the idea of crawling through that log, which we at once proceeded to put into execution. All went well, until we reached that part of our body that has been most remarkable for development. We struggled and grunted, but we found ourself wedged fast, and could neither move forward nor backward. As a compromise, we howled; and that brought our brothers, our parents, our uncles and aunts and our neighbors. They took in the situation, and gathered us by the legs and pulled. But they soon realized that our legs would pull out before our body could be moved. What could be done? A maul and wedge were suggested; but they soon recollected that there was no split to a twisted gum log. We think some of the unsympathizing neighbors suggested blasting us out with powder, and putting the log in the fireplace for a backlog and burning us out. We believe the plan finally agreed upon, was to hew the log down to a thin shell, and then with a drawing knife carefully shave away the shell until an opening could be made, but before this work could be commenced, we gave an involuntary twist and, to the joy of ourself and delight of our friends, we came loose, and slipped out. Our mother was so overcome with joy that she gave us the worst spanking we ever got. But she often spanked us as a sort of religious exercise, or to please the neighbors. This affair was a life-long lesson to us. It taught us—we forget just what it taught us, but we think it taught us never to creep through a gum-tree log further than the small of our back. It was our first experience in getting out of a tight place. The log was afterward made into a bee-gum, and many a sweet gob of honey we ate from that gum.

Another incident of our very youthful youth will illustrate the indomitable courage that was a part of our nature. There was on the premises a bench containing three of those old-fashioned, conical shaped straw bee-hives that you may still see in pictures. They were all occupied by fellows who had a job in a clover field hard by. We took a fancy to these hives, and wanted one to play with. So we made a movement to take it. But the occupants resisted, and a battle ensued, which raged fiercely until darkness put an end to the conflict. We afterward discovered that the darkness was all on our side, and it lasted for several days. It made us so mad we just let them keep their old hive.

As we grew up, we caught all the contageous diseases that were going, such as whooping cough, measles and mumps. We were always around, and had to have a share in whatever was going. The mumps caused our head to swell up so big that we do not believe we ever got entirely well of it. Then we went to school, in the old school house on "Chicken street," the only one we ever attended. After we got a start, we learned very easily and rapidly. But that start was terrible. We had got an idea that the multiplication table was something just awful, and were mortally afraid of it. We were two years trying to commit that multiplication table—no; not trying to commit it, but dodging and evading it, afraid to tackle it. Finally the "master" told us that if we did not commit it within a week, he would tan our jacket. We knew that he would do it, and that he whipped hard. So we went to work, and found it so easy that it almost committed itself. We were so mad because we had wasted so much time on it, that we had a great mind to run off from school and go a-fishing. We never bragged much on the beauty of our penmanship, but spelling was our strong point. In spelling matches, Friday afternoons, when the two captains would decide, by grasping hand over hand the teacher's switch, the one that got the first pick of spellers always chose us. We spelled down everything in school, the teacher included. Now, we come to think of it, there was a pretty girl who was also a very good speller, and she was always last on the floor to tackle us; but for the life of us, we never could spell each other down, and when one missed the word, even though it was an easy one, the other would miss it, and both would go off the floor together. Somehow, we have never yet managed to get over a sort of warm feeling for nice girls.

We early developed a fondness for reading, which became so strong that we would at any time slide away from hard work, seek some sequestered, shady spot, and go to reading a book or old newspaper. We cannot resist the inclination, even in this lengthy screed, to relate an incident of our early reading. There was a little saddler in town, named Tom McFarland, who was packing up to move away. We were standing around to see, when he picked a book from out of a pile of plunder, and handed it to us, saying: "Here, you d—d little devil, is a book you may have; it is interesting, and you will like to read it." The name of the book was "Gulliver's Travels." For some reason that we do not now remember, we did not begin on that book for about a year. But when we did begin, we thought it was just the greatest book that was ever made. We could scarcely lay it down. Our mother noticed it, and it seemed to please her that we stuck so closely to reading. Just then there was a religious boom in that part of the country. Did you ever notice what a nose those zealous church people, who make a living by going around attending protracted meetings, have for good grub, and how quickly they drop onto the places where there is good cooking? Well, our mother was a good cook, and during protracted meetings, which was nearly all the time, these professional meeting-goers swarmed around our house like yellow-jackets around a cider press. About this time, among the visitors to the protracted meeting, who should come along but little Tom McFarland. He used to be terribly wicked, but he had got religion, and was a licensed exhorter, and, of course, he stopped at our house, because he knew the grub of old. About the first pop, he got hold of that Gulliver's Travels, which we had laid down for a moment. With a look of horror on his face, he called our mother's attention to the "filthy novel," which we were "imperiling our immortal soul" by reading; winding up with the advice to her to "throw it into the fire." Well, to please him, she threw it into the fire, and it assisted in cooking his dinner. Then she told us that if she ever again caught us reading a novel, she would "fairly take the hide off of us—there was no snakes if she didn't!" That was her way of swearing. Whenever she said there was no snakes if she didn't do this or that, we knew she meant it; for we well knew there were snakes. But the loss of that book almost broke our heart. The thing that made us maddest was the idea of that ornery little shoat, McFarland, who had given us the book, playing us such a measly game as that. We moped, and secluded ourself. It may not be amiss to state that the place of our seclusion was at Abe Huffman's, a boy who lived not far away, and who had a copy of Gulliver, where we finished reading it. Oh, how thankful boys should be that there are good, pious people in the world, always watchful for their welfare! How many boys have been given a distaste for churches and religion by the over-officiousness of the Tom McFarlands, who have got worms, and think it is religion!

Our father was a carpenter, and often took us with him to assist in his work. It took us a long time in the morning to warm up to the business; but by noon we would get the hang of it, and at the dinner table we made a full hand. We believe we were the hungriest boy we ever knew. We appeared to be hollow clear down to the soles of our feet, with pipe attachment leading to a basement story. But our parents said a good appetite was a sign of good health. (The man we worked for boarded us.) But we didn't like the carpenter business. Our heart was set on being a printer, and printing newspapers. But opportunities to learn the trade were not plentiful. At length we found a place in the Gazette office, at Germantown, Ohio. We were duly "indentured" for four years, for board and clothes, with an extra "freedom suit" at the expiration of our apprenticeship. We began on the 28th day of January, 1848—very nearly the day of the month that subsequently became the birthday of Kansas. Our first instruction was given by F. J. Oblinger, for many years past connected with the press of Toledo, Ohio. He was soon succeeded in the foremanship of the office by J. Z. Reeder, now on the editorial staff of the Dayton (Ohio) Herald, under whose direction we worked for more than four years, or until July, 1852. Reeder used to be fond of describing us, as we entered the office, to learn the trade. For particulars, consult him. At the date just mentioned—July, 1852—in connection with a fellow apprentice, we bought the office, giving our note and a bill of sale on the office as first payment, made the paper Whig in politics, and supported Gen. Winfield Scott for President. At the close of the campaign, we were greatly surprised to find that our influence had not elected Scott—in fact, otherwise to the contrary, he was hardly in the race at all. We made the further discoverey that the paper was not half paying. To add to our discomfort, our partner was religious, and kept worrying us because we did not become converted, join church, and tell our experience in class meeting. Finally, one misty, foggy night in December, we split the difference by attending a revival meeting that had been in progress for some time, and was creating great excitement, leaving our partner in the office. We were just becoming interested in a quarrel that was going on in front of the pulpit between the preacher and one of his members, because the member shouted so loudly that he drowned the preacher's voice, when the town fire bell sounded, and the cry of "Fire!" emptied the church. We could never account for it, but at the very first alarm we made up our mind where that fire was, and what had caused it. We were right. It was in the building containing our office, and in a garret over the office. The building was saved, but there was a bad mess of "pi" in that office. Shortly after, our partner absconded to conceal his emotion. To our appeal to subscribers in arrears to come forward and help us out, most of them came in with receipts from our partner, showing that for a month or more previous to his higera, he had been diligently collecting all the accounts that were collectable, never mentioning it to us, lest it should disturb the religious meditations which he thought we ought to be engaged in. Only one thing kept us from total ruin—we had nothing to ruin. The man set adrift naked, need have no fear of his clothes being stolen. We never changed our mind as to the origin of the fire. But there was still more trouble in store. When it was rendered certain that he had absconded, three different women came sniffling and bawling around, saying he was under promise to marry them; and one, a young widow, said the day was already set, only a short time distant. We knew we were legally responsible for the debts of the firm, but we didn't think we could be compelled to marry those three women—and we didn't. They are all dead now, but neither of them died of a broken heart. But we must not omit to state that the infamous scoundrel afterward told an acquaintance who met him, that the reason he ran away was, that he was heart-broken, because a young lady who had promised to marry him, was about to be married to another man! He afterward turned up as publisher of a paper in Missouri. Oscar Leonard, who frequently tramps along this way, was an apprentice in his office. Oscar ought to be a better man, considering he had such a pious "boss."

In those days, we taught a class in Sunday school, and tried to do honest work. We explained all the knotty points fully and literally, in plain English. We believe the boys were interested, although they may have indulged in a little too much hilarity, whereby they disturbed the class on the bench on the opposite side of the aisle. Those were the days when the thought first came to us that we ought to have been a preacher. That dear old church! The last time we saw it, it was used for a tobacco warehouse, and the bumblebees had a nest in the bell. There were seven boys in our class. They are all yet living, and have been successful. Two are prosperous druggists, with license to sell spirituous liquors; one is the leading butcher in his town; the fourth is a practical grocer, who has broken up so often that people say he is "well fixed," and ready to retire; the fifth has been a policeman in a large city for more than twenty-five years; the sixth is a preacher, high up in his profession, but a little deaf in one ear, so that he can hear the calls to preach only with the other ear, which he keeps turned toward the wealthy congregations; and the seventh, we have been told, is the best poker player in all the country. Who can estimate the far-reaching influence of early teaching?

We may remark, in this place, that throughout our whole newspaper career at Germantown, we had in our employ a man, still living, who is no doubt the oldest printer in the United States, having learned the trade about seventy years ago. It is C. L. Dill, familiarly known as "Louie Dill," still living at Germantown, in the eighty-eighth year of his age, and who has set type within the past five years, if not more recently. A portrait of him adorns these pages.

Well, we lingered along in an indifferent sort of way, for some three years longer. Business being slack, in order to fill in the time, we got married, in September, 1855. Had we not made the riffle then, we doubt whether we should ever have found time for the business afterward. After the campaign of 1856, the pioneer passion, which had lain dormant in the family for many years, broke out all over us with great virulence. Kansas was open for settlement; and so, as our "forebears" had done for one hundred and fifty years before, we packed up and struck out for the new country, arriving here in the early spring of 1857. And here we have been, ever since. If any new country should be discovered, and opened for pioneers, no doubt a younger member of the family will be found ready to go to the front.

Our exploits in Kansas are so well known that we can spare the reader from the harrowing details. During the war, we served in the Price raid, by substitute; but we have never been elected to the presidency on that account. But it may be because our substitute is still living. We have been too proud to apply for a pension for that service, and therefore are beyond the reach of Hoke Smith. We were elected to the legislature five times—once to the house, and four times to the senate—but as the last time was more than seven years ago, the crime has outlawed, and an indictment will not stand against those who voted for us. It has been a saying for many years, that the country has not suffered from want of legislation, but from too much legislation. Perhaps that was why they elected us—they thought they would not get much. And yet we have reason to believe that we were valuable. That is the way we have been rated. We have been repeatedly accused of "selling out," and the price named was never less than $7,000. A man who can command that figure must be considered worth something. How we would have liked to see some of that money! To be so accused, and never get to handle the money, is like dreaming you have found a bag of gold, and waking up to discover you have the cholera morbus. And yet it has a funny side. After doing enough solid hard work since we have been in Kansas to have entitled us to be worth a million dollars, it sounds funny to have it said, when we indulge in the luxury of a new shirt or a clean pair of socks, "Where did he get the money? He sold out!"

It may, perhaps, not be amiss to state that from 1871 to 1872 we were grand master of the Grand Lodge of Odd Fellows of Kansas, during which year the order enjoyed an unprecedented degree of prosperity, notwithstanding. It will be seen from this that we have been a "squeegee."

Now, perhaps some people will think we should have been more serious in this autobiography; that too much levity pervades it. We have always been accused of indulging too much in levity, and looking at the ridiculous side of everything. Well, there is fun in everything, if it can only be smoked out. When we arrive at that condition where we cannot see fun in anything, and enjoy it, we want to die, and go to Heaven.

The Indian Treaty

Negotiations With the Red Men Which Resulted in Throwing Doniphan County Open to Settlement—Three Tribes Held the Lands in the County Previous to the Signing of the Treaty With the Government in 1854.

Previous to 1854 the lands in Doniphan County were held by three Indian tribes, the Kickapoos, the Iowas, and the Sacs and Foxes. It was not until those tribes had signed a treaty with the government ceding the lands, that progress could be made in organizing the territory.

The Kickapoos were located on the present site of Wathena and adjacent country; the Iowas were settled about the Mission, near Highland; and the Sacs and Foxes had three villages on Wolf River. They seemed contented and at first were reluctant to consider the treaty proposition.

When the clamor to open the Kansas Territory to white settlement became so widespread in the early fifties, Colonel George W. Mannypenny, Commissioner of Indian Affairs under President Franklin Pierce, went to the Nemaha agency, May 2, 1853, to pave the way for the treaty.

At the subsequent gathering of the different chiefs and braves there was little encouragement given by the Indians regarding the success of the Commissioner's mission. While some of the older chiefs did not openly oppose the treaty, their scant remarks were taken to indicate their disapproval.

It remained for Little Wolf, a subchief of the Iowas, to make the speech which showed where the Indians stood regarding the proposed cession of their lands. Opening his speech with a few complimentary remarks concerning the Great White Father, he saw that his utterances were not received as heartily as he wished by the assembled red men. Little Wolf was known to be the smartest Indian in the gathering, and he stood well with all the braves.

When Little Wolf saw the Indians ignored his references to the Great White Father, he uttered a few scathing remarks, stamping his feet at the same time. The result was spontaneous. The Indians jumped to their feet and responded all over the room with the customary exclamation, "How!"

Addressing the commissioner with much animation, and with gestures characteristic of oratorical Indian chiefs, Little Wolf demanded that the government should weigh the land and give its equivalent pound for pound in gold. That speech ended the negotiations, and nothing was done along the treaty line until the next year.

May 18, 1854, the chiefs of the three tribes were induced to go to Washington where, after considerable parleying, the treaty was signed, the Indians agreeing to accept a much decreased reservation. Ne-sour-quoit, a leading Fox brave, refused to abide by the terms of the treaty. He was a remarkable Indian and never drank a drop of fire water in his life. He ruled his people with an iron hand, but they loved him in their primitive way. He refused to move to the new reservation, and went with the Kickapoos. After three years with that tribe his annuity and that of his followers was suspended by the government, and he finally removed to the reservation near Falls City, Nebraska.

FOR

Kansas Planting

Start your orchard right by planting trees that are right. Our trees are grown on Kansas upland, and as most of the Kansas orchards are planted on upland, it is only reasonable to suppose that better results can be obtained from planting trees started on such soil. We do not claim that our trees are the best grown, but we do claim they are as good as the best, and a trial order will convince you that we grow stock of the highest quality in Kansas. We grow all the leading varieties of fruit and ornamental trees, shrubs, vines, small fruits, etc. Write for our catalog containing valuable information in regard to spraying, etc.; it is free. Here are the prices at which we usually furnish first-class apple trees:

| 5-6 feet, 2-year | $15.00 per 100 |
| 4-5 feet, 2 year | 12.50 per 100 |
| 3-4 feet, 2-year | 10.00 per 100 |
| 3-4 feet, 1-year | 10.00 per 100 |
| 2-3 feet, 1-year | 7.50 per 100 |

These prices are for the stock laid down at your nearest R. R. Station. We pay the freght. Before you place your order, write us for prices on anything you may need in nursery stock.

DONIPHAN COUNTY'S FIRST-BORN

For Years There Has Been Considerable Dispute As to Who Was First Child Born in Doniphan County, but Honor Seems to Belong to Elliott Irvin, Son of Rev. S. M. Irvin, Preacher at the Mission in 1838.

The honor of having been the first white child born in Doniphan County has been contended for by many families in behalf of their offspring during the past seventy-eight years.

Several claimants have come forth at different times and the dispute over priority of birth has reached red hot proportions on numerous occasions. As all records of births and other matters of vital interest were kept in the most primitive manner those days, there is nothing authentic to support the claims of any one except personal recollections of the early pioneers.

Thomas J. Vanderslice believed that his son, Daniel, who died in Troy while his father was sheriff of Doniphan County, was the first white child born within the confines of the county as at present organized. There are many old timers, however, who do not agree with Mr. Vanderslice, relying on their memory of the probable ages of young men fifty years ago.

Many researches have been made in an effort to reliably establish the identity of the first child born in the county with the result that the honor is generally conceded to Elliott Irvin, son of Rev. S. M. Irvin, an early preacher of the gospel to the Indians at the Mission.

The parents of the child arrived at the Mission in 1837, and Elliott is thought to have been born there shortly after his father took up the work as a missionary among the Indians. There are several old people still residing in the county who remember both the Vanderslice and Irvin boys and they are inclined to think that the preacher's son was senior to Daniel Vanderslice by several years.

LEWIS AND CLARK IN DONIPHAN

Celebrated Explorers Sent Out By President Jefferson Spent July 4, 1804, at the Mouth of Independence Creek in the Lower Edge of the County on Their Journey to the Headwaters of the Missouri.

It may not be generally known to the average citizen of Doniphan County that Lewis and Clark, the famous American explorers, spent a whole day in its wilds while in the early stages of their historical journey of exploration of the Louisiana Purchase territory.

The members of the expedition, in addition to the two great explorers, comprised forty-three officers and men. The task before the exploration party was known to be a gigantic one, as to them fell the task of penetrating unknown territory, part of which was known to be peopled with hostile Indians and wild animals of almost every variety.

The importance of the undertaking was fully understood by President Jefferson and his confidence in the two leaders of the expedition was fully demonstrated by the liberal manner in which they were supplied with government funds in outfitting the party. Both Lewis and Clark were officers in the United States army and were men of tried experience and proven worth.

After many days of detailed preparation for the great journey the party was made ready to start on schedule time, and they left the mouth of the Missouri on May 14, 1804. Each member of the party had a full realization of the dangers and perils that were sure to be encountered on the voyage of discovery, and they were plentifully equipped with weapons of defense and supplied with provisions enough to last until the end of the journey.

It had been originally calculated that the expedition would take up a number of years, as nobody had any idea of the area of the territory that must be traversed in order to form any accurate estimate of its extent. The explorers were men of action, and they had completed their remarkable explorations and had returned home safe, with the exception of a few members of their party, after an absence of two years and four months.

When the expedition entered the Missouri at its mouth, it was made up of one bateau and two pirogues. The trip up the Missouri was made with difficulty, as the craft were weighted down with men and provisions. Coming up the river the party had arrived at the mouth of Independence Creek, southeast of what is now Doniphan Station, on the Fourth of July, where the leaders decided to give their men a chance to celebrate the national holiday.

A camp was pitched on a spot of high ground a few rods up Independence Creek, and dinner was prepared and eaten in those primitive surroundings. Toward evening the explorers were considering the proper kind of a name to bestow on the creek, and decided upon Independence as being eminently fitting in honor of the nation's birthday. It was thus named and has remained to be known as such to the present day.

That night the expedition encamped on the Missouri side at an abandoned Indian village, near what is now called the Narrows, just above Rushville, then a large prairie and long since washed into the river. The ascent of the river was begun early the next morning, and they passed Blacksnake Hills without any mishap; the mouth of the Nodaway, then at Amazonia, and encamped that night at Nodaway Island; Wolf Creek was passed on the 9th; on the 11th, Tarkio, or Tanico Creek, and on the 14th the Nishnabotna.

The ascent of the river continued until the expedition arrived at the headquarters in what is now Virginia City, Mont., and after burying the canoes in which they had traveled from the falls of the Missouri, at the present site of Fort Benton, they crossed the Rocky Mountains, and finally struck the Clearwater River. The party built some more canoes and descended the Clearwater to the Columbia, through which they reached the Pacific Ocean on November 16, 1805. The trip was a most perilous one and embraced nearly every form of hardship that could possibly be encountered in a wild country.

The total length of the journey was 4,133 miles and, while some of the party had been killed by Indians on the journey, the health of the others was in fine condition. The party wintered at the mouth of the Columbia River and returned by the same route, arriving at St. Louis September 18, 1806. History has since shown us that the expedition was one of the most fearless and successful ever attempted. The leaders were warmly and gratefully welcomed on their return to civilization, and their account of the exploration has proved that theis estimate of the grandeur and richness and vastness of the territory they traversed was neither exaggerated nor misjudged.

PROMINENT IN KANSAS SLAVERY FIGHT

Dr. George W. Brown, Who Published First Free State Paper of Kansas, Succumbs in Illinois.

George W. Brown, ninety-five years old, who was a prominent figure in the clash of slavery and anti-slavery for the counties in Kansas, died in Rockford, Illinois, February 5, 1915. He founded the Herald of Freedom, the first free state newspaper published in Kansas. Border ruffians destroyed his printing plant. A jury indicted him for treason, and he was a prisoner for four months. He established the Connautville (Pa.) Courier in 1846.

The Kicking Kickapoos

THE MOST TROUBLESOME TRIBE THE GOVERNMENT HAD TO DEAL WITH—NARRATED BY PRYOR PLANK A FEW MONTHS BEFORE HIS DEATH

In Continual Contention With the Great White Father, as They Called the President—They Were Aided and Encouraged In All Their Disputes by A. J. Boyd, a Whisky Trader—They Wrangled Over the Location of Their Land, About the Price of It and About How Much They Should Have—Got Drunk and Quarreled Over Many Things—Wathena Bears the Anglicized Name of an Old Chief, Wah-the-nah.

In a letter to the writer of this article, dated August 28, 1910, Hon. Pryor Plank, of Eagle Springs, Doniphan County, who had many interesting documentary and statistical relics of the Kickapoo Indian agency under Maj. Daniel Vandereslice, relates some unpublished incidents in connection with the Kickapoo Indians, when they lived in what is now Doniphan, Atchison and Leavenworth counties, in the early days. Mr. Plank says:

"The Kickapoos were one of the most troublesome tribes the government had to deal with in Kansas. They were always contending for something that did not belong to them. When the government removed the Iowas and Sacs from the Platte purchase, in the northwest corner of the state of Missouri, in 1837, and located them on what is now the northern half of Doniphan County, the Kickapoos claimed that their lands extended north of Wolf River, and a long controversy ensued which ended in the tribe losing out and their northern boundary was established at a point beginning on the west bank of the Missouri River, four miles above the Robidoux trading post, now St. Joseph, Mo., and running west through the center of Doniphan County. This lopped off from the Kickapoos the entire tract of land allotted to the Sacs and Foxes of Missouri, between them and the Iowas on the north, extending up the west bank of the Missouri to the mouth of Wolf River, and running west between the Iowa and Sac Mission and Great Nemaha agency, which were located a little over a half mile apart.

"When the government commenced negotiating with the Indians for their lands in Kansas preparatory to opening up the country to white settlement fresh trouble broke out with the Kickapoos over their boundaries, they now claiming that their southern boundary extended down along the Fort Leavenworth military reservation, which would have taken a considerable slice from the Delaware lands which lay directly south of the Kickapoos. The Kickapoos were encouraged in this dispute by A. J. Boyd, a whisky trader among them, who pretended to read their letters from the secretary of the interior stating that they were right in their contention. Agent Vanderslice finally called a council of the tribe on the Grasshopper River to discuss the question, and after much persuasion, got them to assemble at the place designated. After a long and noisy jangle in which the Kickapoos accused the Great Father at Washington of talking with a forked tongue, saying one thing and meaning another, they were convinced from the field notes that they were wrong, and suddenly yielded the point.

"The next trouble the government had with the Kickapoos was over the price of their lands. They wanted $1.25 per acre, but they were turned down on this, as they had been in their boundary disputes, but the government agreed to have their improvements appraised and pay them the appraised value, which I will refer to later on.

"When the Kickapoos sold out they reserved 150,000 acres above the falls of the Grasshopper for a home, and were to have $20,000 removal money when they went onto it, but when it came to making the selection, they had changed their minds and contended that they were to make the selection below the falls if that locality suited them better. When they were turned down on this, they became insolent and refused to go, at the same time demanding the removal money, which they were not to have until they did go. When they found they could not bluff the government into a compliance with their demands, they went peaceably onto their reservation as first agreed upon in the treaty.

"Agent Vanderslice was now instructed to appraise the Kickapoo improvements according to treaty stipulations, which he did. I have the original record of this appraisement in my possession, written in pencil, much of which is so dim it can scarcely be made out. As you may be interested in knowing who some of the first settlers on the Kickapoo lands were, I will give their names, as I find them in this old record. I will also give the names of some of the prominent Indians, and the value placed on their improvements. The first on the list is Wah-the-nah, who had improvements on Duck Creek, consisting of 800 rails and three acres of broken ground, valued at $36. To this appraisement the following foot note is added: 'Horace Herndon has laid off the town of Port William at this place.' It was evident that Wah-the-nah, the chief, did not have his permanent home at this place; he may have had a squaw living there or there may have been another Wah-the-nah in the tribe, for all I know. At any rate, further on, Wah-the-nah is given credit for fourteen acres of broken ground, three lots (enclosed with rails, I suppose), one corn crib and about 7,000 rails, valued at $255. It is stated that these improvements were in the village and were, no doubt, where the town of Wathena now is. This town derived its name from Wah-the-nah, the old Kickapoo chief. It seems strange that no house is mentioned in either of these appraisements—not even a bark wickiup. It is unreasonable to suppose that a prominent chief would have no house to live in or one so shabby that it was not worth appraising, when bark houses valued at $5 were appraised. It may be that the government built this chief a house and would not, of course, appraise its own property for the benefit of others. It is not probable that Wah-the-nah lived outdoors.

"Wa-po-puck (or that is what the Indians called him), interpreter for the Kickapoos, is not credited with a house, and Pensonneau had a house, I know, for I was at it in October, 1854. He is credited with 1,200 rails and valued at $96.

"John Kennekuk, probably a son of old Chief Ken-ne-kuk, had a large house (twenty feet square, a story and a half high, with good floors, single roof, stove, chimney and porch, all in good repair, valued at $150, which was very low, indeed, but his thirty-two acres of broken ground was valued at $280, making $430 for his improvements, which was more than anyone else received. Kennekuk had been the leader in the southern boundary dispute and had accused Agent Vanderslice of using profane language in the council of the Grasshopper, where that controversy was settled, to which that official replied that he (Kennekuk) was a poor example to be lecturing others on good morals when he got drunk and used bad language himself.

Chief Ken-ne-kuk

"John B. Jones and Samuel M. Bowman were the first settlers where the aforementioned improvements were. No-ko-wat, a sub-chief, had improvements valued at $331, and Cap-i-o-mah, also a sub-chief, had but little, and received only $27. John Cook was the first settler where his improvements were. I think Cook was a Baptist preacher from near DeKalb, in Buchanan County, Mo.

"Eighty-four Kickapoos had improvements valued at $7,084, which included 400 acres in cultivation, while thirteen Pottawatomies that were enrolled with them had only $684 worth of improvements, and not an acre in cultivation. Now-ah-quoke, however, seems to have redeemed himself partially for his shiftlessness by allowing his house, which was twenty feet square, to be used as a church, and a small building for a jail. For these two buildings he received $110.

"As the names of these Indians and a list of their improvements would swell this section to a great length, I will only give the names of the settlers on the improvements when the appraisement was made: Horace Herndon, Robert W. Thompson, Jas. S. Thompson, Wm. Thompson, John B. Jones, Samuel M. Bowman, J. L. Thompson, Charles Barrington, Allen Henson, Miller (first name not given), Jonathan Smith, I. Smith, T. J. Thomas, John Cook, Jacob Myers, Ann Reeder, George W. Thompson, G. W. Myers, G. W. Davis, Ellet Sharp, Hoberg (first name not given), and Richard Sharters. The next on the list is marked 'Town-Site.' I have no idea where the townsite was. Its promoters were Martin, Thornburg, David Atkins and a man named Hayes.

"There were no white settlers on all these Indian improvements when this appraisement was made in December, 1854, but some of the settlers' claims would include four or five improvements, as the Indians generally lived in villages. I don't think the settlers paid the government anything for these improvements. If they did, I never heard of it, and I can find no record of such payments being made. I know on the Iowa and Sac lands they did not, though these Indians burnt everything they could before they went away with the exception of a few old bark houses that they thought, no doubt, the proud pale faces would not live in, but some of them did, and one of these places of the red man in an old deserted village was used by the pioneer settlers as a church house for awhile."

The above excerpts from Mr. Plank's letter constitute a most valuable contribution to our early local history. He shows that the tribal name of the Kickapoos is not a misnomer so far as the first syllable is concerned, and gives us some facts regarding the history of that tribe in this section that have hitherto not been published. His letter is particularly important as giving official information regarding the first actual white settlers of the Kickapoo lands, which included our own county of Atchison.

Among the early settlers Mr. Plank mentions Charles Barrington, Allen Henson, Jonathan Smith and a man named Miller. Henson was one of the very first settlers of Oak Mills, and it it probable that the Miller mentioned was John Miller, who settled at Oak Mills early in 1854, and was the original owner of the townsite. There was also a Barrington at Oak Mills at a very early day, and his son, "Bud" Barrington, has been a policeman in Kansas City, Kan., for several years. Jonathan Smith was an early merchant of old Port William. He was shot and killed by Martin Bland in the early days. Horace Herndon was one of the founders of Port William, and the father of Mrs. H. C. King and James Herndon, now living at Round Prairie. He was probably the earliest justice of the peace in Atchison County. John J. Ingalls, during his early career as a lawyer, tried cases before 'Squire Herndon at Port William. Ellet Sharp, mentioned by Mr. Plank, was evidently the same Sharp mentioned in Andreas' History of Kansas, as Alex Sharp, an Indian trader, who settled near old Muscotah at a very early day, and was the first postmaster in Grasshopper Township. The Hoberg mentioned, was unquestionably the late Frederick Hoberg, of Kickapoo. Mr. Hoberg came to Kansas, June 10, 1854, and took a claim on the present site of Kickapoo, which he afterward sold to the Kickapoo Town Company. It is not probable that the George W. Thompson mentioned is the George W. Thompson who now lives at Highbridge, in Atchison County, for when he first came to Kansas in 1854, he took a claim on the Delaware lands near the present site of Leavenworth, moving to Atchison County later.

The "Town-Site" and its promoters, Martin, Thornburg, Atkins and Hays, alluded to by Mr. Plank, may have been that of Martinsburg, near the present site of Potter. It was named for a man by the name of Martin, who was its chief promoter, and it is known that a man named Hays kept a store there. The town never amounted to anything.

Cap-i-o-mah, the Kickapoo sub-chief, lived in what is now as Capioma Township, Atchison County. The township was named for him. His band had a village there, and it was known as Capioma. The town of Capioma, in Nemaha County, was also named for him.

One of the most important local historical revelations in Mr. Plank's letter is the fact that the townsite of Port William was originally owned by Wathena, the Kickapoo chief, and that what is now known as Little Walnut Creek at that place, was then known as Duck Creek. It is probable that the old Major Vanderslice memorandum in Mr. Plank's possession, contains the only recorded mention of this creek by its original or Indian name. W. J. (Uncle Jack) Bailey, of Atchison, says that when he first came to Port William on June 12, 1854, an Indian known as "Kickapoo John" was living there.

It will be noted in the foregoing that Mr. Plank calls particular attention to the fact that no house—not even a bark lodge—is mentioned in the appraisement of Wah-the-nah's property. Rev. W. H. Good, the missionary, who visited Wathena's village in July, 1854, about five months before the appraisement was made, writes in his "Outposts of Zion": "During this excursion I had an interesting visit to the wigwam of Wa-the-na, a man of some consequence among the Kickapoos, and found his establishment fitted up after the real Indian style, but superior to anything of the kind I had witnessed. The domicile consisted of two large bark camps, of two apartments each; the walls within were hung with flag matting and the apartments furnished with bedding of the same material. The males of the household were engaged in catching and breaking wild oxen and the females employed in manufacturing the flag matting. Marks of thrift and neatness were apparent, not commonly found in Indian life."

Mr. Plank's notes also reveal that the Indian name of Paschal Pensoneau, Atchison County's first white settler, was Wah-no-puck. This is the only reference to Pensoneau's Indian name that has ever come to light.

The Democratic Party in Doniphan County

It has been suggested that I tell something of the history of the Democratic party that has fallen within my knowledge during the time I was a citizen of Doniphan County. It should be understood that in my opinion the Democracy of Doniphan County has been an example of one of the most acute paradoxes that could be imagined. The members of the party had nothing to gain by membership in the organization, for in those days we could seldom elect even a township officer, but the organization was kept up, a ticket always put in the field and many a spirited campaign put up against hopeless odds, kept up a weekly newspaper which never did a paying business, sent bright, high-toned citizens to congressional and state conventions who paid their own expenses. Most of the members of the party were well-to-do, and the office hunting contingent was an unknown quantity. Nearly every school district had its Democratic nabob with room at his table for Democratic speakers or committeemen who might be abroad on their duties, and to be a Democrat at such times was to be a social lion as well. It was frequently said of us as a party that we were so dense that we could not see the opportunities that presented themselves for political advantage because the party could never be persuaded to take up and support for office a disgruntled Republican who had met with disappointment at the hands of a convention of his own party and was ready to jump into the ranks of the Democrats to satisfy revenge. It is with a feeling of pride that I remember that I was an accredited leader of such a high-minded body of citizens. We had some fun occasionally, as the following anecdote will show:

The county was so far gone in the hands of the Republicans that the Democratic state committee would give us little attention in the assignment of speakers. This condition was well-known to the Republican party managers and, on one occasion one of them said to me after a talk showing the state of affairs I have mentioned: "I can get you one of the best speakers in the state at no expense to your organization, if you will arrange a meeting for him." It should be explained that at this time the Republicans were very bitter against the Pops and arrangements were going forward between the Pops and the Democrats for fusion on the state ticket. The Republican went on to say that the speaker he would send would make a good Democratic speech, but before he finished would roundly abuse the Republicans, after which he would pay his respects to the Pops in a manner that would not be at all pleasing to them. I was anxious to get hold of a good campaigner, especially as it would cost nothing, so I accepted. In due course the speaker arrived and his name was Mason, deputy U. S. district attorney. It rained hard that day and evening, and the speaker wanted to know if it would not be best to call the meeting off, but I told him we would go ahead, if he didn't mind, as quite a number of people from the country had come in to hear the speaking, and word had been quietly given to the Republicans of what was coming off and they would be on hand to swell the crowd. A well-known Democrat, not on the inside of the deal, was chosen as chairman, and Mr. Mason was introduced. He was one of the most talented of speakers, and soon had the Democrats feeling fine while listening to his praise of the Cleveland administration. He then paid his respects to the Republicans and what he knew about them and didn't hesitate to tell was something awful. He certainly did skin them good, greatly to the delight of the Pops and Democrats, who cheered his remarks generously, and the Republicans who knew the deal nevertheless had to squirm. There is perhaps no man with a more bitter tongue than Mason. He certainly was a master at the skinning game. The Republicans fairly jumped for joy at the way he handled the Pops and the Democrats were uneasy as to the outcome and would have been glad to have the speaker let up. The chairman called me over and asked if there was no way to call him off, as it might start a row. I told him that it was about over, I thought, and that we were organized to stop a row. He settled back in his seat to grin and bear it, but Mr. Mason soon closed his speech, this time with a jolly for the Democrats and no trouble resulted. The affair averaged up pretty well—the speech pleased the Democrats, half pleased the Republicans and the Pops had theirs whether they liked it or not.

The independent situation of the Doniphan County Democrats was always noticeable at congressional and state conventions, which attitude had the effect of putting them in the front of the proceedings and in the distribution of the honors. At the Valley Falls convention which nominated Henry Solomon for congress, the chairmanship of the convention was given to Doniphan County to make it behave itself and not insist on putting up Clark of Horton. After that was arranged, a well-known stockman from the southern part of the county said: "Now that we have this chairmanship, what are we going to do with it? Can you take care of it, Walt?" I said very modestly that I would be pleased to try, and I was so successful that I held the position in all the Democratic conventions as long as I remained in the state, and got to be warm friends with a fine lot of Democrats all over the district. Henry Solomon was defeated, of course, as we never did have votes enough to put a congressman across in the First district, but he made the most brilliant campaign ever put up, and it is now a pleasure for him to recall it. He is practicing law in Kansas City, Mo., and it takes more than a congressman's salary to pay his office rent.

The Doniphan County delegation, in combination with some of the others, broke up the practice of the nomination of Leavenworth and Atchison counties in congressional matters and carried the conventions to the other county seat towns in the district. When we were at the state conventions we were treated with proper consideration, and it was not a great while before a seat in the delegation was a much-coveted honor.

Another personal triumph was carrying Norway precinct against Sard Brewster for county attorney, but he seemed always to enjoy it as much as I did. That was quite some feat, as Republicans were as thick as fleas in that neighborhood, but no other precinct in the county favored me with a majority. Now, if enough precincts had gone my way in that electon, it would have perhaps squelched a young man who has cut lots of ice in public life and is still going good.

There is a certain satisfaction in being a Doniphan County Democrat that is different from being a Democrat from anywhere else, and a man who enjoys that distinction should never lightly let it escape, for it is a fact that such a Democrat has a seat among the elect.

IOWA INDIANS IN LONDON

(Contributed by Geo. J. Remsburg.)

In 1844 Chief White Cloud and a band of his Iowas, then living in Doniphan County, visited London, England. The following account of this visit, is taken from the Athenaeum of September, 1844:

"The migration of the Indian tribes, driven from their ancient hunting grounds, is taking a new direction, and the place in which to study their habits and customs is now the Egyptian Hall, in Piccadilly. To the Ojibbeways have succeeded the Iowas, a body of whom, fourteen in number, warriors, squaws and a papoose, have arrived at that town residence from their seat on the Upper Missouri, near the Rocky Mountains of North America, for the purpose of exhibiting their war and other dances, songs and games, under the arrangement of Mr. Catlin. They are headed by their principal chief, White Cloud, and their great medicine man, and this is the first time, it is said, that the head of a tribe or a 'mystery man,' has ever left his native prairies for a foreign land. In personal appearance these men are inferior to their predecessors, the Ojibbeways, still we warn our country women, after what has passed (several of the Ojibbeways married English ladies while in London), to be on their guard against the seductions of 'Roman Nose' (No-ho-man-ya). Let them beware of 'Strutting Pigeon,' and her sister squaws, who are, we understand, very formidable looking persons. One of them is called 'Oke-we-me,' the 'Female Bear, that walks on the back of another,' and the name is, we think, very significant of what an English lady may expect in the wigwam of an Indian chief. These people are amongst the most warlike of the North American tribes—more wild and uncouth than any who have yet made their appearance in this country, and well worth visiting, for the striking pictures they exhibit of the rude and savage life of the forest and the prairie."

Little's "Living Age," for October, 1844, said of them: "In consequence of the great success that attended the exhibition of the Ioway Indians, at Lord's cricket grounds, it has been resolved to give a series of pictures of Indian life, still more attractive, at Vauxhall Gardens. The chiefs will appear on horseback and, from the extent of the grounds, they will be enabled to afford a vivid tableaux of hunting, fighting, shooting, and all the other pursuits of the native prairie."

Safe Investment Securities

Twenty-five years' active participation in the business of marketing securities has given Mr. Frank S. Brownlee, of Omaha, a keen and unerring insight into the true values of all manner of commercial paper.

It is a well-known fact that even the most reliable securities frequently fluctuate in value, and it takes a man thoroughly posted at all times to determine their true worth at a moment's notice.

For this reason alone people desiring to invest in commercial paper of any kind would do well to communicate with Mr. Brownlee because of his expert knowledge of every known marketable security.

During the quarter century that Mr. Brownlee has been handling investment securities, his judgment has never cost a client a penny, but on the contrary has netted customers many thousands of dollars.

Mr. Brownlee is a man of sound financial capacity, and has sterling views on the rights of the investing public. He may be found during business hours in his offices in the Bee Building, Omaha, where he has made his headquarters for the last fifteen years, and can be reached by both local and long distance 'phone—Doug-

The Man Who Opened Kansas

Thomas Jefferson Sutherland Is Given Credit for Being the Man Who First Proposed and Then Espoused the Cause of Throwing Not Only Kansas, but Nebraska Territory Open to Settlement—Died at the Old Mission and His Bones Lie Buried in an Unmarked Grave.

For two or three generations there have been all manner of claims made regarding the man who first started the movement to open the territory of Kansas to settlement. Even some of the historians of the day have advanced different accounts of the matter, some of them even going so far as to give the credit either to a personal friend or a member of their own families.

But to the present generation who wants to know things straight from the shoulder, it is their due to know the truth as far as written documents and other incidents of early days are available. Most of the evidence may be regarded as hearsay now, but the fact remains that the man who first advocated the opening of Kansas to settlement died at the old mission in Doniphan County, near the present town of Highland, and his bones lie buried there.

The man who was responsible for having Kansas thrown open to settlement was Thomas Jefferson Sutherland, and the facts relating to his efforts in that direction were related many years ago by James Williams, one of the earliest settlers in the vicinity of Highland. Some fly-by-night historians have at various times given the credit to others, but subsequent events proved that their motives were selfish.

Mr. Williams was in Doniphan County soon enough to know, and, moreover, he had been associated with General Sutherland for a number of years after that gentleman started the agitation to have both Kansas and Nebraska opened to settlement. Some time after the territory was declared open, Mr. Williams came to Doniphan County and married a widowed sister of Father Irvin, the great missionary to the Indians, before and after the opening of the territory.

Mr. Williams' wife was a Mrs. Donaldson, and she had been living at the mission with her brother for some time after the death of her first husband. Her son, Isaac G. Donaldson, had a fine home in Iowa Township, not far from the site of the old mission.

Thomas Jefferson Sutherland had an interesting career and from what can be gathered he was an able and intelligent man. He was a native of New York, and he told frequently that he had been born in a log cabin and rocked to sleep in a sugar trough. Tall and of commanding appearance, Sutherland was very determined looking and appeared to be every inch a man. People always called him General, not that he had any military training, but because he looked the part. It is known that he sought a position in the army during the Mexican war, but William L. Marcy, who was then secretary of war, and his personal friend, was unable to give him the rank he desired, because he had not been graduated from West Point. He got his title of general, possibly, from having been one of the leaders of a party to aid the Canadian rebellion of 1837.

The Canadian venture almost proved disastrous for General Sutherland, for he was captured and sentenced to death. He lay three years in a Canadian prison and was only set free when it was established by this country that he was not taken on Canadian soil. His case for awhile threatened international complications, but the government at Washington was insistent, and the release of General Sutherland was finally secured. Some years afterward he had a law case in Quebec and requested permission of the prime minister of England to go there. This was the reply he received: "Mr. Sutherland, if we ever catch you in Canada, we will hang you."

General Sutherland was a rank Democrat and as violent an abolitionist as ever lived, strange as that may seem. He edited a paper in Washington, D. C., in the early '40's, and during his residence in that city he put in considerable time about the general land office, and was regarded as an authority on Indian reservations and land titles. He joined the forty-niners in the overland rush to California, and made a special trip through Kansas to examine the topography and general condition of the country. He was so impressed with what he saw that he wrote a book about the Kansas territory.

It was on his return in 1850 that Mr. Williams first met General Sutherland in Cincinnati, and the latter induced him to accept a position as his traveling secretary. The General had been lecturing on the development of the human brain, and he always was greeted with full houses. Nobody thought about having Kansas opened to settlement until the petitions which General Sutherland circulated in every town where he lectured began to submerge the authorities in Washington. He never left a town without securing at least two thousand signatures to a petition to have the territory opened.

The General and Mr. Williams were making their way toward Kansas on the lecture tour, but when they reached St. Charles, Mo., some of the hillbillies stole the tongue of their wagon, because the Missouri slavery men had suspected them of being abolitionists. When the General discovered this, his fighting blood was aroused, and he threatened to wipe out the town unless the wagon tongue was replaced, and that mighty quick. A crowd had collected and threatened to tar and feather the General, but he was game to the core. Pulling a monster looking revolver, he called upon Mr. Williams and two other companions to do likewise, which they promptly did. The five "cannon" were leveled at three of the leading citizens of the town and the General invited the bushwhackers to bring along their tar and feathers, with the admonition that on first sight of such things the three leading men of the town would "go to glory." He had the dirty Missouri mob overawed, and they very soon brought back the tongue of the wagon and put it in place. The most disgraceful feature of this incident occurred when a committee of preachers waited on the General and apologized for the rough actions of the community, saying that the state and the country was pro-slavery, and "he shouldn't ought to talk so." Then they requested him to leave town. This was the General's answer: "I respect everybody's religion, and the ministers of such above all, but when a bunch of semi-sanctified nigger-loving swine like you approach men with such an infamous proposition, I denounce you as not being worthy the respect due a dog. I shall leave this town when I get d——d good and ready." Thomas Jefferson remained until the next day, and for reasons best known to themselves, the people of St. Charles did not further interfere with either himself or any member of his party.

The General always contended that the twenty-mile strip between the two Nemahas had been abandoned and was, therefore, open to settlement, and he was hunting up emigrants to settle there when he got into a mix-up with some of the Missouri bushwhackers at Independence, Mo. A gang of that stripe started to rough-house Sutherland one night, and he promptly shot one of them through the liver. The offender was arrested, but he was still game and defended himself with such skill before the bewhiskered justice that he was let off with a dollar fine. The "judge" said afterward that he would have let the prisoner go, but that he needed the money for "chawin' terbaccer."

Thomas J. enrolled several emigrants who went with him to settle on the strip between the Nemahas. Government agents protested that the land was not open, but the General told them he knew what he was about and, furthermore, that he knew more about Indian reservations and the laws governing them than all the officials in Washington. Several families went with him, and in the meantime Mr. Williams had come to the mission, where he was married, and remained for many years, or until the territory was thrown open, and he settled near Highland. Among the party who went to Nemaha was W. W. Moore, who afterward established a station on the Overland route on the Nemaha River, a few miles from the old town of Richmond. Later Mr. Moore moved to White Cloud, where he resided for a number of years.

The General was taken sick on the Nemaha, and at his request he was taken to the mission for treatment. That was in September, 1850. Father Irvin, who had heard all about the General's remarkable accomplishments and wonderful achievements, gave him a cheerful welcome, but his experienced eyes perceived that he had not very long to live. On his arrival at the mission Mr. Sutherland was met by his old friend, Mr. Williams, to whom he sorrowfully said: "I have come here to die. I should like to have lived to see Kansas become a free state, but I will die with the satisfaction that I have done some good, effective work in that direction."

The General never spoke after that. He lingered in an unconscious condition for three weeks, when he died. His body was buried in the old mission graveyard, and his bones are supposed to lie beneath the sod there yet — bones of the man who was responsible for having Kansas thrown open to settlement and who paved the way for making her the great free state she is today. The location of the General's grave is thought to be under a farmer's barn, that was erected on the former site of the old graveyard.

Early Kansas History

What Kansas Was in the Pioneer Days, and What She Is Today—What the Guerillas Did—Reminiscences

Today Kansas is a great commonwealth, but it was only yesterday, as time is reckoned in the life of states, that conditions were far, far different. Today her wide prairies are bedecked with fields of golden grain—golden in the literal sense of the word, for they have brought wonderful prosperity to the farmers of the state. Today she is dotted with hundreds of thriving towns and cities, factory whistles are heard from every quarter, and long trains of cars are seen carrying the product of her fields, of her numerous rich cement plants, of her smelters, of her coal fields, and of her building stone, to all parts of the country—yes, even to the ports of far distant countries.

But yesterday it was different. As the prospector thrusts aside a rough, rugged and forbidding stone, preferring instead a bright fragment of quartz nearby, so Kansas was thrust aside by many of those who failed to see beneath her rough exterior her true and priceless value, and who preferred instead those new settlements whose prosperity was great, though but for a day. The dream of vast wealth coming between a sunrise and a sunset lured many away from Kansas and to those fields where prosperity appeared to await them, when in truth it was as unattainable as a mirage on the horizon. Some few with keener foresight settled in that territory now embraced within the confines of Doniphan, Atchison and Leavenworth counties. They saw, despite the rough, rugged and forbidding appearance of the region, that it was a diamond in the rough, and they set to work with energy and determination to develop it to its highest possibilities. And this great diamond of the west they have polished until it stands as a gem, unsurpassed, in the greatest country of all time.

But their way was not an easy one. Even had they been unmolested in their work during all the years of Kansas' infancy, their hardships would have been such as would be inconceivable to the residents of the state today. More turmoil, strife and petty disturbances interrupted the early settlement and development of Kansas, perhaps, than any other state in the Union. When it wasn't the Indians, it was the prairie fires; and when it wasn't the fires, it was the grasshoppers, or perhaps a "freshet." Everything might have gone pretty smoothly for some days, when all their work would be undone by a tornado, or by the guerillas from Missouri.

In that period between 1854 and the breaking out of the civil war, Kansas was infested with anti-abolitionists, who used every means in their power to make Kansas a slave state. Quantrell's and Price's men, and their sympathizers during this period filled residents of the state with constant anxiety. Foreseeing the stand which Kansas would take should the slavery question precipitate a war, the guerillas entered houses in Kansas when the male members of the household were absent and forced the women to give up all the firearms.

Charles Rodgers, who resided near Columbus during the border-ruffian times, told a story once of how, when he was absent from his home, the guerrillas entered his home and demanded of his wife all the firearms in the house, but they questioned her veracity and insisted that unless she produced the weapons at once, they would set fire to the house. When she did not comply with their demand, they believed her. At this same time they entered the home of B. H. Brock and confiscated his firearms. Joseph Rodgers and Mrs. Rebecca Jane McDonald of Concordia, Kansas, are children of Charles Rodgers, who related the foregoing incident. One of the greatest troubles in northeastern Kansas, during the war, was from the practice called "Jayhawking," and Doniphan, Atchison and Leavenworth counties were especially infested by the bands of Jayhawkers. This was a term that originated on the Kansas border south of the Kansas river, during the trouble previous to the war, and was applied to small bands of parties from Kansas that crossed over into Missouri to retaliate for the depredations committed by bands from the latter state.

Sometimes they would run off negroes, sometimes steal horses or commit other acts of plunder, and sometimes, perhaps, even commit murders. When the rebellion broke out, the disloyal element in Missouri and Kansas was very insolent and aggressive. There were many instances in which citizens were threatened or assaulted, and sometimes plundered. Slaves began to run away from Missouri of their own accord and cross over into Kansas. They were frequently followed by hunters from Missouri who, assisted by persons in Kansas, would seize and carry the negroes back. On such occasions they were very insulting and overbearing. Very early in the first summer of the war, the Jayhawkers put in an appearance. At first they were regarded with favor by many good citizens, who thought it would cool down the insolence of disloyal persons on this side and prevent raids into the state. It had the effect first named, but in the end it provoked retaliation from Missouri, and all order-loving citizens soon became sick of the Jayhawker gentry. They generally made their harboring places with persons living in obscure or out of the way places, who sympathized with them, or in communities where there was a strong element who upheld them, and where there were good facilities for crossing over into Missouri. They came from nobody knew where, and were generally young, stout and active men, who could have done the country good service in the army. No doubt many of them were loyal in sentiment, especially those that first engaged in the business. But it was soon discovered that many were in the gangs that had been notoriously disloyal; and it soon became evident that their hatred of rebels arose chiefly from the fact that the loyal sentiment was in the ascendent. Had the other party been uppermost, they would have preyed upon the Union people; their object was plunder.

Instead of serving the government in the army they acted without authority from lawful government, and the plunder they took was not turned over to the government, but was converted to their own use. They were of no benefit to the public service, and were a menace to the community that they infested.

They would take boats, horses, wagons or anything they needed in their expeditions, without the consent of the owners, and without compensation. The persons who harbored them, usually had a good share of personal enemies, and they would take revenge by setting the Jayhawkers upon them to plunder them, representing that they were "Secesh"—which meant disloyal persons or their sympathizers. At times the brush in certain localities and pasture fields belonging to certain persons, were filled with stolen horses. Gangs of these men were known to cross over into Missouri in the evening and return the next morning, bringing all manner of goods from plundered houses and stores, many of the men were even wearing women's shawls around their shoulders.

Companies of soldiers were for a long time stationed on the Missouri side, especially to guard against the Jayhawkers; and citizens on this side were compelled to organize against them. They became insolent and tyrannical, even to loyal people. After the known disloyal people had been plundered of all their property, persons whose sympathies were supposed to be on that side were attended to; then Union men who had opposed Jayhawking were accused of being "tinctured," and were plundered, then every man, regardless of politics, who owned good horses, was disloyal and was raided. Finally it got down to plain, promiscuous horse stealing. This thing lasted until 1861 and 1862. In the latter year, the citizens went to organizing and succeeded in raiding them by killing the leaders. Some were killed at Leavenworth, Atchison and other river towns.

TOWNS THAT DISAPPEARED

In the early days of settlement in Doniphan County there was a general craze to found and build towns. This was especially the case along the Missouri River, where scores of people had their pet projects for "starting a town."

Among the first of these now defunct towns was Charlestown, which was located on the northeast quarter of Section 22, Township 2, Range 22, near where John Kotsch and L. H. Gibson reside, six miles east and north of Troy. The townsite was owned by a stock company consisting of Michael Bird, Isaac S. Jones, Miles W. Brown, A. G. Clarke, Charles F. Holly, E. W. Wood, and Charles B. Hamilton.

The town of Charlestown attained a fair degree of prosperity during the fifties and for a time was considered by the promoters as a sure winner. It had fifteen or twenty houses and stores at one time, which was regarded as quite a sufficient number to make the town respectable in size. After a few years, however, trade was diverted to other places and Charlestown gradually receded, and was finally vacated and the townsite converted back into a farm.

On May 25, 1857, Columbus City was laid out on the southeast quarter, Section 20, and the southwest quarter of Section 21, Township 2, Range 22, about twelve miles northeast of Troy. In the September following a petition was filed by T. H. McCulloch, H. Miles Moore, Rev. James Skinner, Benjamin H. Brock, Thomas Bell, Daniel Bauman, Henry Wilson, Robert Hayes, James Craft, David Cowger, J. W. Wilson and Phillip Rush for the location of a town, to be officially known as Columbus City. The town had some semblance of growth for a few years, and for a while was assessed as a townsite, but was abandoned and used for a farm about the time of the breaking out of the Civil War. Albert Hazen of Barnes, Kansas, is probably the only living business man of the town today. Mrs. R. H. Montgomery's father, B. H. Brock, was Postmaster.

Evansvile was another town which sprung up about the time Columbus City came into being. It was located on the north half of Section 25, Township 3, and Range 21. Col. D. M. Johnston projected Evansville, and filed his claim on June 1, 1857, on behalf of the Evansville Townsite Company. Joel P. Blair made the final filings in the land office in Doniphan, but with that entry the town's official record ends. A few houses were built in a rough manner and the place never amounted to anything as a trading point.

The town of Lafayette was laid out on December 22, 1856, by J. B. McAllister, Thomas B. Glenn and C. F. Bowron. The site comprised fractions of two quarter sections situated along the Missouri River in Centre Township. The location was considered an excellent one, being a little south of the mouth of Wolf River, northwest of the mouth of Mosquito Creek. It was six miles north and west of Troy and had a good landing for steamboats. Lafayette had a number of stores and a saw mill at one time and struggled along for an existence until about 1870 when it became a memory with the people who originally traded there. When Lafayette disappeared it was lost forever.

First Kansas Marriage

Ceremony Uniting in Holy Wedlock the First Couple in the Territory of Kansas Was Performed at the Old Mission by Rev. William Irvin on July 3, 1845—Silas Pierce and Miss Mary Shook Were the Contracting Parties.

There have been thousands of happy marriages in the country that is now the state of Kansas, since the coming of the white man, but Doniphan County has the honor of having the first matrimonial ceremony performed within her borders.

For more than a half a century there have been all manner of claims advanced by early-day "historians" as to where the first marriage took place and who the contracting parties were, but the Chief knows that the first marriage in the Kansas territory was at the old Mission, and it has the records to prove it.

To the Rev. William Hamilton, then an assistant missionary to Father Irvin at the old Mission of the Iowas and Sacs, near the present site of Highland, history concedes the honor of having officiated at the first marriage that was solemnized within the territory.

The ceremony took place on July 3, 1845, and the contracting parties were Silas Pierce and Miss Mary Shook. Silas had been employed at the mission as an all-around handy man for a couple of years, and it was while on a business trip to Andrew County that he became acquainted with his future wife.

There were a number of witnesses to the marriage of Silas and Miss Shook, many of whom were connected with the Mission at the time, and others were either visitors or friends of the contracting parties. Among some of those present at the ceremony were Grandfather and Grandmother Irvin, who had come from their home in Pennsylvania to visit their son, the faithful Father Irvin; Father Irvin and his wife Eliza; Mrs. Rachel McCreary, a sister of Mrs. Irvin, and her son T. J. McCreary, who died a few years ago on his farm near Highland; Miss Flora McCreary; Miss Elizabeth Masters, daughter of John Masters; Mr. Garvin, Henry Adamson and J. C. Waterson, carpenters working on the new Mission building; Chief Frank White Cloud and his wife Mary; Miss Ann Eliza Richardson, daughter of Major William P. Richardson, the Indian agent, and who afterward became the wife of Hon. Williard P. Hall, of St. Joseph; and a number of sub-chiefs, squaws and Indian maidens.

The wedding day was a gala event at the Mission. The fact that the marriage was the first to be performed in the territory created a great deal of excitement at the Mission and as it was the first opportunity the Indians had of seeing two pale faces get together, stirred up interest all over the reservation.

There was a wedding breakfast to which the leading Indians with their squaws were invited and it was afterward said that Mrs. White Cloud was as happy over the occasion as any of the most dignified ladies of the Mission. While there was nothing harder than coffee and good, sparkling spring water with which to drink the health of the bride and groom, the Indian guests tackled the treat with as much eclat as if it were sent along up by the great white father.

Silas Pierce was an industrious young man and a great hustler around the Mission. He was born in Baltimore County, Maryland, November 27, 1817, and with his parents settled in Richland County, Ohio, in 1835. Coming to Holt County, Mo., in 1841, the Peirces took up farming, but Silas had a desire to penetrate farther west and he landed at the Mission in the latter part of that year.

Father Irvin quickly saw that Silas was both willing and ambitious and as he was handy with tools, the good man at once engaged him to work at all kinds of jobs around the Mission. Silas was not only a good farmer, but a good woodsman, who could chop down trees and fashion them into rails very rapidly. With Andrew and Martin Mayer he quarried stone for the new Mission building in Holt County, Mo., and it was while engaged at this work that he was sent on a business trip to Andrew County, where he became acquainted with his future wife.

Miss Shook was living with Finley McCreary near where Fillmore is now located, and she was practically a member of the family. She had been born in Westmoreland County, Pa., February 3, 1823, and was consequently six years the junior of Silas. When the McCrearys moved West, Mary came along and when they settled at the Mission in 1845, Silas concluded that he had Mary where he wanted her. He wasn't taking any chances of anybody cutting him out even in those early days and one morning he surprised Mary by saying, "Let's get married." By saying that Mary was surprised may be a little tribute to her maidenly modesty, for she confided to the ladies at the Mission that she had been expecting Silas to spring the secret on her long before.

Mr. and Mrs. Silas Pierce lived at the Mission until the new building had been completely finished and in 1846 they moved to a farm near Oregon, Mo., where they became prosperous and reared a large family.

George J. Remsburg

George Jacob Remsburg was born in Atchison County, Kansas, in 1871. His life has been devoted mainly to horticultural, journalistic, archaeological and historical work; spent many years on a fruit farm, removing to Atchison, Kan., in 1892, where he engaged in newspaper work on the Daily Champion, the oldest newspaper in Kansas; was a reporter, city editor, and also did editorial work on that paper up to 1900, when he returned to the farm on account of poor health; in 1894-95 he was editor of the Missouri Valley Farmer, which is now the leading agricultural journal west of the Mississippi; during the winter of 1905-6, was on the reportorial staff of the Leavenworth Daily Post, and editor of Western Life published in that city; has also acted as special correspondent of the Leavenworth Times, Atchison Globe, St. Joseph Gazette, Kansas City Journal, Topeka Mail and Breeze, Daily Capital and other well-known Western newspapers, besides having been an editorial contributor to many different magazines and other publications.

George J. Remsburg

He has spent several years in archaeological explorations, principally in northeastern Kansas and northwestern Missouri; has opened a number of ancient mounds and identified and explored old village sites of the Kansas Indians visited by De Bourgmont in 1724 and Lewis & Clark, in 1804, on the Missouri River; has examined nearly a hundred other ancient villages, camps, workshops and grave sites in the region mentioned, and has gathered one of the best private archaeologic collections in Kansas. He has also thoroughly explored the old Kickapoo Indian village site near Fort Leavenworth, and visited these Indians on several occasions at their reservation in Brown County, Kan., gathering much archaeologic and historic material relating to that tribe. Has written many papers on these subjects, enough to fill several large volumes.

In 1897 he was elected a corresponding member of the Western Historical Society, upon the unsolicited recommendation of United States Senator Vest of Missouri.

From 1896 to 1905 he was associated with Hon. J. V. Brower of St. Paul, Minn., in archaeological and historical research work, and when Mr. Brower identified the location of the ancient Indian province of Quivira in Kansas, and organized the Quivira Historical Society in 1901, Mr. Remsburg was elected a life member, in 1905 was elected president of the same society to succeed Mr. Brower, deceased.

Brower's "Memoirs of Explorations in the Basin of the Mississippi," Vol. VII, contain a summary account of Remsburg's archaeological work, and says of him: "He has long been a capable and painstaking archaeological explorer in the Missouri Valley.

At the annual meeting of the McLean Historical Society of Illinois in 1909, he was elected an honorary member in recognition of his researches regarding the Kickopoo Indians; elected a member of the National Geographic Society at its meeting in Washington, D. C., 1911; elected a member of the American Society of Curio Collectors, 1901; vice-president of the same, 1902; appointed a contributing editor of this society's official organ, 1906. Elected member of International Society of Archaeologists, 1909; appointed an assistant editor of the Archaeological Bulletin, official organ of above, 1910; elected vice-president of the same, 1910.

During the year 1912 he was a contributing editor of the Magazine of Antique Firearms; at the annual meeting of the Kansas State Historical Society, in October, 1914, he was elected a member of the committees on archaeology and Indian history. He recently published a booklet, entitled, "An Old Kansas Indian Town on the Missouri," being the results of his identification and exploration of the old Indian town at Doniphan, visited by Bourgmont in 1724.

Mr. Remsburg has held a number of local offices, such as justice of the peace, member of school board and secretary of various clubs and societies; was a member of Company L, Kansas National Guard; he is now connected with the staff of the Potter Weekly Kansan, as editor of the Old-Times Department, and the "Potter Pickle Pot, by Potter Pete," both of which are widely quoted. He is a son of John Eleazer Remsburg, a well-known lecturer and author.

The late Hon. D. W. Wilder, author of "Annals of Kansas," wrote: "Both John E. Remsburg and his son, George J. Remsburg, have done important public service in fields held by no other Kansans."

It is said that George Remsburg probably has the most extensive correspondence of any man in Atchison County. He keeps in continual touch with scientific men and collectors in every state in the Union and in many foreign countries, and his advice is eagerly sought on archaeological, ethnological and historical matters.

History of Kansas

The Kansas and Nebraska Bill Passed Congress in May and Was Signed By President Franklin Pierce, May 30, 1854, and Immediately People Began to Arrive in Doniphan, Leavenworth and Atchison Counties—Stephen A. Douglas Was the Deified Originator of Bill.

Early Discoveries

The soil of Kansas was first trodden by Europeans in the winter of 1541-42, by a Spanish expedition from Mexico, under Coronado, who passed through the State from the South to North. The general direction of his march may now be indicated by a line drawn from Barber County to Nemaha County.

In the year 1719, Kansas was visited by a Frenchman, M. Dustine, who was sent from New Orleans. He traveled up the Osage and Kansas Rivers as far as the mouth of the Republican, and then went over two hundred miles in a westerly or northwesterly direction, thus crossing Coronado's trail near the point where Fort Riley is now situated. He took possession of the entire country, in the name of France.

The next year a large expedition was sent from New Mexico by the Spaniards, to conquer the Indians who had been friendly to the French. The Missouris and Pawnees were at war, and the Spaniards attempted to form an alliance with the former to destroy the latter. They mistook a Missouri for a Pawnee village, and laid their plans before the tribe which they proposed to destroy. The Pawnees delayed their answer until their warriors could assemble, and then two thousand of their braves fell upon the invaders and destroyed the whole body, except one priest, who returned to Santa Fe.

Fort Orleans was then established by the French on an island in the Missouri River, near the mouth of the Osage, and a continuous trade was carried on with the Indians.

In 1762, Louisiana, including Kansas, except that portion which lies south of the Arkansas River, and west of the twenty-third meridian west from Washington, was ceded by France to Spain, and in 1800, was receded by Spain. In 1803, Louisiana was purchased by the United States. That part of the state not included in the Louisiana purchase was ceded by the State of Texas in 1848.

In 1822, the overland commerce between Missouri and Santa Fe was established and, two years later, the "Santa Fe Trail" was surveyed by the United States Government. Fort Leavenworth was established in 1827.

The Baptist Shawnee Mission was begun in 1831 and the Methodists one year later. The site of Fort Scott was selected as a military post in 1842.

In 1846 the government surveyed the military road from Fort Leavenworth to Fort Kearney.

In 1853 Fort Riley was established. In 1845 the Mormons assembled near the present site of Atchison, to commence their journey across the plains, and from that time the soil of Kansas has been crossed in all directions by the trails of emigrants bound for the Rockies and beyond.

Until the spring of 1854, traders, missionaries and Indian agents were the only white persons to whom the country was open.

Territorial History

May 30, 1854, President Pierce signed the Kansas-Nebraska bill and it became a law. The following is copied from the act:

(Section 19.) And be it further enacted, That all that part of the territory of the United States included within the following limits, except such portion thereof as are hereinafter expressly exempted from the operations of this act, to-wit, beginning at a point on the western boundary of the State of Missouri, where the thirty-seventh parallel of north latitude crosses the same, thence west on said parallel to the eastern boundary of New Mexico, thence north on said boundary to latitude thirty-eight, thence following said boundary to the eastern boundary of the Territory of Utah, on the summit of the Rocky Mountains, thence northward on said summit to the fortieth parallel of latitude, thence east on said parallel to the western boundary of the State of Missouri, thence south with the western boundary of said State to the place of beginning, be, and the same is hereby, created into a temporary government, by the name of the Territory of Kansas; and when admitted as a State or States, the said Territory, or any portion of the same, shall be received into the Union with or without slavery, as their constitution may prescribe at the time of their admission. Provided, that nothing in this act contained shall be construed to prohibit the Government of the United States from dividing said Territory into two or more Territories, in such manner at such times as Congress shall deem convenient and proper, or from attaching any portion of said Territory to any other State or Territory of the United States. Provided further, that nothing in this act contained shall be construed to impair the rights of persons or property now pertaining to the Indians in said Territory, so long as such rights shall remain unextinguished by treaty between the United States and such Indians, or to include any territory, which, by treaty with the Indian tribe, is not, without the consent of said tribe, to be included within the territorial limits or jurisdiction of any State or Territory, but all such territory shall be excepted out of the boundaries, and constitute no part of the Territory of Kansas, until said tribe shall signify their assent to the President of the United States to be included within the said Territory of Kansas, or to affect the authority of the Government of the United States to make any regulation respecting such Indians, their lands, property or other rights, by treaty, law or otherwise, which it would have been competent to the Government to make if this act had never passed.

The people of the Eastern States had expected the bill to pass, and both North and South were prepared for the fight between slavery and freedom. In March, 1854, Eli Thayer, of Boston, Mass., proposed the establishment of a society whose chief object should be the settlement of Kansas by Free-Soilers. The society was organized under the name of the "New England Emigrant Aid Society," with a capital limited to $1 000 000. Only one-tenth of this sum was used by the society.

Secret societies were formed in Missouri and other Southern States, whose object was to settle Kansas with pro-slavery men, and to drive out and hinder the Free-Soilers from coming in. Two months after the President signed the Kansas-Nebraska bill, the first party of New Englanders reached the borders of Kansas and, the next day, August 1, founded the city of Lawrence. A similar colony founded Topeka, Dec. 3, 1854.

In June, 1854, the Leavenworth Town Company was organized in Missouri, and in July the Atchison Town Company, during the summer both towns were commenced by pro-slavery men.

By the act of Congress creating the Territory, Fort Leavenworth was named as the temporary seat of government.

The first officers of the Territory of Kansas were: Andrew H. Reeder, of Easton, Penn., Governor; Israel B. Donaldson, of Illinois, United States Marshal; Daniel Woodson, of Lynchburg, Va., Sounders W. Johnson, of Ohio, and Rush Elmore, of Alabama, Associate Justices; John Calhoun, of Illinois, Surveyor General; T. J. B. Cramer, Treasurer. October 7, 1854, Gov. Reeder arrived in the Territory, and established the executive office temporarily at Fort Leavenworth.

November 29, 1854, an election for Delegate to Congress was held. Gen. J. W. Whitfield, the Pro-Slavery candidate, was elected.

A census was taken in January and February, 1855, which showed a population of 8,601, with 2,905 voters.

An election of members to the Territorial Legislature was held March 30, 1855. As in the preceding November, many Missourians crossed the river and voted, swelling the number of votes to 6,307. It is alleged that Gov. Reeder refused to issue certificates of election until he was compelled to do so by the use of pistols in the hands of those who claimed to be elected. The Governor ordered a new election in the districts where the fraud had been committed. This election was held May 22, 1855.

Gov. Reeder called a session of the Legislature to meet at Pawnee. This was a town near Fort Riley, laid out by some of the officers of the fort, in the fall of 1854. By order of Jefferson Davis, Secretary of War, the boundaries of the military reserve were so enlarged as to absorb the town, which was destroyed by the United States troops in the fall of 1855.

Representing Pioneer Days
Boss Young, Lambert A. Libel

The Territorial Legislature convened on Monday, July 2, 1855, at Pawnee. Thomas Johnson was elected president of the council, and Gen. Stringfellow, speaker of the House of Representatives. The Free-Soil members, elected in May, were unseated, and the Pro-Slavery men, elected in March, were seated in their places.

The Legislature located the seat of government at Shawnee, notwithstanding the Governor's veto, and on July 6, adjourned to that place.

It re-assembled at Shawnee Mission July 16. The Missouri code of laws was enacted, changing the words, where necessary, to make state apply to territory.

The patronage of the Territory was given to the Legislature and its appointees, so that the present and future governors should be powerless to secure fair play. Gov. Reeder vetoed all their bills, on the ground that they were not legally constituted, but the bills were passed over his veto.

The Free-Soil men had met in a convention at Lawrence, June 25, and came to the conclusion that whatever laws might be passed by the Legislature, could have no authority over them. President Pierce removed Gov. Reeder, August 1, 1855, and Secretary Woodson became Acting Governor until the arrival of Hon. Wilson Shannon, of Ohio, who was appointed Governor.

At an election ordered by the Shawnee Legislature, on October 1, Gen. Whitfield was elected delegate to Congress; he was the only candidate, and two-thirds of his votes came from Missouri. October 9, the Free-Soil party held an election for the same office, and chose Gov. Reeder. Congress refused to admit either of them—Gov. Reeder, because he was not elected in accordance with the regulations of the Territorial Legislature, and Gen. Whitfield, because the frauds at his election were too manifest to be overlooked.

The Wakarusa War

In the fall of 1855, Franklin Coleman, a Pro-Slavery settler, and Charles W. Dow, a Free-Soiler, had a dispute in regard to a claim at Hickory Point. Coleman killed Dow November 21. The Free-State men held a meeting the next day at the scene of the murder, and appointed a committee to procure the punishment of the murderer. That night, Sheriff Jones, attended by a posse of fourteen men, arrested Jacob Branson, with whom Dow had lived, for taking part in the meeting. On their way to Lecompton, the Sheriff's party were confronted by fifteen Free-State men, who demanded the release of Branson; he was released at once.

Sheriff Jones sent a dispatch to Gov. Shannon, giving a colored version of the rescue, and asking for 3,000 men. The Shawnee Legislature had appointed three officers of the militia. To these, Maj. Gen. Richardson, Gen. Strickler and Brig. Gen. Eastin, Gov. Shannon sent orders to prepare to meet an armed military force at Lawrence or its vicinity, which would not allow the sheriff to serve any process. The militia from Westport and Independence, Mo., arrived November 29 and camped four miles from Franklin, at the mouth of the Wakarusa. Within three days 1,500 men were in camp, all except eighty being from Missouri. Dr. Robinson was placed in command of the forces in Lawrence, with Col. Lane as his second. Free-State companies from Bloomington, Wakarusa, Palmyra and other places swelled the number of the defenders of the town to nearly 1,800. Governor Shannon, at the request of Gen. Eastin, telegraphed to President Pierce to obtain the assistance of the troops in Fort Leavenworth. The President answered favorably; but, owing to delays in the War Department at Washington, the troops did not leave the fort.

On December 5, Messrs. Lowery and Babcock succeeded in eluding the besiegers, and obtained an interview with the Governor. When he was informed of the true state of affairs, Gov. Shannon perceived that the sheriff had greatly exaggerated the facts. He immediately proceeded to the Wakarusa camp to prevent bloodshed, if possible. Through his efforts, a treaty was made, and the Pro-Slavery militia disbanded December 9. The troops of the Free-Soil party disbanded two days later.

December 6, Thomas W. Barber, a Free-State man, was shot by George W. Clark, while on his way from Lawrence to his farm; this was the only blood shed during the war.

The Topeka Constitution was adopted December 15, 1855, by a vote of 1,731 in favor of it, and 46 against it. On the 15th of January, 1856, an election for state officers, who should take their offices when Kansas should be admitted as a state, under the Topeka Constitution, was held.

The Legislature elected in January, assembled at Topeka, March 4, organized both houses, and elected two United States Senators—James H. Lane and Andrew H. Reeder. The state officers were sworn in. A memorial to Congress was prepared, asking admission into the Union. On Mar. 15, the Legislature adjourned to re-assemble in the same place on the 4th of July, 1856.

Companies of armed men from the Southern States were now gathering on the border of Kansas. April 19, Sheriff Jones attempted to arrest those who had rescued Branson; they refused to recognize his authority, and he called upon the United States troops to assist him; when he appeared with the troops on the 23d, no resistance was offered, and he made the arrests. About 10 o'clock that night, Jones was shot and wounded. The citizens of Lawrence denounced the deed and offered $500 reward for the conviction of the offender, but he was never discovered.

The armed forces gathered at the Missouri River began to advance upon Lawrence. The United States Marshal,

J. B. Donaldson, issued a proclamation, calling upon the "law-abiding citizens of the Territory to muster at Lecompton in sufficient numbers to enforce the laws." This was circulated chiefly in western Missouri, and was promptly answered by those who were waiting for it. The fact that the United States troops were with the invaders, deterred the citizens of Lawrence from making any resistance. May 21, 1856, Sheriff Jones entered Lawrence with a body of armed men. The Free State Hotel and the officers of the Herald of Freedom and the Kansas Free State were destroyed.

Stores were broken open and pillaged, and the dwelling house of Charles Robinson was burned. The wanton destruction of property in Lawrence led to retalliation by bands of Free-State men in different parts of the territory. The most conspicuous leader of these forces was Capt. John Brown. Bands of armed men of both parties rode over the country, killing and plundering each other. The Free-State Legislature met in Topeka July 4, 1856. Col. Sumner appeared at the head of the United States troops and, in obedience to the President's proclamation, dispersed the legislature.

Gov. Shannon was removed August 21, 1856, and Secretary Woodson was again the Acting Governor.

Col. Lane was returning from the East with a large number of immigrants. As the Missouri River was blockaded against Free-State immigrants, he was leading them through Iowa and Nebraska. When Secretary Woodson heard of the approach of "Lane's army," he declared the territory in a state of insurrection, and called out the militia August 25. On that day, 150 Missourians camped near Ossawatomie, and were attacked and routed by a party of Free-State men. Another force of Missourians demolished Ossawatomie, having murdered Frederick Brown, a son of John Brown, the day before. These acts only increased the zeal of the Free-State men, and the guerrilla warfare became more fierce than ever.

John W. Geary, the new Governor, arrived in Leavenworth, having on his way to Kansas procured a promise from the Governor of Missouri that the blockade of the river should be raised. Immediately on his arrival he issued a proclamation ordering the militia to disband. He initiated a system of special agents, to supply him with complete reports as to the public feeling and of the several dangers of which he had heard. He found nearly three thousand men at the old camp in the Wakarusa bottom, imploring to be led on to the destruction of Lawrence. In the city he found only 300 men, under Col. Harvey. Gov. Geary ordered the invaders to disperse and return to their homes. They obeyed, but not without inflicting all the injury of which they were capable upon the settlers. This ended the guerrilla warfare, though many depredations were committed afterwards by both parties.

The Territorial Legislature assembled at Lecompton January 12, 1857. The members were enraged at Gov. Geary for sending their Missouri friends home, and used every means in their power to show their malignant hate. It now became apparent to the Governor that he was surrounded by deadly enemies. Gen. Smith, who had succeeded Col. Sumner at Fort Leavenworth, refused to send troops for his protection. The moneys due to him from Washington were withheld, and his dispatches unnoticed. On the 5th of March he resigned, his resignation to take effect March 20. but he was obliged to flee for his life before the morning of the 5th.

Secretary Woodson was, for a third time Acting Governor. April 15 he was superseded by Fred P. Stanton, who had been appointed Secretary, and who acted as Governor until the arrival of Gov. Walker, May 27, 1857.

The Free-State Legislature met at Topeka June 9. They ordered a new census, provided for an election of state officers in August, and located the capital at Topeka. October 5, at the election for delegate to Congress, and for the Territorial Legislature, the Free-State party was successful, electing M. J. Parrott as Delegate, and electing over two-thirds of the members of the council and nearly two-thirds of the Representatives.

The Pro-Slavery Constitutional Convention was organized at Lecompton. After working four days, it adjourned to October 19. After two weeks more of work, the instrument known as the Lecompton Constitution, was framed and signed. In November Gov. Walker visited Washington, and while there, resigned. Secretary Stanton became Acting Governor; he called the extra session of the Legislature. It convened on December 7, at Lecompton, and repealed the law under which the Lecompton Constitution was made possible. Congress was memorialized, and preparations made for a new and fair election in regard to the Constitution.

Before the adjournment of the Legislature, Secretary Stanton was removed and Gen. Denver appointed to succeed him as Secretary and Acting Governor.

At the election on January 4, 1857, to elect officers under the Lecompton Constitution, the Free-State party elected all their candidates and two-thirds of the Legislature.

There were now three governments in Kansas—two provisional State and one Territorial Government—all controlled by the Free-State party.

The Territorial Legislature met in Lecompton January 4, 1858, and adjourned to Lawrence; there it repealed and amended the laws which had been enacted by the Shawnee Legislature.

May 12, Secretary Denver took the oath of office as Governor, and Hugh S. Walsh as Secretary.

The Leavenworth Constitution was framed at Leavenworth, and signed April 3, 1858, and adopted by the people May 18. State officers and a Legislature under the Constitution were also elected May 18. Gov. Denver resigned September 5, 1858, and Secretary Walsh became Acting Governor. December 17, 1858. Samuel Medary, who had been appointed Governor, arrived in Lecompton, and assumed the duties of his office.

On the 15th of June, 1859, a convention met in Wyandotte, and framed the Constitution which became the basis of admission of Kansas into the Union. This was the first Constitutional Convention in which both political parties were represented. The Constitution framed by this convention prohibited slavery in the state, and located the State Capital, temporarily, at Topeka. The election of state officers under this Constitution, December 6, 1859, resulted in the choice of Dr. Charles Robinson for Governor; Joseph P. Root, Lieutenant Governor; J. W. Robinson, Secretary of State; William Tholen, Treasurer; G. S. Hillyer, Auditor; William R. Griffith, Superintendent of Public Instruction; Thomas Ewing, Jr., Chief Justice; S. A. Kingman and L. D. Bailey, Associate Justices; R. F. Simpson, Attorney General, and M. F. Conway, Representative.

May 7, 1860, Hugh S. Walsh was removed, and George M. Beebe was appointed Secretary. In January, 1861, Gov. Medary resigned, and Secretary Beebe acted as Governor until he was superseded by Gov. Robinson.

State History

While the people were fighting over the question of slavery in the territory the four Constitutions which they had framed were being considered by Congress. A majority of the House of Representatives were in favor of admitting Kansas as a free state, while a majority of the Senate wished it to become a slave state. In April, 1858, Congress passed the compromise bill, known as the "English bill," which provided for the admission of Kansas under the Lecompton Constitution upon certain conditions, which the people of the territory rejected.

Other bills were introduced in the House and Senate, but nothing was effected until after the withdrawal of the rebel Senators, in January, 1861.

Congress then passed the bill for the admission of Kansas into the Union, under the Wyandotte Constitution. President Buchanan signed the bill January 29, 1861, and Kansas became a state.

The last Territorial Legislature was then in session in Lawrence; it adjourned February 2. Gov. Robinson was sworn into office February 9, and called a session of the Legislature.

The first State Legislature assembled at Topeka March 26, 1861.

November 5, 1861, the state capital was permanently located at Topeka, by a vote of the people.

In June, 1862, John W. Robinson, Secretary of State, and George S. Hillyer, Auditor, were impeached for defrauding the state in the sale of the state bonds.

Kansas War Record

No other state in the Union sent so large a proportion of its population to the front as did Kansas, the youngest state of the Union. There were 9,000 soldiers from Kansas in the field in February, 1862. In October, 1863, Kansas had furnished 4,440 troops in excess of all calls. The first draft began in February, 1865, because full credit had not been given. It continued for only a month; Kansas furnished, in all, 21,806 men, beside three regiments of Indians, which were recruited in Kansas, and officered, originally, almost exclusively by citizens of Kansas.

Kansas towns suffered severely, at different times, from raids of the rebels.

September 7, 1862, the rebel guerrilla Quantrell entered Olathe, killed several men, robbed the stores and destroyed the newspaper offices. A month later, he again entered Johnson County on a similar raid.

Early in the summer of 1863, Quantrell, at the head of a large band, entered Olathe about midnight. They took most of the citizens prisoners, and kept them till their work was done. They then plundered the town, carried off what they wanted, destroyed other property, killed some seven men and left before daylight. Some time after, they sacked the town of Shawnee twice and burned most of the town.

About daylight on the morning of August 21, 1863, Quantrell, with 300 men, dashed into the streets of Lawrence with a yell, shooting at everybody they saw. Some of the citizens escaped into the fields and woods, but the larger portion could not escape at all; numbers of these were shot down, and often brutally mangled. The rebels entered the place about 5 o'clock, and left between 9 and 10. One hundred and forty-three were left dead in the streets, and about thirty desperately wounded. The main street was all burned but two stores. They destroyed something near $2,000,000 of property, and left eighty widows and two hundred and fifty orphans as the result of their four hours' work. Scenes of brutality were enacted which have never been surpassed in savage warfare.

October 6, 1863, Gen. Blunt, with a small cavalry escort, was attacked near Baxter's Springs, by Quantrell, with 600 guerrillas, and most of his small escort killed or disabled.

When Gen. Price was defeated by the Union army, on the Big Blue River, in Missouri, he retreated into Kansas, crossing the state line in Linn County, October 23, 1864. The next day there was a skirmish at Coldwater Grove. On the 26th, three battles were fought, one near Mound City, one on the Little Osage and another on the Marmaton, the rebels retreating each time, and leaving the state southeast of Fort Scott.

Kansas has suffered comparatively little from Indian depredations. The most serious troubles were in 1864 and 1867. In the former year, the Indians made a raid upon the settlers on the Little Blue, west of Marysville.

In June, 1868, the Indians killed some of the employes of the Kansas Pacific Railroad, and committed other depredations. Gov. Crawford called out a volunteer battalion of four regiments, who soon restored peace on the frontier.

Since that time the history of Kansas has been a peaceful one, and what was once the scene of almost daily bloodshed and warfare, is now a great, prosperous and peaceful state.

Below is a list of the Governors of Kansas Territory:

October 6, 1854 to July 31, 1855, A. H. Reeder; July 31, 1855 to Sept. 1, 1855, D. Woodson; Sept. 1, 1855 to Aug. 21, 1856, W. Shannon; Aug. 21, 1856 to Sept. 9, 1856, D. Woodson; Sept. 9, 1856 to Mar., 1857, J. W. Geary; Mar., 1857 to Apr. 15, 1857, D. Woodson; Apr. 15, 1857 to May 24, 1857, Fred P. Stanton; May 24, 1857 to Dec. 17, 1857, R. J. Walker; Dec. 17, 1857 to May 12, 1858, J. W. Denver; May 12, 1858 to Oct. 10, 1858, J. W. Denver; Oct. 10, 1858 to Dec. 1, 1858, Hugh S. Walsh; Dec. 1, 1858 to Dec., 1860, Samuel Medary; Dec., 1860 to Feb. 9, 1861, George M. Beebe.

Governors of the State of Kansas:

Feb. 9, 1861 to Jan., 1863, Charles Robinson; Jan., 1863 to Jan., 1865, Thomas Carney; Jan., 1865 to Nov. 4, 1868, S. J. Crawford; Nov. 4, 1868 to Jan. 1, 1869, N. Green; Jan., 1869 to Jan., 1873, James M. Harvey; Jan., 1873 to Jan., 1877, Thomas A. Osborn; Jan., 1877 to Jan. 1879, George T. Anthony; Jan., 1879 to Jan., 1881, John P. St. John.

Election Riots of Early Days

Bitter Hatreds Frequently Found Outlet in Shooting and Murder at the Polls in the Pioneer Days of Doniphan County—Political Campaigns Made Fiercer by Local Animosities and Personal Antagonism Engendered Numerous Bloody Feuds.

Election days of the long ago in Doniphan County were not by any stretch of the imagination times of peace on earth and good will to men. This was especially the case before the first regular election in which the state took part as a unit among the great galaxy of states. Although Kansas had been admitted to the Union some time previous to the presidential election which chose Abraham Lincoln, the political excitement ran high and the feeling between local partisans was intense. The fact that the people were not to participate in the general election did not serve to allay the excitement and if anything it appeared to aggravate the situation.

The rail-splitting campaign had the effect of arousing the Republicans to a high pitch of enthusiasm, which was partially neutralized by the clamorous activity of the slavery adherents who advanced all the arguments possible to accomplish the defeat of the champion of freedom and equal rights. Threats of secession were freely made by the Democrats, and the "dare" was as freely given by the Republicans. History chronicles the fact that the Kansas campaign was the most determined and bitter of any conducted that year, and the result, although not national in scope, was anticipated with sanguine hope by both parties and their adherents.

The days preceding the election were given over entirely to political oratory and personal appeals to the voters to select the candidates who were in sympathy with the political declarations of the national leader of the party to which the voter had pledged fealty. Business was practically suspended in the towns, while work was almost forgotten entirely in the rural sections of the state. The excitement had reached the most remote places and thousands of the women folks exhibited as keen an interest in the final result as did their husbands, fathers and brothers.

With such abnormal tension on the nerves of the populace it was only natural that the people of Doniphan County should be affected. Partisanship was strong and the sentiment of the voters seemed to be nearly evenly divided. There were a number of contests for local offices, but the interest in the election centered entirely on the fight for sheriff. The struggle for this important office had been a determined one and no opportunity was overlooked by either side to gain an advantage for their candidate.

Maj. George S. Hough of Elwood, was the Republican candidate for sheriff of Doniphan at that memorable election and Charles Blakely of Iowa Point, was the standard bearer of the Democrats. Both men were well known and enjoyed a good share of respect and popularity among the voters of the county. While the county was supposed—or hoped—to be Republican by a small majority, its proximity to Missouri had the effect of keeping alive considerable slavery sentiment.

Many of the citizens of the county had formerly been residents of the "Show-Me" State, and while some few of them might have a leaning toward abolition, the home influences were so predominant that they were forced by their relatives to espouse the cause of slavery. And 'most everybody knows that no matter how lukewarm a man may be for a cause at the start, his convictions will grow in strength in proportion to the virility of the arguments put forth by the opposition.

When the day of election dawned there was a rush for the polls. The voters all wanted to be on time and, although many of them had quite a distance to travel, they were on hand bright and early. There was no such thing as regular paid election workers those days, but there was no scarcity of watchers and challengers on that account. Almost, as if by general instinct, every voter seemed to take a personal interest in the result and there was considerable electioneering done earnestly in private. As many of the voters had openly announced beforehand, or family relationship had fixed their convictions, the missionary work was confined to a small per cent of the citizens.

An idea of the bitterness of the fight for sheriff and of the determination of the Democrats to win may be gained from the final figures of the election for that office. The county Republican ticket as a whole won by something like an even 100 majority, with the exception of the sheriff. The friends and adherents of Blakely never gave an inch of ground all through that fateful day and had the satisfaction of seeing their candidate defeated by the narrow margin of only thirty-three.

There were a number of old-fashioned knock-downs and drag-outs at the different polling places and some blood spilling affairs occurred numerous times during the day. The pivotal point of the election contest, however, centered in Iowa Point, the home of Candidate Charles Blakely. It was here the worst fight of the day took place. In fact, it almost assumed the proportions of a terrible riot. The point was strongly Democratic, and Blakely's friends were not slow to take advantage of the fact. Whenever a Republican approached the polls he was insulted and abused by some of the Blakely pluggers for wanting to vote the "nigger" ticket. Many irresponsible characters took an active hand intimidating voters and were both abusive, aggressive and insolent.

As the tension grew greater toward evening, the work of the pluggers and hill-billies became more vindictive, and guns were freely displayed by a gang of wild-catters from Missouri. Whisky of vilest known make played a prominent role in keeping up the fighting spirit of the Democratic boosters, and there seemed to be an unlimited supply of rot-gut on hand. Late in the afternoon a man named Meek, with two companions, came up from Wolf River, loaded with red liquor inside and out. The party was half drunk when they reached the Point and soon after their arrival they invited others to help them finish the job. They were out for trouble then and they intended to find it in the camp of their friends, where the odds were in their favor. The trouble started when Rufus R. Edwards, who was then running a store at Iowa Point, got a guzzle of the Wolf liquor, although he had enough before. He was a rank slavery man, anyhow, and the fresh drink of Democratic whisky did not improve his disposition, and he started out to shoot an abolitionist on sight.

After Edwards started on the warpath, the first person he encountered was William Hedrick, a peaceable man and a Republican. The sight of him enraged Edwards, who pulled a gun and stuck it under Mr. Hedrick's nose to the accompaniment of several ugly epithets about Republicans in general and Hedrick in particular. Hedrick, who was unarmed, walked away and sat down on a box in front of Lane & Wagonseller's store, and Edwards subsided for a bit. A few minutes later Jesse Horner, who operated a saw mill on Rush Island, arrived in town with the pump of his engine to have it repaired. He stood the pump against the store while he went inside to make some purchases. Pretty soon Edwards came along again flourishing his revolver and making insulting remarks to Hedrick, who still occupied his seat on the box.

Hedrick grabbed the pump handle, but Edwards showed the "yellow" by starting to run, with Edwards after him. Overtaking Edwards in the middle of the street, Hedrick almost broke his head with the iron pump and would have brained Edwards had not the handle broken off. Edwards lay prostrate on the street and a gang of his friends gathered to wreck vengeance on Hedrick, who run into Lane's store with the mob after him. He was knocked down, but fell behind the counter, where few of his assailants could get at him, although they were trying desperately to kick him to death. Several of the more desperate gathered the queensware from the counter and with that and any other articles they could find, they pelted down upon Hedrick.

Hedrick's friends were not idle in the meantime and they forced their way into the store, where the battle between the factions was fierce and bloody. Fighting the mob for the rescue of Hedrick were William D. and Jack Beeler, J. T. Lane, John White, Boliver Beeler and a German shoemaker named Sponseler, who was then living on Wolf River. The slavery mob was composed of Tyle Elder, young Charley Blakely, nephew of old Charley Blakely, a couple of Poteets and several others. Finally Hedrick was rescued from them and hurried off upstairs. The mob was being forced back and getting the worst of the argument when Tyle Elder struck Sponseler with a stake driver. The German had grit, however, and after recovering from the shock he laid out Elder with a scale weight, then taking to his heels across the hill. Bill Tracy pursued "the Flying Dutchman" with a revolver and fired three or four shots at him without effect. Jim Poteet mounted a horse, and armed with a shot gun, he gave chase after Sponseler, but the latter escaped.

Enraged at the escape of the German, the mob next attacked James Simpson and after knocking him down gave him a terrible beating, which caused him to be laid up for several weeks. Charley Blakely, Democratic candidate for sheriff, arrived on the scene in time to save Simpson from probably fatal injuries and after some persuasion he pulled his friends away and stopped the riot. There were some other fights of smaller dimensions during the rest of the day and along in the evening, but little blood was shed and none of the participants were seriously injured.

Of the men engaged in the main battle of the day all are now supposed to be dead. They are old men anyway, should any of them happen to be living. James Simpson, although the most seriously hurt, lived for many years on his old farm near Fanning; and Rufus R. Edwards, who turned Republican at the beginning of the war, had been living at Marysville until his death. The Poteets are both dead long ago and so are the Beelers, Hedrick, Lane and Sponseler, the plucky little German. Old Charley Blakely moved to Colorado years afterward, where he died at a ripe old age. Bill Tracy was at Iowa Point for many years, but he too is dead and gone. Meek, Young Charley Blakely, Tyle Elder and others who took part in that memorable battle, all disappeared years ago.

PIONEER PHYSICIANS OF DONIPHAN COUNTY

Doctors Who Settled in Doniphan County in the Fifties Organized the Northern Kansas Medical Society and Fixed a Regular Schedule of Prices to be Charged for Professional Services—Fees Differed Little Then From Those of the Present Day.

The physicians who settled in the various towns of Doniphan County in the early '50s of the last century early formed an association for their mutual protection and for the conservation of professional ethics. The organization was known as the Northern Kansas Medical Society and it flourished for a number of years. Stated meetings were held, at one of which a resolution was adopted reciting the duties and responsibilities of conscientious physicians, and fixing a bill of fees to be charged for professional services.

In looking over this fee bill formulated by the physicians of sixty-five years ago, the prices do not seem to have materially changed in all that time. The fee for reducing a fracture was fixed at from $5 to $30, according to the seriousness of the case, but the real top figure was for trepanning, which was charged for at the rate of from $25 to $100. Office consultation and visits in the town were scheduled at from $1 to $5 for the former, and $1 to $2 for the latter. Each visit in the country was charged at $1 and mileage, and for obstetrics a fee of from $5 to $10 was fixed.

The fee bill and resolution was signed by the following physicians, who were well known throughout Doniphan County at the time: W. B. Crane, M. D., Belmont; J. F. J. Brentano, M. D., Doniphan; G. A. Benjamin, M. D., Doniphan; H. W. Hudnall, M. D., Doniphan; R. H. Hereford, M. D.; J. B. Wheeler, M. D., Palermo and Troy; S. D. Smith, M. D., Elwood; Franklin Grube, M. D., Highland; J. W. Robinson, M. D., Elwood, and G. N. Beaumont, M. D., Iowa Point.

As the doctors included in the above list were both skillful and prominent throughout the county for many years, it is more than probable that some of the early settlers now living will easily recognize many of the names.

People in this day and rapid progress of Doniphan County are not cognizant of the fact that there were at one time slaves owned in Doniphan County. The records in the Register of Deeds office show that on April 21, 1857, the following slaves were sold by Walter O. Bannon to Giles A. Briggs: One negro woman named Sarah, and child, named James, and a negro boy named Arthur, with the future increase of said negro woman. The consideration of the sale was the release by Mrs. Briggs of her dowry or interest in certain lands in Missouri. Old citizens of White Cloud will remember these slaves. Arthur used to roll the press for the late Sol Miller, who published the Chief in White Cloud; notwithstanding the fact that the Chief in those days was an ardent abolitionist paper, it was printed with the assistance of a slave.

William Hautzenrader died Tuesday, June 22, 1894, of apoplexy. He had gone to the well for a couple of buckets of water, and when he did not return, a member of the family found him lying in the road near the well.

First Doniphan County Schools

Indian School Established in Connection With the Mission in 1845—A "Classical Academy" Opened in Highland in 1856, Which Was Later Chartered Under the Title of Highland University—Private School Taught in Doniphan as Early as 1856—Wathena Had a Frame School Building in 1857 and White Cloud in 1859—Other Towns Came Later.

To Father Irvin, the great pioneer missionary to the Indians, belongs the credit of having started the first school in Doniphan County. In the year 1845, in conjunction with Rev. William Hamilton, Father Irvin established an Indian school in connection with the Mission. This institution was continued with considerable success until the Indians were moved to their new reservation.

Early in the spring of 1856, Mrs. D. Frank opened a subscription school in the town of Doniphan, which she conducted for three or four years. She was succeeded in a similar undertaking by Miss Sarah M. Walker, who later became Mrs. Philbrick, and taught a subscription school for several years. Prior to the year 1873, there had been no public school in Doniphan, but that year an $8,000 school building was erected by James F. Forman. The structure was two stories in height and had four rooms, exclusive of a spacious basement. J. A. Sea was the first principal, and he was followed by D. D. Rose, who later went to Troy.

The nucleus of the Highland University was formed by the opening of a "classical academy" by Father Irvin in Highland in 1856. In 1858 a charter was granted by the territorial legislature which transformed the original seat of learning into Highland University. From the beginning the school has been under the fostering care of the Presbyterians—first the board of missions, and later the Presbyterian Synod of Kansas. It has developed into one of the greatest educational institutions in the Middle West.

The first school building erected in Wathena was in 1857, when a frame building of scant proportions was put up, and school taught there for a number of years. In 1867 a more substantial frame building was constructed and all the children in the neighborhood instructed there until 1870. That year a $10,000 brick structure was erected, A. Larzelere being the contractor. It was used exclusively for the white children, and the old school turned over for the use of the colored folks.

In the summer of 1859 a small frame structure for school purposes was put up in White Cloud, in the northwest part of the town. After less than two years the building was struck by lightning and so badly damaged as to necessitate its abandonment. A brick school house, built by direct subscription, was then erected in the west part of the town, which was converted to the use of the colored children when an elegant $12,000 school house had been completed in 1872. Bonds for $15,000 had been issued to cover all the expenses of construction, and Wakefield & Co. took the contract for $11,000. When the building was finished the contractors found they were $2,500 in the hole, and a compromise was effected, whereby the contractors assumed $1,500 of the excess cost, and the school board paid the extra $1,000. The land upon which the school was built was laid out as a public square in 1856, and was conveyed to the school board in consideration of one dollar.

The first school in Troy was a private one, taught by Mrs. P. L. Soper, in 1860. It was a three months' school and opened with nineteen pupils. A year or so later a small one-story house of a single room was used as a school, taught by F. Brown. In 1866 the citizens saw the dire necessity of better school facilities, and $4,000 in bonds were voted, with which to erect a respectable looking school. Before work was started on the building the residents realized that a much more costly structure would be needed and additional bonds to the amount of $5,000 were voted the following year. Frank Tracy was given the contract, but after the foundations were put in there was some hitch in the plans and work on the building was stopped for a time. Finally some extensive alterations were decided upon, and the building was not completed until 1869 Even then the upper parts of the school house were not finished off, and were unused for a number of years. The cost of erection had been increased in various ways and the total expense aggregated $12,500. The school exercises commenced in 1870, and the building was in use until the erection of the elegant new high school, in 1902.

FROM DUG-OUTS TO PROSPERITY

As a diamond in the rough requires much shaping and polishing before it is ready to bring an enormous sum in the market, so a new, undeveloped, untamed country, requires years of clearing, cultivation and civilization before it is ready to give to its people its richest gifts. Though the skies are sunny, the soil rich, and the air balmy, yet all the riches the virgin soil contains cannot be wrested from it without years of grinding labor and severe hardship. The wild, primeval country is settled and cultivated by a people whose lot is a hard one, and it is only when they are far down on the shady side of life that they can reap any of the fruits of their toil—the real fruits, happiness in security, prosperity, society, civilization and rest. The fuller fruit of their labors is reaped by their children, and the great results of their sacrifices go to bring their country to its greatest development, when its fruit, rich as gold, is reaped by their far-removed posterity. Thus it is that there is a certain nobility about the pioneer—he is the one who blazes the way, braves the dangers, and bears the hardships, sacrifices a life of comfort and security that his country may be brought from a wilderness into civilization, that his posterity may live in happiness and prosperity, and that his nation may stand before the admiring world as the greatest that history has ever known.

The greatest of the few pleasures that were granted the pioneers sprung from the ties of friendship and fidelity that were far more binding than they could ever be in civilization. Now all is competition—anything to get ahead of your neighbor; then it was union, each working for the good of all. The pioneers were bound together by their many common interests—their common dangers, their common hardships, their common aspirations, and their common seclusion from cities and civilization, and with the wealth that they have handed down to their children, they have also bequeathed a goodly porton of this interest in the friendship and welfare of others, without which this country could not be the great democracy it is.

Both the pressure of necessity and the desire for recreation made hunting one of the chief avocations of the pioneer. In Doniphan County, as indeed, all over Kansas at that time, elks and buffaloes were to be found in herds, to say nothing of smaller game, such as prairie chickens, coyotes, etc. Even with the droughts, the freshets, the Indians, the cyclones, the grasshoppers and prairie fires working hardships upon them, the pioneers had their hunts, their house warmings, and other unpolished, homely, informal social affairs.

In the days when a house of wood was a curiosity the pioneers lived in mud huts and dugouts; everybody was at home to everybody else, and every community was like one large family. Though the polish and the refinement of civilization were absent, society was on a higher scale, and friendship was warmer and truer, than in most of the higher civilizations of today.

The above facts could be well attested to by any of the following old-timers, who have spent from fifty to sixty years right here in Doniphan County: William and Daniel VanDerslice, Jack Herndon of Iowa Point, Robert McClelland, east of Troy, James H. Earhart, of Troy, W. T. Wood, six miles west of Troy, Herman Groniger of Union Township, Jap Calvert, who was born and raised here, Nick Bohr, six miles south and east of Troy; Lank Evans of Wathena, Charley Edwards of Troy; Mrs. Hester Ann Schaufler, two miles north of Troy, and Judge M. S. Mauck of White Cloud; James Huss, Tom Scott, James Edward Simpson, Mrs. Mary Montgomery, William Chapple and John Morehead.

THE GOOD SHIP HESPERIAN

Much Excitement and Regret Felt Over the Burning of the Famous Steam Packet at Atchison on a Sunday Evening in 1859—Was Owned by Doniphan County Men.

Few incidents in the lives of the early settlers of Doniphan County caused more genuine regret than the burning of the steamboat Hesperian at her landing in Atchison, on a Sunday evening in 1869.

The vessel was one of the handsomest and most commodious in the river trade, and was a great favorite with the business men, and the residents generally, who used her decks and cabins for transportation purposes.

The Hesperian had tied up at her dock as usual on the fatal evening at the foot of Commercial street in Atchison, awaiting a cargo of freight and passengers, and the manner in which she caught on fire was never exactly known.

The vessel was a large, side-wheel packet, and was used principally in the lower river trade. She was built in 1857 and was owned by John W. and James Forman, A. B. Symns of Doniphan, and Capt. F. B. Kercheval, who commanded her.

After the Hannibal & St. Joseph railroad was completed and opened with a monster celebration at St. Joseph, February 23, 1857, the Hesperian ran as a passenger steamer in connection with trains from St. Joseph to Kansas City.

The vessel was of magnificent proportions and was kept spick and span all the time she had been in commission. Her officers and crew were all known to be able rivermen and the captain, especially, was recognized as one of the most careful and considerate pilots on the Missouri River.

The fame of the steamer was nation-wide, and she had a reputation for first-class accommodations equal to that of the ocean liners of the present day. Considering the uncertainty of railroad travel and the necessity of making train connections, the Hesperian was noted for being invariably on time.

Many of the noted public men of the day who visited the West, and Kansas especially, made several trips on the Hesperian, and it was not unusual for the passengers to be entertained with political debates while en route from port to port.

A number of Doniphan County residents who took an active interest in politics those days, used to like to tell of the Wednesday, September 27, 1859, when the Hon. Anson Burlingame passed Atchison on the Hesperian en route to Leavenworth, where he delivered a thrilling speech the following evening.

A. B. Symns, one of the owners of the Hesperian, and who then lived in Doniphan, was a clerk on the steamer at one time, and later became a prominent citizen of Atchison.

DONIPHAN COUNTY HOME OF NOTABLE MEN

Notable Men in High and Respected Positions Once Claimed Doniphan County as Their Abode—General James H. Lane Lived on Flannigan's Farm Near Wathena.

George J. Remsburg, of Atchison County, has in his historical collection James Redpath's autograph copy of Holloway's "History of Kansas." This history was published in 1868, and bears on the title page the following inscription: "James Redpath, Boston. April, 1877." Redpath, who was a distinguished journalist and author, established at Doniphan, in 1857, the "Crusader of Freedom," a pioneer Doniphan County newspaper. He conducted this publication only a short time, but Col. Richard J. Hinton has said that it was the most brilliant weekly publication Kansas has seen. Redpath was an early correspondent of the New York Tribune, and also the Missouri Democrat, a very important factor at that period. He is also credited with having been the originator of Decoration Day. He was the author of several books on Kansas and also a "Life of John Brown." "Gen." James H. Lane lived at Doniphan at one time. The farm which he pre-empted is now owned by Mr. and Mrs. Thos. Flannigan of Wathena. Mr. Flannigan pointed out to the writer the spot where Lane's cabin stood and the spring from which he secured his water. This spring is still known as the "Lane" Spring. Some of the foundation stones of Lane's cabin may still be seen on Mr. Flannigan's farm, a short distance northeast of the present residence. Mr. and Mrs. Flannigan are among the very oldest inhabitants of Kansas. They remember Lane well, and have many interesting reminiscences of the "Grim Chieftain," as he was called.

Doniphan County Men in the War

One-seventh of the Population at the Beginning of the Rebellion Bravely Marched to the Defense of Their Country—Eight Thousand People in the County in 1861 and Over One Thousand Went to the Front—Ten Kansas Companies Recruited Mostly in Doniphan County.

When President Lincoln called for men to defend the integrity of the Union, in 1861, the citizens of Doniphan were prompt to respond. The call to arms was received with enthusiasm, and there was no time lost in opening recruiting headquarters. The people were indignant over the effrontery of the Southerners in firing on Fort Sumter, and they were ready and willing to lend a hand in putting down the rebellion.

When the war broke out, there was an estimated population of 8,000 souls—men, women and children—in Doniphan County. It is thrilling to record that all during the four years' bloody conflict, Doniphan was represented at the front by a brave lot of fearless fighters.

From the opening days of recruiting until the enlistments were finally closed, almost 1,200 men and boys had been enrolled for service in the war. Of course, all of those did not go at one time, because some who served in the late years of the war were too young to enlist when the first call to arms was sounded.

Altogether ten companies were entirely recruited in Doniphan County. Three companies went to the Thirteenth Kansas, one company to the First, one company to the Seventh, one company to the Eighth, three companies to the Fourteenth, and one company to the Tenth. Of the boys and men who went to save the Union some met death like heroes on bloody battlefields, others came home minus a leg or an arm, or carrying Southern bullets in their bodies, while many rose to high command through gallantry and sound military judgment.

The soldiers who fought in the Civil War from Doniphan County were noted in many reports for their intrepid valor, and a number returned from the war bearing testimonials from their commanding generals.

Comparing the population of Doniphan County at the time with that of counties in older and more thickly settled states, it is gratifying to note that the county was stronger numerically at the front in proportion to the number of the inhabitants.

When the call came for volunteers to protect the united nation in the early days, when the belligerent South had drawn arms against the government, Doniphan County contributed her share of men and brave boys. Men laid down the mattock, the shovel, and unhitched the oxen from the plow, and abandoned their farms and homes to heed the call of duty. With smiling faces and brave good-bys they shouldered muskets and marched away, many of them never to return, and some who did come back were in such crippled condition or so worn by hard service and sickness that years of suffering was the result and death proved a relief. Many of the following names are familiar and easily recalled by old-timers as heroes in those perilous times when the boys of blue were so severely tested as to their loyalty, inasmuch as it sometimes meant they would be lined up against a brother or near relative on the other side.

List of soldiers who were killed or died in the army, who enlisted from Doniphan County, giving rank and date of death as near as practicable. Arranged alphabetically, according to names:

Framed Four Constitutions

Doniphan County Four Times Represented by Strong Delegations to Conventions Which Drafted the Fundamental Laws for the Territorial Government of Kansas Many Years Ago.

The constitution of a state is the connecting link between the government and the people. Without a sound and comprehensive foundation on which to construct the code of a state, the administration of its government would become a farce and a joke.

When a new country is opened for settlement within the domain of the United States about the first thing done to afford a basis for intelligent local government is the framing and adoption of a constitution. Until that has been accomplished, little or no progress can be made in maintaining law and order.

Since Kansas became a territory there have been four conventions held where representatives of the people met to frame constitutions. That was in the old territorial days, when might, rather than right, prevailed, both as to property rights and personal liberty. The slavery question was uppermost in the minds of almost everybody in the '50's and the discussions which took place engendered vicious rancor and aroused many personal hatreds which frequently resulted in violent crimes.

That was the state of affairs when the first territorial convention was called for Kansas and the selection of delegates from the different communities almost became a national issue, as the eyes of the country were focused this way to see what stand she would take on the slavery question. The exponents and opponents of the issue were determined on both sides, and the wildest excitement prevailed when the delegates were being selected.

The first territorial convention was held in Topeka in 1855, when Doniphan County was represented by G. A. Cutler, John Landis, D. M. Field and Charles W. Stewart. The deliberations of that body were long and occasionally marked by violent and acrimonious debate. The constitution that was adopted as a result of that convention was little more than a makeshift affair, and two years later a second convention was held in Lecompton, when Doniphan was represented by Thomas J. Key, Samuel P. Blair, James J. Reynolds, William Matthews, Daniel Vanderslice, Harvey W. Forman, B. H. Brock and A. Larzelere.

The following year a third convention was called to frame a new constitution at Leavenworth and this time Doniphan was represented by James H. Lane, William V. Barr, A. Larzelere, William Fleming, Hugh Robertson, Charles E. Perham, William D. Beeler and Joseph F. Hampson. The work of this body, while more tangible and definite than the two preceding ones, did not appear to accurately define the sentiments of the citizens of the territory, or a majority of them, so the fourth constitutional convention was held in Wyandotte in 1859.

This was the body which framed the document declaring Kansas a free state, and under which she was admitted to the Union. The Doniphan County delegation was composed of Robert J. Porter, John W. Forman, John Stiarwalt, Benjamin Wrigley and E. M. Hubbard. The Wyandotte constitution, as the document adapted by that convention has been known ever since, embodies all the principles calculated to insure life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness and is the constitution under which the government of Kansas is being administered at the present time.

Chronology of Doniphan County—1837-1854

(Contributed by Geo. J. Remsburg.)

(Rev. S. M. Irvin, who came to what is now Doniphan County as a missionary to the Indians in 1837, and was stationed at the old Presbyterian mission among the Sacs and Iowas, about two miles east and north of where Highland now stands, for many years, prepared a choronological sketch of Doniphan County, covering a period from 1837 to 1854. While visiting the Kansas State Historical Society in Topeka, recently, the writer was permitted to examine the original manuscript of Rev. Irvin's sketch and copy of the notes are here given.)

1837. The Iowa and Sac and Fox Indians cross the Missouri river at Robidoux Trading Post (now St. Joe), and take possession of the northern part of Doniphan County. Missionaries came with them, among them being S. M. Irvin, Aurey Ballard and their wives. Wm. Hamilton joined them later in the same year.

1838. The government issues rations to the Iowas and Sacs on the banks of the Missouri River, a little above where Iowa Point now stands. Indian wars between the Iowas, Omahas and Sioux.

1839. Indian wars between the Iowas and Pawnees. Nine Pawnees slain near where Arago or St. Stevens now stands, in Richardson County, Neb.

1840. Wars with Sioux and Omahas and Iowas. Severe encounter near where Belleview now stands, in Nebraska.

1841. Permanent peace made with Omahas near the mouth of the Platte river. The government agents and missionaries take part in the peace negotiations.

1842. The first immigrant train of whites crosses the plains for Oregon, led by Peter Burnett; there were about twenty-five wagons, with families, and they passed through Doniphan County.

1843. The first printing press was brought from New York to the Iowa and Sac Mission. This was perhaps the first printing press brought west of the Missouri river. The first Presbyterian church, consisting of seven members was organized at the Iowa and Sac missions. Two elementary books were printed on the mission press, both in English and Indian.

1844. The second train of white immigrants of about twenty-five families, led by Capt. Neal Gillham, crossed the plains to Oregon. The first convert to Christianity from the Indians was attended with a revival among the whites that were in the country. Great floods in Missouri and Mississippi rivers. Three chiefs and two braves of the Iowas make a trip to Europe under the care of Geo. H. H. Melody, of St. Louis.

1845. The Mission boarding school building is commenced. The structure is 107 feet long, 37 feet wide and three stories high, built of brick and stone; the lumber was brought from Pittsburg, Pa. An industrial farm was opened and enlarged for the benefit of the Indians under the government agents.

1846. Mission buildings completed and the school opened with over forty scholars; the force at the agency farm increased and improvements enlarged. Benjamin Harding locates as an Indian trader near the present site of Highland. Peter Cadue, interpreter for the Kickapoos, locates.

1847. Year of the great gold excitement in California. Emigrants cross the plains in spite of the remonstrances of the government and the Indians. Peter Cadue moves from Wathena to Petersburg.

1848. Emigrants continuue with greatly increased force; not less than 4,000 wagons and teams with, perhaps, 20,000 men, traveled through Doniphan County; attempts were made on foot and with wheelbarrows. James F. Forman locates in Doniphan County.

1849. Emigrants continue, but with less numbers. A grammar of the Iowa language is printed at the Iowa and Sac mission, compiled by S. M. Irvin.

1850. Smallpox breaks out among the Indians; eleven cases in the mission school, with but one death. Cholera makes its appearance.

1851. Cholera rages along the river and among the Indians, with considerable mortality and causes great alarm.

1852. T. J. Sutherland makes an effort to establish a colony and settlement west of the Indian reserve on the Big Blue and Sandy rivers, contrary to the rules of the department at Washington and the laws of congress, but died at the mission during the summer. Trading posts established at Bellemont, Wathena and Elwood.

1853. Chiefs of the Iowa and Sac tribes go to Washington to make a treaty with the government in regard to their lands. Trading post established at Doniphan. The fortieth parallel between Kansas and Nebraska established by Capt. Thomas J. Lee of the topographical engineer corps of the U. S. army; J. P. Johnson established the initial point on the west bank of the Missouri and ran the line 100 miles west. Daniel Vanderslice established the boundary lines of the Iowa and Sac and Fox reservation.

1854. On May 10, a treaty was made with the President by which the Indians relinquished their rights to lands in Doniphan County. On June 24, the first meeting of the Squatters' Association at Whitehead, Kansas Territory organized. On November 24 the first election for a delegate to congress was held at the house of Benjamin Harding, at Wathena.

THE GREAT BEND

"The Handbook to Kansas Territory and the Rocky Mountain Gold Region," by James Redpath, the celebrated historian, who resided in Doniphan in the pioneer days, and Richard J. Hinton, published in 1859, has the following speculations on the "Great bend," or, as the early French called it, the "grand detour" of the Missouri river, and the towns then situated therein, namely, Atchison, Doniphan and Sumner. "From twenty-five to thirty miles above Fort Leavenworth occurs the great western bend of the Missouri river, in which it is supposed that the commercial metropolis of Kansas will be situated. The Missouri is now, and for many years must be, the natural highway of Far Western commerce. Inasmuch, then, as the steamer landings at the great bend are the farthest points inland, and as the expense of transportation to the interior will be less from there than from any other territorial stopping places, it is reasonable to infer that an important commercial city will grow up therein. Three towns are contending for this—Sumner, Atchison and Doniphan. Their advantages are nearly equal. Atchison, at present, is the largest place, but it is the oldest also; Doniphan has undoubtedly the finest townsite on the river, but Sumner, with a rather poor site, has a Yankee population of untiring energy and unbounded enterprise and liberality. It is simply a question, therefore, of energy and cash. The contest will be practically ended before next New Year's day. Atchison will kill Sumner, or Sumner will "head off" Atchison; for these two towns are too close together to permit both of them to live, especially as they are within the limits of the same county, and in sight of each other's landing. As for Doniphan, an energetic town company, whom political differences need not prevent from working together harmoniously, and $50,000 or $100,000 in cash, might enable it, even now, to give its competitors a hard struggle; but, unless it can secure these aids, it will remain what it now is."

Retail Stores One of the Strong Assets of Doniphan County

Local Merchants Are Progressive, Wide-Awake and Conduct Business on a Sound Basis—Handle Stocks Equal to Large Trade Centers.

Even the slightest reference to the sources that make for development in Doniphan County would require mention of our merchants and the progress they have made in the sixty years of Doniphan County history. It may be said without strain of phrase or fact that nowhere in any county of Doniphan's population will be found a more aggressive and prosperous list of merchants, nor a more liberal or public-spirited set of men.

Among them are progressive business men, who have made good in the affairs of life, and rank high in the commercial realm. It can be truly said that our business men are fully abreast of the times in every line and will compare with the best in the land. The stores of Doniphan County embrace the varied lines found in metropolitan towns, carrying stocks co-extensive with the demands of a busy and prosperous community. The stocks and assortments are unusually large and classy for a county of Doniphan's population and the general tone of the displays would reflect credit on much larger towns. The known volume of business done monthly is amazing, when compared with other counties of like population, but when one becomes familiar with its inside workings, all wonder ceases. There's a reason for Doniphan County's commercial supremacy—best told in the fertile farming community surrounding it and its modern and progressive stores.

We are moved to speak in glowing terms and from the inmost depth of our soul of the magnanimity and broad-mindedness of the merchants of our county who, man for man, will compare with the state's best enterprise and efficiency. To the business men the county owes much for its progress and prosperity, for they have contributed with generous hands to the general advancement along all lines. The Kansas Chief owes to them a debt of gratitude for their liberal endorsement of this special edition, without which such a publication could not have materialized.

Glad to speak of such liberality, and may they continue to grow and prosper as they have in the past, for they are deserving of the best that the community can bestow.

These business men are mostly native bred, inheriting the dominant traits of a noble race of Kansans, who have been useful in the varied avenues of business and social life. There are many who hail from other sections of the state and the great commonwealths of Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois, New York, Iowa and other states, and who are aggressive and progressive, and a fine type of citizenship. On the whole, Doniphan County's business men are the most cheerful boosters in the country, the most liberal in the state, and are not hide bound nor afflicted with an itching palm. They are prosperous and generous, give freely to all worthy enterprises that make for progress, and development.

They are in good fellowship with each other and have the force and determination behind them that must move things to greater heights in the commercial future of Doniphan County. Their get-together movement for the greater good of our county is very inspiring, indeed, and worthy of special commendation here.

The subsequent pages of this special edition bear in brief and recital of the leading people of our county, representing every line of business in the category.

Let any county of like population match the universal endorsement of this publication if they can, but for the present it clouds all records and establishes a new mark to be shattered if possible in future years. The strong array of business men represented here emphasizes the progressive spirit that dominates our people and speaks forcibly of the pluck and push of a truly enterprising group of business men who believe in their county and are worthy of the success they have achieved. As loyal and patriotic citizens of a great county they are entitled to the liberal patronage of our home people, for they stand for "home first, last and all the time," and show their faith by their generous deeds and contributions.

Doniphan County As a Financial Center

Bank Deposits Are Increasing Here at the Rate of Many Thousands of Dollars Annually.

Progressiveness along sane lines, wise and scientific banking and the elimination of gambling chances have been responsible for the success which Doniphan County has achieved in a financial way, a success which is increasing business here at a greater rate of gain than in places where the population is many times greater.

Bank deposits here are growing at the rate of hundreds of thousands of dollars annually. In laying claim to consideration as a banking center, Doniphan County can point to facts and figures showing a prominent position among the counties of Kansas. It is not only necessary that banks be sound, but it is also required that business of the banks be conducted wisely and with a knowledge of affairs and conditions which will insure to depositors a good return on money invested to the keeping of the bank and also the stockholders who back the institution—a return commensurate with the endeavors which they put forth and the amount of money which they invest in the undertaking.

The thrift and industry of a community makes it possible for banks to grow strong, and it is a necessary element to insure success. Were it not for this characteristic of our people our banks would not be able to attract to their institutions the savings of people of the community. Without executive ability and a wide knowledge of monetary affairs, however, this money could never have earned the income it has earned and is still earning. The money was invested by men who were capable, had the knowledge and followed conservative methods.

The men who conduct these banks have the confidence of the people and of the communities in which they live and are the bulwarks of society against ignorance, poverty and need. The farmer's crop would rot in the fields without their aid and means furnished to carry them to market, and ofttimes would never be grown without the same aid being furnished to plant them. With their assistance homes are built, in communities, small enterprises with capital furnished them, develop into larger ones, the village grows into a town, from a provincial town into a big city.

It is usual with men of wealth when they seek a community in which to invest their money, that they ask to be enlightened on her banking system. Also for the safe and profitable investment of their funds. They place the bank as the standard by which they gauge the worth of the community. If they learn that the men at the head of the financial institutions are conservative business men, they regard the community as a safe place for a large investment. The banks have done as much as any other agent in Doniphan County to make it an industrial and agricultural center. By their methods of doing business they have attracted capital to the county and have continued its prosperity.

The volume of the business transacted by the banks indicates the confidence reposed in them by the people. Doniphan County banks have weathered many financial panics during the years of their existence. They are on a solid business basis and enjoying the confidence of the community, for they are officered by some of the best business men of the county, while their directors are men who have been successful financially in whatever business they are engaged.

In the development of the country surrounding us, in fostering its industries, its agriculture and commerce, none have been more potent in their influence, more powerful in their aid, than these great financial institutions that we know of as state and national banks.

The banking system has always advanced along with other lines in progress. Originally a place of exchange at which the money of the nations found their equitable balance, and scales of value, the bank has grown successfully to be the place of temporary deposit, the source of well compensated loans and the repository of wealth equivalent certificates of which are afloat in the marts of the world, furnish a sensible and convenient means of the individual, the corporation and the nation's financial transactions. Banks are based upon the fundamental power of wealth, principal and interest, and are simply to the gold and silver of the world what the grist mills are to the wheat, corn and rye of the world, the place of concentration for a comparatively perfect distribution and consumption paid for their labor by the "Miller's toll" on the grist passing through the mills.

Of its banks Doniphan County may well be proud and it should support and encourage them to the utmost. Every citizen can have a part in this. Learn to save, if only a small part of the daily, weekly or monthly stipend. Become a depositor and investor in their securities, a landholder, and eventually a blessing to yourself, your country and your posterity.

AN EXPENSIVE WATERMELON

Shooting Put Ban on Petty Thievery.

One evening in August, about twenty years ago, or the first of September, the moon was shining, and it was a still, calm evening. I had at that time a large St. Bernard dog which, for some reason, was howling, now and then. My wife was asleep, nothing was stirring about, everything was perfectly still. Bang! went a gun, south of where I was, and someone was saying, "You've killed me—you've killed me!" Then I heard someone say, "I told you, if you came, I would shoot you." In a few minutes Mordica Rhue and his hired man came down past my house, calling for me. I went out and told them it was Zeigler shooting watermelon thieves. Rhue went on down, and I could hear him calling to Zeigler, "Don't shoot." After a time, Mordica and his man came back and informed me that Zeigler had shot six boys. Next morning, before I got up, Zeigler came up and wanted me to go down and see where the boys were when he shot them. He informed me that the boys came through a patch of corn and were so near to where he was sitting that had he shot at them then he was sure they would have been killed. Zeigler said to them, "Well, you came down to get it, did you?" At that they turned and ran back through the corn. After they were out of sight he shot. I counted six rows of corn mowed off, and there was a straw hat and blood on the ground, where one of the boys had fallen. I believe the doctor picked fifty-two shots out of his back, and it was several weeks before it was certain he would pull through. Zeigler was not arrested for the shooting, nor were there any more watermelons stolen for years afterward.

Famous Products of Doniphan County—Not all Fruit

Men Famed In Many Walks of Life Have Claimed Old Doniphan County for Their Home at Some Time or Another—The Inventor of the Gatling Gun—Redpath, the Brilliant War Correspondent and Historian—Charles A. Stewart, Who Was Responsible for the Name of St. Joseph, Mo.—One Governor and Foreign Diplomat—Authors and Men Known for the Great Part They Played in State and National Legislation.

Doniphan County had probably been the home of more distinguished people than any other county in the state. Dr. Richard J. Gatling, the inventor of the world-famous Gatling gun, lived at White Cloud for some time in the early days, and in 1857 was president of the White Cloud Town Company. It is claimed upon good authority that Doctor Gatling matured his famous invention in Doniphan County. Dr. J. C. Ayer, of patent medicine fame, was a resident of Doniphan County at one time, and in the early days, before the swamps and bogs had dried up, he sold enough "ague cure" to buy many good Doniphan County farms. Gen. James H. Lane, who afterward became United States senator, and achieved great notoriety, was a citizen of Donphan for some time, and in 1857 was president of the town company. Thomas A. Osborne, afterward governor of Kansas for two terms, and still later minister to Chili and Brazil, was an early resident of the county. Jerome B. Chaffee, who died a United States senator from Colorado, lived at Elwood at one time. Samuel Lapin, who attained to such notoriety in connection with the state treasurer's office, had his first residence in Kansas at White Cloud. Joel Holt, afterward a member of the supreme court commission, lived in Doniphan County at one time. George M. Beebe, at one time territorial secretary and acting governor, practiced law in Troy in 1859-60. Later he was a member of congress from New York. W. H. Smallwood, for two terms secretary of state, was for many years a citizen of Doniphan County. Ozias Bailey, who during the war was the heaviest income taxpayer in the state, was for a long time a prominent business man of White Cloud. D. W. Wilder, for four years state auditor, four years commissioner of insurance, and author of the "Annals of Kansas," made his first home in Kansas at Elwood. James Redpath, who afterward became famous as a war correspondent, and the originator of Decoration Day, published the "Crusader of Freedom," at Doniphan in 1858. Gen. Thomas Jefferson Sutherland, the first man who agitated the opening of Kansas for settlement, and a really famous character, sleeps in the old mission graveyard at Highland. Charles J. Jones, known as "Buffalo Jones," because of his efforts to perpetuate the buffalo, was formerly a citizen of Troy, and laid out an addition to the townsite. Col. David L. Payne, the original Oklahoma boomer, or "Father of Oklahoma," as he is more reverently called, was one of the early settlers of Burr Oak township, in Doniphan County, and represented the county twice in the state legislature during the early days. Charles W. Stewart, a Doniphan County man, first suggested the name of St. Joseph, Mo., and also several of the town's streets. James Horr, who lived at Troy for some time, had the distinction of having erected the first house in St. Joseph. Earl Marble, an early resident of Doniphan County, became an editor of the Waverly Magazine in 1872. Gen. J. W. Whitfield, register of the land office and delegate to congress, lived in Doniphan in the early days. Pole Pavey, mentioned in Mark Twain's book, was a resident of White Cloud in 1858, and piloted the "White Cloud" ferry steamer on the famous expedition up the Nemaha July 4, 1858. James O'Toole, who lived near Elwood in 1857, was reputed to be the oldest man in America, his age at that time having been 125 years. Col. Andrew G. Ege was a prominent Western character who lived in Doniphan County in the early days, and died there in 1876. Before coming to Kansas he was prominently identified with his adopted state, Maryland, as a legislator, member of the constitutional reform convention of 1850-51, presidential elector, etc. He was a great horseman and sportsman, and it was said of him that he had owned more dogs than any man in America. He was the first boomer of St. Joe. This is only a partial list of the distinguished people and noted characters who have lived in Doniphan County at one time or another.

Schools, Churches and Everything Necessary for Contentment Have Been Provided By Progressive People for Our Present and Future Needs.

As a place to live, to raise families and to enjoy the comforts of modern civilization, Doniphan County is unsurpassed.

We have schools, churches, public institutions and pleasure resorts which cannot be excelled by any county in this part of the state.

These are in keeping with the large business, retail and financial, which is transacted daily in this community.

The most vital interest in nearly every man's heart is his home and the things which intimately concern it, more so than the place in which he spends his working hours.

It is for the home that he goes out in the morning to labor all day, in the counting room, in the shop and on the street. It is the first incentive which prompts the erection of immense factories and office buildings. It is, then, whether the place is a pleasant one in which to live that the prospective settler naturally asks first in seeking a new location.

The claim is made for Doniphan County that no more desirable abode could be found in the broad land. Wise laws, carefully administered, guard the public health.

Health is the first requisite to comfortable living and everything has been done to assist a kind nature here in Doniphan County.

But this provided for, Doniphan County has not rested content. It has gone further and spent thousands of dollars for other things required by a civilization which is constantly becoming more exacting.

Churches, schools, public institutions have been provided for lavishly, but still judiciously. We have made this a good place in which to live, in which to strive for some of the better things in life than business success.

To excite in the minds of strangers a desire to investigate personally these claims and to recall to people here at home some of the things which may have passed unheeded, the Chief takes occasion here to set forth in picture and story why there are so many happy homes in this community.

The advantages for pleasure and recreation, for education, for the pursuit of their religious duties, as for the transaction of business, the Doniphan County facilities are unsurpassed by any county twice its size in this section of Kansas. In fact, not only in our business affairs, but in our pastimes, in our studies and in our ethical and moral relations the interests of our county are so closely entwined that we are one large union, working together in all our endeavors as a unity.

A glance at any map of the county will show why this is so. It will demonstrate more clearly than words can possibly do, why the people here can enjoy the advantages of a community many times its number in population and at the same time are not the victims of congested municipalities. Situated as it is, and being one of the richest agricultural counties in the state, it holds a pre-eminent position among the counties of Kansas.

Its schools and churches compare favorably with many counties of larger population. They were built with a view to increasing demands of the county with a substantial, continuous growth. The effect of this has been shown more markedly on the retail business of the community than in any other line of activity. It has been responsible for the development of old businesses as well as for the establishment of new ones and for the widening of the activities of the merchants. It must be said, however, that after undertaking the task and looking over the field, the impossibility of covering it thoroughly or even more than superficially, was soon realized.

As has been said, if this issue of the Chief will serve only to awaken sufficient interest to induce investigation of the truth of the statements contained herein, our aim shall have been accomplished.

The people of the county handle their public affairs with the same businesslike methods they do their private business.

The part that the women are playing in social advancement will be reviewed in the history of their club organizations.

The churches and schools will also be discussed and their history and achievement will be recorded here.

Doniphan County asks the stranger to investigate the claim that it is a good place in which to live and make a living.

THOMAS CONE LAMBORN

Thomas Cone Lamborn was born at Woodstock, Champaign County, Ohio, on January 14th, 1862. His boyhood and early manhood, so far as we know, was spent in the Buckeye State, and for the most part in the little village where he was born; but at the age of twenty-two he exhibited the first symptoms of business foresight by removing to our own beloved land of sunflowers, and locating on a homestead a few miles north of what is now known as Lenora, Kansas. Here he lived in a dugout, and pursued the vocation of a farmer for a period of two years.

At the expiration of that time, he was offered a position in St. Joseph, Mo., on the Herald, of which publication Colonel Tracy was then editor. Mr. Lamborn evidently did not remain in St. Joseph long, as only a short while later, he was back in Kansas, editing the Strong City Independent. In his early days, the subject of our sketch must have set two years as the limit of his sojourn in one place, as next we hear of him in Elma, Iowa, where he remained two years and published a paper. Next he moved to Sioux City, Iowa, where he stayed two years and got out a directory. From Sioux City Mr. Lamborn went to West Point, Mississippi, which he made his headquarters for one year while traveling for the "Commercial Appeal" of Memphis

In 1893, he engaged with the Kansas City Journal and has been connected with them since.

Mr. Lamborn's family consists of his wife, one daughter, Mrs. A. M. Southard of Oklahoma City; four sons, Carroll C., Paul D., Frank P., and Guy D. The family resides at 14 South Nineteenth street, Kansas City, Kan.

Railroads Helped Doniphan

Much of the Progress and Development of Doniphan County Is Directly Due to the Enterprise of the Railroads, Which Simplified the Transportation Problem and Brought the People Nearer to the Markets of the Country.

Much of the progress and development of Doniphan County is directly credited to the several railroads which traverse the county in most all directions. Until the railroads made their appearance in the county development was slow and facilities for transportation were crude and uncertain.

Now, however, things are entirely changed. Railroads run in all directions and it is the fault of the people if they do not avail themselves of all the accommodations furnished by the railroads and required by law. It is notable that the train service through Doniphan County is as fast and as regular as that of any other section of the state.

With the advent of the first railroad in Doniphan County things took on a perceptible change. It was found that farm products could be more cheaply and more speedily gotten to the outside markets than under the old system of hauling by wagon. Consequently things began to liven up somewhat. The arrival of one road was soon followed by others until now there are two big trunk lines and an interstate road running through the county.

In the first days of the railroads many people looked upon such institutions with suspicion because of the fact that they were supposed to represent huge combinations of capital that had for its object the sole desire to cheat the farmer and the workingmen. That erroneous idea was soon shattered when the roads began to spend money liberally for construction, maintenance and operation. Depots were built, tracks were laid and extended, and hundreds of men employed who brought money into the county which otherwise would never have made its appearance there. An enormous amount of money has been expended by the roads annually, and the people now realize the roads have been a great advantage and are largely instrumental for the prosperity of the county today.

In addition to all the numerous benefits derived from the railroads, as enumerated above, it might be appropriate to mention the fact that the roads have lifted a heavy burden off the shoulders of the taxpayers of the county by the payment of taxes for the support of the county, the townships and school districts through which they pass. Official figures show that the management of the railroads pay about one-tenth of all the taxes required to be raised for the conduct of the county business and the support of its institutions.

The Burlington & Missouri River road (originally called the Atchison & Nebraska) traverses the entire side of Iowa Township and runs almost through the middle of Center and Wayne. The passenger trains on this road are as good as any in the country and make the fastest time of any road in the northern part of the state. Ever since the road started the company has been at considerable expense at different times to maintain the road on account of the washing of river banks. Yet all the breaks were promptly repaired and the service resumed with the least possible delay.

The St. Joseph & Grand Island (originally the St. Joseph & Denver City) runs through the center of Washington, Center and Wolf River Townships and does a lively business. Even should there be river navigation, the greater part of this territory would be remote from it at any season and would be cut off altogether during the winter months.

The Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad runs through practically the same country as the St. Joseph & Grand Island, as far as Troy Junction, where it strikes off to the southwest, passing through the corner of Wolf River Township and dingonally through Union Township, almost straight from corner to corner. Atchison was formerly the nearest market to the people of that corner of the township, but since the coming of the railroad things are changed.

WHY YOU SHOULD BUY AT HOME

You Depend on Your Neighbors, and They Depend on You, So Don't Send Out of Town for What You Can Get Here Just as Well.

The mail order houses are the vampires that attack the small towns. They suck the blood of trade from the town merchant, thereby injuring the business of the town, and they take that nutrition which should remain in the town, and gorge themselves with it. They are after the money; they don't care where it comes from, and they reck little how they get it. Their business is hoodwinking, and in this they have developed such fitness that it might properly be called a science, if it were anything for the good of humanity. They receive good money in return for an inferior grade of goods which, of course, would be an obvious injustice, even if it were not a blow to the town merchant, and a direct knock on his business.

You live in the town. You make your living in the town. Your townspeople trade with you if you are in any kind of business or profession, and if you are an employe your salary is dependent upon the success of your employer, who is in turn dependent upon the townspeople. If you are a farmer, you market your produce in the town, and in so doing you make many friends among the bankers and merchants. If you have hard luck—if you have a bad crop year and your bills pile up—these bankers and these merchants of this little town, knowing your reputation for honesty and your thrift, will carry you over until the next crop is harvested. Then, when you need some article that you can buy in the town, does your conscience feel perfectly clear when you send for it instead to a mail order house? All people are more or less dependent upon the rest of humanity, and the extent of this dependence measures the degree of civilization. In those less civilized countries where almost the sole occupation is farming, the people furnish their own food and their own clothing, getting both of these necessities from their crops, and they do without even those smaller luxuries which we have come to regard as necessities. They are almost wholly independent. But in a big American city of today everybody is dependent. There is a barber to shave you, a bootblack to shine your shoes, a manicurist to trim your finger nails, a tobacconist to sell you cigars, a merchant to sell you clothing, a restaurateur to furnish you with food, and a hotel to provide for your comfort and your rest. You make your visits by street car, and you tell your wants by telephone. Upon these things you are dependent, and these things are dependent upon you. Is it right for you to depend upon the town for your welfare, and not in turn have a desire for the welfare of the town? In fact, are you using good business judgment? The town's welfare means your welfare. If the town helps you, you should help the town. Work together—that is the slogan to use. It is not only true when said of a government: "United we stand, divided we fall;" it is true of any organization. It is true of a town. Unity, concerted effort, is the secret of success.

The above argument is strong enough to be sufficient. But there are other arguments against the mail order business that are just as strong. Why does anybody patronize a mail order house? The answer is easy: either because he thinks he is getting the same goods that he could get in his home town at a lower price, or because he is dense enough to think that he can get something for nothing, or because he is just a plain, natural-born, unvarnished fool. In regard to the first reason—the belief that mail order houses sell cheaper—the following true story is interesting:

A farmer who happened into Winzer Bros. hardware store the other day, asked the price of a saw in the showcase.

"Two dollars and seventy-five cents," said Mr. Winzer.

"H'm," said the farmer, "I can get the same kind of a saw from Rears & Sawbuck for $2.50."

"Well, I'll tell you what I'll do," said Mr. Winzer, after a moment's thought, "I'll sell you that saw for $2.50, providing you let me sell it to you exactly as the mail order house would."

The farmer accepted the proposition.

"All right," said Mr. Winzer, "here's the saw; now give me your $2.50."

The farmer did so.

"Now, if you were buying this saw from the mail order house you would, of course, have to write to them. That would cost you 2 cents for a stamp, and you would use about 1 cent's worth of paper. That's 3 cents more that you must give me to apply on the saw."

The farmer produced three pennies.

"And the express would be just 30 cents."

The farmer hesitated. He had begun to see a light. Then he produced 30 cents and slowly handed it over.

"Now," said Mr. Winzer, "you have paid me just $2.86 for your saw—11 cents more than I would have charged you."

The farmer grinned sheepishly and thoughtfully. Then he started out, but Mr. Winzer called him back.

"No; you must live up to the terms of your agreement," said Mr. Winzer, "you agreed to let me sell you that saw just as a mail order house would. Give me the saw."

The farmer did so, seemingly puzzled.

"Now," said Mr. Winzer, come back in six weeks, and I will let you have it. It would take you six weeks to get it from a mail order house."

The farmer hesitated a moment, as if trying to think of something to say, then he turned and walked slowly out, scratching his head.

Moral: It pays to patronize merchants at home who advertise.

Seven Ages of Man

What He Is Up Against From the Cradle to the Grave—The Chances Are Against Him Working Out His Own Salvation, Either Here or Hereafter—Trouble Ushered in With Himself and It Keeps Piling On Until He Is Ushered Out to the Great Beyond.

All Through Life the Gods, and More Often His Own Earthly Species, Are Ready to Give Him the Harpoon—No Matter What He Does or How He Does It, His Motives Are Impugned—Rocky Road From Start to Finish.

When the animal of the species called man comes into this world, he does so without his own consent. He's not to blame very much for that, as he had very little to do about making arrangements for his arrival.

When he goes out of this world he leaves without his own consent, unless he uses a shooting iron, jumps in the river, takes happy powders, or follows the hemp rope route to the happy hunting grounds.

During his brief sojourn here on earth the person called man runs up against most everything from the cradle to the grave. There are contraries and misunderstandings on all sides—the whole world must appear to him to be populated with the full membership of the knockers' club.

It might be possible for man to get by without running up against a barbed wire fence on every stage of the journey, if he could arrange his own itinerary from the start. But such is not to be. He's so helpless at first that all the girls dote on him as an angel. It's great to be an infant if we only knew how to handle the dope while we're in that primitive stage of life.

Pretty soon, when the man sheds the swaddling clothes, the angel gag gets to be ancient history, and he is greeted with, "You imp." Along about the time where man figures it is high time for him to wear long pants the lady "adorers" tell him that he is an "imp of the devil." Later on, in his adolescence, when the first suspicion of spinach appears on his angelic mug he is figured out as a fresh brat and a young reptile by the men folks, but occasionally he is the flower of the garden to the very young ladies.

Then when Mr. Man comes home from college in the prime of young manhood, he is the whole works, providing he does not return with his trousers turned up 'most to the knees, and display other evidences of being a mollycoddle. After a few brief moments of welcome the "old man" puts it up to him that it's about time he quit being a butterfly and start to make a living for himself.

Well, he tackles some kind of a job pretty soon, because mamma can't locate the dough from papa's jeans to stake him to spending money any more. Then the anvil chorus get their hammers out. The members are all ready to find fault with what he does, no matter how good he does it. After a while he grows a little bit older and, maybe, is getting along in life. So he naturally begins to look around for a partner that he can support. The girls are on the job right away, and if he should fail to marry them all, the good gods protect him ever afterwards.

Mr. Man is forty now, and he takes unto himself a wife. He has become callous to all the hard knocks, the human knocks and the knockers' knocks by this time. He has most likely been fairly successful in a business way, but the old maid contingent will never forgive him for overlooking them. He doesn't care, because he knows from the bottom of his heart that it is coming. He should not be so gay in his youthful days. If he raises a family he is accused of being an anti-race suicide maniac and a fool, and if he doesn't he gets knocked from the other angle of life. Everybody is watching him now. Even his wife fails to take kindly to the idea of his staying away from home a few hours at night, and then sneaking in when he thinks she's asleep, while she has her weather eye open, waiting to frisk his pockets, before he even gets sound in slumber. Poor Man!

Then the report gets out that he is spending too much money for a man of his means. If he gets caught raising a check he is sent by the court to look out through the bars, instead of looking into one occasionally. Should man disappoint his "friends" in any of these situations, there is sure something wrong with him. If he is found to be a poor man, he is a poor manager who has been lazy all his life and failed to lay up a competency for his family. If he isn't a poor man and shows evidences of wealth, he is classed as dishonest. If he is in politics and makes money, anyway, he is considered a grafter, and if he doesn't get the money he is a cheap skate and a double crosser. If he is not interested in politics he is classed as lukewarm for the interests of his country and an undesirable citizen. Then it is where his troubles begin worse than ever.

At the age of seventy Mr. Man is supposed to have some of this world's goods. If he is a member of the church he is classed as a hypocrite and persons with disease of the vocal organs tell vicious tales about him being a backslider. However, if he does not belong to the church he is a sinner and is "damned," whether he likes it or not. If he doesn't kick in with contributions to all manner of social and religious grafts, he is in his dotage and a miser, and if he does, he is a fool, so what's the odds. He gets it both ways, coming and going.

When Mr. Man first gave us a lusty greeting, everybody wanted to kiss him—the little lamb of a darling. But before he gets through with the final shuffle, everybody feels like booting him along to the other side. If he dies young the newspapers predict that he had a great future—providing his folks are wealthy or in politics. Should he live to a ripe and mellow old age and happen to have done nothing for his country, everybody condemns him and the newspapers forget him. Some of the skeptical people predict that the most sensible thing for mortal man to do would simply appear to be to do nothing, amount to nothing, don't take a hand in either politics or poker, let religion alone and forget that there was such a thing as public opinion.

Man came into the world on chariot wheels. Later these circular things get to his head and occasionally into his pocket. He is a natural-born kicker, and gets a slice of his own favorite game before he makes the final kick-off. It is often said that by the time he is a yearling he is usually boss of the ranch, but it must be remembered that he is only a maverick at that age. By the time he is a five-year-old the "old man" has placed his hickory brand upon his hide, where it is likely to remain until he gets old enough to scrape it off. These are the happy days when Mr. Young Man stays awake nights figuring out how long it will be until he can lick anything—even his "old man."

Along about the first quarter of his first "moon" Young Mr. Man is sent to school and soon enough he learns to play hooky and go swimmin' in the good old hole. He is seven by this time, and can do a stunt at yelling that would paralyze the throttle of a locomotive. He has not lost his appetite by a jugful, but can make a pile of grub disappear with as much finesse as a nigger could skin a coon. His disposition is like that of an inverted angel. He gets a cut on his toe swiping apples from a neighbor's orchard, and when the "old man" gets his glims on the traces of the barbed wire, Young Mr. Man does not sit down to eat for a whole week, as he finds it more comfortable standing up to the chuck.

The "plant" of green apples which the neighbor lost are safely hidden away, but when the toe—and another section of his anatomy—gets limbered up again, Young Mr. Man proceeds to get rid of some of the "swag." He feeds his face with the "green goods" behind the barn, and then wonders where the pains come from during the middle of the night. He daren't "holler," because old Mrs. Man is alive to his game and lets him suffer in silence rather than put the old man wise to the location of the neighbor's missing apples. How he does wish the sun would call the hands out about 2 o'clock in the morning. Then he could play the Good Man, get up and try to escape his misery.

Along about the age of twelve he is stricken with that terrible disease known as "puppy love." The little girl sitting next him in class is the first object of his affections. He swears she shall be his or he cannot survive. She sees a "nicer boy," after she has devoured all his candy, which he had bought with pennies carefully saved from what he had held out on Old Mrs. Man when she sent him to the grocery store. But the worst is yet to come for Young Mr. Man. When the pin feathers begin to make their appearance on his countenance, he "Sees a maiden fair with sun-kissed hair

Go tripping down the street;
Her face serene, her age sixteen,
My, my, but she looked sweet,
The rustle of her skirt
It hit his heart,
And knocked him off his feet."

That was the beginning of Mr. Man's real troubles. Enthralled by the charms of this angel-goddess, he forgets the promise to wear soft shirts for ball-game purposes. He figures on the hard boiled egg shirt right away and is off home to "dress up." All resplendent in the chalk front, he sails forth to "land" the queenie, but she happens to be with another boy about her own age. Young Man chases the couple surreptitiously and vows vengeance on the rival. He's going to get his goat yet. The queenie is all unmindful of his desperation, but he takes notice that she is casting innocently shy glances over her shoulder when the "other fellow" isn't looking. The next day young Mr. Man meets the ephemeral affinity and she invites him to take her to the moving pictures. Horrors, he hasn't got a nickel!

This is the age when Young Mr. Man knows it all, and blames everything on somebody else. He knows more than any sea captain, any general or the president of any college. In fact, his mother must dance to his music. He has "won out" a whole bunch of affinities at different times during the week, but they handed him the "mit" very promptly whenever he couldn't come across with the dough for the ice cream baker. He is heartbroken every other day and is making desperate efforts to finance his lady love's desires. He is eventually making such a nuisance of himself that the old man packs him off to college. Well, Man comes back full grown, and after some gentle hints about getting a job, he finally lands one. The old flames are all forgotten. He wants to save up enough to get married and hasn't got any time spending money in trifles. They hammered some sense into him on the football field in that college.

Along in after years he meets one of the juvenile flames who is on the job for a man now because she feels she's getting old. There are several other girls who knew him when they were young and they are still single. So there is a right for the "silly boy" they turned down, and he gives them the grand go-by for the little one that was faithful to him when she was eleven and he was twelve. Even if he did ditch her for a blonde with blue ribbons in her pig tails at the time he felt that Madeline would forget it.

After awhile Mr. Man's house is visited by a span of young strangers whom they christened Kate and Duplicate. Next year, or so, come along Peter and Repeater, and the finishing touches were put on the happy family by the arrival of Max and Climax. They sure enough came in bunches and got the old man guessing for fair. He saw it was a case of hustle, and preferred to do that than stay at home and listen to the humming birds. There was enough found for all, but it took all the old man's means to start them off in life.

He is sure enough getting to be Old Man now. He hustles for a grubstake with all the sanctity of a millionaire. He buys a farm and runs up against the petty mortgage grafter and later is short changed by the light-weight buyer at the grain elevator. Then Old Man went into politics and got a ne-plus-ultra dose of the double cross. He received the nomination for a county office all right, and then his friends turned around and defeated him. He is back on the old farm now and it never looked better to him in all the days of his life.

The Ocean-to-Ocean Highway

Pike's Peak Ocean to Ocean Highway Extends Through the County From Elwood to Highland—Lambert A. Libel, of Wathena, President of the State Bank, Senator Walter E. Wilson of Washington, Kansas, and A. Q. Miller, Editor of the Belleville Telescope, Are Members of the Executive Committee.

The Kansas division of the Pike's Peak ocean-to-ocean highway is one of the greatest assets Doniphan County, as an entire community, possesses. It traverses the county in almost a straight line from the town of Elwood to Highland and thence to the county line.

Many of the wide-awake citizens of Doniphan County have often wondered if the entire people realize what an advantage it is to have the great ocean-to-ocean highway pass right through the country. Locally it is more generally known as the Rock Island highway, which is officially the Kansas division of the trans-continental road from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

The Rock Island highway is now on the map of Kansas from St. Joseph, Missouri, to the Colorado state line, and it is likewise on the official map of the American Automobile Association and is certified to by the Automobile Blue Book and other national authorities. It is a great thing for the county and state that our roads have been found in such good shape that the geographical conditions could not be negatived when it came to the selection of a route from coast to coast.

There is no question about the wisdom of the promoters of the ocean-to-ocean highway who decided to have it run through Doniphan County. These men knew their business. The popularity of the Rock Island highway has already been established, and, in the future, it is destined to be the great central route across the continent. It has the shortest mileage and traverses the most pronounced sections of agricultural diversity and industrial activity. The commercial conditions along the route are so vigorous that tourists may readily see that Doniphan County and the rest of the northern tier of Kansas counties through which the Rock Island highway passes are very much awake and always alive.

That part of the highway which passes through Doniphan County touches several of the important towns, and autoists from East and West may see for themselves what a great stretch of country these same towns have for feeders. The people of Doniphan County may take pardonable pride in having something worth while to show the tourists, and they are only too glad to do it. They realize the opportunities that lie at their doors for convincing the world that Doniphan County is the garden spot of the Middle West.

Although not yet two years old, the Rock Island Highway Association has done a lot of effective work in promoting the cause of good roads and advancing the interests of the state and the different counties through which the new public highway goes. The association was formed in Belleville, Kansas, early in 1913, at the invitation of A. Q. Miller, and the new company at once inaugurated an energetic campaign to make the Rock Island highway the connecting link in the great East and West national trans-continental highway.

In mapping out the route, a pencil mark was made across the northern tier of Kansas counties from east to west, and, within a year, the road was developed into a popular cross-state route, and merged into a national highway. The route has been mapped and logged in the Automobile Blue Book and official markers have been erected and pole-painted across the state from the eastern line to the western border. Every county included in the route has recognized the highway as a county road, which insures it legal support and funds with which to keep it in repair.

The first official inspection trip over the Rock Island Highway from St. Joseph to Colorado Springs and Denver was made in September, 1913. The party left St. Joseph on the morning of the 23d, and four days were required to make the trip to Denver. Governor Hodges accompanied the party and there was considerable speech-making and boosting along the route. State Highway Commissioner Gearhart, the secretary of the State Automobile Association, and officers of the Rock Island Highway made up the official party.

The St. Joseph Auto Club and the St. Joseph Commerce Club, both of which organizations were potential factors in having the highway association formed, as well as a number of newspapers, were represented by cars which made the first official trip over the road Beginning at the Grand Island bridge which spans the Missouri River between St. Joseph and Elwood, the official route through Doniphan County and across the state is as follows: Elwood, Wathena, Blair, Troy, thence one mile south to the south side of the old fair grounds, then west past John Berrys, W. L. Privitt's, William and Thomas Dawes, then to Devereux's corner and south two miles to R. H. Ladwig's corner, then west through Bendena to Syracuse school at Jack Joyce's and John Mayme's corner, then north one-half mile to corner where Jake Stout, William Webb, W. P. Dittemore and Pat Kirwan live, then one-half mile west and one mile north to Severance, and along the main road straight north to Highland, passing the beautiful and spacious farm residence of Charles I. Moyer, also the farms of Jake Francis and J. H. Thomas, and the farm homes of Jonn Meese and Dr. R. C. Miller, and from there past the Winona school house to the county line.

Leaving Doniphan County, the route lies through Hiawatha, Fairview, Sabetha, Oneida, Seneca, Baileyville, Axtel, Beattie, Home City, Marysville, Hanover, Washington, Morrowville, Haddam, Belleville, Scandia, Courtland, Formoso, Montrose, Mankato, Lebanon, Bellaire, Smith Center, Athol, Kensington, Agra, Phillipsburg, Stuttgart, Prairie View, Almena, Norton, Oronoque, Dellvale, Clayton, Jennings, Dresden, Selden, Rexford, Gem, Colby, Goodland, and from there to Limon, on the Colorado side of the line.

The citizens in the towns along the route gave the official party an enthusiastic welcome and felt gratified that the highway had been mapped out to come their way. The roads of the county were in fairly good shape, and this fact was commented on by the members of the official inspection party. Since then, however, the great advantages of having the highway run straight through Doniphan County have become more apparent to the people and the county officials are bending their efforts to have the Doniphan section of the Rock Island Highway equal or better than that of any other county in the state.

At the present time the road is in fine shape, with the exception of that strip from the St. Joseph bridge along the Elwood bottoms to Wathena. In dry season, this part of the highway is invariably as good as any other stretch through the country, but it gets to be a tough proposition in bad spring weather, when the gumbo becomes sticky.

However, the Doniphan County commissioners, in connection with the boosters of the county and the commercial bodies of St. Joseph, are laying plans to devise the best methods by which permanent improvement may be made on the road along the Elwood bottoms. Commissioners Charles Kibler, Frank H. Drosselmeier and Theodore Teufler have the matter in hand, and they will be depended upon to effect material improvement in the bad spots on the highway.

GILBERT N. KYSAR

Gilbert N. Kysar, at present probate judge of Sherman County, Kansas, will be remembered by many as a successful and well liked school teacher of a few years ago. For the last ten years he has been a leader in all lines of endeavor in western Kansas, and his popularity was attested last fall, when he was elected to the responsible place he now holds, by a flattering majority over all of his opponents.

Mr. Kysar is a native of the state of Iowa. He was born in Brighton, Washington County, Jan. 13, 1870, and when seven years old he came to Kansas with his mother and two older brothers, settling near Herrington, where he resided continuously until the last winter. Mr. Kysar received his education in the public schools, and after completing his studies, began his life's work as a teacher. He was employed not only satisfactorily, but very successfully for ten years in Phillips and Ellis counties.

In the year 1905 he located in Goodland, Sherman County, and for eight years was manager of the Kysar Realty Company. There he prospered beyond his expectations, making for himself a comfortable fortune and gaining the respect of the entire community. He is a member of the executive committee of the Ocean-to-Ocean Highway for Sherman County, Kansas, and gave much of his time and efforts to this project.

Judge Kysar is one of the best boosters for good roads there is in the state. He is of the firm belief that this section is to be not only the geographical center of the country, but the commercial center as well, and consequently he wants the roads placed in proper shape. He has succeeded in placing Sherman County in the fore-front in this respect, and due largely to his efforts, the roads in that community are among the best along the Ocean-to-Ocean Highway in Kansas. Judge Kysar boosts not only for good roads, but for all improvements in general in his community. He has succeeded in beautifying many places of interest in that county. Judge Kysar is a conscientious worker and a fine type of upright, fearless progressive citizen.

The executive committee of the Rock Island Highway Association is composed of a lively body of representative business men and good roads boosters. The Doniphan County member is Lambert A. Libel, president of the Farmers' State Bank of Wathena, and one of the most enterprising business men in the state. The other members are George R. Adams of Hiawatha, C. A. Busser of Seneca, C. J. D. Koester of Marysville, Walter E. Wilson of Washington, M. L. Hill of Belleville, W. W. Spencer of Kankato, W. H. Nelson, of Smith Center, and formerly postmaster of that place; R. Frank Stinson of Phillipsburg; E. W. McNeilly of Norton, W. P. Noone of Jennings, A. B. Person of Selden, F. A. Louis of Colby, and Gilbert B. Kysan of Goodland.

The officers of the Rock Island Association are C. W. Cole, of Norton, president; C. F. Travelute of Marysville, vice-president, and A. Q. Miller of Belleville, secretary-treasurer. The headquarters of the association are in Belleville in the office of the Telescope, of which paper Mr. Miller is editor. There is an immense amount of work connected with the position of secretary-treasurer, as loads of literature and descriptive pamphlets of all kinds are constantly being sent out from there. This extensive advertising all falls on the shoulders of Secretary Miller, who performs it gratuitously and as a labor of love. Mr. Miller is a great hustler in the goods roads cause, as experience has taught him that they are one of the best assets any county or state could have. His efforts in behalf of the cause have been recognized by the Pike's Peak Ocean-to-Ocean Highway Association, of which the Rock Island Highway is a connecting link. Mr. Miller has been a regular attendant at the meetings of the national body, and is now its first vice-president.

The Pike's Peak Ocean-to-Ocean Highway runs through eleven states in its path from coast to coast. Commencing in New York, the route lies through Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Kansas, Colorado, Utah, Nevada and California. It is soon to become a portion of the 50,000 miles of national highways about to be adopted by Congress, and is the culmination of the nation-wide campaign for better roads throughout the United States. While we do not pose as a prognosticator, we will predict that this line will be surfaced or paved by state and nation before many decades.

Another man who is interested in the Ocean-to-Ocean Highway through Doniphan County is L. L. Strong, one of the most progressive citizens of Troy. Mr. Strong is that type of citizen that realizes that very little advancement can come without the foundation of good roads to start with. He is a son-in-law of T. P. Gordon of St. Joseph, president of the Commercial Club. One of Mr. Strong's ancestors, Henry Boder, his grandfather, established the first bank in Troy in 1870, which was known as the Bank of Troy and sold to the Norman boys, March 5, 1906, and was soon nationalized and is now the First National Bank.

C M. Finley

Mr. C. M. Finley, who is engaged in the abstract business in Troy, is likewise a booster for the Ocean-to-Ocean Highway. As an old-time citizen of Troy Mr. Finley advances the opinion that in the near future there will be a mighty volume of business passing over the highway, such as can scarcely be comprehended at this time. He believes that he is in a position to foresee what he predicts.

W. H. Spencer

W. H. Spencer, the leading jeweler of Mankato, Kansas, has long advocated the advantage of having good roads. He fully realized the business advantages that a town would have if the principal roads leading to it were put in the best possible condition and then kept that way. While Mr. Spencer is fully cognizant of the value of good roads to the merchant; he knows, of course, that the farmer is more directly and primarily benefited by having the roads leading to his principal trading point kept in good shape. So when the Kansas division of the trans-continental road from the Atlantic to the Pacific was mapped out to go through Mankato, it is no wonder that such an early advocate of better roads as Mr. Spencer was for it good and strong. And he was for it not alone on account of his interest in good roads, but because he realized the advantages that Mankato and Jewell County would derive by having a great transcontinental highway through the.r county.

W. P. Noone

W. P. Noone, the popular and progressive hardware and implement dealer, of Jennings, Kansas, lives in a section of the state where good roads are the rule rather than the exception. But, of course, there is always room for improvement, as Mr. Noone has often said; and where it is advisable to make road improvements, he has always contended that those improvements should be made according to the best methods and as permanent as possible. Mr. Noone has been a good roads booster for many years and has always taken an active interest in all good roads movements. While the town of Jennings is not very large in population, it is on the map of the Kansas division of the Pike's Peak Ocean-to-Ocean Highway, big and strong. And in a great measure this is due to W. P. Noone, who, realizing what an asset it would be to his town, was for it with the same unremitting enthusiasm that he has for all good roads propositions.

A. Q. Miller

When the Pike's Peak Ocean-to-Ocean Highway is mentioned in Kansas, one naturally thinks of A. Q. Miller, editor of the Belleville Telescope, as he is the original sponsor for the project in this state. Mr. Miller's interest and work in this connection has been so pronounced that his office was designated the official headquarters of the Highway Association in Kansas. Tourists and members of the association are given the glad hand when they stop at the Telescope office and given such hospitable treatment that they deem it worth the price just to meet the genial and enthusiastic editor. Scarcely an edition of the Telescope is issued without reference to the highway, which is dear to the heart of Mr. Miller. A. Q. Miller is widely known throughout his section of Kansas as one of the most valuable citizens, and his endeavors in other lines are just as worthy and commendable as in the good roads movement. His paper, The Telescope, is the best paper in Belleville and is patronized by practically every inhabitant.

George Delaney

Mr. George Delaney is another advocate of the Ocean-to-Ocean Highway in Kansas. He is widely known as the obliging postmaster of Axtell, Kansas, and his ability and worth are indicated by the fact that he has held the office for about eighteen years. One of the last deeds performed by Representative Reese of the Fifth Congressional District in his official capacity was to secure the re-appointment of Mr. Delaney as postmaster. He will doubtless be one of the last Republican postmasters to serve in Kansas under the present administration.

Although not an officer of the Highway Association, Mr. Delaney has always manifested as much interest as though he were on the committee. His efforts toward better roads have had great influence toward building up the highway through the great state of Kansas to its present excellent condition. Without question, he is one of the most respected citizens of Marshall County and a booster by instinct.

John S. Norman

John S. Norman, president of the First National Bank of Troy, is another of our reputable citizens who is proud of the Ocean-to-Ocean Highway, and never fails to put in a good word concerning it. Mr. Norman has made a success of life and when he indicates his approval of such a movement as the highway or any good roads movement, it is bound to carry weight.

L. A. Libel

One of the persevering and energetic men of Kansas, who is a booster for the Ocan-to-Ocean Highway, is Lambert A. Libel, cashier of the Farmers' State Bank of Wathena. He was one of the first men in Doniphan County to get busy when it was stated that there was a possibility of the Rock Island Highway being laid out on the east side of the Missouri River to Atchison instead of passing through this county. Young Libel is not only a booster for this project, but has fostered every movement for the past few years which would help Wathena or Doniphan County.

Ralph Tennel

Ralph Tennel, the congenial editor and owner of the Sabetha Herald, likes to ride at a good clip in a good auto on a good road. Therefore he was an early booster to the Ocean-to-Ocean Highway, and devoted much space in his paper to the enterprise. He fully realized that the commercial advantages to his town and community would be greatly enhanced if a great trans-continental road was established through Sabetha. Mr. Tennel publishes one of the good weeklies of the state of Kansas and has always been most liberal in the use of its columns for advancing any worthy cause. For several years he was a reporter and paragrapher on the Kansas City Star.

G. J. Ratcliff

G. J. Ratcliff, a cashier of the First National Bank of Highland, is an able exponent of the Ocean-to-Ocean Highway and will be found at all times boosting for the project.

WONDERFUL STORIES

Proved Nothing But the Brain-Child of an Enthusiastic Reporter.

In 1891 there went to the town of Highland a newspaper man, who knew more about journalism than he did about the ethics of good manners and common sense. He decided unto himself that the town needed rejuvenating and advertising, and in general, a bigger place on the map; so, one day the Kansas City and Topeka dailies blazoned forth with a story of George Fox finding $10,000 while digging gooseberry bushes. That story, while pure fiction, didn't hurt anybody but George Fox—since he didn't find the money; but in an edition a week later was another that caused certain scientists some trouble.

The other story was concerning a great meteor that had mysteriously dropped out of a clear sky and landed on Ben Williams' house, demolishing a part of it. It was of great size and so hot that people could not approach within a hundred yards, so it was alleged. The hole in the ground was of several feet in depth, and speculation was rife as to what it portended, the dispatch asserted. These stories, of course, were taken as a joke in Highland, and laughed at heartily, but outside newspapers copied the stories and took them for true. In consequence of this, one dark and stormy night, three men, Professor Craig of Washburn College; A. R. Taylor, president of the State Normal, and Chancellor Snow of the State University, boarded the same train at different points, but all bound for Highland, to make arrangements for the possession of the meteor for the college which he represented. Each was taciturn as to his mission, but on reaching Highland Station, they had to wait for a conveyance a long time, on account of the weather, and finally one man told that he came to secure the great meteor. Then ensued a conflab as to which was most entitled to it, the president of Washburn College of Topeka, the president of the State Normal at Emporia, or the chancellor of the State University of Lawrence, Kansas.

The next morning it was ascertained that the reports sent out to the metropolitan papers were erroneous, and the above named celebrities departed for their respective homes, and the feeling that crept o'er their physiognomies reminded the educators of the student who was induced to go snipe hunting.

From an Old Settler

Thursday, October 6, 1881.

Mr. Sol Miller, Secretary,
"Old Settlers Association,"
Troy, Kansas.

Dear Sir: As my business prevents me from attending the "Old Settlers' Reunion" at Troy during the fair, I most cheerfully send in my name to be recorded among the old settlers of Doniphan County.

I marked my first claim in Doniphan County in the bluffs up near White Cloud, January 10, 1855, and returned to my home in Buchanan County, Missouri, and did not come back until the 5th of the following April, when I went out south of Iowa Point and, liking the looks of the country better than I did further up the river, I abandoned my first claim and located on the place I improved and lived on until 1871, one mile south of Iowa Point. I had, however, been through this country in 1851, on my return to the states from California, camping the last night before I reached my home in Buchanan County, Missouri, just south of the old agency farm, where Major Vanderslice now lives, and near the grove on the old Lewis Jeffers farm, where his widow is still living.

On my first visit to Doniphan County, I was in the cove where White Cloud is located, and instead of finding a thriving little city like White Cloud now is, I found a small log hut, built and abandoned by some venturesome pioneers, seeking a home on what was then the western confines of civilization, but which has since become what is called "back East" by the upper tens of Montana and Idaho.

I think the organization of an old settlers' association in Doniphan County is a good thing. If carried out in a proper spirit, as it should be, it will tend to cement in a closer bond of friendship and fraternal feeling the men and women who braved the hardships of frontier life, to help make what was once called "The Great American Desert" blossom as the rose. There is no good reason why the old settlers of Doniphan County (and the young settlers, too) should not meet occasionally and have a real good time. We cannot, perhaps, tell of engaging in the innocent pastime of scaiping "Injuns" and having bear fights in the early settlement of Doniphan County, like our more favored Western brothers, but we can tell how we all came here determined to make a fortune and to go to Congress as soon as Kansas was admitted as a state.

The Broad, Fertile Farms of Doniphan County

Farmers Are Adopting the Most Approved and Scientific Methods With the Result That Production Is Increasing.

The advantages that Doniphan County offers to the homeseeker, the agriculturist, the horticulturist, the truck farmer and the stock raiser, are almost limitless.

Doniphan County offers advantages in the fruit industry that are unequaled in this country. In marvelous development no state in the Union has made such rapid advancement along agricultural, commercial and industrial lines as has Kansas and especially Doniphan County.

The Call of the Land.

"The call of the land," is rising from one end of the commonwealth to the other, and this county responds to the call; that we have hundreds of acres of bluff land along the Missouri river which can be purchased in five and ten-acre tracts that will furnish homes for hundreds of families. There is more attention being given it today than at any period of our history. The real value of the soil is being appreciated as never before, and the fact has been exemplified that poor men can prosper in the small-fruit business, raise large families, educate them and enjoy the comforts of life on ten-acre tracts, in the vicinity of Troy and Wathena. The berry business is the chief industry in the hills north and east of Troy, and all who have been engaged in the business are doing well. It is not confined to the man in the country alone, but the city man's attention is being directed to it. Our people are becoming builders of real homes. What that means for posterity and prosperity it requires no pen to picture.

Agriculture.

In the whirl and turmoil of the twentieth century, how many of us have stopped, even temporarily, to think of the plain berry farmer? Of the part he has played in the making of the world, in the making of the nations? Of the fact that upon his sturdy shoulders he bears the maintenance of the races of men; that upon these shoulders and upon his labors rests the very foundation of governments, of all industrial endeavor and wealth? Have you realized that always in the crises the nation has faced, when the call to arms has come, that the salvation of our country from our earliest days has depended upon the patriotism and vigor of the men of the soil? And so it has been since the creation. In this year of 1915, with prices of human foodstuffs—the necessities of life—farm products soaring with aeroplane rapidity and the business of the country rapidly increasing. The farmer is the supporting keystone of the economic arch of our common country, without him and his labor and the production he brings to the market from the soil and the air, the whole commercial and industrial fabric of the nation would crumble and we would cease to be the great nation that we are.

Human civilization in its highest state is what we must look to, and human civilization has but one crying, actual, unavoidable necessity—food to sustain life—and that the farmer of Doniphan County is doing his share to produce part of the nation's food is evident from the products which are shipped out of here each year by the berry men and the big farmer.

Doniphan County has always, since its infancy, been known as an agricultural, stock and small fruit producing center. The sale of farm products raised here annually aggregates many millions of dollars, and is constantly increasing from year to year. Several thousand cars of corn, wheat, apples and small fruits have been shipped out of the county during the year of 1914, notwithstanding the dry summer. Almost every staple crop is successfully grown in Doniphan County. The soil which is very rich, and the climate, are peculiarly adapted to farming and fruit growing. Ninety per cent of the area of the county is under cultivation. Cattle, horses, mules, hogs, sheep and poultry are leading products.

In the western part of the county the principal crops raised are corn, wheat and oats. Thousands of bushels of these products are grown annually upon the large farms of Jake Stout, John Hale, John Maymes, Flavel Nuzum, The "Dentons" and others.

In the eastern part the chief crops are alfalfa, fruit, some corn, and wheat. Watered by the Missouri and Wolf rivers, Peter's Creek, Mosquito Creek, Independence Creek and various tributaries, suffering from drouth is almost unknown.

The land in Doniphan County runs from hills to rich river bottoms. It is all fertile and productive, and in a high state of cultivation.

An Ideal Climate.

There is a heavy annual rainfall in Doniphan County, which materially assists in the growing of crops in the summer and just enough snow in the winter months to be of great benefit to the wheat.

Doniphan County roads, while the majority are of dirt, are nevertheless kept in fair condition and much interest has now been aroused in the good roads movement. As a rule the dirt roads can be traveled the year around, enabling the farmer to haul heavy loads to market, even after a rain storm.

Doniphan County has a population of 20,000, and there is a constant demand in Troy, Highland, Severance, Wathena and other towns for fresh vegetables, eggs, butter, milk and kindred products.

As a rule the farmers are so busy in the fields that their wives have charge of the poultry and dairy departments of the farm, and that these women gain good incomes is evident from the fact that large amounts of these products are shipped annually from here.

Scientific Farming.

Until recent years Doniphan County farmers did not pay much attention to scientific farming, but now a visit to the different farming communities will show that they are up to the times in farming by the latest and most approved scientific methods. The fruit men are spraying their orchards and all are on the alert at all times.

By making a study of agriculture and by attending lectures by leading agricultural authorities in the county, state and nation, the present-day farmer knows more about farming scientifically than his forefathers ever dreamed of. While Prof. Charles I. Vinsonhaler of Wathena was county superintendent, he took an active part in the farmers' institute which was organized at Troy, and the interest which was maifested was enthusiastic.

Within the last few years the farmers of Doniphan County have prepared the soil with the most beneficial fertilizers until greater crops than were ever known before are being grown here yearly.

The farm houses of Doniphan County indicate the prosperity of the farmers. A drive through the county visiting the home of John Ricklef, south of Troy, C. I. Moyer between Severance and Highland; the old Symns home, south and west of Troy; Billy Normiles in Union Township, and the Ed Whelan home, and dozens of others, will convince the observer that they speak in unerring terms of the farmers' prosperity. The homes are built upon comfortable lines and, as a rule, the lawns are as well kept as those in front of a city house. Farmers in Doniphan County, in many instances, have their private waterworks system. Many homes are heated and lighted by their own gas system. In short, the farmer of Doniphan County can live as well as his neighbor in town, and is surrounded by every modern convenience.

A Creed for the Citizens of Doniphan County

If you can't own your town, don't disown it.

This life is what we make it; so is your town.

In some respects your town is not perfect. Are you?

What your town needs is not fault-finders, but fault fixers.

Your town will never grow on money that is sent to some other town.

The country is growing in population. Is your town keeping up?

The man who begins to plan for his town will soon be calling it "my town."

Your town had to be started by somebody. It has got to be kept going by somebody else.

Your town doesn't need boosting any more than any other town, but it needs it just as much.

The pioneers thought this was a good place for a town. Let's make it a poor place for knockers.

The easiest way to make things right at Washington is to begin by making things right at home.

Remember there is one big difference between your town and all other towns. This town is where you live.

Yesterday is gone; tomorrow may never come. This day is your best opportunity. So is this town.

If you are a wage earner here, this town spends its money with you. Do you spend your money with the town?

A Dead One

A town that never has anything to do in a public way is on the way to the cemetery. Any citizen who will do nothing for his town is helping to dig the grave. A man that curses the town furnishes the coffin. The man who is so selfish as to have no time from his business to give to the city affairs is making the shroud. The man who will not advertise is driving the hearse.

The man who is always pulling back from any public enterprise throws bouquets on the grave. The man who is so stingy as to be howling hard times, preaches the funeral sermon, sings the doxology and thus the town lies buried—a dead one.

The First Homestead

Daniel Freeman the First Person in the United States to File on Homestead After Passage of the Homestead Law—Located in Gage County, Nebraska—Five Miles Northwest of Beatrice—One of the Fertile Farms of That Section of the State.

During this phenomenal season of enormous crops and universal comment on the prosperity of the American farmer, a word about the first homestead in the United States may be of interest to the general public. This farm is situated in Gage County, Nebraska, five miles northwest of Beatrice, and is operated to the present day by Mrs. Agnes S. Freeman, assisted by her son.

Mrs. Freeman is hale and hearty, although now approaching the ripe age of four score. She does not feel burdened with the distinction of being the widow of the first homesteader in the United States. Her husband died December 30, 1908, and since that time, Mrs. Freeman has exercised general management of the old homestead.

It was away back in 1855 that Mr. Freeman, who was born on the old Western Reserve in Ohio, came to the Virgin Prairie of Nebraska, Kansas Territory, and in 1862 filed his application for a homestead on the eve of his departure to fight his country's battle with the Union forces. After returning from the war, Mr. Freeman took up the work of proving up on his homesteaed, and September 1, 1869, letters of patent were issued to him under the first homestead law, by order of President Grant.

The following is a true copy of the records to be found in the United States land office, Washington, D. C.

"The Unites States to Daniel Freeman. Homestead Certificate Number 1. Application Number 1.

"The United States of America, to All Whom These Presents Shall Come, Greeting: Whereas, There has been deposited in the general land office of the United States a certificate of the register of the land office at Brownville, Neb., whereby it appears that pursuant to the act of Congress, approved the 20th day of May, A. D., 1862, to secure homesteads to actual settlers on the public domain and the acts supplemental thereto. The claim of Danial Freeman has been established and duly consummated in conformity to the law for the south half of the northeast quarter and the northeast quarter of the northeast quarter, and the northwest quarter of section twenty-six, in township four, north of range five, east in the district of lands formally subject to sale at Brownville (Beatrice, Nebr.), containing one hundred and sixty (160) acres, according to the official plat of the survey of said land returned to the general land office by the surveyor general.

"Now, know ye, that there is therefor granted by the United States, to the said Danial Freeman the tracts of land above described, to have and to hold the said tracts of land with the appurtenances therefor to the said Danial Freeman and his heirs and assigns forever.

"In testimony whereof, I, Ulysses S. Grant, President of the United States of America, have called these letters to be made patent, and the seal of the general land office to be hereunto affixed.

Given under my hand at the City of Washington, the first day of September, in the Year of Our Lord, One Thousand Eight Hundred and Sixty-Nine, and of the Independence of the United States the ninety-fourth.

U. S. GRANT, President.
I. BARRETT, Secretary.
I. W. Granger,
Recorder of the General Land Office.

"Recorded Volume 1, page 1. Filed for record at the office of the county clerk January 5th, A. D., 1870, at four o'clock p. m., and recorded in the deed record F, on page 114. Recorded January 4th, A. D., 1870."

The Homestead Act was approved on the 20th day of May, 1862, and effective January 1, 1863. In July, 1862, Mr. Freeman purchased a "squatter's right," which he held until the 31st of December following.

The right of a "squatter" consisted in his possession of the land by actual settlement thereon, and whatever improvement he had made; in this case the improvement being a log cabin, a log stable and a little breaking.

The government land office was located at Brownville, Nebraska, and on December 31, 1862, Mr. Freeman went to that place to make entry and file his application under the homestead law. At this time he had been regularly enlisted in the United States army, and was in Nebraska on special duty. He was under orders to report to headquarters the next day and was, therefore, in haste to file his application, for which purpose he had gone to Brownville.

At the hotel where Mr. Freeman was stopping, there was a ball, and upon invitation, he joined the party. During the evening's entertainment Mr. Freeman was introduced to a young man who was to be the clerk to the land office receiver. During an interview with this young man, he was informed that the next day, being New Year's Day, a legal holiday, the office would not be open for business. He then stated the urgency of his business, and represented the great accommodation it would be to him if he could file his application before leaving for the army, and upon this representation, the clerk sent for the register, and at midnight the office was opened and before 12 o'clock and 5 minutes, on the morning of January 1, 1863, Danial Freeman had made his filing upon the first homestead ever taken under the provisions of the "Homestead Act" and herewith is a verbatim copy of the the record, so far as it relates to the homestead in question.

Hard work was one of Mr. Freeman's best assets, and as the years rolled by, his original holding was added to from time to time, until he was the owner of 1,400 acres of the finest land in Nebraska at the time of his death The Homestead Act, under which Mr. Freeman secured patent to his original quarter section of land, was approved May 29th, 1862, and the records of the general land office in Washington show that he purchased a "squatter's right" in July of that year and had his formal filing recorded under the new act, December 3d, of that same year.

The Freeman farm house is conceded to be one of the finest and best equipped in the country. Everything is modern and the latest appliances for cultivating and harvesting are to be found on the place. Mrs. Freeman is remarkably active for a woman of her years. She takes the keenest delight in living on the old place, despite the entreaties of her children to move to Beatrice and take life easy for the remainder of her days. Mrs. Freeman's married life was exceedingly happy, and her union was blessed with six sons and two daughters, of whom seven are still living in Beatrice or in the vicinity of the old homestead.

It is not many years ago that the fame of the Freeman homestead spread over the country because of its unique place in the records of the general land office, and the substantial character of the buildings. The farm house is a regular mansion, and would compare favorably with many of the residences of wealthy magnates in some of the largest cities of the country. This fact and the interesting history of the homestead, led Mrs. John A. Logan to place a painting of the mansion and buildings in her historical collections of antiquities and relics. The picture was executed by Mrs. C. C. Strachn of Lincoln, and portrays rural comfort and agricultural prosperity that has no counterepart in this or any other country.

The Freeman children, in the order of their birth, are: Elizabeth, Mrs. E. W. Carre; Samuel G. Freeman, Ellis, Nebr.; James H. Freeman, Beatrice, Nebr.; John Freeman, Beatrice, Nebr., R. F. D. No. 1; George F. Freeman, Beatrice, Nebr., R. F. D. No. 1; Le Claire Freeman, Beatrice, R. F. D. No. 1, and Agnes, Mrs. Clifford Quackenbush, Beatrice, Nebr. All are highly esteemed and popular and take an active part in the civic and social life of the community.

NUMEROUS ADVANTAGES OF GOOD COUNTRY ROADS

Let us get away from the forty-horsepower touring car for a brief space, climb on the spring seat of the farm wagon, and take a survey of the road situation from that angle, forgetting for the time being the automobile has ever ventured on the country road. We can then study the situation from the farmer's viewpoint; that is, the roads not an automobile thoroughfare, but as highways that stretch from the farmer's gate to the market, and from the market to his home; for, however we approach the problem, we must admit that the greatest function of the roads is to carry the surplus products of the farm to the market, and those things from the market which the farm must have. The plain, practical, dollar-and-cents question, then, is whether the farmers can afford to keep their money in their jeans and have bad roads, or whether it would be better to let go more freely and have good roads. In other words, will the dollar given by the farmer in road taxes ever come back to him? There is evidently an honest conviction among many farmers that such a dollar is gone forever, else there would not exist the miserable roads that are easily found throughout the state during the winter months.

The hauling of farm products is expensive; the cost depends directly on three factors—the surface of the road, the grade and the length. The last refers not only to the number of miles, but to the time required. If the roads are improved so that a load can be taken to town in half the time it formerly could, the change is equivalent to a shortening of the distance by half, says a writer in the Farmers' Guide. This means that the farm has been brought nearer the market, with the inevitable result that the price of the land is increased usually much more than enough to offset the money actually paid out by the owner for the improvement. While the increase in the price of farm lands may be considered as an indirect result of road improvement, it is nevertheless a very dependable one.

The worst grade on any road limits the load that can be hauled over the entire road. The following illustrates this point: A horse pulling 2,000 pounds along the level road could, by exerting the same force, pull but 1,000 pounds on a 5 per cent grade and 750 pounds on a 10 per cent grade. Regardless of how well the road may be built, then, the load over the entire road is limited, where such grades exist. The better the road, too, the more telling is the effect on the grade. Thus, a force that will pull 2,000 pounds on a dirt road and 5,000 pounds on a macadam road, will put only 960 pounds on the macadam road on a 10 per cent grade; hence the advantage of the improved road over the dirt road is cut down from over twice as great on the level, to very slightly more, on the grade. Steep grades are usually unnecessary. There is nearly always a way around the hill that would reduce greatly the grade and yet not lengthen the road any appreciable amount. The iron-bound custom of following section and farm lines often defeats this plan of going around a hill, and the road is built straight over instead.

However, poor road surfaces are probably the leading cause for the increase in cost of hauling. This condition varies with the season. All roads are solid at some time during the year, but when markets are highest, and when farmers want to use the roads the most, they are usually unfit to haul over. It has been calculated that a horse can haul 250 pounds over muddy roads, 1,500 pounds on dry dirt roads, 1,250 pounds on gravel roads in bad condition, 3,300 pounds on the same road in good condition, and 6,500 pounds on brick roads. It is quite clear, from these figures, that crops from a farm on an improved road might be quite profitable which, if they were hauled over a muddy road, would be marketed at financial loss. The actual average cost for hauling ten miles in this country is 22.7 cents, hence we cannot escape the conviction that poor roads cause an enormous economic waste.

Four years ago, a farmer in Kansas had to haul barb wire for a distance of twenty-three miles. His team could haul only 500 pounds per load, and it required three days to make the trips, costing him $36 to haul a ton. The road was later improved. Now a trip can be made in one day and a ton load can easily be hauled; a saving of $30 per ton was thus effected. Before the road was improved, a two-horse team could not pull over 2,500 pounds. Now the merchants can haul thirty sacks of fertilizer weighing 200 pounds each, and make two trips per day, instead of one; they haul eighty bushels of coal, where formerly only thirty-five were hauled.

The extent to which a county may go in improving their roads must be based on a traffic census of the county —that is, a more or less accurate determination of the chief crops to haul, the length of haul, the cost of teams, the number of miles railroad, etc. With this data, it is possible to make a conservative estimate of the reduction in the cost of hauling that will result from road improvement. For example, if the cost of hauling can be reduced 10c per ton a mile, and the average yield of wheat is fifteen bushels, a saving of 22.5 cents per acre is made on the wheat alone. This equals 4 per cent on $900, and such a community would be safe in borrowing money at the rate of $2,000 per mile to improve the roads.

But there is much more than mere cost of haulage to be charged to bad roads. The farmer on an unimproved road must sell his products, not when the markets are high, but when he can get them over the road. Thus he almost invariably misses the high prices which come while the roads are impassable. An illustration is given of a farmer on a muddy road who had a hundred bushels of potatoes to market; but he could not get them to town, so they rotted in the cellar. In the meantime, potatoes were worth $1.40 per bushel at town, and many carloads of farm products were shipped into this community, not only to supply the town, but the surrounding county as well, and this is an agricultural section.

We have so far considered but one item in the advantages that come with improved roads, by assuming that they are highways for transporting farm freights only, the most important function of economical transportation is undoubtedly the roads, although the attention given it would lead one to consider it as entirely secondary to "passenger" traffic. Since the two are so closely related, however, they must necessarily suffer or prosper together, as the roads are bad or good. It is a rather significant fact, which speaks eloquently for the continuation of the road improvement movement, that when once a farmer gets an improved road by his place, he immediately becomes an ardent advocate of good roads, regardless of his financial condition, or the stubbornness with which he fought the movement. We have never yet found a community that was hampered by its supply of good solid roads, and we have never heard the residents of a community grumbling because the highways in front of their doors are high and dry through the spring months. But, on the other hand, we have seen communities that have literally been pushed to one side by the rapid current of progress, not because their lands were poor or unproductive, or because the people are less intelligent, but simply because they are shut in, outdistanced on account of their miserable roads. No wonder farmers want to get out of such mud and plant their feet on solid roads, and they are doing it everywhere. But did it ever occur to them that, in most cases, they can improve their own roads cheaper than they can buy a front on an improved road? The good road is not thrown in for good measure when a farm is bought along it, for the price of the land is deftly raised until the advantages offered by the road are paid for in a good round price. According to an old saying, "There is more than one way to kill a dog," etc., and there is more than one way to meet this road question; one can move to a good road, he can settle down to live a life in the mud, or he can move to town and pay monstrous rates for paved streets and sidewalks, but there is only one way to meet the question squarely and settle it for all time, and that is to improve the roads. Such a movement invariably means more money, more pleasure, and more progress.

SHOULD WOMEN RECEIVE MORE PAY?

Should women receive the same wages as men for the same kind of work? The impulsive person will answer, "Yes; for the employer is paying for the work, and not for the person who does it. The work has the same value, whether done by a woman or a man; therefore, for the same work, the wages should be the same." That sounds only just, doesn't it? And yet deep enough thought will show that right in that statement lies one of the greatest fallacies of present-day civilization. In a book we read such a statement as that, and we agree to it—we think it is justice. And then we turn to the next page, and we read the old saw, "Circumstances alter cases," and, consistently enough, we believe that, too, side by side as they are placed, we do not see the incongruity. Yet the fallacy is not one merely of the wages of men and women; it is a fallacy of principle. To illustrate:

John Jones owes you $200.00. Sam Smith owes you $5.00. You think one should pay just as promptly as the other, possibly Smith a little sooner, for the amount is smaller. The principle, you say, is just the same, they are both under obligation to you. It would be the same principle, you say, if a man owed you 5 cents. It would be a matter of business to ask him for that just as often and insistently as if it were a larger amount. Think deeply, now, and see how wrong you are. Have you thought of the circumstances? Wouldn't you be more insistent if you needed the money, than if you had millions? Certainly. If you knew Jones was honest, even if he did owe you $200.00, would you hound him as much as Smith, if you knew the latter was dishonest? If Jones' wife was at the point of death, and he owed a big doctor bill, wouldn't you be easier on him than on Smith, if fortune was smiling on the latter? Sure, you would. Well, now, is the principle the same? Smith might say to you: "Why don't you go to Jones? He owes you more than I do." "But Jones' wife is ill," you would say. And by those words you would show that, unknown to yourself, perhaps, you somehow knew that principles, uninfluenced by reason or the heart, are not principles at all.

A set of iron-bound rules is a dangerous thing. Moralists now agree that it would be an absolute impossibility to devise a set of rules by which people should live. Instead of ten commandments, the number would stretch to infinity. No matter how moral a person may be, the time comes when he or she must deviate from some rule. Say, for instance, a man steals a loaf of bread to keep alive his starving child. There he violated the commandment, "Thou shalt not steal." But if he hadn't stolen, the child would have died, and he virtually conniving in the death, would have violated the commandment, "Thou shalt not kill." It was the circumstances that made the difference, and a rule cannot be made for every circumstance, for they are infinite. Machines can be run by mathematical rules, but human beings cannot.

The belief that the same rule is applicable to everybody is presupposing that everybody is governed by the same circumstances—an obvious fallacy.

And thus it is with the above-mentioned question, the wages of men and women. The belief that the same wages should be paid to women and to men for the same kind of work is presupposing that men and women are governed by the same circumstances—which is also a fallacy. If those women who are agitating women's rights want justice, let them carry the question farther than the polls —let them voluntarily place themselves in the same circumstances as man, and then they will be entitled to the same rights. Let the woman who wants the same salary as the man who does the same kind of work, take onto her hands a family to support, just as that man has. For if she is to have equal privileges, isn't it right that she should accept equal responsibilities? Surely, that is true justice. Is it just that women should take away wage earning positions from men, and that upon men should still devolve the duty of supporting the family.

Miss Edna Whitney, county superintendent of public instruction in Doniphan County, and one of the most prominent educators in the northern part of Kansas, is of the opinion, however, that the wages of women teachers in Doniphan County, with almost no exceptions, should be just as much as those of men for the same work.

The Up-to-Date Farmer

Bill Turner was a farmer and labored all his life. He didn't have no schoolin', and neither did his wife, but Bill was built for business and made the wheels go round, and left a healthy fortune when they put him under the ground. He was always taking chances; paid a hundred dollars for a bull. His neighbors called him crazy, but he left a stable full of cows that broke the record making butter, and Bill had his picture printed in the Squeedunk Weekly Sun. He had new-fangled ideas on makin' farmin' pay; he even bought a fool machine to help him load his hay. The neighbors fairly snorted when they saw the bloomin' thing; said Bill would never get it to work. It wasn't worth a ding! Bill didn't say a single word, and didn't care a darn, 'bout what they said, for slick as grease his hay went in the barn an hour before a thunder storm came sailing out that way, and caught his neighbors in a pinch and spoiled their new-mown hay. Bill's neighbors put their milk in cans, an' set 'em in a tank; Bill skimmed his milk with a machine, and turned it with a crank. Smith chops his firewood with an ax; Bill used some gasoline and sawed a hundred cords a day with another blamed machine. Today Bill's wife rides in a car and dresses up in silks; Smith's wife rides in a wagon and keeps on skimming milk.—Sam Saxon in Up-to-Date Farming.

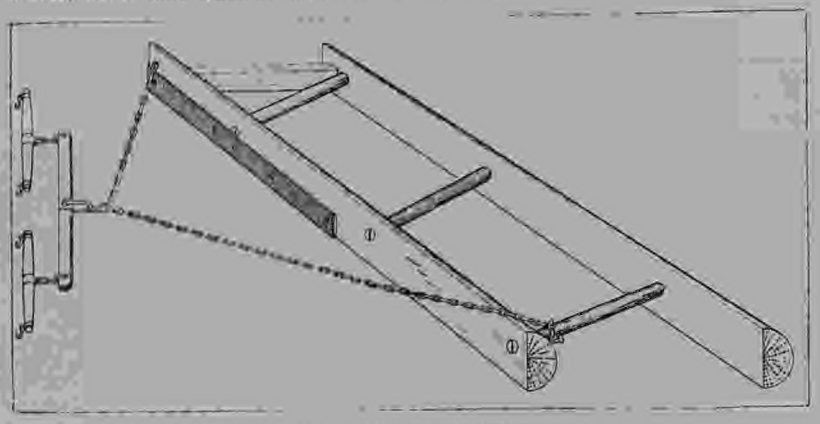
Highways are what we make them. A county road, like any other piece of human work, is bad or tolerably fair, good or excellent, or splendid, just in proportion to the amount of sense and ingenuity that has been put into its construction.

The reason why our country roads are bad is because they have not had a sufficiently important place in the public mind; they are sloven imitations of bad models, chums to custom and strangers to sense. They have lost different states thousands of dollars, and very few hours of thought, and the money expended along these lines has turned into mud.

No nation or country can reach its best development without even justice to every citizen; without dealing favors to the merchant and the farmers in the same measure. Thousands of dollars of public money have been spent building bridges, dredging canals, erecting wharves and boosting the building of railroads; all of these schemes have enriched the merchant, the manufacturer and the railroad proprietors, and have made town and city live in comfort and convenience. Most of the money has been spent in a sensible way; it has paid for systematic, well-done, permanent work, and it has paid cost and profit to its makers over again; but at the border line of most every city and town these improvements have stopped, the boundary of nearly every farm has been a forbidden threshold. We have known little and thought less about the making of our wagon roads, and our chain of public improvements is one link short.

In a great many instances the money that has been spent each year on our country roads is not used to advantage. It is spent by a system that squanders labor, wastes money and brings no permanent results; thereby rendering traffic between farm and market both costly and uncertain. With years of experience we are paralyzed by the presence of a simple mixture of dirt and water. Let us admit that our country roads are about as bad as country roads can possibly be, that they are frost laden and wet in winter, soft and soggy in the spring and fall, dry and dusty in summer, and rough the year around. These roads are all out of doors, all in plain sight, everybody knows they are bad; let us be honest with ourselves and confess the fact; let us admit that these bad roads keep us away from town and from each other; that we can't get to market when prices are good, that we are hauling scant loads, racking our wagons, killing our horses and rasping our tempers; that they increase our solitude, keep our children from school, and send our young men to the cities with a solemn oath upon their lips that they will never more till the soil. Let us admit that these miserable streaks of rooted soil interfere with our liberties, our citizenship, and that a general down-pour three or four days before election will make a mud blockade all over the country and rob a great many farmers of their votes; that many a state government has been changed by a change in the weather, and that many a public want has been lifted into place by a lingering equinox. All that we know—let us admit it. Everebody but the farmer measures distance by time and cost. The man who lives in the city rides ten miles from home to business in thirty minutes at a cost of half a dime. A few years have changed that city from a howling wilderness to a hustling metropolis. It began with a one-story house and a dirt road, then brick houses and sidewalks, and then more people and more houses; the dirt roads gave way to cobblestone pavement and the cobblestone pavement to granite blocks, and in many instances, the blocks to asphalt. The people traveled first on foot, then in stages, then in horse cars, and now in electric cable cars and elevated railroads; their heads and hands have worked together—they have thought. From year to year the cities have demanded swifter means of travel and transportation; better, surer and quicker methods of doing business. It is all a matter of speed, convenience and facility, and all these things mean the same thing—economy.



King split log road drag

Everybody that has given this road question any thought can readily see that there is just as much philosophy in the argument for better roads, as there is good sense in urging every improvement that brings closer together two men that have business with each other.

Every thought begins with a fact. There are important facts to think about in considering the road question. How do these facts affect the public? Business? The general prosperity of the country? Here is the farmer's end of it. Think of waiting for the mud to dry up. Think of the horses and mules standing idle in the stable. Think of the loss of time and labor, the dwarfed and shrunken values of the farm. Think of the slack supply and good prices when the roads are impassable. Think of the procession of farmers that rush to town and glut markets in the first days of dry weather, and think of the paltry prices they get when everybody is trying to sell to an over-stocked merchant. Many of us do not know that bad roads are responsible for so many of our woes, because we have not thought.

Some of our farmers are content and patient with these roads because they do not know the value of a good one. A good road is a splendid investment. There never was a good road made in any civilized country on earth that did not pay 100 per cent a year on its cost. It raises the value of every acre, invites to market when prices are good, shortens distance, saves time, wagons, horse flesh, harness, increases the load and lessens the burden, and makes it possible to haul two tons to market with the same power that leaves one ton stuck in the mud. It brings us closer together, drives out gloom, makes neighbors of hermits, discounts every farm mortgage and brings joy and contentment to every community.

The most powerful and most expensive form of tyranny is the tyranny of custom. Men do more things from custom than from reason. If we are taxing ourselves and dwarfing our growth by a senseless custom, let us get rid of it. Let us revise those bad laws that were copied hundreds of years ago from the moth-eaten and now discarded statutes of the old world. Let us remember that all riches come from the ground; that the food we eat and the clothes we wear are the products of the soil; that agriculture is the greatest source of wealth, and that no nation ever became great whose farmers were not great, and remembering these things, let us be sensible, thoughtful men and direct our energies to the work of bringing the city and the country a little nearer together, with magnificent roads that will make neighbors of all the people and will stand in the future as mute monuments of our handiwork.

There are just three principles underlying this whole question of earth road working. The first is drainage, the second drainage and the third is drainage. The most of the roads show a variety of ailments, but the chief trouble in each case is a lack of drainage. Miles of almost impassable roads can be found for weeks at a time throughout the different states; drainage is the fundamental necessity. There can be no good roads without it. In many instances, owing to the particular kind of soil, under drains should be employed, as they are not very expensive; on the contrary, they are cheap and easly placed and, if placed in a substantial way and according to the rules of common sense, they will last for ages. The side ditches catch the surface water only. When the surface of the roadway becomes rough and rutty by the passing of wagons, the ruts and low places hold the water and prevent its passage into the side ditches, and although these ditches carry most of the water which falls, there is often enough left in the roadway to create much harm. In the spring of the year the frozen ground prevents the water from passing downward into the soil, and it remains to form mud on the surface. Here and there along nearly every country road, we find a small stream, and where the stream is not so large as to demand the construction of a bridge or a culvert, a small cross drain can be used to conduct the water across the road. It is never advisable to carry water along a roadway further than an outlet can be secured, but this drain should be substantially made, so as to be solid and permanent, for the caving in or washing out of a badly constructed drain has caused great inconvenience and brought disaster to travelers who have staked their faith on incompetent road overseers.

In building new roads with a road grader, first mark out the ditches the full width by plowing a light furrow with the point of the blade, carrying the rear of the blade well elevated.

On the second round, drive the wheels in line with the point along the hollow made the first round, plowing a full furrow with the advance end of the blade, and dropping the rear end somewhat lower than before. The third time move over toward the middle of the road the earth previously plowed. Then return to the ditch and plow it deeper, moving the earth toward the middle whenever as much earth is plowed as the machine can move at once. Repeat this process until the ditches are the proper depth and the road is as full and round as required, then surface off, as would be the case in repairing. There is hardly a month of the year when the road machine or drag cannot be used to an advantage on the road, but the spring months are the best to do different work, because the soil is loose and roots, grass and weeds do not interfere, and it leaves a more settled and compact roadway for the entire year. Each year before the ground becomes too hard, the road should be gone over thoroughly with the road grader, the ditches cleaned out so that the water can have a free outlet, ruts filled, elevations in the roads and shoulders on the sides of the road planed off, the grade improved, and the road put in good condition generally. In repairing a road previously constructed, commence at the side ditch and work toward the center, scraping lightly with the entire length of the blade, until the last round in the middle of the road, when the rear end of the blade should be raised high enough to allow the earth to distribute under it. To make the blade penetrate very hard ground it may be best to use the point, only elevating the rear considerably.

The best finish can be obtained on sod ground or new right of way by first cutting the sod as thinly as possible, then placing it in the middle of the road, where it can be harrowed or disked, then finally going back to the ditch and bringing up clear earth and leveling over it. Until the last few years we have had no means and have known no way of building or working our country roads, except the old, shiftless, slipshod method of tinkering, to which the farmers have contributed their half-hearted labor and have mauled and plowed and hoed and scraped and pawed the earth into all sorts of senseless shapes by way of settlement of the road tax. In the light of modern inventions this excuse no longer exists, and we now have a means of carrying off the dirt from ditches to the crown of the road and distributing it in a smooth and uniform manner, so that the water may be carried from the center of the roadway into the ditches and the wagon tracks may be kept conparatively dry. The surface of the road should be smooth, for smoothness means easy hauling; the surface should be hard, for hardness prevents the formation of ruts, and the sinking of wheels into the surface; beside, a hard road will shed water quickly, and if water is quickly carried off, the roadway will be kept dry and the formation of mud. holes avoided. A plow should not be used in working an earth road, except when actually necessary, because a plowed surface is difficult to make smooth and hard, and the plow is apt to cut too deep into the earth. The difference between the results obtained by use of the road machine and by the use of the old-fashioned plow and shovel method is clearly defined. A road machine of recognized merit will plow an even ditch of uniform depth and will plow where an ordinary plow will not enter the soil; besides, as stated before, it will distribute the earth unevenly and leave the road smooth without any of those little bumps and holes which characterizes a road made or repaired in the old-fashioned manner. These holes and bumps, small at first, will wear larger and soon develop into good-sized ruts or mud holes, making the road very unpleasant to travel over.

No matter how well a road has been made, unless properly maintained, travel, rain and frost all combine to destroy it. One of the most agreeable things in the use of modern machinery on roads is the fact that each time it is used, the work becomes easier, better done and more satisfactory, costs less, and is much better in appearance. If used frequently and properly, the roadway will have a more attractive look, travel made easier, and the cost of maintenance less. The saving in the expense of making and keeping in repair earth roads by improved methods will enable the people to gradually build permanent roads without increasing the taxes they are accustomed to pay, and when this is once demonstrated, the public will be very willing to apply its funds to the best advantage.

The benefits they receive from good earth roads will lead them earlier to adopt plans for securing hard and permanent ones.

The cross section of the wagon way should be made with a substantial rise from each side of the road to the center, and the amount of fall from the crown of the road to the bottom of the ditch must depend on the nature of the soil and the width of the roadways. If the soil will settle and pack quickly, allowance must be made for this, and the crown of the road should be higher. It should always be higher in earth roads than in macadam, because the drainage of a dirt surface is more sluggish and the steeper cross section is needed to quicken the flow of water into the side ditches. In some cases a slope of one inch to one foot from the center to side is too much, in most cases it is not enough. The best method to be employed in ascertaining the proper cross section of any soil or of the different soils, is by observations. On inspecting any roadway there is always found to be different slopes formed by nature. In such cases the road surface is found to be compact; at some places in the road little ravines will be found, due to the passage of water to side on too steep a slope; other parts will show a compact, smooth surface from center to gutter, which would be the proper cross section for that particular soil. There can be no standard cross section which would be applicable to all soils. The lack of drainage, combined with frost, causes nine-tenths of the difficulties of travel during the time of sudden and continued thaws. No way has been found of getting entirely rid of the mud, but nearly every road can be so constructed as to render it dry ten months of the year.

Few people understand what a great amount of water is held by the different kinds of soil. It has been found by actual experiment that a cubic foot of sand will retain from twenty-seven to thirty-two pounds of water, stiff clay, forty-five pounds, and soil formed of decomposed vegetable matter is more than one and eight-tenths the weight of the same earth in a practically dry condition, while the weight of water in a cubic foot of loamy clay is about one-half the weight of the entire cube. In most soils this water evaporates very slowly and we cannot prevent the formation of mud except by drainage.

The proper width of road to construct depends entirely on how much the road is used, and the nature of the traffic. In all cases the traveled part of the road should be of uniform width, and the two sides should be paralleled, if possible. In some cases a width of twenty-six to thirty-two feet is used where much travel has to be provided for. Ordinarily twenty to twenty-six feet should be ample. Observations show that even on macadam construction of different widths that only a few feet are used. The same holds good on earth road construction. As a general rule, the traffc usually follows the first outline formed, be it crooked or straight. In most parts of the different states when the width of the highway between fences has been fixed at forty feet or more, the tendency of the road maker is to construct a wide road, but unless special reasons exist in certain localities, it is a waste of time and labor to construct this extra width, and perpetual expense to keep in repair.

The proper grade to establish on a road depends on how much the road is to be improved. The difference between a good grade and a bad one is largely the difference between walking and climbing or between drawing a load or lifting it. The better the road surface is, the better the grade should be, because the force of gravity or down-hill pull or a steep grade is harder to overcome on a smooth, hard surface than on a soft one. On an ordinary earth road in fair condition, it takes two horses to haul up a grade of 9 or 10 per cent the same load that one horse can haul on a level, while on a good macadam road the same force that will haul a load on a level surface is only about one-fourth the force required to haul the same load up the nine-foot grade. This statement should not be distorted into an argument against the macadam road, for we must remember that a horse can generally haul three times the load on a good macadam road that he can haul on the best earth road that can be made. Nothing should be done by way of grades for earth roads construction except permanent work. The fact remains that you have fully 50 per cent of the cost toward macadam construction by so doing.

Rolling the road is a very important feature. Every road is made smoother and harder by rolling.

We have all noticed that the hardest and smoothest parts of a country road are the narrowest where the wagon wheels have gone over it and acted as rollers. A wagon wheel is not always a very satisfactory roller for the reason that the wheels sink into the surface and form ruts and cut, mangle and mix the earth out of all reason and destroy the good qualities of the roadway. If all wagons had wide tires they would keep the road in better condition the whole year round.

Steam and motor rollers are becoming more generally used from year to year, and can be used to great advantage in consolidating the earth roads. They are more effective in their work, and if kept busy, are not very expensive to operate. Rolling should follow closely the work of the road grader and leveler, so as to compact all the loose earth which the action of the grader has laid in the line of the roadway. The roller should pass many times over the surface portions of the road and when the earth is very dry and hard, and not inclined to pack, if slightly moistened, will hasten the action of the effect of the roller.

Doniphan County Tragedies

From the Earliest Settlement of the County Up to Recent Years, Doniphan Has Had Her Full Quota of Crimes and the Regrettable Part of the Matter Is That a Number of the Most Blood-thirsty Criminals Went Unpunished.

Border Ruffianism and Jayhawkery Led to Many Tragedies—Conditions are Improved Now as the Criminal Element Has Been Punished or Has Gone to Other Fields—Of Course None of the Old Hands at the Game Bother Any More.

There are numerous horrifying details to be recorded in the history of criminality in Doniphan County. The period covering the early settlement of the county was marked by many bloody deeds, and it frequently happened that all anybody had to do in order to square up a grudge was to go out and kill his enemy.

The wave of crime which swept over Doniphan can be traced principally to the unsettled conditions which prevailed in the '50's and '60's. It is a matter of history that the slavery question was at the bottom of many bloody killings and other outrages and with such a spirit rampant it can scarcely be wondered at that many vengeful men embraced the situation to even up private scores.

While the free state and pro-slavery excitement was at its high water mark, it should not be forgotten that persons who pursued the pastime of horse stealing were summarily hung or shot whenever caught. Sometimes a slavery adherent required the use of a steed to fly the country in order to escape the wrath of the free state men, and if he was unfortunate enough to get caught, the penalty for horse stealing was inflicted regardless of what might be coming to him as a pro-slavery man.

The border ruffians were another murderous gang that left a bloody scar on the fair face of Doniphan County, which took a generation to eradicate. Those human hyenas had the instincts of the most abhorrent criminals, and no deed was too bloody or too revolting for them to commit. When their cowardly natures betrayed fear, they resorted to the safer method of assassinating from ambush so as to protect their own miserable hides.

Likewise the history of crime in Doniphan County would not be complete without a passing reference to that aggregation of Apaches who styled themselves the Jayhawkers. For advanced work in the criminal line they ran their delightful brethren, at border ruffians, a close race for first honors. They were responsible for many bloodthirsty deeds, but whenever caught the perpetrators were meted out speedy justice.

Thanks to the onward march of civilization, the bloody work of the criminal element was at last put to a stop, although it took lives, nerve and time to accomplish it. The ruffians and the Jayhawkers were either rounded up and killed off or chased away. Of course, there were sporadic cases of private killings—such as where a man might get angry at his wife, or a man might have a little grudge against his neighbor because of a trade or land difficulty—and the disgraceful part of that condition was that the perpetrators invariably got free through the twists in the state law as it was administered and executed those days.

How Apples Are Packed

Extreme Care Should Be Practiced in Properly Sorting and Packing the Apples — Barrels Should be Shaken at Least Four Times and Fruit Fitted In, But Not Crowded—Apples Packed in Boxes Have a Thirty-five Per Cent Higher Market Value Than Those Packed in Barrels— Should Be Accurately Graded in Order to Net the Best Returns to the Grower— Ill-shaped Apples Should Be Shipped in Bulk.

Next to getting a productive apple crop the most important feature of the industry is the manner in which the apples are packed for transportation, and likewise for exportation. For it must not be forgotten that quite a large quantity of the high grade Doniphan County apples are shipped across the sea for consumption in foreign countries.

The packing of apples is a most delicate and conscientious operation which should be performed only by skillful and painstaking hands. In such a busy time as the apple harvest signifies the orchard man cannot be everywhere supervising the details of the work. Consequently, much of the executive part of the packing is placed in the hands of the table boss. This individual should see that the greatest possible care is exercised by the pickers in pouring the apples on well-padded tables.

The table boss in apple harvest time is a responsible person and by not properly attending to his duties might do untold injury to the grower. The wages paid the boss are usually good and range about three dollars a day. The headers receive about the same amount. A great deal of responsibility for the reputation of the orchard and the owner rests with the boss and the header. If they are negligent or careless they can dissipate the profits of the harvest.

It has been the great trouble with packers in recent years that they insist on putting too many grades in the same barrel. Commission men and fruit dealers all over the country are aware that when apples are not properly sorted the value of their shipments is materially decreased. They do not forget to make the orchard owner come forward with an explanation which sometimes is liable to prove unprofitable to him.

Apples should be packed in three different grades. These are known to growers and dealers as Extra Fancy, Fancy and Choice. The Extra Fancy are considered the top-notchers of the harvest, and should comprise nothing but the most alluring kind of red apples without a blemish or a bruise. The Fancy grade should be well colored, smaller in size, and absolutely free from all imperfections. The Choice apples should be sound in every respect, uncolored, perfectly shaped and measuring not less than two and one-half inches in diameter. All other apples not coming up to this standard in either grade and less than half colored, should be shipped in bulk.

In packing apples the barrels should be shaken at least four times and the apples should be fitted in, instead of crowded. All that is necessary is to have them packed sufficiently tight to prevent them from being shaken up in transit. The latest and most profitable way in which to pack apples is in boxes. That system has been in vogue in the North Yakima Valley for some time and the apple men out there have found it works to a considerable financial advantage. Apples packed in boxes bring an average of thirty-five per cent more on the market than do those packed in barrels. Many of the more extensive Doniphan County growers are considering the advisability of doing away with the barrel plan and using boxes altogether, and is not impossible that the box system will be installed exclusively before many more harvest seasons have come and gone.

Years ago the fruit industry of the United States was in its infancy, neither the consumer nor the merchant knew anything about the locality where the best products could be grown. It was only the extensive advertising of fruit having the most delicious flavor that caused the general public to become familiar with the districts where the most delectable varieties were raised.

This is especially the case with Doniphan County, Kansas, which is famous as being not only the leading fruit center of the Sunflower State, but of the different states which comprise the Northwest and the Middle West. Every conceivable variety of luscious fruit, including strawberries, gooseberries, blackberries, currants, grapes, plums, peaches, pears and apples, are produced in the highest state of perfection in the eastern half of Doniphan County.

It was many years ago, when three of the early Kansas pioneers, Bony Wood, Albert Perry and R. H. Montgomery, demonstrated their faith in the ultimate success of the fruit industry in this part of the state by investing everything they possessed in improving the varieties and cultivating their crops under discouraging conditions. That their foresight was keen and their judgment correct is exemplified by the marvelous yields that have been annually adding to Doniphan County's fame during the last decade.

When the fruit-growing industry was first planted in Doniphan County the pioneers in the business were up against a tough proposition. Times were hard, money was scarce and the outlook for profitable returns was extremely dismal. There was no such thing as 6 per cent money those days, but the pioneers in the industry were men endowed with sufficient tenacity stick it out and patiently wait for the fruits of their labor to materialize.

It was the general custom at the time for the men starting in the fruit industry to invest every penny they could lay hands on in buying trees with the hope that some day they would bear fruit in abundance. Invariably rows of corn were planted in the orchards, but the yield from this source was very little, as the corn could not be cultivated too close to the fruit trees. However, small as it was, it helped sustain the fruit-raiser until his trees came in bearing.

Land in the great Doniphan County fruit belt could be bought for from $1 to $5 an acre those days, and this same land will now bring on the open market from $100 to $500 an acre, providing anybody felt inclined to part with his holdings. Before fruit-growing was started, this same land was clothed with a garb of blooming sumach and rich orchards now flourish where wild turkeys fed and wolves roamed on the hills overlooking the Missouri River in Doniphan County. It was a common occurrence for a man to go out early any morning and bag a half dozen wild turkeys before breakfast. All the way from Rulo, Neb., to Atchison, Kan., the bluffs jutting along the river were covered with blackjacks and burr oaks, but the traveler passing along that way now will view a succession of the finest orchards that ever produced delicious fruit.

How W. E. Boschen packs his apples

Berries constitute the most profitable portion of Doniphan County's fruit output. There are very few acres devoted to berry-raising now that would not bring at least from $200 to $500 an acre. The phenomenal success of the fruit-growing industry in the eastern portion of Doniphan County is exemplified by the fact that a ten-acre berry farm is considered as productive as eighty acres of land devoted to agricultural purposes. Although this agricultural land is valued at from $100 to $300 an acre, and selling at that figure, farming is looked upon as a diversion and fruit-raising as a business in which to become wealthy in short order.

The fruit industry of Doniphan County is so regulated that there is a rotation of crops commencing with strawberries in May to the final wind-up with apples about the beginning of November. Grapes, currants and many varieties of berries come in between. The total value of a season's yield of fruit in Doniphan County is conservatively estimated at not less than $1,000,000, but the returns invariably exceed that figure. So it is hardly to be wondered at that more attention is given to fruit-raising than to the cultivation of cereals and other farm products.

Berry picking time is one of the season's great events in the Doniphan fruit belt. The strawberries come in about the middle of May and from that time until early in August hundreds of families and single adults flock from St. Joseph, Mo., to the berry fields adjacent to the towns of Troy, Blair and Wathena. The work is profitable to the pickers, as the farmers pay from 32 to 35 cents a crate for gathering the crop. It is not an uncommon thing for entire families to move their household effects to the berry fields and live there in tents until the wind-up of the season. Occasionally a family of ten or a dozen persons will be found in a huge tent. The children enjoy the outdoor life and work in the fields is regarded by them in the nature of a prolonged summer vacation, with the added satisfaction of earning from $2 to $3 a day for each member of the family all during the picking season.

The towns of Troy, Blair and Wathena have each organized a fruit-growers' association in order to more advantageously market the fruit crop of Doniphan County. The strictest business methods prevail, thus obviating any individual efforts on the part of the fruit-grower to dispose of his crop. All the farmer has to do is to haul his product to the headquarters of the association in town, where it is sold by the manager of the association at platform prices. By this term is meant that the highest prices offered by independent buyers will be met by the agent of the fruit-growers' association and later in the season, when the books have been balanced, the surplus is paid to the members of the association in the form of dividends.

The fruit is shipped to buyers in Denver, Cheyenne, Omaha, Kansas City, Minneapolis, Chicago, Sioux City and Des Moines. It has been the experience of the fruit-growers that commission merchants and packers in the above-named cities prefer to transact business with the association rather than with the individual grower, because of the belief that it is easier to obtain an adjustment of differences with a well-organized body than with an individual shipper. The association has been very successful in marketing the crop in the different cities and is sufficiently powerful to demand and receive the highest market prices.

Blackberries constitute the biggest portion of the Doniphan County berry output, and it is not considered unusual to ship twenty or more carloads each day during the season from all stations in Doniphan County. The express companies have made a practice of providing all the necessary shipping facilities for the fruit throughout the season. Cars are set out at all the shipping points in the district and immediately upon being loaded are hauled away to the different markets, where they are consigned.

The apple crop of Doniphan County is a great source of wealth to the orchard owners. The main varieties include Jonathans, Ben Davis, Black Twigs, Grimes Golden, York Imperial and Winesaps, with the Wealthy and some other varieties not so extensively raised. The Grimes Golden and the Jonathans are the early varieties being picked along about the middle of September, while the others come in later from about October 15 to about November 1. Last year's apple crop aggregated 1,500 carloads, with 160 barrels to the car. This enormous output at a minimum market price of $3 a barrel netted the fruit men a grand total of $720,000.

The apple growers of Doniphan County attribute the great output of their orchards to the use of the sprayer. Years ago there was no such thing as a spray used on apple trees, and many beautiful orchards were reduced to worthless tracts. Now, however, it is a well-known fact that an orchard of ten acres, if properly sprayed, will give a better yield of high-class apples than an orchard of forty acres where the use of the spray has been neglected.

In well conducted orchards the spray is used five or six times during the season. A liquid consisting of lime, sulphur and arsenate of lead is the compound invariably used for spraying, and it has been demonstrated to be the best yet discovered for that purpose. Ten years ago sprayers were unknown, and would have been regarded as a curiosity in Doniphan County. Now, however, all the orchard men are the proud owners of sprayers, and they feel justified in the investment as very few culls are found at picking time, because diligent spraying insures the extermination of the codling moth, San Jose scale and the curculio, which are the most destructive pests of the apple crop.

The efficacy of the sprayer has now become so generally recognized by the large apple buyers of the country that they refuse to visit a fruit belt where the sprayer is not used generally. The State Agricultural College, of Manhattan, Kan., took keen interest in the use of the sprayer some years ago, and sent an entomologist to the Doniphan apple fields to demonstrate its effectiveness. The forty-acre orchard of W. E. Boschen was experimented on, with the result that very few culls were found among the season's crop. Since then all the orchard men have installed sprayers with the most gratifying results at the end of each season.

While it is universally admitted that Doniphan County produces apples of a superior flavor to that of any other apple section in the country, not excepting the Western States, still the price per quantity received by Oregon, Washington and Colorado growers exceeds that of Doniphan County for this reason: The Doniphan County growers pack their apples in three-bushel barrels, while the Western people pack their product in bushel boxes in order to make a better superficial showing and command a higher price. Now, however, the Doniphan County apple men are consdering the advisability of packing their output in bushel boxes, which will insure them 25 cents a bushel more than they have been getting.

With the development of the fruit industry in Doniphan the towns in this section have prospered accordingly. The money received from the sale of fruit has swelled the deposits in the local banks and boomed the respective towns. This is especially the case with Troy, which has increased in population by about 500 during the last few years, and materially enhanced the value of farms adjacent to the town.

Picking the Apple Crop

A Great Deal Depends Upon the Care Exercised in Taking Fruit From Trees.

After the apple is carefully nurtured and full grown, the most important thing is the attention given in preparing it for market. In these days of spraying, pruning and tending orchards, like a pet child, the consumer no longer looks with favor upon discolored and bruised apples, and will not accept such at full market value. They can be sold as culls at a price that scarcely pays for picking them, or they can be sent to the cider mill; the natural conclusion is that more care must be given in picking the fruit so as not to damage its appearance or market value, and make for naught all the labor expended during the long, hot days before the fruit has ripened.

There is a vast difference between picking an apple from the tree and pulling it off with a bunch of spurs attached or minus the stem altogether. Each spur will eventually bear fruit if nature is not tampered with, and each one mutilated by a careless picker simply means to the orchard owner the loss of all the apples that might possibly be borne by that twig, not to mention that there is an open sore for the entrance of the various pests of the orchard. An apple with the stem removed will not grade first class with a discriminating sorter; consequently firm and specific instructions should be drilled into the pickers to remove only ripe fruit and that with extreme care.

A good way to test whether the fruit has reached the psychological stage to keep in good condition the longest and at the same time be prime for eating or cooking is to lift the apple in the hand, at the same time giving it a gentle twist: if it yields readily, it is ready to pick; however, if it resists it should be left for several days longer. This will necessitate two or as many as four pickings at intervals of three days apart. With certain kinds of slow-ripening apples it pays many fold to observe the foregoing suggestion. The undeveloped fruit thus has an opportunity to attain size and quality. Now to the busy orchardman with immense acreage to superintend, this, at first, appears as a waste of time and labor, but it is attention to little things that makes for perfection in the aggregate. If you feel inclined to doubt the wisdom of such a course, remember that some very wise farmers ridiculed spraying when it was first introduced; now, the fellow who won't clear his trees of scale, curculio and like pests several times a season with a good spraying solution, is not only considered behind the times, but a draw-back to the development of the fruit industry.

The color is an important factor to be considered. Well-colored apples picked when still firm are the best keepers. It usually holds true that fruit grown on sod is more highly colored and keeps longer than under clean culture. Pickers almost invariably test the ripeness of an apple by pressing with the thumb firmly to determine the mellowness. This habit should be strongly censured and condemned, as it prompts a bruise which ultimately constitutes rot and decay. On hard, firm varieties, such as Ben Davis and Winesap, the bruise is not immediately discernible, but the blemish is evident by the time the fruit reaches the consumer.

Pickers should not climb the trees under hardly any conditions, as such a performance cannot help but snag the bark and open a wound for the entrance of canker spores. "But," you say, "how can we get the fruit in the top of the trees?" If we shake it down, the fruit is crushed." The answer is best indicated by the old adage, "An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure." If the trees had been properly topped, they would not only be in better shape for the pickers, but would have been more convenient for spraying and widened at the top, letting the sun through to color the fruit evenly. Thus time and fruit would have been saved. Ladders should be provided for every purpose where it is necessary for a picker to leave the ground. Where an exceptionally large tree is encountered, and it is impossible to avoid climbing, soft shoes should be worn, such as tennis or gymnasium slippers. It is easier to pick apples from a ladder than by climbing the tree, and there is less danger of breaking a branch or dropping the container of fruit. Up to twelve-foot lengths, step-ladders with three legs are firm and substantial. Above that length, a straight ladder is better, as the other becomes wobbly. The straight ladder, tapering at one end, is very satisfactory, as the small end will sit easily in the crotch of a tree and can be run in among the branches with no trouble of catching on limbs. Of whatever kind, the ladder should be light and durable.

As to the container for the fruit as it is picked, it is a difficult matter to say definitely which is best, a bag or basket, as excellent reasons for either have been advanced by various orchardists. One very successful fruit-grower prefers buckets, as, in his opinion, a rub is as bad as a bruise. This man makes a specialty of firsts, or fancy goods, and he personally oversees the sorting. The apples are lifted, one by one, from one receptacle to another until they reach the packing box. Most all orchardists prefer the basket or bag, whichever is used, to be equipped with the releasing bottom, so that the fruit may be easily disposed of, instead of being dumped out of the top. A favorite argument against the picking bag is that it bumps against the ladder, causing injury to the fruit, but the most up-to-date patents show a bag with a shoulder strap and belt fastening close around the body, making it unnecessary to swing the bag from the body enough to rub against the ladder or tree. The market is full of inventions along this line, and the accompanying photograph shows one of the latest.

Another sack invented by James Seymour of Indiana, has proven a wonderful help in the Kingston apple orchard, located in Jackson County, Indiana, near Seymour. It is described as follows: An apple picking sack to be worked by the manager, James Jackson, is used altogether in the Kingston orchard. Its convenience over all above anything heretofore used for picking apples or fruit of any kind. A leather-bound No. 9 wire around the top of the sack is made to fit the body and at the same time holds the sack wide open to drop the apples in. Hoops and straps are fastened on each end and on each side of the center of the sack. Straps snapped in the top rings cross in the back and snap into the center rings. Snaps in the lower end corners are brought up and hooked into the upper or middle rings. It is first snapped into the upper ones until the apples crowd, when they are unsnapped and fastened into the center ones. When the apples again crowd, the sack contains a crate and the picker comes down, unsnaps and lets the apples roll out gently at the open end below. The use of this sack does not bruise the apple nor tire the picker, because of the straps being securely fastened to the body. Much time is saved and the pickers can pick much faster.

There are a number of devices for gathering fruit out of reach in the tops. Many are advertised, and all serve a good purpose, but it is fallacy to believe any device will get every apple that cannot be reached from the ground; but for the few out-of-reach apples left by the pickers, any device is useful.

After the fruit is picked, comes the business of assorting and packing. For purposes of good keeping, it is essential that apples should be cooled before going into storage. If apples are stored in barrels, they should not be allowed to stay too long out in the sun and become heated up, nor should picked apples be stored immediately if the weather is too warm. In both cases the fruit should be allowed to cool.

It is advisable to pack apples in bushel baskets rather than barrels. In barrels the fruit goes in warm and is surrounded by warm air. If the heat in the barrel reaches 75 to 80 Fahrenheit, the temperature in the center of that barrel will [illegible] days read to the temperature of the room. In such cases if the apple is covered with [illegible] that produces decay, [illegible] sold storage conditions. Apples should be handled as little as possible before and after packing and shipped at about the right, temperature.

Proper Care of Fruit Trees

Professor Dickens of State Agricultural College, Says Spray Should Be Carefully Prepared and Applied With Absolute Thoroughness—Trees Should Be Banded With Sticky Substance So as to Keep Off Canker Worms and Other Insects, as the Protection of Fruit From These Destructive Pests Is One of the Most Important Factors in Successful Apple Culture—Doniphan County Soil Needs Little Assistance to Nourish Apple Trees.

Spraying is one of the important orchard operations that are essential to the production of good fruit. We emphasize the word "one," because so much has been written upon spraying and the necessity thereof, that many orchardists have seemed to conclude that spraying was the great necessity, and seem to have forgotten that spraying is one of the last processes necessary for the production of high-class fruit. In the early years in Kansas, the orchardist produced the finest of fruit without spraying, just as the first crops of wheat had no chinch bugs and no Hessian flies, but with the increase in the acreage of fruit, the insects and fungi increased in proportion, and in recent years spraying has been absolutely necessary if success is expected.

After the orchard has been well grown, with care taken in its formation years, to produce the right form of tree, to secure the greatest possible amount of bearing wood, and this bearing wood so placed that all the fruit on all the branches will have a fair amount of sunlight and air, and a fair proportion of the food prepared by the tree, and after the soil has been so cared for as to insure the optimum amount of moisture and plant food, then the protection of the fruit from insects and disease is, perhaps, the most important factor in the success of the orchard. But unless the tree is well pruned, efficient spraying cannot be done. Unless the tree is well nourished, it cannot produce good fruit. But when nature has supplied, as she does in the hills of Doniphan County, a soil that is deep and strong and contains all the elements of food necessary for fruit production, and such a soil as allows the moisture to penetrate to a considerable depth and sufficiently porous so the roots readily penetrate it, then the orchardist has all the conditions in his favor.

There are insect enemies that spraying cannot control. The work of borers must be prevented in some other way, usually by guarding the trunk with a screen protector or painting the bark with some substance that repels the insect. For insects, such as the white grub, that lives in the ground and devours the roots of strawberry plants, other measures must be devised. Fall plowing must be resorted to, and particular care used in the fertilizers applied, in order to prevent such insects becoming so numerous as to cause considerable loss.

But, to the man with the orchard grown, who has trimmed it well and cared for it well, the question of preventing injury from insects and disease is of the utmost importance. In the last few years many of our orchardists have almost lived up to the scriptural injunction, "spray without ceasing," and there are neglected orchards that will require this eternal vigilance if they are ever to fulfill the purpose for which they were set.

The pioneer in Kansas spray work, Prof. E. A. Popenoe, was once asked at a farmers' institute, "Does spraying do any good?" In reply, in his keen, sharp way, he immediately turned upon his questioner and said, "Do pills do any good?"

"It depends upon the kind of pills and what is the matter with you." Professor Popenoe immediately rejoined, "It is just that way with sprays; it depends upon the kind of spray and what is the matter with your tree."

Most of our orchardists know what is the matter with their trees. The entomological commission has visited orchards in nearly every locality, and if an orchard has San Jose scale, the owner knows it. And it behooves him to get busy before the buds begin to swell, and give that tree a most thorough application of the lime-sulphur solution, home cooked, if he wants it, or the commercial, if he prefers to let some factory prepare the mixture. In this spray for scale, the great points to be considered are that the spray solution shall contain the correct amount of sulphur, and be applied with absolute thoroughness.

If the orchard was defoliated last spring by myriads of worms which, when disturbed, hung from the branches suspended by a thin thread of web, then he ought to know that canker worm is on the job, and that this devastation is likely to be repeated next year, with the numbers increased at least one hundred fold. The later defoliation is usually much worse than the earlier. Frequently the buds of fruit and leaf are devoured before they expand, in which case it behooves the orchardist to band the trees with some sticky substance in order that the wingless female moth may be checked in her upward journey to the branches and twigs where she deposits her eggs. This sticky substance may be molasses, printer's ink or the tanglefoot which is sold by the manufacturers of the sticky fly paper. If the canker worm was not seriously numerous last year, but a few trees here and there were injured, then the orchardist should see to it that his spray pump is in condition so that he can be certain that the first meal these insects take is well seasoned with an arsenic poison. Arsenate of lead, two or three pounds to fifty gallons of water, has usually been effective. Some orchardists have found that when the insects are more than usually numerous, one-half pound of paris green added to two pounds arsenate of lead, to fifty gallons of water, kills more quickly, even though there is some danger of it burning the foliage.

The orchardist who hesitates to eat an apple from his trees until he has cut it open to see whether or not it is the hiding place of a worm, must prepare to spray for codling moth. Probably the most important spray for the codling moth is the blossom fall spray. This spray should be applied with sufficient force to drive the material into the stamen bars between the calyx leaves, so that sufficient poison will lodge there to finish any insect that may begin his life history in that particular apple. The entomologists tell us that it is probable that the number of broods and the number of insects produced in each brood varies somewhat with the season, but the total number of worms that may be hatched on a given number of trees is surprisingly large. More than one thousand of the pupating insects have been captured on one tree trunk during the season. If each one of these represented an apple destroyed, there would be five boxes of 200 apples each ruined, and many times that in an unprotected orchard, it is practically impossible to find a sound apple. After the blossoms fall, the ten weeks' spray is the most important for the codling moth, but in years when conditions are favorable for the insects, and unfavorable for the apple, the insects should be carefully watched and sprays applied accordingly.

In recent years, the apple leaf skeletonizer has caused considerable damage in many localities. The loss of leaves to a tree that is carrying its full capacity of fruit is a very serious matter, and many times it is advisable to supplement the three weeks' spray with the ten days' spray and follow the three weeks' spray at intervals of ten days.

In many localities it has been more difficult to induce men to spray for fungous diseases than for insects. They can see the insect early in its development, but the spore or germ of the disease is so small, and its effect at first is so inconspicuous, that many times it is difficult to convince an orchardist that his fruit is infected with scab, blotch, bitter rot or other disease, until it is too late to protect it.

Probably the apple blotch has caused more loss to the orchardist of Kansas than any other disease affecting the fruit. Missouri Pippin, Ben Davis and Gano are most susceptible to this disease, and few varieties are entirely immune. The disease germs are distributed by the wind or dripping water from affected areas of the twigs or water sprouts. These spores are usually liberated from two to four weeks after blossoms fall. The apple scab, which is probably second in importance in the Middle West, develops earlier, and the best control of this disease demands a spray before the blossoms open. Lime-sulphur has been very effective. For the apple blotch the best degree of control, running as high in some experiments as 90 per cent clean, has been secured by the application of Bordeaux mixture. Bordeaux mixture is a compound of quick lime and copper sulphate and the formula most in favor is three pounds copper sulphate, four pounds quick lime to fifty gallons of water, or what is known as the 3-4-50 formula. Men who use these chemicals must always remember that they are poisonous in a degree. Arsenate of lead is very poisonous and only a small quantity is necessary to kill an animal or an insect. Copper sulphate is less poisonous, but has a caustic action that many times causes injury to plant tissues. Under high temperature lime-sulphur in combination with arsenate of lead forms a compound that is also very caustic.

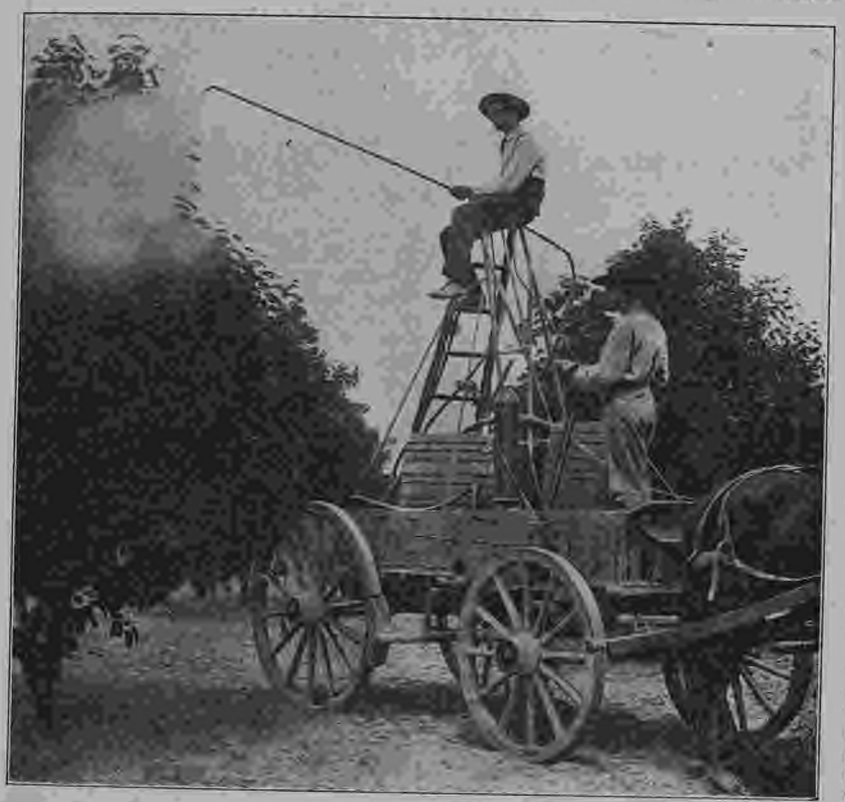
The man who is to spray successfully must needs think all the time.



Spraying scene in W. E. Boschen's orchard.

He must watch the weather forecast, and many times, as with all agricultural operations, he must choose between two evils. In one locality in the state, in one recent season, it happened that the pustules containing the blotch spores were opening and distributing at a time when the weather was moist and warm. This was ideal weather for the infection of the apples and the need of a spray was very apparent. Such weather is conducive to Bordeaux burning. The best solution to this problem seemed to be a spray at once with lime-sulphur and follow it as soon as the weather was settled with a Bordeaux spray. Another procedure, that was fairly successful, was to weaken the Bordeaux solution to 2-4-50.

When the orchardist understands the formulas and the chemistry of spraying fairly well, he still has the problem of the pump. This problem must be solved with these factors in mind; the size of the orchard, the time it will require to spray it, the kind of help he can secure, and the expense. The man who has but forty or fifty trees can secure very good results with a common barrel pump, and a well-grown tree fifteen years old, capable of producing five bushels of apples will probably require six or seven gallons of spray mixture at one application. A man who has fifty trees requiring seven gallons per tree, will do well if he covers these trees well in ten hours. The man who has five acres will need a pump of larger capacity in order to apply his spray at the time it will be most effective; that is, just at the blossom fall. A larger pump, with a horizontal stroke and a lever sufficiently strong that two men may exert their power, is, perhaps, the most efficient of the hand pumps. With such a pump two good men have applied 1,500 gallons of spray in ten hours. These pumps, if caerfully washed and cleaned, to prevent any corroding effect from the chemicals, will last for many years.

The man who has ten acres or more of orchard will usually conclude, after one season's sprays, if he does not figure it out before he starts, that a gasoline engine is the most efficient form of power. There are very many efficient gasoline engine sprayers. The main points must be that the engine has power sufficient to drive the pump and the agitator without overloading it. Many pumps that have been designed for one lead of hose and two nozzles have been over-worked and permanently ruined by trying to make them do the work necessary for two leads of hose and four nozzles. Efficient work requires plenty of power, whether it is plowing or spraying. The farmer who tries to make two horses do the work of three, rarely succeeds, and the man who tries to make a one and one-half-horse engine do the work of a three-horse engine, has, perhaps, less chance than the other. A good pump should be as strong and simple as possible, and the parts easily reached, for the spray chemicals are hard on the leather, valves and hose, and the stops for repairs come to all who spray for many seasons. The farmer who does not see that his tools are in good condition before his season for using them, is likely to pay a heavy toll for his repairs. It is a good deal better to buy new hose and new valves at the beginning of the season than to have to telephone to a distant point to have them come by express. The cost of repairs is small compared to the loss sustained by the delayed spraying, and the cost of spraying should not frighten anyone who has good trees. Many good gasoline engine outfits have records of two to three thousand gallons a day. This means eight to twelve acres a day, of large trees. A man should be able to cover twenty-five to forty acres with one spray outfit, and do it at the time when the efficiency would be the greatest. Figuring on a forty-acre basis, with forty trees to the acre, requiring probably 10,000 gallons of spray, two pounds of arsenate of lead to fifty gallons of water, would require 400 pounds of lead. In recent years few men have paid more than 8 cents a pound for lead, and $32 is certainly a small amount for the protection of 1,600 trees.

In the matter of fungicides, copper sulphate has cost, in recent years, about 6 cents a pound, and lime about four-fifths cent a pound. Materials for fifty gallons of the combination mixture, Bordeaux mixture and arsenate of lead, would cost, therefore, 16 cents for the lead and 18 cents for the bluestone, and 3 cents for the lime, or 75c for 100 gallons, $7.50 for each 1,000 gallons, or $75 for 10,000 gallons. The commercial lime-sulphur at 16 cents a gallon, at the rate of one and one-half gallons of the mixture to fifty, would be slightly cheaper, and the home-made somewhat less, but with $75 for materials for one spray, four sprays would require $300 worth of materials for a forty-acre orchard. Many operations have been carried on where the labor bill was but one-half to two-thirds the cost of the materials. Any orchard that will not justify an outlay of $10 to the acre for spraying each season, is, in all probability, worth more as a woodpile than it is as an orchard.

Spraying Methods, Materials and Apparatus.

Spray methods must, for the most part, be developed by the person who is to do the work. Whether or not a fine mist and a floating spray is better than a coarse, driving spray, depends in part upon local conditions, but mainly upon the personal preference of the operator.

We are inclined to advise, for general purposes, a moderately fine spray, delivered at an average pressure of about 140 pounds. Thoroughness is essential, especially in treating for the scale insects during the dormant season, but the operator must learn to use the least possible amount of spray and still cover the tree. This is largely the result of practice and activity.

Materials.

Insecticides for spraying are divided into two classes—contact sprays, for use against such insects as suck the juices of the plants and are susceptible of control by means of the stomach poisons applied to the leaves; and the stomach poisons applied to leaves and fruit to kill insects which feed on the substance of the plant.

The former class includes lime-sulphur mixtures, kerosene emulsion, soap preparations, tobacco extracts, and the miscible or soluble oils.

The most commonly used stomach poisons are the arsenicals, Paris green, arsenate of lead, London purple, arsenite of soda, and others.

The manufacture of these materials has been developed to such an extent that it will hardly pay the fruit grower to attempt to make his own spray materials. Lime-sulphur and arsenate of lead were formerly often made at home, but both can be purchased ready prepared in just as efficient mixtures as the fruit grower himself can make, and are likely to be more uniform than the home-made products. Kerosene emulsion and the self-boiled lime-sulphur for peach-spraying are about the only materials that will ordinarily be made at home. Directions for their preparation follow:

Self-Boiled Lime-Sulphur.
Formula.

8 Pounds lime.
8 Pounds ground or powdered sulphur.
50 Gallons water.

Preparation.—Place the lime in a barrel and pour over it just enough water to cover it. As soon as the lime begins to slake add the sulphur, being sure that there are no lumps present. Stir constantly and add water as necessary to keep the material in a thick paste, which should gradually be thinned. As soon as the lime is entirely slaked, add enough water to cool the mixture and prevent further cooking.

Strain into the spray tank, dilute to fifty gallons, add the arsenate of lead (two or three pounds), and apply. It is advantageous to cook larger quantities at one time, increasing the amounts of the ingredients proportionately, as better action is secured from the larger quantities of lime.

Kerosene Emulsion.
Formula.

Soft soap, 1 quart (½ lb. of any ordinary soap will do).
Kerosene, 2 gallons.
Water, 1 gallon.

Preparation.—Dissolve the soap in the water, which should be heated. When this is accomplished, allow it to cool slightly, then add the kerosene. Agitate vigorously for a few moments, and a thick, creamy liquid will be formed. This is the emulsion, and will keep in this condition for several weeks, so it may be set aside and used as needed. For use it is diluted with from five to fifteen times its own volume of water, the dilution depending upon the nature of the foliage and the insect to be killed.

Tobacco extracts may be made by the steeping of tobacco stems at home, but products on the market are stronger and more uniform, and their cost is not prohibitive.

Apparatus.

Machinery for spraying is of many types. The size of the orchard to be treated usually determines the size and character of the spray outfit. The outfits used vary in size from the two to five-gallon bucket, or knapsack sprayer, to the gasoline engine sprays of several horsepower and tank capacity of two or three hundred gallons. The bucket pump is suitable only for treating small shrubbery and trees on the city lot, and at best is inefficient. Barral pumps, or, better, double-acting hand pumps, may be used for orchards of less than 500 trees, or, if time be no object, even a thousand trees may be economically treated. As a general rule, orchards of over 500 trees may be treated more cheaply as well as more effectively with an outfit using some power other than hand. Of the power outfits only two types are prominent enough to merit discussion. These are the gasoline engine outfits and the "geared" or "traction" machines, where the pumps are geared to the trucks on which they are mounted with the supply tank, and pressure is supplied when the machine is pulled from tree to tree. Where trees are small or moderate in size and not planted too closely, this is a very satisfactory type—that is, if it be properly constructed. Trees too large to be covered by the material pumped into the compression chamber by driving the distance between the trees may be treated by spraying only the alternate ones in the row and driving down the same row twice, or by driving completely around the tree. The best makes of "traction" sprayers furnish as satisfactory and reliable a source of power as can be desired.

The gasoline engine is preferred by the majority of owners of large orchards as a source of power for spraying. Here, again the size of the orchard should determine the size and power of the outfit. A one-horse or one and one-half horsepower engine can be made to keep pressure enough to supply two leads of hose, but small engines are not so useful for other purposes outside the spraying season. The greater number of power sprayers are furnished with two and one-half and three and one-half horsepower engines.

Pumps should in all cases be brass lined, and preferably furnished with ball valves. Single-cylinder, double-acting pumps and twin-cylinder triplex and quadruple-cylinder pumps are all used at times. It is desirable in all cases that the compression chamber be large. This will insure even pressure. A good pressure gauge, registering not less than 200 pounds, should be fitted on each pump.

The fittings and accessories of various kinds are of fully as much importance as the engine and pump, and probably cause more trouble than the latter. At the pump, if two leads of hose are to be used, a good "three-way" valve should be provided, so that either one or both leads may be cut off at will by the driver or operator. The hose should be of the very best quality, fully guaranteed up to 300 pounds pressure for an entire season. It may be secured with a guarantee good for two seasons' work, and first-class hose, with proper care, should last at least two seasons. The hose connections should be of the long-shanked style, the shanks being not less than three inches long and clamped so that there shall be no possibility of their pulling out of the hose. The connections should be shaped so that they may be gripped firmly with an ordinary monkey-wrench. Spray poles may be of iron pipe, usually one-fourth inch size, or brass, iron or aluminum lined bamboo. If they are the latter they should have the metal lining screwed into the connections, not soldered, as the soldered ones will pull apart with rough use. The ends of the bamboo pole should be protected with a substantial metal ferrule. The lower end of the pole should invariably have a stop-cock between it and the hose connection, so that the rod man may cut off the supply from his nozzle in case of clogging or for other reasons, without having to depend upon the operator at the supply. The most satisfactory nozzle we have used is the "Friend" type, usually the "Friend Angle," made by the Friend Manufacturing Co., Gasport, N. Y. Others of the same type do very satisfactory work. These have largely superseded the old standard "vermorel" type, and are much more convenient. It will pay the prospective buyer of sprayers to insist on this type of nozzle. The size of the aperture in the interchangeable discs furnished to be used depends upon the pressure and the character of spray it is desired to produce. The smaller the hole in the disc, of course, the finer will be the spray. All connections should be kept perfectly tight, so that there is no leaking. Leaky apparatus causes more trouble to the workmen than windy weather or any other trouble, and renders a naturally somewhat disagreeable task doubly so. A few dollars extra spent on first-class fixtures will be good economy for any person who desires to get best results and avoid dissatisfaction among the workmen.

Method.

If lime-sulphur is to be used, it must not be forgotten that it has a somewhat caustic action on the skin, and is injurious to clothing. It will also ruin painted surfaces. It causes considerable smarting and pain to the eyes and mucous membranes, but will not injure them permanently if no greater quantity than would be blown from the nozzles is encountered. Vaseline rubbed on the hands and face before starting to work will prevent much of the smarting, and even ordinary machine oil on the hands is some protection. Good "waterproof" leather gloves and a broad-brimmed hat afford additional protection.

The foregoing remarks about methods and machinery may be summarized briefly as follows:

Spray thoroughly. Get a good-quality pump and power suitable to your needs. Pay especial attention to the accessories, such as hose, hose connections, valves, rods and nozzles. Use pressure of not less than 100 pounds for San Jose scale and 125 pounds for summer work, and ordinarily not more than 150 or 175 pounds for either season. Do not attempt to spray during very windy weather. Wear clothes which cannot be injured by the spray materials. Protect the horses and harness by means of burlap covers. Use hose leads long enough to enable the driver and outfit to keep far enough away to avoid the flying spray. From thirty-five to fifty feet, and in some cases more, should be used for each lead. When, as is often the case, portions of the orchard are too rough to be driven over by the sprayer, these should be reached from the nearest point by using extra lengths of hose, if necessary, by coupling all the leads together. Arrange the water supply as conveniently as may be possible. If necessary, keep a supply tank running to haul water for the sprayers.

Insects Injurious to the Apple.

Spraying should be carried on, both during the dormant period and the growing season when an orchard is infested with all the important insect pests and plant diseases.

The dormant spray is applied after the foliage has dropped in the fall, during open weather in the winter, and before the buds open in the spring. It is composed of the commercial lime-sulphur solution, the home-made lime-sulphur, or miscible oil.

This treatment is designed to control the San Jose scale, and to a certain extent the plant lice which affect the orchard and are present in the egg stage at the time of application. The dilution of these materials should be made according to directions on the container.

The sprays recommended to be used during the growing seasons are:

1. Cluster Cup.—This spray is composed of one and one-half gallons of commercial lime-sulphur and two pounds of arsenate of lead to every fifty gallons of water. It is applied in the interval between the opening of the cluster buds and the opening of the blossoms. In our experiments, it has prevented a very large percentage of the normal curculio damage. It is also valuable in controlling apple scab.

2. Blossom Fall.—This spray has the same composition as No. 1. It should be applied after the petals have fallen from half to two-thirds of the blooms, and before the calices close. This spray controls a large percentage of the first brood of codling moth, and aids in the control of curculio.

3. Three Weeks Spray.—The composition of this spray should be the same as for Nos. 1 and 2; or, if apple blotch is present, Bordeaux, 3-4-50, should be substituted for the lime-sulphur. If the weather is damp and threatening at the time when this spray should be put on, it will be safer to use the lime-sulphur, and then as soon as the weather permits, a spray with Bordeoux should be put on. This also aids in controlling curculio and codling moth.

4. Five Weeks Spray.—If blotch is present in the orchard, another spraying with Bordeaux should be put on at this time in order to have good control of it.

5. Ten Weeks Spray.—This spray is applied about ten weeks after blossom fall. It is composed of two pounds of arsenate of lead, with the addition of Bordeaux if blotch is present or if bitter rot is expected. This spray is valuable in controlling the second brood codling moth.

6. Third Brood Spray.—Where there is damage from a third brood of codling moth another spray of two pounds of arsenate of lead to fifty gallons of water should be used just as the fruit starts to ripen.

In ordinary seasons and under ordinary conditions, sprays 1, 2, 3 and 5 will be sufficient.

Insects Injurious to the Pear.

Dormant spray (when necessary), same material as for apple.

Petal-fall spray as for the apple.

Three weeks spray as for the apple.

Arsenate of lead or Paris green or hydrated lime dust for the pear slug whenever the slugs appear.

Other sprays are rarely necessary, as the pear is less subject to insect attack than is the apple.

Insects Injurious to the Peach.

Dormant spray in the fall or spring for scale insects and certain plant lice.

Lime-sulphur or miscible oil.

The lime-sulphur treatment applied in the spring will control certain fungous diseases, as the leaf-curl, as well as the insects.

1. First curculio spray. Applied ten days after the petals fall. Material: Arsenate of lead at the rate of two pounds to fifty gallons.

2. Curculio and fungi. Four to five weeks after the petals have shed. Self-boiled lime-sulphur and arsenate of lead.

3. For fungi only. Four to five weeks before the fruit ripens. With self-boiled lime-sulphur alone.

Late varieties should have two applications in place of No. 3, to protect the fruit from the various fungi.

Special treatment with a contact insecticide during the growing season is sometimes advisable. This is true when aphids and the terrapin scale are bad. For these insects kerosene emulsion, tobacco extract, or whale-oil soap should be applied when the eggs are hatching.

Insects Injurious to Plums and Cherries.

Dormant spray, same as for apple and peaches.

1. First curculio spray. When leaf buds begin to open. Arsenate of lead, three pounds to fifty gallons.

2. Curculio and fungous diseases. At petal-fall season. Arsenate of lead and lime-sulphur (commercial at 1 to 40, or standard strength of self-boiled) or Bordeaux mixture, 3-4-50.

3, 4 and sometimes 5. At intervals of ten days after No. 2. Material the same as for No. 2, except that the fungicide may be omitted from the last two treatments if the fruit and foliage are free from any signs of disease. These treatments are designed to control the curculio.

Insects Injurious to the Grape.

In previously unsprayed vineyards where both insect and fungous troubles are to be expected, the following schedule of treatments is recommended by Professor Quaintance of the department of agriculture (Farmers' Bulletin 284). This may be modified as the presence or absence of these troubles seems to indicate.

1. Bordeaux mixture, 6-3-50, and arsenate of lead, 2 to 50. Fungous diseases and flea-beetles. Apply just before the buds open.

Heading apple barrels in Harry Macomber's orchard.

2. Bordeaux mixture, 6-3-50, and arsenate of lead. Fungous diseases, flea-beetles, rose-chafer, grape curculio, grape berry moth and grape leaf-folder. Apply just before the blossoms begin to open.

3. Material same as above. To control insects as above, and in addition the adults of the grape root-worm. Apply as soon as blossoms fall.

4. Material as above. Further protection against fungi and against the insects mentioned, especially the root-worm, the curculio, and the berry moth. Apply ten days after No. 3.

5. Burgundy mixture and no arsenical. For fungi only. Apply two weeks after No. 4.

6. Same as No. 5. Applied two weeks later.

Insects Injurious to Bush Fruits.

Use arsenate of lead or a contact insecticide in regulation strength mixture when the appearance of the insect calls for treatment. It has not usually been found necessary to treat these fruits regularly.

Currants should be watched closely for the San Jose scale and thoroughly sprayed with lime-sulphur or else destroyed when the scale is found.

Insects Injurious to the Strawberry.

It has not been the general practice to spray this crop, but when insects are generally troublesome the following applications will supplement the cultural methods that may be in use.

1. Arsenate of lead at two pounds to fifty gallons, with lime-sulphur at one to forty. Apply just at the beginning of the blossoming season.

2. Same material as above. Apply after fruit has been picked.

The second treatment may well be postponed until the new growth starts in late summer.

Insects Injurious to Nursery Stock.

The spraying of nursery stock has already been discussed under the head of the insects affecting that crop.

Many growers find it a good practice to spray their stock every two or three weeks with the lime-sulphur lead-arsenate mixture just to prevent any possible outbreak of insect or fungus.

Burgundy Mixture.—Copper sulphate 2 pounds, sodium carbonate 3 pounds, water 100 gallons. Dissolve and dilute the two chemicals, each in fifty gallons of water, and then let the two run together into the spray as in making Bordeaux.

Concentrated Home-Made Lime-Sulphur.

Either the lime-sulphur may be prepared at home or some of the commercially prepared brands may be used. Unless the sprayer has a large number of trees to be sprayed, it will not pay him to make the home-made solution, as the cost of securing the equipment and of purchasing the ingredients in small quantities would make the cost prohibitive. It is not only a very disagreeable task to prepare it, but also one that is apt to be doomed to failure unless directions are most carefully followed. Since the commercially prepared solutions are made in large quantities and with improved equipment, it is possible to produce a more uniform product than the home-made solution. However, by carefully following directions, one may get a very satisfactory product, which can be made during spare time and stored away for future use. Directions for making the home-made concentrate are as follows:

|---|---|
| Stone-lime | 40 lbs. |
| Sulphur | 80 lbs. |
| Water | 50 gals. |

The lime used in the making of this concentrate should be the purest obtainable, and as free as possible from magnesium. The sulphur used should be pure and finely ground. The ordinary ground sulphur is the cheapest form, and is just as satisfactory as the flowers or flour of sulphur. If the solution is to be cooked by steam, it may be done in barrels, but if it is to be cooked over a fire, it will then be necessary to use a kettle. The lime should be placed in the kettle and slaking started. When this is well under way, the sulphur which has previously been made into a thin paste with water, should be added and the whole mixed or stirred thoroughly. The water should then be brought up to fifty gallons and kept there throughout the whole operation. This can easily be done by cutting a notch in a stick at the fifty-gallon mark, and using this stick for a guide to indicate the amount of material in the kettle. If steam is used for the cooking, it will not be neecssary to add water as often as when it is cooked in a kettle over a fire. It should be kept well stirred, so as to prevent caking on the sides or bottom of the kettle, and should boil steadily until all the sulphur is dissolved, which usually requires from forty-five minutes to an hour, according to the amount of heat used. When the boiling is finished, the concentrate may be put into barrels and stored away for future use. The barrels should be perfectly tight and filled, but if this is not done, the surface of the concentrate may be covered with oil to prevent the air reaching it. For this purpose any oil, such as the miscible oils, which will not injure the tree and does not take fire at the boiling point of water, will do. Since this is a concentrated solution, it should be diluted before being applied to the tree. In order to know the proper amount to dilute it one should provide himself with a Beaume hydrometer, which may be obtained from any lens company, such as the Bausch and Lomb Optical Co., Rochester, N. Y., or the Spencer Lens Co., Buffalo, N. Y. Directions for using these hydrometers usually accompany them. By taking the Beaume reading and consulting the following table, the proper amount of dilution may be determined. The following table is applicable for Kansas conditions, and should be used rather than the tables sent out by the companies, which, while perfectly accurate in their make-up, are prepared on the basis of using one and a quarter gallons of lime-sulphur, instead of one and a half gallons to every fifty gallons of water as a summer spray.

San Jose Scale Worst of all Pests

Paramount of All Insects Causing Loss to the Horticulturist.

Paramount of all the insects causing loss to the horticulturists and nurserymen is a small scale insect, no larger, when mature, than the head of a common pin. This insect is the San Jose scale (pronounced San Ho-zay), Aspidiotus perniciosus. No insect pest has received more attention and has had more written concerning it. Nearly every experiment station in the land has published one or more bulletins as to its life history and ravages, and remedies for its control.

Newspapers, journals and magazines have volumes calling the attention of fruit-growers to the effect of this scale pest and encouraging legislation for its control. Those who have heeded this admonition of the entomologists and followed their recommendations have satisfied themselves that, in spite of the enormous damage done by this scale, there are methods which, if properly pursued, will reduce injury to the minimum. The careless, unheeding grower who has scale-infested stock, and has done nothing by way of controlling the pest suffers heavy losses and eventually is compelled to go out of business (be he horticulturist or nurseryman), or is advised to start anew.

Perhaps the worst feature of an attack of San Jose scale is the difficulty of recognizing the insect, due to its size and color; it is about one-sixteenth of an inch in diameter when mature, and in color it resembles the bark of the tree or plant infested. If there is very bad infestation, an ashy-gray appearance is noticeable; again one may determine the presence of scale by crushing many of them, when an oily appearance is noted.

If a female scale be carefully turned over by a knife or a pin, there will be found underneath a flat, yellowish insect, looking very much like a small piece of rich butter. It has no legs, no wings, no eyes, no antenae (feelers), nor a distinct head, but it does have a long, thread-like sucking proboscis, with which it bores through the bark of trees into the young growing wood, and draws out the sap.

Early in the spring the adult female begins to give birth to living young, continuing to do so for about six weeks, after which she dies. The young scale has legs, antenoe and eyes; it moves about over the twigs for some hours, then settles down and begins to push its mouth part slowly into the bark to the sap beneath. A scale-like covering now begins to be formed, coming from all parts of the body, and looking at first like waxy filaments or threads, which later fuse together, making with the cast skins, an entire covering over the insect. All young San Jose scale look alike in size, color and shape, until the first molt, about twelve days after birth, but from then on, there is a very great difference. The male scale, which is smaller, is now elongate, while the female scale is circular, or nearly so, both sexes losing legs and antennae, and the female her eyes. In from twenty-four to twenty-six days from birth the male comes from under the scale in the form of a minute and extremely delicate winged, fly-like insect.

It takes the female about thirty days to develop fully. From thirty-three to forty days from birth she gives birth to a new generation. Each female is supposed to produce 200 male and 200 female young; this being so, and counting four generations in a season, there will be produced, according to Dr. L. O. Howard, 3,216,080,400 male and female scales from one progenitor in a year. Thus it is easy to understand why a slight infestation, if untreated, soon becomes bad. If the scale is allowed to increase unmolested, it will kill a young bearing peach tree in about three years, and apple tree in about four or five years. Consequently, when San Jose scale is first discovered in an orchard, immediate preparations should be made for applying a remedy, the most satisfactory of which is the boiled lime-sulphur solution.

Spraying to kill the San Jose scale.

PREHISTORIC MAN IN DONIPHAN COUNTY

(Contributed by Edward Park.)

The mists of past centuries have almost obliterated the evidence of man's advent in Doniphan County, or prehistoric man's coming to this aboriginal paradise. Very little work along archaeological lines has been done until lately, when investigation was commenced in an amateur way. The spade has disclosed great numbers of ancient ruins and remains, that present a problem for scientific men to unravel. We expect great results and much scientific knowledge gathered as to the nature and the general characteristics of Doniphan County's prehistoric man, through the efforts and under the direction of Harvard University and the Peabody Museum, which will probably commence work here next spring.

From the limited amount of evidence that has been gathered, it is assured that the prehistoric people were superior in nature and habits to the nomadic tribes found here in historic times. They were agriculturists and artisans of no mean ability. They built mounds to mark the burial places of the dead. In some of the mounds they placed altars, on which bodies were burned, probably as a sacrifice to the Great Spirit. On 'most every hill and in every valley can be found some evidence of their sojourn here. The mounds, the house sites, and the places where they had their signal fires, plainly show their occupation of this country to have been a long and indefinite period of time.

Every farm in Doniphan County yields some artifact, mute evidence of their occupation or combination of occupations. In the extensive collections of Dr. R. S. Dinsmore of Troy, M. E. Zimmerman of White Cloud, and the writer, can be seen some of the very finest specimens of their handiwork, tools of stone, shell and bone, made to meet every requirement of prehistoric man.

HOW TO PICK APPLES

Expert Authorities on Donpihan County's Horticultural Industry Have Different Views on the Best Method of Harvesting the Apple Crop—Great Care Should Be Exercised in Sorting and Packing the Fruit—During the Harvest Period It Is Estimated That Fully $75,000 Is Put Into Circulation for Labor and Supplies.

The great fruit industry which has made Doniphan County famous has been a subject of careful study by many of the leading growers whose desire is to secure the greatest results in placing the annual harvest on the markets of the world.

While the most approved methods of culture have invariably been adopted by the orchard men, it is during the harvest season that extra care should be exercised in having the apples properly picked and packed. That is the time for the growers to insist upon diligence and caution in order to insure financial returns commensurate with their investment.

With regard to the methods of picking apples, many people claim that it is the best plan to use a picking bag, made of canvas and hoop, and holding one-half bushel quantities. Other orchard men contend that the half-bushel basket measure is preferable, because pickers using the canvas receptacle let the bag drag on the ladder and bruise many of the apples, making them practically worthless.

There does not seem to be much of a choice between the pickers as to which method is the best, although many of the people thus employed defer to the ideas of the men who pay their wages. The pickers are there for all the money they can earn and do not question the policy of their employers regarding the methods used in gathering the harvest.

Workers at the orchards during the harvest season receive fairly good pay. The average wage for pickers is about $2.00 a day, while the pay for headers ranges from $2 to $3.50 a day. During the last few years the orchard men have been paying 5 cents a bushel, which they claim is an exorbitant price, as a good man can pick seventy-five bushels, and some of the experts have been known to pick as high as 100 bushels in a day.

The growers are all in favor of the bushel system of payment which is bound to develop the best class of pickers. Poor hands cannot make any headway under that system. In addition they have come to realize that indifferent pickers are more of a detriment than a benefit, no matter how heavy a rush may be on. This class of labor not only gets in the way of good pickers, but has a propensity to be careless in handling the fruit.

The busy season of the apple harvest is ushered in about September 10 each year, when the Jonathans and Grimes Golden are ripe for picking. After that come the winter varieties, the picking and packing of which make the apple season last into the first weeks of November. The number of people employed during the season varies, but in 1914 it was computed that a total of $75,000 had been expended by the orchard-men in defraying the labor cost of gathering and packing the harvest.

The apple crop of Doniphan County is immense in volume, and the net returns to the growers, outside of all overhead expense, comes to the aggregate of one million dollars. Last season there were 1,685 carloads of apples shipped from the Doniphan County fruit belt. Estimating the market price at a minimum of $500 a car, the crop would net a total revenue of $842,500. Of course, many of the cars contained top-grade apples exclusively, which commanded a much higher price on the foreign markets.

Some Members of the G. A. R. of Doniphan County

Scott Thomas of Highland hails from Pennsylvania, and was only fifteen years old when he came to Kansas. He served in the war, having enlisted at Camp Cleveland, Ohio, in 1864, with Company B, Regiment One Hundred Sixty-Nine, and most of the time was stationed at Camp Ethan Allen to guard the chain bridge which spans the Potomac River at that point. Mr. Thomas owns about $10,000 worth of real estate. He has never married. We do not know whether the latter fact is a result of the former or not.

Henry H. Hickman, born in Saline County, Missouri, March 10, 1845. He came to Doniphan County and settled at Highland about August, 1858. He enlisted in Company H, Thirteenth Kansas infantry, under Captain McCauley, at Troy, August 12th, and was mustered out at Little Rock, Arkansas, July 16, 1865, and was discharged at Leavenworth, Kansas. He has a wife and two sons, Claud V. of St. Joseph, Missouri, and Hiram, at Norton, Kansas.

R. Duvall of Highland, served in Company G, Ninth New Hampshire, having enlisted at Leban, N. H. He was mustered out and discharged at Alexandria, Va., July 1865. Mr. Duvall was born in the year 1844, at Morristown, N. J., and was married some time later (his record with us does not give exact figures) to Miss Elizabeth McQueen. His family consists of Arthur, Frank, Carl, Rosella, Leona, Pearl, Maud, Hattie and Edna Duvall. The Duvalls came to Doniphan County in October, 1913.

Geo. W. Lewis, born in Henry County, Indiana, March 16, 1840. He came to Kansas in 1860, in May. Enlisted August 30, 1862, in Troy, in Company A, Thirteenth Kansas; mustered out June 25, 1865, at Little Rock, Arkansas. He has four daughters, in age order as follows: Rosetta, Amanda R., Sarah E., Fanny. His sons are as follows: John H., Samuel, Vachel. The latter enjoys the distinction of having served in Company I, Fourth Missouri volunteers, Spanish-American.

William O. Van Horn, born in Council Bluffs, Iowa, January 22, 1844. He enlisted at Fort Scott, Kansas, September 16, 1862, in Company I, Second Kansas cavalry; mustered out at Fort Gibson, Indian Territory, July 16, 1865. He came to Kansas March 3, 1853. He has a wife and three daughters: Carrie (Mrs. Beatrice Cummings), Kate (Mrs. Wm. Turner), Winona (Mrs. Frank Price). He has a farm south of Blair.

Mr. John H. Jones was born in Hudson, Illinois, November 21, 1845. Enlisted in 1864 in Illinois Company I, and was transferred to Thirty-Seventh Company G. He was mustered out at Galveston, Texas, February 9, 1866, and came to Doniphan County April 15, 1866. Was married May 26, 1868, to Lucetta Nixon. Now resides in his own property in Troy. Is a brother to "Buffalo Jones."

Judson Bayne came to Doniphan County in 1868 at the age of twenty-seven. His birthplace was in Larue County, Kentucky. He served the flag in Company F, Regiment Fifteen, Kentucky infantry, having enlisted at New Haven on September 10, 1861. He was mustered out at Chattanooga, November 7, 1863. Mrs. Bayne was formerly Miss Sarah J. Dixon, and she was married to the subject of this article in 1864. They live at Highland and have two children, Thomas and Jenny.

W. L. League was born in Champagne County, Ohio, in 1842. When only nineteen years old, he enlisted in the Thirteenth Ohio infantry volunteers, Company F, at Milford Center, Ohio. He was mustered out June 26, 1864, at Chattanooga, and later discharged at Louisville. He came to Doniphan County in 1868. In 1884 he was married to Emma L. Jacobs, and they have one daughter. The home is in Highland.

John H. Johannes was born in Oldenburg, Germany, May 24, 1851. Came to the United States March 7, 1867, and to Doniphan County, Kansas, landing at Severance, Kansas. Enlisted in the United States navy in 1873. Served five years in the marine corps. Was not in any important battle. Was mustered out on September 3, 1878, at Brooklyn, New York. Never was wounded. He has five children living. Their names are as follows: Annie, John G., Louise, Sarah D. and Agnes F. He has two daughters married: Annie, now Mrs. John Heaston, and Sarah, now Mrs. Geo. Hustet of St. Mary's, Kansas. John G. is married and lives at Willis. His wife's maiden name was Mary M. Pancer. They were married on September 6, 1878, at Brooklyn, New York. Now live on a farm near Leona, Kansas.

Hugh Ryan was born in Springfield, Illinois, August 4, 1848. Enlisted at Springfield, Illinois, February of 1864 in Company F, Fifth Illinois cavalry. Mustered out at Springfield, Illinois, November 28, 1865. Came to White Cloud November of 1883. Married to Lizzie Robinson, October 15, 1883. Three children, Helen Grace, Louis Edward, Bennie M. Wife living.

Jasper Barnett was born in Elgin, Illinois, July 17, 1847. Enlisted at the age of twenty-five at Kankakee, Illinois, in Company K, Fourth Illinois cavalry. Mustered out June, 1866, at Springfield, Illinois. Married to Eva Tracey in 1870. No children. Wife died in July of 1912.

Better Pay for County School Teachers

Wages in Early Days and Now—Low Salaries and Inefficiency Go Hand in Hand—Farm Women and Education—The New Requirements for Teachers and the Demand for More Efficiency Should Be Paid for Willingly—Women on School Boards.

In another article in this magazine is related the history of a former school teacher, James W. McClellan, now old in years; and, in referring to different wages paid him, he states that at first he received $25 per month from a board in Petersburg Bottom, noted for their liberality, then $40, and finally, after long years of service, the princely sum of $60. In those days it was the teacher's duty to teach some real fundamental principles, and let it go at that. Today the teacher is supposed to be informed up to the minute on not only the actual mental processes of a good education, but to a great extent on physical and philosophical subjects; and, sad to tell, the reimbursement has not kept pace with the onerous and additional duties entailed.

Farmers and the wives of farmers should be determined to give their children a square deal by employing competent teachers and paying them a salary sufficient to encourage the permanent location of such a teacher once secured. At the present time, only a few states give women the right to inaugurate a satisfactory school system or even to reform the present one by reason of lack of eligibility to citizenship. I do not advocate a school board, composed solely of women, but there should be some women on it, as no man is in position to know it all when it comes to selecting the teacher who shall have charge of his children a great part of each school day. I do not intend to encourage the wild expenditure of money simply to give the teacher a big salary, with no perceptible results therefrom. What I do intend to impress on my reader is the fact that we should be more particular and more exacting as to the requirements of the rural school teacher and then pay for that efficiency with a willing hand.

Would you not rather send your child to a well-paid teacher who will watch that child's health and teach it ideas of citizenship and hygiene to protect it while away from your influence than to send him to a careless or, more likely, an uninformed teacher, who knows little more than the law requires.

More capable school teachers will solve the problem of how the future citizens of this commonwealth shall be equipped for the battle of life. And whether equal suffrage is ever statewide or not, women should at least be eligible to serve on the school board. A mother on the farm practically has the entire rearing of the child up to school age, and it is only right that she should be entitled to select the person who will have charge of the child from that time on, the greater part of every school day. A country child is in school most of the day. He leaves home early in the morning, carrying a lunch, and when next you see the little chap, it is evening. What accommodations are provided for him during those long hours? What provision have you made for his comfort —what for his safety?

Meager salaries are bound to attract only inexperienced teachers; however, it is only just to say that rural teachers, as a rule, have been worthy of the trust reposed in them, but not because of any foresight displayed by mothers and fathers, but has been due largely to the inherent sense of duty and integrity of the teachers themselves.

Nowadays, in all city schools and many country schools, the teacher is supposed to be able to test a child's sight and hearing, which are the two most important physical tests. A test card for vision, costing 10 cents is used. By following the instructions over each letter as to the distance at which it can be read, each pupil's eyes can be tested as thoroughly as by an oculist. If a child shows a marked deficiency, he should be excused from school until medical aid has remedied or obliterated the defect. In days gone by what was wont to be termed stupidity and non-application, now has its solution in the discovery of poor eyesight or the existence of enlarged adenoids. While I am digressing, let me state, however, that the wonderful stories told of the mental improvement of children whose adenoids and tonsils have been removed, have led certain enthusiasts to urge this as a panacea for all the ills of childhood. Don't expect too much. The improvement in breathing space will naturally promote health, but it will take a year to observe noticeable results. The teacher should send home any child who is ill. It is the only thing to do. If she were a graduate M. D., she could distinguish between contagious and non-contagious diseases, but it is a good, safe rule that no sick child shall attend school. It is for his safety, as well as that of his schoolmates, that he be at home.

If we expect the above knowledge and caution to be used by school teachers, the remuneration for their labors, in most cases, will have to be raised considerably. Teaching has always been a poorly-paid profession, and there is scarcely any other recompense to make up for the deficiency in salary. If farm people were as honest with teachers as they are with others with whom they deal, there would be no question of better salaries. Because $25 or $30 a month was sufficient thirty years ago, is no argument for that salary today. Scientific farming has brought prosperity to farmers, and they should be willing to share this new prosperity with those who serve as faithfully as do rural teachers. The man referred to in the opening of this article was fortunate indeed to have secured a wage of $60, even after long years of faithful service.

In many school districts today, the salary of a teacher does not exceed $50 a month, and, added to this, is the ridiculous and inconvenient custom of the teacher living for a few weeks in one home and for another few weeks in another home, and not having a settled place of abode for the school term. This manner of life is manifestly unfair to rural teachers, as it compels them to literally live in a trunk.

The cure would be a house and small plot of ground to be dedicated especially for the use of teachers. If the school is to be a real social center, it must be presided over by a teacher who has some idea of permanency, and this permanency can be obtained only by a comfortable house and some ground, where teachers can be free to live their own lives, outline plans for the best interests of the school, and do a little experimenting in farm work. Women should use their moral influence for legislation that would put women on every school board in America; in this way would come better salaries and consequently better teachers. Farm women, keen of intellect and naturally interested in all that pertains to the future of their offspring, would see the need of better salaries and greater freedom of life for teachers in country schools.

More is demanded every day of rural teachers; they must serve as medical inspectors; be able to teach the rudiments of music, and before long they will be called upon to teach agriculture and economics, and since we expect so much of them, we should be willing to make it worth while to them. A bright, clever girl is hired by the school board, and she gives reasonable service this year with her inexperience, and would be of real value to you next year; but, of course, you do not expect her to stay for your $360 per year. Next year there will be another inexperienced teacher, and so it will continue year after year, to the great detriment of the children.

One solution of this problem is the consolidated school. Half a dozen inefficient school districts can be united to advantage in one graded school. You may have to carry the children to and from school, but that won't hurt them and will do you good. In bad weather, which frequently means a whole winter, you have to take the smaller children under present conditions. The consolidation will enable you to pay your teachers sufficient salary to keep them when they have attained experience and are worth a great deal to the community; it will give your older children the superior education that they can now have, only by going to town. It will give you a good, well-equipped, properly lighted and heated building with all sanitary conveniences. It will take away one of the greatest arguments for the children leaving home. It may cost a little money, but it will be money well spent.

Contrary to old-fashioned notions on the subject, women on the farm need the best education to be had. The wife and mother must be informed on scientific agriculture and horticulture, and to that knowledge must add an understanding of domestic science, sanitation and health so that she may be a fit partner in the business of home-making. Her ideas will originate largely from fundamentals learned at the country school, and, for that reason, the rural teacher becomes the cornerstone in the upbuilding of a community.

Education Gained By Observation

(By Miss Mary Trant.)

Education is something that each one ought to take a great interest in and take every opportunity they can in order to gain an education. Because it comprises a series of instruction and discipline, which is intended to enlighten the industries and correct the temper, from the manners and habit of youth and fit them for usefulness.

A good education in manners, arts and science is important. To have a religious education is indispensable. An immense responsibility rests on parents or guardians who neglect these duties. Sometimes girls and boys neglect their opportunities when parents or guardians have given them every advantage that is possible; but instead of improving their time and putting it to some good, they avail themselves of every chance to idle away their time in making sport and amusement for themselves. They bother others and do not think of the value of an education, and take more pains to forget their lessons than ever they did to learn them.

The most of such pupils will live to regret that they wasted their time. They should fully understand the importance of improving their school days, for the girl or boy who will be successful in after time must lay the foundation of success in youth. Boys, you cannot perform the duties of citizenship unless you are well instructed; you cannot vote intelligently because you will not be able to reflect clearly on political subjects. You will be obliged to take somebody's word for it. Perhaps they will tell you what is right, but more likely will advise to their own interests. For they who labor with the mind govern; others who labor with the body are governed by others; so learn to reason out and think for yourself on every subject and have opinions of your own, then you will not be obliged to seek advice. The youth should earnestly resolve to achieve an honorable and noble position in life. The idle and the dissolute will naturally, of their own weight, drop out by the wayside and sink out of sight. The plodder who is content to go the dull daily round in the same narrow rut will get a reward for his labor, though he never betters his condition. But the earnest, original, aspiring, energetic, intelligent worker, can always be sure of new fields to enter, noble victories to gain and grander work to be accomplished.

But the best of seminary learning that can open its portals to you can do no more than to afford you the opportunity of instruction. But it must depend at last on yourselves whether you will be instructed or not, or to what point you will push your instructions. It is hoped that this system of instructions which has been long and successfully pursued, may in the hands of others prove as valuable. It only requires an effort to be a good scholar and those who are truthful, reliable and honest in childhood will be trusted in positions and places in after years, and those who store the mind in youth with valuable knowledge will preserve that which can never be lost. But the first thing is to have a will, for "where there's a will there's a way," and then if united with energy and perseverence, will be sure to be successful in whatever they undertake and so these views or results of careful study and observations. Gold is deep in the mountains and can be obtained only by great labor. A person who would be a miner must study the geography of the country in which the metal is to be found. Then read all available matter relating to the region and the subject of mining and devote some time in receiving instructions from some instructor; learn the methods of testing ore and a great many other things that they will be obliged to know in order to prospect in mining. To be prosperous not only in mining, but any kind of work or anything we undertake to do, we should study and make every effort for excellence, which cannot be obtained without study and close application.

History of Doniphan County Schools

"A Republic's Chief Business Is Education"

(By Edna S. Whitney, County Supt.)

The history of the schools of Doniphan County is a history of progress. This sketch of the schools must, of necessity, be brief. The facts that have been gathered have been taken from the records and from the writer's personal knowledge.

The earlier years were years that tried men's souls. They were not only opening up a new country, but they were building homes and schools and churches—the three factors that make a great civilization. Now only a few of these old buildings and only a few of the brave-hearted pioneers remain to tell the story of their early struggles and triumphs. But we, their children, are reaping the rewards of the toil and sacrific of those earlier years. Comfortable homes, splendid churches, and modern school houses are gradually replacing the buildings that our forefathers occupied.

John Bayless of Highland, was the first county superintendent, but there are no records preserved of the work he accomplished. By 1869, however, seventy-four districts had been organized. District No. 1 was Wathena, and the first schoolmaster was Benjamin Harding. The loose sheet of paper, on which he kept the daily attendance, is carefully preserved by his daughters, who still live on the old homestead. These names are still familiar in Wathena and vicinity. Mr. Harding was prominent in territorial days. He was a member of the free state legislature and was among those who started Kansas "To the stars through difficulties."

D. W. Brown was elected in 1870, and served until 1872. The records show the organization and boundaries of the various districts and the alterations made in them.

D. D. Rose was elected in 1872 and served the county until 1878. The records then showed the names of teachers with their grades and the kind of certificate. It is interesting to note that the marking was on a scale of ten and covered ten subjects. It is surprising how many teachers made an average of ten. Among these, are the familiar names of F. F. Paige, who is still residing in Troy and maintains a lively interest in educational affairs; D. W. Brown, D. D. Rose, Edward Heeney, and H. F. Shaner—the last four mentioned later held the office of county superintendent.

Edward Heeney was the next incumbent and served until 1880. He used to visit the schools when he had to go horse-back because of poor roads. After leaving the office, which he filled most creditably, he went to Severance, where he has since been one of the leading business men. He is still interested in good schools and is active in politics. He is public spirited and does all he can to promote the community interests.

In 1880, H. F. Shaner took the office for the next six years. He married Nora Dunleavy, one of the most popular teachers of the county. Mr. Shaner was a keen business man and made a most competent superintendent. On leaving the office, he went to Topeka, where he held a position in the Rock Island Railroad offices. Later he was transferred to Chicago. His faith in the Kansas schools was shown when he and Mrs. Shaner decided to send their own daughter to the University of Kansas. His wish was gratified when she, having graduated, taught her first school in Doniphan County, where he had toiled so earnestly. Mr. Shaner died two years ago at his home in Chicago.

Oliver Edwards was elected in 1886. A sketch of his life was contributed by his daughter, Mrs. Anna Kelsey: "Oliver Edwards was born in Pennsylvania in 1839. After receiving a country school education, he went West and worked his way through college and graduated at Lebanon, Ohio, in 1861. While preparing for the law the civil war called him and he returned home to join the 15th Pennsylvania cavalry. He served throughout the war, saw extremely active service, and for a time was dispatch bearer between Generals Thomas and Rosecrans. In 1867 he came to Doniphan County and divided his time between farming and teaching. He maintained fish hatcheries of state-wide reputation. In 1886 he was elected on the Republican ticket without opposition. In 1888 he was re-elected by a large majority when there was a strong political combination against him. He was in feeble health, having never fully recovered from diseases contracted while in the service of his country. On Nov. 7th he suffered a paralytic stroke, and on the 8th he died. He was a man of upright, unselfish, Christian character, a natural teacher, one who taught by deeds as well as by words."

A. R. Graves was appointed to fill the vacancy. He is now living at Selma, California. The records then and now show quite a contrast in the schools. Then a number of schools maintained only a four months' term. The highest salary paid was $85.00, and the lowest was $25.00. Now no school maintains less than a seven months' term. The highest salary now is $133.33 and the lowest is $40.00.

Frances E. Katner was the first woman to hold office in this county. The voters made no mistake when they elected her to superintend the schools. For nearly five years she served most faithfully. About this time the state adopted a rural course of study, the completion of which entitled the student to a county diploma. Miss Katner, whose interest centered largely in the rural schools, encouraged the pupils to complete the course. The first class, composed of nine members, graduated in 1890. Upon leaving the office, Miss Katner taught in Haskell Institute and later in the Atchison County high school. Ill health compelled her to give up the work to which she had devoted the best years of her life and on February 11, 1911, she died. She wrought so well in the lives of both teachers and pupils that it may be truly said of her, "She rests from her labors and her works do follow her."

In 1894, Charles V. Norman entered upon the duties of the office and served for ten years. Under his able management, all the work continued to prosper. New and improved records were introduced. The Teachers' Associations flourished. Mr. Norman was a member of the State Reading Circle Board and president of the Northeast Kansas Teachers' Association. On leaving the office he established himself with his brother, John S. Norman, who had been a successful teacher and merchant, in the First National Bank of Troy, where they have a fine business.

In 1895, C. I. Vinsonhaler was chosen as superintendent, and he served in a most efficient manner until he re- It was during his regime that the signed in September, 1912, to become superintendent of the Wathena schools. Barnes law was adopted in this country; and there are now six high schools operating under this law. Mr. Vinsonhaler was honored by being appointed on the State Reading Circle Board, was president of the Northeast Kansas Teachers' Association, and was a member of the board appointed to revise the course of study.

On the resignation of Mr. Vinsonhaler, Edna S. Whitney, who was a candidate for the office, was appointed, and in the following November she was elected. Her chief desire is to promote the educational interests of the county along all lines. It is gratifying to note some of the improvements that have been made during the past two years. Model school houses have been erected in Bellevue, Pottawatomie and Oak Grove districts. A new district has been formed, known as La Grange, where they have built a new school house. Other districts have repaired and enlarged their buildings. Eighteen Waterman-Waterbury heating and ventilating systems have been installed, and a few sanitary drinking fountains have been introduced. These fountains do away with the individual cup, which becomes quite a problem in a school of fifty or more rural pupils, or 300 in thee town schools. It is to be hoped that these two improvements will speedily find a place in every school. They contribute not only to the physical, but also to the mental growth of the children.

Among the rural schools, Bellevue has by far the most up-to-date building. The people of that neighborhood have fine homes and two churches. When the old school house was burned, they thought it was economy to put up the best kind of a building. They invested $3,500 to make a roomy, comfortable building. If other boards contemplate doing likewise, let them visit Bellevue and see if it pays to invest some of their wealth in the best investment possible—that is, in the education of their own boys and girls. Oak Grove is a close second to Bellevue. They have a veneer brick building. The new lighting, heating, library and wide porch make it a most inviting place for the pupils of the community.

Palermo has built a two-room school, which is both pleasant and attractive. Leona and Blair both will build four-room school houses, and each will have a two-year high school course this year. Denton has a two-year course, and thus the pupils are given a longer period for learning.

A brief history of the high schools may be of interest. Prior to the adoption of the Barnes law, there were six high schools in the county. Troy, White Cloud and Wathena each maintained a three-years course, while Highland, Severance and Elwood maintained a two-years course. One teacher did the high school work. The enrollment was small, the pupils coming principally from the town schools. In 1908, Troy and Wathena were accredited and the following year White Cloud and Elwood came under the Barnes law. In 1912, Severance reached the standard, and in 1914, Highland high school took over the last two years, which had been under the jurisdiction of Highland College.

In 1908, Wathena had an enrollment of 23 students and Troy had an enrollment of 48. In 1915, Wathena had 82 and Troy 114 students. The other schools have increased proportionately. Tuition is free and this encourages pupils from the surrounding districts to take advantage of the high schools. Under the Barnes law, the county commissioners levy a tax on the total valuation, not to exceed three-fourths of one mill on the dollar, for the support of the schools. The state pays $500 to such schools as will maintain a domestic science and normal training department; and an additional $500 to a manual training and agricultural department.

Troy, Wathena and Highland have been maintaining the former, and this year they will introduce manual training. The normal training department is very popular and practical. At least one-third of our rural and graded teachers hold normal training certificates. This means four years of high school work and it should prove of great benefit to the teaching force of the county.

Miss Frances E. Katner

Troy had to build an addition, last year, at a cost of $20,000. Elwood is building a $21,000 wing, and White Cloud last year put $4,000 into an addition. Highland has moved into the college building, where the laboratory and fine library add very materially to the interest of the students.

The growth of the high schools is due largely to their efficient supervision. As all the superintendents have had much experience. C. S. Hambleton is superintendent of Troy; C. I. Vinsonhaler, of Wathena; J. A. Jones, of Highland; C. R. Hewins, of Severance; C. G. Landrum, of White Cloud, and C. F. Jones of Elwood. There are twenty-two high school teachers now employed and there are 358 students, 125 of these being from the rural schools. Parents are beginning to realize the advantages that high school training gives their children. The ideal condition would be to have every Kansas boy and girl within reach of a good high school.

There are four denominational schools in the county. Highland College is one of the oldest colleges in the state. It has sent many worthy sons and daughters out to make the world a better place. W. G. James is the president and works untiringly in its interests.

St. Joseph's parochial school is located at Wathena. The Rev. Joseph Elker is the parish priest. The curriculum covers eight years. Many of their graduates continue their high school work in Wathena.

St. Mary's parochial school is located at Purcell. This school maintains a ten-year course. The Rev. Robert Salmon is the parish priest.

The Evangelical Lutheran school is situated in Marion Township, and there the children are instructed in both German and English. At the request of the writer, the pupils sang "Die Wacht Amm Rhine." The Rev. Louis T. Ernest and wife, who have recently succeeded the Reverend Hoemann and wife, live at the manse and have a close supervision of the children.

The educational work of the county would not be what it is, if it were not for the loyal teachers who, through evil report and good report, stand faithfully at their post of duty. The story of the past has been one of progress and we look confidently toward the future, which is bright with promise.

shall reap. I believe in the curse of ignorance, in the efficacy of schools, in the dignity of teaching, and in the joy of serving one another. I believe in wisdom as revealed in human lives as well as in the pages of a printed book; in lessons taught not so much by precept as by example; in ability to work with the hands as well as to think with the head; in everything that makes life large and lovely. I believe in beauty in the school room, in the home, and out-of-doors. I believe in laughter, in love, in all ideals and distant hopes that lure us on. I believe that every hour of the day we receive a just reward for all we are and all we do. I believe in the present and its opportunities, in the future and its promises, and in the divine joy of living. Amen.—Edwin Osgood Grover.

Professor Charles I. Vinsonhaler

The Superintendent of the Wathena High School an Educator in Doniphan County for Twenty-Eight Years—Also Proficient in Mechanical Arts—Former President of the Northeast Kansas Teachers' Association, and Served on the State Text Book Commission.

Doniphan County, which from far back in the territorial years, has stood for the highest and best in public education, enjoys the distinction of having among its honored citizens an educator whose ability has on more than one occasion been recognized by the highset authorities of the state. He is Professor Charles I. Vinsonhaler, the present superintendent of the Wathena high school, former president of the Northeast Kansas Teachers' Association, for four years a member of the State Text Book Commission, and an educator in Doniphan County for thirty-eight years.

Professor Vinsonhaler is a native of the state of Missouri, born near Graham, Sept. 11, 1862, the son of Mr. and Mrs. D. M. Vinsonhaler. He received his start toward acquiring an education in the common schools of

Charles I. Vinsonhaler

Missouri and on coming to Kansas, finished his course in Doniphan County by attending Highland College, which had been founded by the Presbyterians. After an exceptionally good record as a student in Highland College he received the degree of bachelor of arts.

In those days Kansas was an inviting field for school teachers and this future educator, having fitted himself by practical training for professional work, lost no opportunity to enter upon his life work. He did not find it necessary to look far for an opening. The people of Doniphan County recognized his worth as a young man and as one qualified for educational work. He began teaching in the fall of 1887, and from that year to the present he has been identified with the educational interests of the country, making a record that has counted for progress.

After a few years of teaching he became superintendent of the Highland schools, where he gave splendid service for twelve years. In 1904 his ability was recognized by the people of the entire county by his nomination and election as county superintendent. He filled that position for eight years, devoting his energies to the building up of the schools to a high degree of educational efficiency. He has been constant in his devotion to his official duty and has found both pride and pleasure in seeing our schools take first rank among those of the state.

Aug. 26, 1912, Professor Vinsonhaler resigned the office of county superintendent to accept the position at the head of the Wathena high school, which he now holds. Here he is giving satisfaction to the patrons and is ambitious to make it the best high school for its size in the state.

This persevering and energetic man's ability as an educator and his successful methods of instruction won him popularity among the teachers of other counties and in 1909 he was chosen president of the Northeast Kansas Teachers' Association, which district embraces the teachers of more than twenty counties.

An additional honor came to him through his appointment by Governor E. W. Hoch as a member of the Kansas Text Book Commission, the duty of the commission being to select uniform text books for the schools of the entire state. In this, as in all others of his undertakings, Professor Vinsonhaler showed rare judgment and an intimate knowledge of the things that are essential to an education of practical value and use to the youth of the state.

The subject of this sketch holds a life state teachers' certificate and also an institute conductor's certificate. He is a man of striking personality and strength of character, enjoys the friendship of the teachers, pupils and patrons, and is a pleasing and entertaining conversationalist. He possesses a wonderful memory and so thoroughly is he versed in literature that he can quote for hours from Shakespeare, Longfellow, Tennyson and others of the poets and authors. He is skilled in mechanical arts, particularly in cabinet making, as was shown by the fine workmanship on desks and book cases he made for the office of county superintendent.

Charles I. was married to Miss Jessie C. Bowman on Oct. 10, 1910. She was a popular school teacher and a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Homer C. Bowman of Wathena. They are the parents of two children, William C., born Oct. 14, 1913, and Edith Estella, born March 19, 1912. The children, though of tender age, are unusually bright, affectionate and lovable, possessing the characteristics of their learned parents, and with the training they are to receive as they grow up we predict for them careers of usefulness and honor.

Professor and Mrs. Vinsonhaler and the children occupy a magnificent home in the northeast part of Wathena and enjoy the society of a large circle of friends. Both the Professor and Mrs. Vinsonhaler are delightful entertainers. While the ex-county superintendent is noted for his quotations from authors, Mrs. Vinsonhaler is considered a charming conversationalist and one whom it is a pleasure to know.

James Thomas Scott

James Thomas Scott, who resides near Brenner, is one of Doniphan County's most progressive and able farmers. He is thoroughly posted on all branches of agriculture and has made a fine financial success of his business in life on his beautiful and fertile 71 acres in Center Township. Here he may be found any day attending to the duties incurred in outdoor life and taking care of his magnificent stock and keeping up his fine residence and barns.

Mr. Scott was born April 19, 1855, on the Eugene Lancaster section. His father occupied the northwest quarter and was a prosperous and honored man. Mr. Scott received his early education in the public schools of the county. He had little opportunity for extended study, as in those days it was more necessary to till the soil and place the new, almost virgin soil of eastern Kansas, in the front rank where it belonged. Therefore, he left his books at an early age and went to farming.

On June 16, Mr. Scott married Miss Jane Kirby, daughter of an old and prosperous family, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Kirby. They immediately went to the old farm and began their life there. Some few years later, Mr. Scott purchased the fine 71 acres which he now owns and cultivates. To the union of the couple were born four children, Roy K., Alvy A., Raymond R., and Clyde Scott. The youngest two are receiving their education in the schools of the county, as did their father.

Mr. Scott is one of the most respected residents of Doniphan County. He has a home where the stranger is always welcomed, and where the latchkey hangs outside the door. He makes no specialty, but does a general farming business. Also he is interested in all of the civic movements which go to make up a better community, and is a progressive and excellent type of citizen. He enjoys the distinction of being the oldest person born in Doniphan County who is still within its confines.

His Mother's Cooking

He sat at the dinner table there,
With discontented frown;
The potatoes and the steak were underdone,
And the bread was baked too brown.

The pie too soon, the pudding too sweet,
And the meat was much too fat;
The soup so greasy too, and salt,
"'Twas hardly fit for a cat."

"I wish you could taste the bread and pie
I have seen my mother make;
They were something like, and 'twould do you good
Just to look at a slice of her cake."

Said the smiling wife, "I'll improve with age;
Just now I am but a beginner,
But your mother called to see me today,
And I got her to cook the dinner."

John Bowling, of the Kansas City Journal was in Troy June 14, 1894.

Miss Edna S. Whitney

A Native of Doniphan County—Twice Elected County Superintendent of Public Instruction—A Prominent Educator, Known for Her Sterling Worth.

Doniphan County is uniquely situated in having one of the noted educators of the state at the head of her public school system. The parents of the county have a good cause for gratification in the successive selection of the present superintendent of schools. A native product of Doniphan County Miss Edna S. Whitney has carried out the traditions of her ancestors and has developed a career proportionate with the highest ideals of womanhood and commensurate with the loftiest aspirations of her numerous friends.

Born in the thriving little city of White Cloud, Miss Whitney early developed a wonderful application for study and a memory which was characterized for its retentiveness and accuracy. Possessed of a most pleasing personality and endowed with all the attributes of true womanhood Miss Whitney encountered all obstacles in her educational career with that admirable equanimity which never fails to win success.

During her earlier years as a student in the public schools at White Cloud and later, while completing her education in the State Normal School at Emporia, Miss Whitney demonstrated that she was equipped with all the qualifications for a capable and successful teacher in the public schools. No matter how intricate or difficult the curriculum, she was always found excellent in her studies and passed all her examinations with credits to spare.

Upon securing a teacher's certificate, Miss Whitney's first position was as an instructor in the public schools of her native city of White Cloud. Later she taught successively in Troy and Wathena. In each of these educational institutions Miss Whitney upheld the reputation of the schools for learning and discipline and her pupils were graduated with a thorough knowledge of all the subjects calculated to be necessary to fight the battle of life.

After several years as an active and efficient teacher, Miss Whitney's true worth as an educator became a household word throughout the length and breadth of Doniphan County. Her energy and ability were recognized and her tact and executive skill were universally conceded. Her successful work in her chosen field was regarded as unequaled within the Sunflower state and unparalleled by any other woman in a similar profession in the country.

So it was not surprising that the county commissioners named Miss Whitney as county superintendent to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Charles I. Vinsonhaler. That was early in 1912 and she had served under the appointment almost a year when she was elected at the presidential election the following November and re-elected by a handsome majority at the state election on November 3, 1914.

The high esteem in which Miss Whitney is held throughout the county may be inferred from the fact that she received the support of all classes and parties, although there were other candidates in the field. It was in her home city of White Cloud, however, that Miss Whitney received the most substantial testimonial of her numerous friends on election day. The companions of her childhood and the older folks who had observed with interest her successful career, practically turned out in a body and gave her one of the largest majorities ever rolled up by any candidate at an election in White Cloud.

The Whitney family is one of the best known and most highly respected in the northeastern section of Kansas. The late O. C. Whitney, father of Miss Whitney, was one of the early pioneers of the state and served with distinction as a member of Company A, Seventh Kansas cavalry, during three of the most strenuous and exciting years of the Civil War. Mr. Whitney died April 15, 1901, twelve years after the death of his wife, January 29, 1888. There were six children in the Whitney family, one boy and five girls. Their names and the order of their birth follow: Hattie, Mrs. George W. Thrailkill, Kansas City, Mo.; Frank A., of Wathena; Jean, Mrs. W. Thudium, of Joplin, Mo.; Mrs. Anna Hollenbaugh of Kansas City, Mo.; Miss Joey and Miss Edna, the county superintendent, who reside in a cozy and handsome home in Wathena.

In concluding this brief sketch it might not be out of place to state that Miss Whitney has no particular hobbies of any kind. Her sole and undivided ambition is to give the best results to the people who placed her in such a high position of trust and responsibility. Past experience has taught Miss Whitney that the parents of the county are not unappreciative of her efforts to instill the most useful and modern subjects into the minds of the children. During the years that she taught school her success in that respect has been most pronounced and her greatest pride today is in the hundreds of young men and young women who were her pupils during the years she was a mild but firm "schoolma'am" in Doniphan County.

It was while traveling over the county in her campaign for re-election that Miss Whitney was touchingly gratified over the manifestations of affection and regard shown to her by numbers of her former pupils. They were not unmindful of the self-sacrificing efforts put forth by Miss Whitney in assisting them to acquire a solid education. They wanted to see her re-elected as superintendent not alone for what she had done for them, but in the firm belief that she was most eminently qualified to administer the office of county superintendent in a sound and judicious manner. So without solicitation on the part of Miss Whitney, her former pupils voluntarily and gladly offered their services in promoting her campaign with a result that more than compensated for their efforts.

Although possessed of many noble traits of character, there may be found through a little personal glimpse of Miss Whitney one of the grandest and noblest of all. While it is not generally known, Miss Whitney's younger sister, Miss Joey, is an invalid and consequently unable to make her own way along life's pathway. For many years the county superintendent has given the most tender care and loving devotion to the sister, and never feels happier than when ministering to the wants of Miss Joey. That fact alone shows that Miss Whitney has a truly human side to her character, which shines brighter than any earthly diadem and is destined to bring reward here and hereafter.

FIRST PRIVATE SCHOOL IN TROY

Established by Mrs. Frances Irene Soper, Who Came to Kansas Territory in 1859—School Was Opened by Mrs. Soper in 1860, and There Were Nineteen Pupils for the Three Months' Term—Two of the Pupils Were Lost in the War and Two of Them, Mrs. John Zimmerman and William Morehead, Reside in Troy Today.

The first private school to be taught in Troy was opened and conducted by Mrs. Frances Irene Soper, one of the old settlers of Doniphan County and at the present time a resident of Troy.

Mrs. Soper's maiden name was Miss Frances Irene Leland, her parents being the late Col. Cyrus Leland and his wife, Sarah A. Leland. She was married to Pliny Sherwood Soper on September 26, 1857, and came to the territory of Kansas in 1859.

When Mrs. Soper opened her private school in Troy in 1860, there were little or no educational facilities for the children whose parents desired to give them careful training.

Mrs. Soper's school had a three months' semester. It was located on the site of her present property, just north of her residence. There were nineteen pupils in Mrs. Soper's school. Two of the boys, James Hamner and Cyrus Fields, were killed in the Civil War. Two other of her pupils, Mrs. John Zimmerman and William Morehead, are still residents of Troy.

Mrs. Soper's husband was familiarly known as "Squire Soper," on account of the fact that he had held the office of justice of the peace for many years in Doniphan County. He died at his home in Troy, Jan. 4, 1904.

Mrs. Soper's son, Pliny L., had for many years been prominent in Republican politics. He was born July 6, 1861, in Troy, and died in Kansas City on April 26, 1913.

In the years before Oklahoma and the Indian Territory were admitted into the Union as one state, Pliny L. Soper was a leader in Republican politics in the Indian Territory. He had been appointed United States attorney for the northern district of the Indian Territory by President McKinley, and held the office during several successive administrations. He was a capable official and made life a burden for the horse thieves and bootleggers that infested the Indian country during the early days of his administration. All of that tribe he didn't run out he put in the penitentiary.

Rev. W. W. Clawson

The Rev. W. W. Clawson is a former minister who labored in Doniphan County at one time and will be remembered by many of the present residents. Rev. Clawson is now the pastor of a M. E. church at Sedan, Kan., where he has succeeded in winning a place for himself in the hearts of his congregation. His labors in his present field have been singularly effective.

The County Roster Is Composed of Progressive Men and Women Well Qualified for Public Service — All Imbued With the Spirit of Improvement—J. A. Jones, C. R. Hewins, J. R. Gibbins, Henry Lusk, Miss Margaret Larzelere, Miss Ida Bradley, Chas. Marble, C. I. Vinsonhaler, C. A. Jones, Prof. Landrum, Miss Yula Powell and Homer Dittemore Are Numbered Among the Prominent Teachers.

Doniphan County's public schools are showing a degree of efficiency, under the supervision of Miss Edna S. Whitney, our county superintendent of instruction, equal to the best in the state. This statement is based on the records as they may be found in the office of the state superintendent of schools. The past ten years has witnessed a wide improvement in the schools of the entire state, but in no county greater than here in Doniphan. The standard of education has been greatly advanced, and more bright young men and women have entered the educational field in the past few years than ever heretofore.

We can conceive of no greater calling in life, for education is the foundation of a higher and nobler citizenship, a civilizer that tempers the wildest savage and makes of his race a civilized and intelligent community of human beings.

It has revolutionized the world and standards planted in every clime and country, has disseminated knowledge and opened the eyes of savage and semi-barbarian to a higher sphere of life and usefulness. Hand in hand, the cohorts of education march in unison, both diffusing knowledge, inculcating morals and duties of a nobler citizenship. Therefore these were the very fundation of our great free government, the bulwark and hope of the race, without which progress would be stifled and knowledge become a synonym for ignorance and crime.

When we trace back to our early history, admiration gives place to wonder, and we are moved to speculation how such achievements could be possible in such a short period of time. Crude as we were, when the new-born nation became a free republic, when the nations of the old world had become hoary with years, yet we have reached within a century the highest position in history as a world leader—and lead the nations. Turning from this digression, we will say that in Kansas education has made progress and kept pace with the rapid development of the times. Here human development has mounted the flying of progress and traveled to empyrean heights, while hope, like a "poising eagle above the unrisen morrow," inspires to greater things.

That hope which blends the children of rugged manhood of the mine and factory with the graces of our higher civilization and gives them wisdom without weakness and culture without cowardice, that can incorporate them as corpuscles in the social organism and unionize the mighty forces that make for the emancipation of mankind a union of religion, of philosophy, science and learning. Here in Doniphan County, we are blessed with good teachers, such as J. A. Jones, Highland; C. R. Hewins, Severance; J. R. Gibbons, Henry Lusk, of Highland; Miss Margaret Larzelere, Miss Ida Bradley, Charles Marble and C. S. Hambelton of Troy; C. I. Vinsonhaler of Wathena; C. A. Jones of Elwood; Miss Yula Powell of Bendena; Homer Dittamore of Denton, and Professor Landrum of White Cloud, and a fine school system and a great degree of perfection has been obtained.

No state or confederation can be stronger than its weakest point. Doniphan County is the center and supporting pier of the bridge that carries us across the chasm of difficulty to the haven of promise and security.

Our progress in schools, in social and religious life, has much to do with the progress of other sections, for here in Doniphan County we are expected to plant a standard and set an example that others may follow. On the whole, our public servants have performed their work well, especially has our educational advancement been marked these past few years.

State Superintendent Ross is authority for the statement that the public schools of Doniphan County are in fine shape and better school buildings, better equipment and better teachers have been employed to bring to the highest degree of efficiency educational results, and a more perfect or efficient system does not exist in the state, and there is a charming unity of purpose among the teachers and pupils —a friendliness and concert of action that is quite marked and most encouraging to friends of education.

Forces That Make for Good Citizenship in Doniphan County

Doniphan County, beautiful for situation, cosmopolitan in spirit, invigorating in moral atmosphere, is blessed with many forces that make for good citizenship. It would be impossible, in the limited space allotted to this article, to enumerate or adequately treat all these forces.

The Chautauqua.

One of the forces that make for progress and civilization is great men

The old Troy public school building.

—men of thought, men of action, men with a message. No one will doubt the good that comes from contact with men good and great, men with thoughts ennobling and inspiring. These are brought to our very door by means of the chautauqua.

The Wathena chautauqua is to many a summer university, an annual "feast of tabernacles," the one intellectual sunburst of the year. The men and women who constitute the "talent" are among the great teachers and entertainers of the country, and give to the community a summer school of high value, and Wathena has one of the best of these summer assemblies.

The Public Schools.

The educational institution is another force in the making of good citizens. School age is the formative period of character, hence the school constitutes a potent agency in civilization. A democracy demands the education of all; to make men of all, schools are founded for the purpose of educating the people for good citizenship. To accomplish this work the schools must be well equipped, well endowed and watched over well. The teachers must be intellectually qualified and well disciplined.

The public school system of Doniphan County stands second to none in the state. Here is offered an opportunity for every girl, every young man and every young women within the county to secure an education.

The schools of Doniphan County aim to meet the requirements of an educational force in the making of good citizens. In equipment they are above the average, and the teaching staff is of exceptionally high moral quality and intellectual ability.

The Church.

The religious force must be considered as one of the greatest agencies in civilization. The church is a necessity in the world, because humanity needs the moral quality which she alone contributes to life. The supreme preparation for citizenship is the ethical motive that flows from the church. If our churches were closed, it would be a grievous public calamity. Liberty and self-government depend for success upon the character of citizenship, depend upon the spiritual convictions of a rational piety that emanate from the nature of the church. The influence of the church is helping men to most worthily fulfill their noblest ideals. It may be, and it probably is true, that the church does not reach as many people, relatively, through her direct administration, as in other days, but the church is reaching the people, nevertheless, and exerting a beneficent influence, but doing this, however, in other ways than formally.

The church, in placing the emphasis upon character, is now really helping to make men better, more manly, upright, loving, self-sacrificing, charitable, kind and helpful. In this developing good men the church becomes a real force in the making of good citizenship. The church may be faulty, but notwithstanding, she is now a greater force in civilization, and has now a greater influence, than ever before for the direction of man's higher life. Life today is extremely complex and man needs, perhaps, more than ever, the cultivation of his higher nature. The church furnishes the means for this cultivation. The church is set to develop noble thought and high emotion and carry these ever into conduct. The church is set to cultivate the attitude of good will toward all; to turn the hearts of men to love the good, the true and the spiritual and the beautiful.

The church is the one institution which stands for ethical and spiritual ideals. She stands for high and holy living. Take away the church in Doniphan County and life would degenerate. Take away the influence of the church, and government would become corrupt and society demoralized. The world needs a constant appeal to what is highest and best, a constant stimulation to noble endeavor in all departments of life. The church fulfills this need and hence is a force that makes for good citizenship.

Doniphan County is not wanting in religious influence. She is well supplied with good churches, from which go forth impulses which inspire and control the life of the community. The pastors of these churches stand ever ready to render any service for the public good. These churches, through the ministry and membership, create an atmosphere that is vitalizing and ennobling.

Here, then, are three of the forces, as represented in Doniphan County, that make for good citizenship: The chautauqua, the schools and the churches. These institutions may not be ideal in every way. They may be open to some criticism. The chautauqua program might be improved and thus made more effective as a moral force, but it is good.

The Wathena chautauqua boasts of furnishing to its patrons some of the best talent in the United States, and the following celebrities have spoken from its platform: Victor Murdock, Billy Sunday, Bob LaFollette, William Jennings Bryan, Detective Burns, Father Nugent, Doctor Cook, Senator Tillman, Governor Stubbs and many others who have won fame and national repute, Sam Jones, the celebrated evangelist, added much to its success previous to his death.

The schools might be made more efficient, but they are good; the churches might be more liberal, more practical, more ethical, more rational, but with the defects of all human institutions these are effective forces for good in the city and make life in Doniphan County worth living. As enthusiasm for humanity transforms these institutions, these institutions thus transformed will in turn transform society.

Popular Rock Island Conductor

The Rock Island Railroad lines out of Horton, Kansas, are certainly equipped with one conductor who is so accommodating and obliging that it would be against nature for him to ever make an enemy for the road.

This star veteran ticket puncher is Harvey Modeland, who has been with the Rock Island Company so long that all the passengers regard him as a permanent fixture.

Conductor Modeland is known among the fraternity as a "soft snap" man, or in more modern railway parlance as an "extra." He is eminently popular with every variety of travelers and is sure some favorite with the public.

Mr. Modeland has an established reputation of not being capable of making a mistake, but is continually making friends for his employers. He makes his home in Horton, where he has a good wife and a small bunch of ten children. He does not have to make regular runs any more, so he has a little more time to remain at home and get acquainted with his family.

Mount Vernon

The town of Mt. Vernon, which was situated on the river, directly north of Troy, where Joe Hargis now lives, was a promising town during the years of 1857 and 1858. The land for the townsite was bought from Samson Graves, Isaac Graves and Daniel Graves. A townsite company was organized Mar. 10, 1857, and Mr. Collins engaged in the mercantile business and Doctor Bowen also built an office. A grain house was built by a company. The town never amounted to much, and was afterward sold and turned into a farm, and a man by the name of Reed bought it from the townsite company. Mount Vernon was located on Sections 30, 19 and 20, Town 2, Range 22, in Center Township. It was entered as a townsite by a company under United States laws.

Statement of Frederick S. Moser

The first house built in Troy was the one where Chris. Jenkinson now lives. My brother, John Moser, and I, hauled the lumber to build the house from Geary City, from Flickinger's sawmill. There were no roads, and we followed the ridges. We hauled the lumber with three yoke of oxen, with a linch-pin wagon, and hauled enough to build not only the house above mentioned, but also enough to build a blacksmith shop. The blacksmith shop was built on the same foundation where Nicholas Theis' blacksmith shop stands today. We hauled the lumber for Nelson Rogers, who had the first house built. This lumber was hauled during the spring of 1856.

New Secretary of the Kansas State Historical Society Is Eminently Qualified by Intellect and Worldly Experience to Acceptably Fill the Position—Has Had a Varied Career and Is Unequivocally a Self-Educated and a Self-Made Man—Taught School Nine Terms in His Home State of Kentucky, and in Wyandotte County, Kansas.

The Kansas State Historical Society has been fortunate recently in the selection of a new secretary who possesses all the qualifications for acceptably filling that most important position.

The historical society of a state is one of the great institutions which all of the American commonwealths take intense pride in. The Historical Society of Kansas is the most potent factor in giving the people—not only of Kansas, but of the United States—the true history of events from the wild and unsettled territorial days up to the present time.

The world knows that there is more thrilling historical data connected with the great Sunflower State than that of any other state in the Union. The pioneers of territorial days did not have any history to go by. They had no Moses to lead them and no Aaron to direct. But they were pioneers in a frontier country, and they made their own history by blazing the trail for human freedom.

All histories will tell us now that had it not been for the early settlers in the Kansas territory, the question of slavery might be still a blot on the fair face of the United States. Those hardy pioneers set the pace for the liberation of the negro from captivity and they proudly shed their blood to accomplish the great cause for which American manhood was so soon to offer themselves for sacrifice on the altar of their country.

The Kansas State Historical Society has been in times past and present an organization that has done great work for the state and the people of other states. Its publications embodying the history of the state from early times have been read all over this and many other countries. The compilation of those histories has naturally fallen on the shoulders of the secretary and that official in past years has done his work with commendable ability.

Upon the resignation of George W. Martin, who for fourteen years had been secretary of the State Historical Society, William Elsey Connelley was elected to succeed him. Mr. Martin had done a great work during his incumbency and the directors of the society have since felt that they have made a most happy choice in the selection of his successor.

William Elsey Connelley, the new secretary of the Kansas State Historical Society, was named for the position on February 16, 1914. He is essentially a self-educated and self-made man. Deprived of the advantages of education in youth, his indomitable spirit soon asserted itself against any possible chance to go without learning through life. So he set about acquiring his own education while he was still a little boy.

How well Mr. Connelley succeeded may be ascertained from this fact, that at the age of seventeen years he had equipped himself—through his own application and efforts—with sufficient education to enable him to obtain a teacher's certificate.

Mr. Connelley was born in Johnson County, Kentucky, March 15, 1855. His parents were not overburdened with worldly possessions when he was a child, and he had to practically make his own way in the world from early boyhood. He grabbed on to books and studied at all hours of the day and night. Children of the present day would be looking for candy or knick-knacks at the age when he sought books for his pleasure. A book was a delight, and the most acceptable gift in his opinion. When he had reached his seventeenth year, Mr. Connelley began teaching in his home county, and held his school, with remarkable success for one so young, for nine terms. The pay was small and he decided to come to Kansas. With his brother, John, he arrived in Bonner Springs, Wyandotte County, on April 12, 1881. The two brothers were not what would exactly be called rich in the present day. They had 60 cents between them and were in a strange country without a single acquaintance. They had grit, though. The school term was about over, and there were no prospects along educational lines for William Elsey Connelley.

Both the Connelleys were husky boys, and they tackled the farm-hand game. William, during the succeeding summer, hired out to a farmer north of Bonner Springs for $15 a month. His employer was George P. Dunlap. When the harvest season was closed and the school season declared open, in the fall of 1881, Mr. Connelley secured a school for the winter term. The same course of events followed the next year, and the next, with variations.

Mr. Connelley took a keen interest in politics from the first day he arrived on Kansas soil, and the prestige gained from his position as school teacher, and his recognized ability in that calling, naturally brought him into prominence. There was a political campaign on and the voters selected Mr. Connelley to head the ticket as their candidate for county clerk of Wyandotte County at the election in 1883. He won, all right, and so satisfactorily had the office been conducted that he was re-elected two years later.

After leaving the office of county clerk with the completion of his second term, Mr. Connelley decided to embark in the wholesale lumber business, which he followed actively from 1889 to 1892, when he sold out his interests and engaged in the banking business in Kansas City, Kansas, which he continued from 1892 to 1897. He then removed to Beatrice, Nebraska, where he engaged in the abstract business.

Upon spending some time in Beatrice, Mr. Connelley located in Topeka, where he became connected with the publishing house of Crane & Company, and remained there until 1902, when he was appointed special pension examiner, and served two years. On leaving the pension department, in 1904, Mr. Connelley became interested in the oil business in Chanute, Kansas, and he remained there until 1905, when he instituted suit against the Standard Oil Company for operating a trust.

During the early fall of 1905 Mr. Connelley came back to Topeka and wrote several books on subjects pertaining to the current issues of the day. These books have a wide circulation and have been quoted as authorities in numerous instances where there were controversies on matters relating to civic and other forms of popular government.

When George W. Martin tendered his resignation as secretary of the Kansas State Historical Society early during 1914, Mr. Connelley was elected as his successor.

On January 13, 1885, Mr. Connelley was married at Council Bluffs, Iowa, to Miss Sarah A. Fife. They have one child living, Miss Edith MacGregor, who is at present curator of the museum of the Kansas State Historical Society.

Miss Edith McGregor Connelley has not been very long in charge as curator of the State Historical Society museum, but she has been a pronounced success from the time she first started. Her captivating manner is contagious and everybody who has business at the museum goes away happy.

Miss Connelley is acknowledged to be a master hand at her avocation, and she takes the most friendly interest in all matters that come under her jurisdiction. She is affable and obliging to all people who visit the museum and her chief aim in life seems to be to please everybody and attend to her duties as curator at the same time. While her position is a most difficult one she has that happy faculty of making the best of all situations and meeting the visitors to the museum with a friendly smile on all occasions. On account of the position of her father as secretary of the State Historical Society, Miss Connelley feels that she is obligated to the public to take as much interest in the work as if it were her own personal interest.

Mrs. Mary E. Montgomery

One of the best known and loved women in Kansas at the present time is Mrs. Mary E. Montgomery, widow of the late Franklin Cass Montgomery, who until his greatly regretted death in 1905, was conceded to be one of the most eminent newspaper men in Kansas or throughout the West.

Mrs. Montgomery was born in Salineville, Ohio, and was raised and educated in the schools of Alliance, that state. She came to Kansas in 1877, and on December 16, 1879, was married to Mr. Montgomery at Hays City, where her husband was editor of the Hays City Sentinel.

It is a well-established fact that Mr. Montgomery had few peers in the newspaper profession. He was born in Ohio in 1857 and came to Lecompton with his father in 1859 or 1860. During the late '60's, while still a mere boy, Mr. Montgomery started to learn the printing trade at Lawrence, and when eighteen years old was considered a master of the craft.

Mr. Montgomery's father, W. P. Montgomery, in December, 1874, went to Hays City, where he bought the Sentinel, and Franklin C. did all the work until 1881, when he decided to go to Washington territory. That year he took charge of the Cheney (Wash.) Sentinel, of which publication he was editor and manager for some time.

Frank C. was later connected with the Tacoma Ledger one year as editor, and was with the Olympia, the state official paper, in a similar capacity for the same period of time. He then went to Seattle, where he was one of the founders and editor of the Times, until 1888, when he concluded to return to Hays City, where he again took charge of the Sentinel.

In 1894 Mr. Montgomery gave up his interests in Hays City and went to Topeka, where he became connected with the Mail and Breeze until 1896, when he became associate editor and correspondent of the Kansas City Journal.

During his connection with the Journal he had ample field to demonstrate his newspaper ability, which he did in grand style. He was a fluent writer, a keen observer of all events of the day, and was possessed of a powerful, analytical mind. His work was of the highest order, and his death on May 31, 1905, was regretted keenly by his associates and public men generally.

There were three children born to the Montgomerys, all boys. They are sons any mother might well take pride in. They are Franklin Terence, a civil engineer; Paul Milner, an electrical engineer, and William Penn, assistant attorney-general of the State of Kansas, who has assisted in making life a burden for the jointists since his appointment to this responsible position. Those who know him best around the state house predict that he has a bright future before him.

George A. Root

George A. Root has the distinction of having been continuously employed as clerk at the headquarters of the State Historical Society in Topeka for almost twenty-four years.

He first entered the service in 1891, and his work has been of such an accurate and conscientious character since that time that he has been retained under various administrations until the present.

Mr. Root is one of the active spirits in the historical rooms, which are regarded as being the most important asset of the Society. His ability comes to him naturally, for his father, Frank A. Root, was one of the early pioneers of Kansas, and at one time was a leading figure in the management of the Highlander, at Highland.

George A. Root was born March 13, 1867, at Atchison. When he was three years old his father and family moved to Waterville, Kansas, and later to Seneca. They next settled in Holton, and in 1875 took up their residence at Topeka, where George A. was educated in the public schools and grew to manhood.

George A. Root continued to make his home in Topeka until 1881, when he moved to Gunnison, Colorado, but he returned to Topeka in October, 1886, where he has since resided. During the year 1891 he was appointed a clerk in the historical rooms of the State Historical Society, where he has since been continuously active.

George A. Root

Mr. Root was married to Miss Minnie J. Van Cleave on December 21, 1892. The Roots have a nice home at 324 Lindenwood avenue. They have a fine family of five children to bless the union. Their names and dates of birth are as follows: Julien Van Cleave, born November 27, 1893; Marsala Evelyn, born January 12, 1898; Herbert Clark, born December 2, 1900; Melvin Allen, born July 28, 1905, and Marian Emma, born June 4, 1909. All the Root children are living except Marsala Evelyn, who died on June 20, 1912, five months and eight days after her fourteenth birthday.

Miss Ruth Cowgill

Educational training for successful library work has placed Miss Ruth Cowgill of the State Historical Society library, in a grand position to exercise her talents.

Miss Cowgill is a native of Sterling, Kansas, and is the daughter of E. D. Cowgill, formerly editor of the Sterling Bulletin. Her early education was acquired in the public schools of Sterling, and later at Washburn College, in Topeka.

After leaving Washburn, Miss Cowgill took a course in Brooklyn, where she familiarized herself with every feature of library work. The course she took was thorough and has enabled her to become an adept in her chosen profession.

About four years ago Miss Cowgill was appointed to a position on the staff of the librarian of the Kansas State Historical Society, and her achievements in expert work since then have demonstrated her intrinsic worth to the Society.

William E. Bacon

The Kansas State Historical Society is noted for the efficiency and accommodating nature of the corps of clerks attached to the different departments. It is a well-known fact that it takes exceptional ability to capably fill the responsible position of newspaper clerk in any well regulated library, and more particularly so with a state historical society.

William E. Bacon, who for almost fifteen years has been newspaper clerk in the Kansas State Historical Society, seems to have been born and made for the work. His position is right along the lines of his intellectual bent and he takes the utmost delight in keeping his files with the greatest accuracy.

It is an old adage that the most delicate work in all creation is that of watchmaker, and Mr. Bacon has had some years' experience as an expert in that line of human endeavor. He was practical in his calling and used to make watches for a livelihood in his more youthful days. Consequently, it is small wonder that he has been a valuable adjunct to the State Historical Society in the management of the newspaper room.

William E. Bacon was born in Burlington, Coffey County, Kansas, on the glorious Fourth of July, 1875. His parents were patriotic, all right. He was educated at Leroy and Olathe, Kansas, and upon leaving school he engaged with his father in the jewelry business in Oklahoma City, where he made watches and sold goods between times.

After a number of years, William E. Bacon came to Topeka, and when George W. Martin was made secretary of the State Historical Society, in 1900, he looked around for a competent newspaper clerk. July 1, 1901, Mr. Bacon was placed in charge of the newspaper department, and he has been there ever since.

Mr. Bacon was married on September 4, 1908, to Miss Effie D. True, of Junction City. They reside at 1121 West Eleventh street, Topeka.

Miss Clara Francis

The position of librarian with any body is a most important one, because it takes consummate tact and executive ability of the highest order to properly perform the duties.

Miss Clara Francis, librarian of the Kansas State Historical Society, is a young woman who is admirably adapted for the position she so efficiently fills. She is endowed with the brains and equipped with the education for the work.

Miss Francis is a native Kansan. She is the daughter of John Francis, for several terms a member of the state legislature from Iola. She was born there. Miss Francis was educated in the schools of Topeka, and at the College of the Sisters of Bethany. Later she attended the University of Minnesota, where she became proficient in all branches of library work. She has been employed at the Historical Society since 1903 and her work has been marked by the most general satisfaction.

What the State Historical Society Is.

The Historical Society was organized in 1875. F. P. Baker, editor of the Commonwealth, generally known over Kansas as "Father" Baker, was the first secretary. The society was organized by the newspapers of Kansas. Father Baker resigned in a few weeks after he was elected secretary, and Judge Franklin G. Adams was elected to fill the vacancy. Judge Adams was secretary until his death, in December, 1899. George W. Martin was elected to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Judge Adams. He continued as secretary of the society until the 16th day of February, 1914, when he resigned because of illness. William E. Connelley was elected to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Mr. Martin. Mr. Martin died on the 27th day of March, 1914.

The Historical Society has had a wonderful growth. It is now one of the largest in the United States. In fact, the Wisconsin Society is the only one really larger than the Kansas Society. The society receives and binds into volumes, every newspaper and magazine published in Kansas. We have nearly 45,000 volumes of bound newspapers. This is the largest newspaper collection in the world. It furnishes Kansas the most complete history that any state has. Other collections of the society are shown as follows:

|---|---|
| Volumes of books | 42,931 |
| Pamphlets | 149,979 |
| Department of archives | 149,851 |
| Manuscripts | 44,628 |
| Pictures | 9,127 |
| Maps, atlases and charts | 7,616 |
| Relics, coins, scrip, etc. | 9,809 |

This society belongs to the people of Kansas and is at their service. Any resident of Kansas is at liberty to write to the society for any information desired. The society will furnish this information if it is possible to obtain it. There is no charge for anything the society does; all its services are free to the people.

The society issues publications which are sent free to its members. Among these publications I will mention the biennial report of the secretary and the Kansas historical collections. The latter is issued every two years, contains nearly 600 pages, has illustrations and maps, and is filled with articles on Kansas history.

The membership of the society is divided into two classes. There are annual members and life members. Annual membership costs $1 a year, and life membership costs $10. Any citizen of Kansas of good character, is eligible to membership, and will be made a member by remitting the fee.

The collections of the society are very valuable, the appraised value of the property of the society for the year ending July 30, 1914, as returned to the secretary of state, is $1,125,000. The State Historical Society is one of the big institutions of Kansas. Invitation to become members of the society is hereby extended to the people of Kansas. The society is now in the Memorial building, the finest structure in Kansas, which has cost, to the present time, $474,000. It is a magnificent home. The people of Kansas should have great pride in this building and this society.

Miss Helen McFarland

Miss Helen McFarland, who is cataloguer at the Kansas State Historical Society in the Memorial building at Topeka, was born in Topeka. She is the daughter of Judge and Mrs. J. D. McFarland. Her brother, Hugh McFarland, is probate judge of Shawnee County.

Miss McFarland was educated in the ward schools of Topeka, in the Topeka High School, and at Washburn College of that city. She qualified herself for her work by taking a course in library work at Simmons College at Boston, Massachusetts. She has been cataloguer at the State Historical Society for three years and is most efficient. She has five brothers and three sisters. The McFarlands live at 1100 Harrison street, Topeka.

Mrs. McFarland, mother of Miss Helen, is one of the prominent equal suffragists of Kansas as well as an enthusiastic temperance worker. Cooperating with Mrs. Lila Day Monroe, she had much to do with securing of equal suffrage for Kansas. She also was instrumental in obtaining more drastic legislation for the temperance cause in this state.

Mrs. McFarland is among Kansas' brightest women and in her operations is as fearless and formidable as a "dreadnaught" battleship. She has a wonderful tenacity and never gives up until she accomplishes her undertaking. In addition to her great executive ability she has a wide sympathy for mankind and ways that have won her a host of friends. Aside from her interest in equal suffrage, she devotes considerable of her time in various phases of women's clubs, and is widely known among the club women of Kansas.

Mrs. F. S. Savage, clipper at the library, is the widow of the late F. S. Savage, who was the widely known and most popular publicity agent for the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad. He died in Topeka, about two years ago.

Mrs. Savage took up her work as clipper April 1, 1915, and her duties are to clip historical items from the daily papers which come to the Historical Society. She is conscientious and thorough in her work.

The Father of St. Joseph

In searching for characters in the early history of Doniphan County, one naturally runs across the name of Joseph Robidoux, who was the first Indian trader to the Iowas and Sacs and Foxes in both Missouri and Kansas.

Robidoux made his headquarters in St. Louis, originally, before coming to the banks of the Missouri River, where he founded the present city of St. Joseph, in the early part of the last century. He is known to have been of French parents, but was believed to have a strain of Canadian Indian blood in his veins.

The trader made a great hit with the Indians by his apparent liberality in giving them presents, and he managed to retain their confidence, despite their apparent knowledge that he never failed to take the long end of every bargain. The trading was a natural gift with the French-Canadian and there are many anecdotes of the facility with which he exchanged worthless knick-knacks with the Indians for valuable furs and skins.

Robidoux was a man of the keenest vision, and he always kept his eyes on the lookout for his own interests. Robidoux's father was an early settler of St. Louis and was a member of the first legislature of Missouri. Joseph Robidoux, his son, was born there in 1780. He was a man of strong character and was known to fail but once in any undertaking he set his mind to accomplish. That was in 1854, when the treaty with the Iowas and Sacs and Foxes provided large annuities for the members of these tribes. The deal which Robidoux attempted to put through was original, and if he had not been forestalled he would have profited by it. This is how it came about:

Robidoux had been trading with the Iowas and Sacs and Foxes of Missouri in the early '40's, when he sold out to John W. Forman. Mr. Forman at about the same time bought out the trading rights of John W. Alley, who had a trading house in Alley's Grove, which was the timber north of Michael Humm's farm house, in the vicinity of Highland. After the treaty of 1854 Robidoux saw a great opportunity to make a pile of money out of the Indians and he applied to Major Vanderslice for a trader's license, but his reputation for questionable dealing in former years was against him and the license was refused.

Robidoux had considerable influence with some Western politicians of national repute, and he managed to procure a license over the major's protest. Just before the first payment was to be made to the Indians, the crafty old trader opened a store in a two-room brick building just north of the Mission. Mr. Forman was the old Indian trader, and it was Robidoux's game to win over the Indians and freeze out his competitor. By judicious methods in presenting gifts to the chiefs he formulated a plan by which they were to cheat Mr. Forman out of the money due him from the tribes.

The law allowed the traders to credit the Indians so much per head, or in the case of the head of a family, to give him credit to the amount of $10 for each member. They had a credit with Mr. Forman amounting to about $14,000, which was exhausted, and he was waiting to get his money at the annual payment by the government. At the instigation of old Robidoux, the heads of the families, in making out their payroll, swapped off their offspring to those that had none. For instance, the Indian that had five gave four of his family to the man that had only himself and consequently owed only for one person; so that when he drew his annuity he drew for five, and only had one credit to pay, while the man with five drew only for one and, therefore, could only have one to pay for. This scheme was perfect, and had it succeeded would have cheated Mr. Forman out of four-fifths of his money. But Major Vanderslice detected the attempted fraud, as he was acquainted personally with some of the Indians, and knew how many there were in several of the families. He promptly suspended all payments until a full investigation was made into the scheme, and when he learned that it had been framed up by Robidoux, he chased him away from the Mission.

Joseph Robidoux, the Founder of St. Joseph.

The original old man Robidoux had a son, Joe, Jr., who was an early timer in what is now Doniphan County. He was born in St. Louis in 1800, and early in life developed a wonderful aptitude for trading, like his father, but was generally fair in his dealings. He was of a wild disposition, and spent his whole life among the Indians, being known among all the tribes of North America. It was often said that much of his father's success was due to Joe, Jr., because of the confidence the Indians reposed in him.

Joseph Robidoux, Jr., died on the Iowa reservation near White Cloud in the early '70's, and is said to have left over a score of half-breed children scattered among the different tribes he had visited during his earlier years. He had been living on the reservation for a number of years prior to his death, and is said to have been broken hearted because of the manner in which his progeny had been separated

Ex-Governor John P. St. John

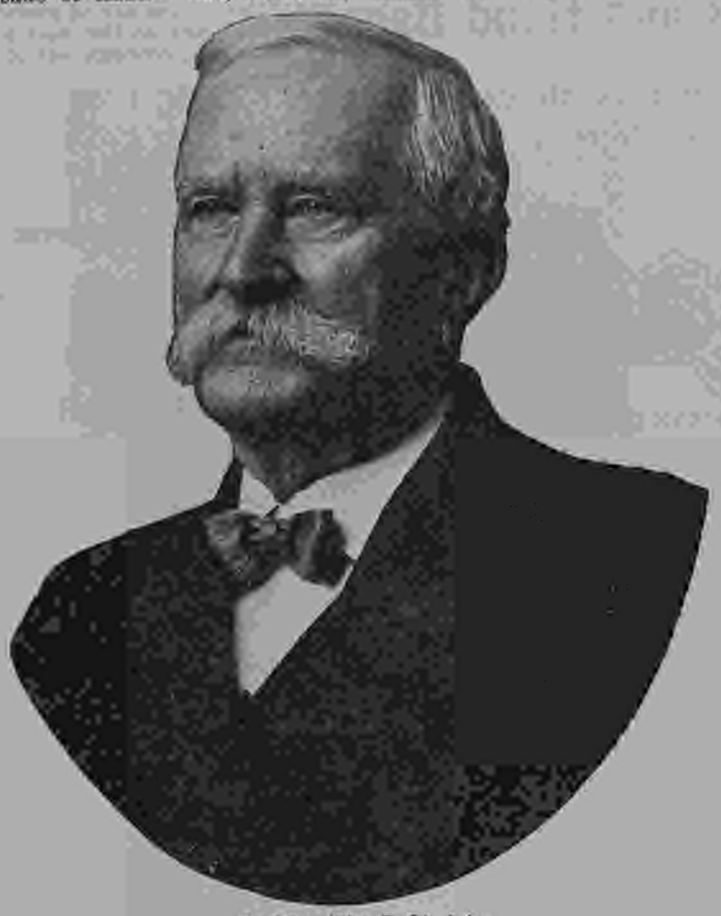
On State and National Prohibition—Mrs. Greever of Wyandotte County Was True to the Prohibition Movement.

About thirty-five years ago there was pending in the lower house of the Kansas legislature an amendment to the constitution of the state, prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage in this state, the senate already having adopted it by a large majority. When the vote was taken in the house, it lacked just one vote of having the necessary constitutional majority to submit the question to a vote of the people.

This was an awful, sad moment. Fathers and mothers who had worked hard and spent freely of their limited means to elect a sufficient number of members to win, were thus at last confronted by what seemed to be defeat. But just at that critical moment, before Speaker Sidney Clark announced the vote, a woman came to the rescue. It was Mrs. Greever, wife of a Democratic husband, a member from Wyandotte County, who confronted him and begged him, for the sake of their children, for his own sake, for her sake, and for the sake of Kansas—and, above all,



Ex-Gov. John P. St. John

for God's sake—to change his vote from no to aye. He paused for a moment, and then, standing erect and facing the speaker, in a plain and manly tone, he said, "Mr. Speaker, I change my vote from no to aye."

And thus it was through the courage and wisdom of a woman and the final vote of a Democrat, the question was sent to the people, who ratified the amendment at the ballot box by a majority of eight thousand.

Nearly all the politicians were against prohibition or neutral. The country press was divided, and all the metropolitan journals were against it, except the Topeka Capital, owned and controlled by Maj. J. K. Hudson, as brave and true a friend as Kansas ever had, who never wavered, but stood firmly on the side of the people in their efforts to suppress the worst enemy that ever cursed mankind.

We have now had prohibition thirty-four years. What has been the result? Why, today all political parties, all the newspapers, and all the politicians in the state are for it but one, and he was a candidate for governor at the last election on a resubmission platform, and the voters snowed him under by a majority of 434,000.

When the people adopted prohibition, Kansas was known as the "wild and woolly West," dotted with saloons, gambling dens and other evil resorts. Today there is not a saloon or gambling den in the state, and ninety-six of the one hundred and five counties are without a common drunkard. The dugouts of the past have given way to comfortable homes, and the sod school houses of the saloon days have been supplanted by buildings that are a credit to the state, and thousands of children, many of them nearly full grown, being educated therein, never saw a saloon nor drunk man, in Kansas.

Kansas is only fifty-four years old, and yet she has more miles of railway, in proportion to population, than any other state or territory in the wide world. She has the greatest per capita wealth, the lowest death rate, and less illiteracy and fewer prisoners in the penitentiary, in proportion to population. Of the 753 prisoners in the penitentiary, only nine are females, and 40 per cent of the remainder are not bona fide residents of Kansas, but stragglers who came in from other states. We have a greater percentage of sober men and less percentage of wife beaters than any other state. We have more students in our colleges in Kansas than any other state in the Union, in proportion to population. Kansas produces more wheat, in fact twice as much as any other state in the Union.

But some may say, "What has this to do with prohibition?" The wheat has nothing to do with prohibition, but prohibition has a lot to do with the wheat crop. We have no saloons in Kansas, where farmers can congregate and waste their time, money and manhood, and bring degradation, misery and poverty to their homes. Kansas farmers are sober, industrious men. They plow in season, sow and reap in season, market in season, and know what to do with their money when they get it. They don't squander it in riotous living, or go to town in a cart, drawn by an old, tired plow horse, they ride in an automobile, and take the wife and little ones with them. There is not a more intelligent, moral and warm-hearted people on earth, than the Kansas farmers. Instead of being the "wild and woolly West" of days long past, Kansas today is typical of the highest civilization.

When the Hobson constitutional amendment, prohibiting the liquor traffic, was being considered by the lower house of Congress, no one dared to come out openly and defend the liquor traffic as a good thing, but resurrected the old, defunct doctrine of state rights, which was buried with negro slavery fifty years ago. It was claimed that the liquor question must be dealt with solely by the states. Let us see whether that position has any foundation, either in law, history or common sense. Could the states abolish the liquor traffic in the District of Columbia? Could the states abolish it in the territories? Could the states abolish it in any of the outlying islands? Could the states prevent interstate commerce in intoxicating liquors? Could the states prevent the general government taxing intoxicating liquors, or issuing permits to sell it anywhere under the folds of the American flag? The answer to each of these questions must be in the negative.

Can the general government prohibit the manufacture, importation, exportation, transportation, sale and even the use for beverage purposes, of intoxicating liquors? Surely it can, and can do it without amending the Constitution. Has not Congress recently passed a very stringent law in relation to the sale of certain kinds of drugs? Have we not a national pure food law? Surely we have. Then why should these defenders of the liquor traffic act as buffers to ward off the blows that are being aimed at the world's greatest evil?

The liquor traffic is a ten-fold worse evil than negro slavery ever was. Slavery fed, clothed, sheltered its victim, paid his doctor bill, and did not destroy his immortal soul, but the liquor traffic robs its victim of food, fuel, clothing and shelter, and pays no doctor bills, and if what the Bible says is true, it destroys his immortal soul, for the liquor traffic makes drunkards, and we are told that "No drunkard can inherit the kingdom of God."

Thus the liquor traffic robs heaven and fills hell with its victims.

One of the state questions in 1916 will be the election of congressmen, and the people will see to it that the members who on the 22d of December, 1914, voted against the Hobson amendment, lest to do otherwise they might offend the liquor traffic, will be given a perpetual leave of absence, and then they can go away back and sit down and feel ashamed of themselves, and at the next election, will be ready to make oath that they were always for prohibition. Five years from now there will not be a legalized saloon in the United States.

JOHN P. ST. JOHN.

Peterstown, W. Va., Nov. 24, 1914.

Dear Sir:

In answer to your question, would say that W. P. Symns went to Doniphan about the year of 1857, and opened a small store on the east side of Main street. This house was wrecked by a windstorm the next year, and he then moved across Main street to brick building.

A. B. Symns was a partner in this business, but he at this time was clerk on a steamboat that plied the Missouri river (the Hesperian). He also owned an interest in the boat. About the year 1858 he quit the river and settled in Doniphan, enlarged the store, and carried on a mercantile business there until November, 1862. Jim Lane's "Jayhawkers" robbed them and this ended the partnership there.

A. B. Symns remained there and continued the mercantile business for several years. Jo Symns did not show up there until September, 1865. He began clerking for A. B. Symns and remained in that position for several years. He never was a partner. When he quit there, he went to the country, bought land, and farmed.

The government land office was moved from Doniphan before 1860 as, at that time, the old land office was used for town hall and church.

There was no daily paper there when I was in Doniphan. George Ruse and brother ran the Doniphan Post, a small weekly. At this time Henry McDivet ran the flour mills, Adam Brenner was merchandising there, Mr. Low ran the only hotel, A. R. Forman the drug store, and William Mathena the only saloon. Mr. Smallwood ran the wagon shop and Mr. Weyer the blacksmith shop.

This is all I can think of at this time. Yours very truly,

S. Y. SYMNS.

Judge James W. Witten

CONDUCTED THIRTY-THREE LAND OPENINGS

Judge James W. Witten Was Connected With the General Land Office in Washington For Over Twenty Years as Chief Legal Adviser.

The resignation of Judge James W. Witten, as chief legal adviser to the commissioner of the general land office, was received with expressed regret by his superiors and by the public generally, who want to see an upright and competent official retained in office.

Judge Witten did not quit the service of the government because of any friction or differences with his superior, but for the very good reason that he could earn more money in the practice of law than as an employe of the government. His retirement was regretted by the secretary of the interior, who did not want to part with such a capable official, but as there was no provision made for an increase in Judge Witten's salary, the secretary was powerless to remedy the situation.

When the resignation of Judge Witten became known, the newspapers of every large city in the country gave utterance to the words that it was a sad commentary on our system of government when a faithful public official is obliged to resign in order to earn a competency at private practice. The papers dwelt at length editorially on Judge Witten's capabilities and on his success in administering the complicated affairs in the land office. His always took a great interest in the welfare of the settlers on the new lands, and evinced a particular interest in the homesteads of the Rosebud, South Dakota, agency, familiarly known as the Western garden spot of the United States.

Judge Witten conducted the openings of all the Rosebud lands except the first one, which was held at Bonesteel, South Dakota, eleven years ago.

His more important openings were as follows: Oklahoma pasture lands in 1906, Huntley project of Montana and lower Brule of South Dakota, 1907; Flathead, Mont.; Coeur d'Alene in Idaho; Spokane in Washington; Cheyenne River and Standing Rock in North and South Dakota in 1909; Rosebud (Tripp County), in 1909; Fort Berthold in North Dakota and Rosebud and Pine Ridge in Millett and Bennett counties of South Dakota in 1911, and Fort Rock, Montana, 1913.

Throughout all of these openings, Judge Witten preserved the strictest neutrality and in no way laid himself open to the suspicions of those who might be interested. So that there would be no favoritism among the newspaper correspondents, who were legion, he gave up a portion of his time twice a day to all of them, so integrity and unerring judgment were graphically referred to and his successful handling of so many land openings was given as a sufficient reason for his retention in the public service.

In presenting his resignation, Judge Witten said that he very much regretted to sever the pleasant relations he had with the department for so many years, and under different political administrations, but said he felt he owed a duty to his family to make provision for them in the future, and this he was unable to do on the salary paid him as a servant of the government. In accepting Judge Witten's resignation, Secretary of the Interior Franklin K. Lane, said the records of the department and the commendations of his predecessors in regard to Judge Witten's ability and faithfulness were sufficient testimony of his worth as a public official, and he regretted the fact that the judge was obliged to leave the government service.

Since his retirement from office it has been stated on trustworthy authority, that in his private law practice in Washington, Judge Witten has earned more than he received in two years in salary from the government. His practice is chiefly on land law matters on which he is a recognized authority and his friends predict that it is bound to increase in such volume that the judge will be required to engage a corps of assistants before very long.

During the many years that Judge Witten was connected with the general land office he superintended thirty-three openings and sales of Indian lands, and was the official who formulated and put into effect the popular lottery plan which was so successfully carried out in a number of the land openings of recent years. He that they might question him and gain what information was desired. His record truly was one of efficiency and loyalty to the government which he served.

The Bonesteel opening was the first of the Rosebud land lotteries, and registration began July 2, 1904. It was conducted by Judge John McPhaul, an official of the general land office, who succeeded Judge Witten when the latter resigned from the government service. That opening is one of the darkest blots on the pages of the Interior Department history. Announcement of the opening had been spread broadcast throughout the country and attracted the scum of the large western cities to Bonesteel, bent on robbery and plunder. Thugs and desperadoes from Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City, Omaha, Denver, St. Paul and Minneapolis, flocked to Bonesteel and actually took possession of the town. The local officials were powerless to protect the thousands of land-seekers who went to register for the drawing, and drunken fights and robbery were hourly occurrences. Judge McPhaul had no authority over the lawless element, as he was purely a government official there on land office business, and Chief of Police O'Brien seemed unable to cope with such a lawless element. Judge McPhaul was so disgusted that he confided to reporters A. F. Arthur of the Des Moines Register and Leader and Walter B. Montgomery of Troy, Kan., who represented a syndicate of metropolitan dailies, that he preferred the general routine of work in the Washington office, and there is no record of him being present at any other land opening, until after Judge Witten's retirement. It is said that the thieves, crooks and grafters became so brazen that they even locked the police in jail, so as to prevent the officers from interfering with their trade. Men were slugged and robbed and two were murdered by the lawless element, and so notorious had their operations become that Governor Charles N. Herreid visited Bonesteel to ascertain the existing conditions. Finally a vigilance committee was organized at the suggestion of Governor Herreid, who rounded up the lawbreakers and ordered over 1,000 of them out of town. The governor was emphatic in his denunciation of such conduct, and threatened to call out the militia if the lawless element did not surrender, and through his efforts order was restored from chaos.

The next opening of the Rosebud lands in Tripp County was at Dallas, four years later. It was conducted by Judge Witten, and was characterized by the absence of any manner of law breaking. The third opening of Rosebud and Pine Ridge lands, was held at Gregory, Millette and Bennett counties, in 1911, which was also conducted by Judge Witten, assisted by Clarence G. Fisher and Mr. and Mrs. Frank L. Wood, all of whom are connected with the general land office. Mr. and Mrs. Wood and Mr. Fisher arranged all the preliminary details and Judge Witten personally conducted the drawing. During the latter days of the opening, Judge Witten was assisted by his son, Nash, now a promising cartoonist, with every indication that he will be a strong rival of McCutcheon and other top-notchers for popular honors. Frank Wood is now assisting Judge McPhaul in the openings and sales of public lands throughout the West, and Mr. Fisher holds a responsible position in the general land office in Washington.

The towns in the Rosebud sprung up like a phoenix in the night, and they have gown in size and importance out of all proportion to the hopes of the promoters and early settlers. Beginning at Fairfax, the county seat of Gregory County, there is a series of thriving towns all along the line of the Northwestern Railroad, to its projected terminus at Carter. Included in the list is the famous Bonesteel, St. Charles, Herrick, Bueke, Gregory, Dallas, Colome, Winner and Carter, at the end of the projected line. All of these towns are exceptionally good markets for Doniphan County apples, and this fall Jim Fahey and N. S. Babcock expect to ship many cars into that section of the country.

The residents of these towns are all prosperous, and have the most sanguine hopes in their future, with the exception that they never expect to grow apples as successfully as Doniphan County. The country surrounding them is fertile and the farmers are either wealthy or in a fair way to become so. In addition to the towns named as being along the railroad line, there are a number of inland towns in both Gregory and Tripp counties, all of which are located in good territory and doing considerable business. John Keckler, who left Troy about ten years ago, is well satisfied with that country which lies near Gregory. The hotel accommodations in all of the railroad towns are of the best, and even Carter, although not yet reached by the Northwestern road, has an elegant $20,000 hotel for the comfort of travelers to and from the most recently opened sections of the Rosebud country, notwithstanding the fact that they are located twenty miles from the Northwestern railroad.

In referring to the towns in the Rosebud it might not be amiss to state that each one is noted for the activity of its citizens in boosting the advantages and thereby attracting settlers to both the town and the adjacent territory. This is especially true of Gregory and Dallas, which are rival claimants for first honors in point of population and general importance. Dallas has five good boosters, and Gregory has eight, and they work with unceasing efforts. Burke is also a hustling community and has been making a strenuous fight to capture the county seat, now located at Fairfax. Gregory and Dallas fought desperately for this distinction, and lost out on account of the fact that the boosters of each were so evenly matched in ability and activity, that neither side won, and the county seat remained where it has been from the first. Casual observers often marvel at the tact used by the voters of Fairfax to hold the court house. Gregory and Dallas have long since realized that had they united their forces they could have brought the county seat nearer home and had a second New York City right in the heart of the Rosebud.

The phenomenal growth of the Rosebud country is due in most part to the energy and hustling qualities of the Jackson brothers, of Dallas, but formerly of Des Moines, Iowa. They are the sons of ex-Governor Jackson of Iowa, and have inherited all the business acumen and foresight of their distinguished father. On going to the Rosebud country the Jackson boys promoted Dallas and a number of other towns along the line of the Northwestern Railroad, and they are indefatiguable in proclaiming the great opportunities to be gained by having a permanent residence in the Rosebud.

There are newspapers by the dozen in the Rosebud. Every town and small settlement with aspirations to some day become a town, has one, and some have two. The pace for newspapers was set by Nettie Baumgardner, who was the pioneer publisher in that country. She founded the first paper printed in the Rosebud and conducted it successfully at Fairfax for a number of years. Finally, desiring to own a homestead, Mrs. Baumgardner sold her paper and took a claim a few miles from Winner, and while living on it she drove to town every week day in all kinds of weather to attend to her business as an abstracter. When she proved up on her claim, Mrs. Baumgardner disposed of her abstract business and moved back to Fairfax, where she is now connected with Johnson's real estate concern in the capacity of office manager. Nettie Baumgardner is a writer of vigor on a wide range of subjects, and with her great powers and analysis and facile pen, should forever be a shining star in the newspaper firmament.

Habit is a powerful thing. Although making more in the private practice of law than in the position he formerly occupied, Judge James W. Whitten, as this sketch is being written, has reentered the employ of the United States Government in the general land office at Washington. Doubtless he will round out his remaining years in the service and will farther extend for himself the reputation of a most successful legal adviser and national official.

Interest in the Farmer

When the farmer picks up his newspaper and reads about a movement by the commercial clubs to procure him a farm adviser, he wonders why it concerns them how he runs his business. Then he finds in another column where the agricultural colleges, growing weary of waiting for him to come to them, are sending representatives and bulletins to him, and he marvels again why everybody of late years is getting interested in his business.

Then he reads in the news items, "back to the farm" articles, advising his boys to stay on the farm and urging others to get out of town, and the mystery deepens. Heretofore the politician was his only friend; he called only at stated intervals. Now, it seems, everybody wants to show the farmer how.

A little investigation goes to show that the recent anxiety on behalf of the farmer in the towns is due to apprehension that the town man will have his rations cut short unless the farmer raises more.

The last census revealed some facts which opened up a train of thought. It was found that while the population had increased fifteen million, and is still on the increase at a larger rate, the number of farmers had not increased. It was found that the rate of consumption of food products was increasing more rapidly than production; that the exports of meat products in six years have fallen off 97 per cent, and dairy products 75 per cent, due to increasing home consumption. At the same time, the meat-producing animals have decreased 20,000,000 against the 15,000,000 increase of meat eaters.

The great cattle ranges have been built up and destroyed. The farmer is not worrying, because he only sells his surplus after first supplying his own wants. But his town brother looks on while he eats, waiting for him to finish, and observing the surplus growing smaller all the time, concludes that it is like the little negro's apple core, "ain't gwine to be no core." Then he figures how he can help the farmer. His motive is purely selfish, as, indeed, all honest motives are, but at the same time is helping himself by helping the farmer, and the farmer gets the benefit just the same.

The first thing the farmer should realize is that the towns and schools are desperately in earnest to help him raise more, and in the next place that men who set apart their entire time and thought, with every facility of investigation, can and do learn more of the important facts of farming than the man who follows the plow until at night he is too tired to think.

Doniphan County Tornadoes

The early settlers of Doniphan County had much to contend with in pioneer times, but they became inured to all forms of hardships and faced known dangers with the utmost fortitude.

It was the sudden and unexpected kinds of danger that disturbed the serenity of the people whose environment was calculated to make them immune from all known kinds of undreamed of visitations.

Wild men and wild animals there were a plenty, but those creatures were merely of the earth and were considered as an enemy to be reckoned with on terra firma. Nobody had any idea of such a thing as a cyclone or a tornado, and whenever these children of the elements came along they created havoc and consternation in their wake.

There were no such things as cyclone cellars or tornado refuges built in those days for the good and sufficient reason that the people were not familiar with the necessity of such institutions. While these visitors may have been a regular thing in Kansas for untold generations they were not encountered by the residents because there were no residents here.

It was when the country began to take on new life with the on-rush of civilization that the tornadoes and cyclones gave the settlers an idea of their power for destruction. Of course, the visitations of these monsters of the elements were not regular and the people usually had time for a breathing spell between the shocks.

While Doniphan County never has had the horror of a real cyclone, the people have had more than their quota of tornadoes and suffered their full share of the devastation which those fearful and unexpected agents of destruction never fail to create.

The first known experience the people of Doniphan County had with a tornado was in June, 1865. The month had been very rainy and the weather was in a measure rather gloomy. It was late in the afternoon when a dark cloud was noticed away off on the horizon and the people outdoors figured that another severe rainstorm was approaching.

The horror of the situation may be imagined when the wind began to tear up everything in its path. Houses were torn to pieces and outbuildings demolished. The tornado passed over the country southeast of Highland, on the high ground just north of Wolf River.

The dwelling house of David Rittenhouse was completely wrecked and the pieces scattered so that few of them were ever found. Ten persons were in the house when the storm struck and five of them were more or less injured, the other five escaping unhurt.

A wagon was standing near the residence and it was broken into small pieces, which were strewn over the ground for a mile or more. The path of the tornado lay on down Wolf River where the houses of James A. Kennely and John Shirley were located, near where Sparks now is. These were torn clean from the foundations and blown a short distance away.

Just across Wolf River from this point the residence of William Fraser was wrecked and the owner killed, and a baby so badly injured that it died in a few days. The tornado passed on across the Missouri River where it created great havoc in the bottom timber.

In 1869 or 1870, a tornado occurred east of Troy which demolished the house of John Daums, east of the old Walton place, and instantly killed Mrs. Daums, who was in the kitchen doing some cooking at the time. This storm did a lot of property damage, but there were no other fatalities.

During the month of July, 1878, a tornado west of Troy, early one morning, blew Clement Pope's house to pieces in the vicinity of Moray. One of the flying timbers struck Mr. Pope's eldest son and killed him instantly.

He Turned the Joke

A sensational affair took place on the streets of St. Joseph, Tuesday, July 3, 1866, when a man by the name of Clark, having lost a wager of $25.00, made threats that he would have it back or kill Ben Ullman, who had won the money from him. Clark went up town, met Ullman, shook hands with him and the two went into a saloon and took a drink together. When Ben turned to go out of the disreputable place, Clark pointed a revolver at his back and fired. The ball passed through the fleshy part of his neck and lodged in his jaw, whereupon Ullman turned on his assailant, knocked him down and stamped him in the face, crushing in one side of the angered man's head and presenting a horrible spectacle. Death was instantaneous.

A large and enthusiastic temperance meeting was held at the Presbyterian church in Troy on the evening of Sept. 11, 1866. Duncan McIntosh was elected president and Col. D. M. Johnston addressed the meeting. Col. Chivington, J. Toner, Chas. Rappelye, D. S. Sergeant and others made speeches during the evening.

Work on the old Methodist church in Troy was begun Sept. 15, 1866.

CHARLES N. HERREID

Twice Elected by the People of South Dakota as Their Governor.

Charles N. Herreid was born Oct. 20, 1857, in the state of Wisconsin, where his father was a pioneer farmer. He spent three years at Galesville University and after reading law two years, took a course in Wisconsin University graduating in the law department. In 1882 he was married to Miss Jeannette Slyke and the following year went to South Dakota and settled in McPherson County, where he has since resided. He was state's attorney and a trustee of the state university, and first became known to the public by his record as lieutenant governor to which office he was elected in 1892 and again in 1894. During 1898 and 1900, Mr. Herreid was a member of the Republican National Committee. In June, 1900, he was nominated by the state convention for governor and elected the same year. Two years later he was re-nominated and re-elected for a second term. Mr. Herreid has been grand chancellor of the K. of P. and a prominent member of the A. O. U. W. and has held various important positions in this lodge. Also Mr. Herreid is a member of the Eastern Star and a thirty-third degree Mason. He is a trustee of the Presbyterian Church of which he and his family are members, and a useful citizen in general. The ex-governor is recognized as a brilliant man and one who possesses the faculty of entertaining. His administrations were characterized by being exceptionally successful.

Edward Case

Died in Troy on the 21st day of May, 1866, of disease of the heart, Edward Case. The subject of this notice was born in Hudson, Ohio, and settled in Troy in 1860, where he resided until his death. He was a member of the Congregational church and among his neighbors and acquaintances was known as an earnest, faithful, praiseworthy citizen, devoting much of his time and attention to the well being of society, to the cultivation and development of good morals, temperance and Godly conduct in the mind of the youth. He had been from his early youth a member of the church and a devoted temperance man and he devoted all the energies of his mind to make the youths of the community not only outwardly moral and temperate, but actually good and holy in action, ambition and desire. Hence, he was, during his residence in Troy and Doniphan County, the leading actor in every moral and religious work. Shortly after he located in Troy he became the superintendent of the Sabbath school and every Sabbath, when not actually prevented by sickness, he was ever at his post. Though a member of the Congregational church, all other Christian churches received his sympathy and encouragement. In his family he was always kind and affectionate, setting them, as he did the world, a Godly christian example and by them he is and will forever be remembered as the kindest of husbands and the most worthy and devoted of fathers. We are aware that in this notice we are bestowing the highest praises man can devote to the memory of his fellow. We do so believing that Mr. Case gave his talent, be it one or many, to the best possible advantage to himself, to his family, to society and to his God. He laid up but few treasures in worldly goods, but if there is a job beyond the tomb we can conceive of no man who more richly merits that joy than he whose memory we would commemorate in this notice. Nor did his faith forsake him in the hour of death. We saw him the night before he died. The hand of death was then upon him. The doctors had pronounced him incurable. He knew he must die and with a look of perfect resignation and unlimited faith he looked at his friends and said, "Oh," so calmly, earnestly and devotedly, "we are all in the hands of God."

Perry McSparren was placed in the Troy jail in April, 1866, for harboring stolen horses and later escaped, sawing the bars in two. He was re-arrested in St. Joseph and Jos. Hayton brought him to Troy, where he was again committed to jail. A few days later he was tried in the Doniphan County district court for jail breaking, convicted and sentenced to two years in the state penitentiary and Jos. Hayton left Troy for the prisoner's new home on Wednesday, Dec. 19, 1866.

---

On Wednesday, Aug. 14, 1878, Mike, the marshal of Troy, with a Hibernian face, resigned and Chas. E. Brown was appointed on Thursday. The said Mr. Brown resigned on Monday and on the same day E. V. Fowler was appointed to fill the vacancy. Charlie Brown was eager to try his hand, but after his experience in Friday night's fight and being called upon 187 times between that time and Monday to come and take up Smith's hogs, he gave up in disgust.

Iowa Township

IOWA LARGEST TOWNSHIP

Banner Township in Doniphan County Was Established in 1855 and Has Five Thriving Towns Surrounded by Fine Agricultural Land—Indications Are That the Rough Land Along the River Will in the Near Future Be Developed Into Rich Fruit Producing Territory.

In point of area and other characteristics, Iowa Township is the banner one of the eight units which comprise Doniphan County. Iowa Township is important in many respects and the people who reside therein are proud of the fact.

Although the boundaries of Iowa have been changed several times since the township was originally established in 1855, it has not lost prestige or importance as a result. Incidentally, Iowa Township has the distinction of being the place where the earliest settlement of Doniphan County was made—at Mission, near Highland, 1837.

There are a lot of good and charming things that might be said of Iowa Township and its people. Its development has been along agricultural lines mostly, but the indications at the present time are that much of the wild land along the river will be converted into productive and valuable fruit farms in the present generation. This is not a prediction or any haphazard guess, but it is a plain statement of what can be done, and is sure to be done in properly and judiciously developing the wonderful fertility of the soil of the neglected spots of Iowa Township.

Iowa Township has a varied number of claims to priority and superiority over the other townships of Doniphan County. It has a place in the early history of the state as having within its confines the site of the old Mission founded by Rev. S. M. Irvin, in 1837, and as having furnished several prominent men whose activities in public life reflected honor on themselves and their state.

There are five hustling and thriving towns in Iowa Township, namely Highland, White Cloud, Sparks, Fanning and Iowa Point. The residents of these towns are a progressive people, and are chock full of local pride in their home place and its advantages. They won't take a back seat for any town in any other township in the county.

The land of Iowa Township is mostly agricultural, with the exception of some in the extreme eastern part, east of Sparks, where there are good fruit and berry farms. There is quite a stretch of rough land along the Missouri River, from White Cloud to Iowa Point, which is both bluffy and brushy, but keen observers of local conditions are firm in their belief that in twenty years from now, this land will all be in fruit and just as valuable as any of the fruit land about Troy or Wathena.

The people of Iowa Township, especially those living in the towns, have fairly good railroad facilities. The Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad enters the township at the southeast corner, runs diagonally northwest to the river and thence along the river bank to the Nebraska state line. The territory traversed by the road is fertile to a degree and the farmers have grown rich in the live stock industry and agricultural pursuits.

It should be a real delight to the rising generation to read the names of some of the first settlers who fought every manner of obstacle to progress during the stirring years of the early territorial days. They were all hardy and determined men who took chances with life in many ways. The country was wild and the Indians were not over friendly, by any means. The establishment of the old Mission by Reverend Mr. Irvin had a good effect in advancing civilization, or at least curtailing some of the scalping instincts of the red men.

Among the first regular settlers after the territory of Kansas was declared opened to settlement, were the Beelers, the Martins, the Gilmores, the Parkers, the Arnolds, the Pieresons, J. P. Johnson, W. H. Bayless, James A. Kennedy, William Hedrick, George Logan, the Planks, the Poteets, the Pennys, Judge Lewis, Elijah Collins, Alfred Young and Ezekiel Hobbs. There were some other families not classed among the first settlers, although they were on the ground early, for the reason that they or their parents had been employed at the Mission or the Indian agency. Among these were the Vanderslices, John W. Forman, T. J. McCreary, James Williams and I. G. Donaldson. Those last named were in Iowa Township before the regular settlement took place, and so, on account of their semi-official presence in the territory are not counted among the real settlers, although they became such in after years.

In writing the list of early settlers, the name of W. H. Bayless was mentioned, and it might not be out of place to refer to him again. After the organization of Doniphan County as such, the citizens looked first of all to the education of the young folks, and they cast about for a good and competent man to manage their schools. After very little speculation the name of W. H. Bayless was suggested, and he was elected the first superintendent of public instruction in Doniphan County.

This township received its name from the fact of there being a tribe of Indians bearing that name living in the township at the time of its first organization. It is one of the original five townships into which the county was divided at the first sitting of the county board, September 1, 1855.

The boundaries of Iowa Township were fixed at that date as follows: "Commencing at the northwest corner of the county, thence southeast along the Missouri River to the second range line, between twenty and twenty-one, through Doniphan on the south by the 'Kickapoo Line,' and on the west by the county line."

Mr. Jesse Lewis was the first justice of the peace appointed, and James Poteel the first constable for this township.

The first election in the township was held on the first Monday in October, 1855, at the house of William Beeler, at Iowa Point. On the 16th day of September, 1856, the county board caused one and one-half miles to be taken from Iowa Township and attached to Washington Township.

On the 20th day of October, 1856, the eastern boundary of Iowa Township was changed and moved one-half mile further west.

On the 21st of June, 1859, another change was made, and the present boundary was fixed as follows: "Commencing at the northwest corner of the county, thence down the Missouri River to Section 10, including Section 10; thence south to the southeast corner of Section 34, Town 2, Range 20; thence west to the county line, thence north to place of beginning.

The surface of this township is composed of a large degree of bluff land, especially that portion bounded by the Missouri River. In the southwest portion of the township may be found some of the best land in the county, and is well watered by the following streams: Wolf River, the largest stream in the county, enters this township in the southwestern part, flowing north, empties in the Missouri River about six miles below Iowa Point. Cedar Creek, the next stream in size, rises from numerous springs in the western part of the township, flows north and east, and empties into the Missouri River near Iowa Point. This stream drains about fifty square miles of territory in the western part of the township. There are several other streams of minor importance which serve to supply the township with a good stock of water the greater portion of the year.

The first settler who located, not only in the township, but the first in the eastern part of the state, was the Rev. S. M. Irvin, who came as a missionary to the Iowa Indians some time in May, 1837. He located about two miles east of what now is known as Highland, at a point afterward known as the "Old Mission."

The country then, to use a phrase of a certain orator, was a "howling wilderness," but now, how different! This portion of the state, county and township owes much of its present prosperity to the Reverend Mr. Irvin.

Mail facilities in 1837-38 were everything else but facilities. At that time the Reverend Mr. S. M. Irvin obtained his mail at Liberty, Clay County, Mo., 100 miles distant, it taking about a week to make the trip. In 1840, a postoffice was established at St. Joseph, Mo., where the settlers obtained their mail until a postoffice was established at Iowa Point in 1855. In 1858 a postoffice was established in Highland, E. M. Hubbard being appointed postmaster. This office was made a "distributing point" for all mail that passed into Nebraska south of the Platt Rover, including Fort Kearney, Plattsmouth, Pawnee City and intermediate points. This was at a time when the old-fashioned four or six-horse stages were in vogue.

The first religious services in the county were held in this township at the Old Mission, in 1837, Rev. S. M. Irvin officiating. From then up to the present time, the light on the altar thus erected has never been extinguished. For nearly half a century, and during those dark and dreary days when this state was known throughout the land as "Bleeding Kansas," and through "sunshine and shadow," these services have been held without a single case on record of a cessation.

The first school taught was one started at the Mission, soon after the arrival of Reverend Irvin and others. Messrs. Irvin and Hamilton, Miss Walton and Mrs. Fullerton were among the teachers. A school meeting was held July 23, 1858, in the Martin neighborhood, and a school board elected. They called their district "No. 1." Since then the district has been reorganized, the present number being fifty-six. At the first meeting, the following officers were elected: S. Prichard, director; M. M. Sharp, secretary, and G. L. Martin, treasurer. John F. Sparks taught the first term of school. A log building was erected on Section 12, Town 2, Rangs 19, and used for school purposes. This stood on the site of the present school house, in District No. 56.

One of the first marriages in this township was that of J. Potetts to Nancy Bancroft, by the Reverend Irvin, the ceremony taking place at a point on the Wolf River, near the Mission.

One of the first births in this township was probably that of Daniel Vanderslice, a son of D. Vanderslice, who was born two miles east of what is now known as Highland, in 1854. He died in the "flower of his youth," at Troy, while his father, Thomas J. Vanderslice, was sheriff, being but nineteen years of age. Probably the first death in the township was that of Mrs. Comstock, the wife of an emigrant, en route for California. Her death occurred at a point near the Old Mission, in 1852 or 1853.

About the second was that of a young man, name unknown, who died and was buried at Iowa Point, in 1855.

area, and the most densely populated in the county. It contains in the neighborhood of 52,480 acres or eighty-two square miles.

Products are principally corn and wheat; a great deal of fruit is also raised. Some of the richest farmers in the county reside in this township.

Iowa Township possesses the only mineral spring in the county, or this part of the state. This spring bears evidence of having been discovered at a very early date, the bank in close proximity to the spring containing broken pieces of pottery, arrow heads and other relics, doubtless formerly used by the Indians.

Within one hundred yards of the spring a mound is situated, supposed to have been built by the "Mound Builders."

The mineral qualities of the spring were first discovered in 1857, by William Plank, who entered a claim, that embraced the spring, on the north half of the northeast quarter of Section 16, Township 2, Range 20. They were not utilized until about the summer of 1881, at which time Pryor Plank built a couple of hotels and fixed up an ideal summer resort, advertising same quite extensively.

WILLIAM C. WINKLER

One of Doniphan County's Oldest Residents Is Extensive Farmer and Stock Raiser

One of the largest farmers in Doniphan County is William C. Winkler. He has 900 acres of beautiful land, about six and one-half miles southwest of White Cloud, and all of it is under cultivation. Mr. Winkler, who is widely known throughout the county, because of his long residence here, is a progressive and efficient agriculturist and in every sense of the word is a self-made man, having started without a penny. Today his farm stock and equipment places him in a class with the wealthiest in the community, and he has the respect and friendship of all who know him.

William C. Winkler was born in Saline County, Mo., on Aug. 20, 1851, and is a product of the farm. His parents had a small tract which they cultivated, and after receiving his early education in the public schools of that section — such as they were in those days — his father and mother died. This blow came when Mr. Winkler was but a mere boy, in Holt County, Mo., whither the family had moved. This forced him to shift for himself as best he could. There was only one chance for a boy in his position at that time—to bind himself out to a farmer until he was twenty-one and undergo all of the rigors of early farm life for nothing but, his board, clothes and perhaps an occasional half-dollar for spending money.

This did not appeal to the young Winkler. He wanted an opportunity on an even footing with other boys, and being deprived by death, of the help of his parents, which other young men had, he decided to make the opportunity for himself. Consequently in the spring of 1866, when he was but fifteen years old, he came to Doniphan County. Mr. Winkler often said since, that if he had had the slightest chance he would have enlisted at the outbreak of the civil war. He was but ten years old, however, and under no circumstances would the recruiting sergeant have accepted him. He did think for a long time of trying to get in as a drummer boy, but he did not even have a drum to practice on, and in his boyish mind gave up the idea as hopeless.

It is needless to say that the young Winkler had little or no money when he arrived here. About his whole stock in trade was a stout heart and a determination to succeed. There was only one opening for him and that was at Jess Chandler's, where he worked for three years. His first wages were $9.00 a month, but this did not deter the young man, and he went at his task. After leaving Mr. Chandler, he worked for Ed Nuzum. There was very little pleasure in life for him during the next three or four years. It was a continual round of labor. All he spent went for a few clothes to protect him from the weather, and the rest went into a worn and faded pocketbook, which he has today. After about four years, he saw an opportunity to rent, and took a farm not far from the property he owns at the present time.

While working out, however, young Winkler had made an acquaintance that was to have much to do with his future life. At the home of a friend, one day, he met Miss Eliza Jane Gilmore, the daughter of Robert Gilmore, a well-to-do and respected farmer of Iowa Township. The casual meeting soon ripened into a deeper feeling, and young Winkler was spurred on to save more money and to work harder than ever for the accomplishment of his ambition. In 1873, he believed he had reached the position somewhat nearer his heart's desire, and on Jan. 2, of that year, he and Miss Gilmore were married at the beautiful home of her father. The Rev. Mr. Thomas Roach, of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, officiated. The couple, after a brief honeymoon, returned to the place Mr. Winkler had rented, and there began their life's work. Much of Mr. Winkler's success has been due to Mrs. Winkler. She was at once a wife, a true companion and a business adviser. In all of the years of adversity that come to the participants in a union, she was ever helpful and encouraging. If this year's crops were good, she urged him to have a still better one next year, and when misfortune came, as it did to many others and does to all of us, it was Mrs. Winkler's smiling and cheerful countenance that helped the young husband to hold up his head and plunge anew into the struggle for fortune. A true Christian woman, Mrs. Winkler was always fortified with faith, and she backed up her faith by works, laboring from early morning until night at her housewifely duties.

William Cass Winkler's Residence, Situated in Iowa Township.

Energy and industry, however, were not to be denied. It is history repeating itself. There has never been a man with an ideal who failed of its attainment if that ideal was firmly implanted in his heart, and it was backed up sufficiently by works. Mr. and Mrs. Winkler had the ideal and had the works. Disappointments came in the failure of some crops, the loss of live stock frequently, and dull times, but neither faltered and they pulled together in the harness. The result was that early in the year of 1893, he had saved enough to purchase the 900 acres which he now owns. Needless to say, it was a happy day when the two moved into their new home. The old rented place had its memories and associations—memories of twenty years of labor, disappointment, joy and companionship, but the new held all of the promise of the golden future, and into the newly-purchased place, Mr. and Mrs. Winkler brought renewed vigor and enthusiasm. From that time until today their fortune increased rapidly, and their position of confidence and esteem in the community was assured.

Mr. Winkler is a general farmer, but as was said at the beginning of this article, is progressive in every meaning of the word. His extensive place is equipped with all that is new and modern in machinery, and like many other men in Doniphan County, he is a deep student of his business. To him the state agricultural college is an institution of great benefit and he was one of the first men here to offer his help for the employment of a county expert, the latest and most progressive move in agricultural communities such as this. In addition to his general farming, he is a lover of stock, and raises some of the finest in eastern Kansas, a large part of which are pedigreed. No man in the county has finer cattle than his. He breeds the Polled Angus and has a large herd.

Mr. Winkler is one of the best examples of self-made men this community affords. When it is considered that he came here in 1866 with nothing but his resolve to make good, and has not only accumulated a fortune, but a high position in the community, it can easily be seen what obstacles he was forced to overcome. His success also is a tribute to Doniphan County. There is always room for real men in any community, but there never were any better opportunities offered than right here. Mr. Winkler's thrift undoubtedly had much to do with his attainment of his ideal. His wife also was his chief aide, but Doniphan County helped materially in giving him his start, as he will testify.

In addition to his general farming, Mr. Winkler also finds time to give a part of his services to his county. He is public spirited and it is one of the tributes of his best friend and neighbor, that no man called upon him for a favor but that it was granted. There has never been a movement that had the interest of the community at heart that he was not in the forefront to aid that movement. He has supported his party and has been in attendance at nearly all of the farmers' institutes, where his few words were eagerly listened to. In politics, while never seeking any office, he has been in the councils of the leaders of the Democratic party, and has always been a worker. Mr. William C. Winkler is a type of Doniphan County's best citizenship.

EARLY ELECTIONS

Highland Twenty-Two Years Ago—Troy, Iowa Point, Etc.

(By Frank A. Root.)

Topeka, December 27, 1880.

Editor Central State: I have had much pleasure recently in perusing the several issues of your paper which I chanced to see on file in the State Historical Society. Naturally enough, it called to my mind recollections of by-gone days, and it was in the winter of 1858-1859, on the old Highlander, the first paper ever printed in the town, which lasted only about two months. The first issue of the paper was duly celebrated the evening of its birth, in a manner that only those familiar with the proceedings are aware of. The proprietors of the Highlander were T. P. Herrick, J. E. Faulkner and B. A. Seaver, under the name of the "Highlander Printing Association." Mr. Herrick was editor. That was twenty-two years ago, and I have not been in the town but once since, in the summer of 1859. In the fall of 1858 Highland contained about two dozen buildings. The old brick hotel was kept by the elder Mr. Hubbard; J. H. Wildey kept a store in which was the postoffice; Aaron Baldwin ran a blacksmith shop; S. Bonesteel was a carpenter; A. J. Minier, Tom Stevenson, E. Snyder, J. P. Johnson, General Bayless and sons, were among the prominent citizens. Scott Noel was a brick mason and kept a boarding house. George Bird was a mason and plasterer. Herrick & Seaver ran a law shop, and there were quite a number of others in some kind of trade or occupation, the names of whom I have forgotten. The walls of the University were up and the roof on, but there was little or nothing done at that time with the carpenter work. I have glanced through your paper, advertisements and all, for some of the names I used to know so well in those early days. J. P. Johnson, B. A. Seaver, E. M. Hubbard, B. S. Campbell and C. E. Fox are about all I chanced to meet. I can hardly realize what a wonderful change twenty-two years has brought about. In 1858 I think I knew every man, woman and child in the place.

Highland was fearfully dull those short days and long winter nights, but regularly once a week the boys took their girls and spent the evenings around at the various neighbors. One night ten or a dozen couples went out to Rev. S. M. Irvin's; another night, Rev. H. N. Seavere's; another at Reverend Mr. Graham's; another at Mr. Campbell's; another at Mr. Spinning's, General Bayless', Scott Noel's, Mr. O'Neal's, and perhaps at some other places. I remember one night a party went to an oyster supper at the Word House, Iowa Point and "danced all night, till broad daylight, then went home with the gals in the morning."

In the fall of 1858 there were not more than a half dozen buildings in Troy, two or three between Troy and Highland, and about the same number between the latter place and Iowa Point.

Nemaha and Marshall counties were on the extreme frontier and the county seat of Brown, when I passed through it the first time in the spring of 1859, contained, all told, less than thirty buildings, only one of which was of brick. The White Cloud Chief was then running in its second volume, and there was not another paper west of there in the "northern tier."

It is pleasant to take an occasional retrospect and see what changes have taken place in the onward march of time. Kansas had about 50,000 inhabitants in the fall of 1858. There was not a foot of railroad within fifty miles of the territory, and the only mode of conveyance for several hundred miles up the Missouri River was by steamboat. Since then Kansas has built between three and four thousand miles of railroad, leads all other states in educational matters, and now has a population of over a million people.

Elliott Irvin

Elliott Irvin, well known in Doniphan County, and now the postmaster at Coffeyville, Kan., is the grandson of a distinguished clergyman who had much to do with the early development of this section. The Rev. Samuel M. Irvin established the Presbyterian mission, about a mile east of Highland, in 1837. Mr. Elliott Irvin's father was born at the old mission, and he also will be remembered by hundreds who now are among the old settlers of the county. The present Elliott Irvin has not been here for a number of years, but is mighty popular in his new home, as is evidenced by the fact that he has been given his present position as postmaster.

HIGHLAND

The Great Seat of Learning in Doniphan County Was Named by J. P. Johnson, Who Owned a Claim on Which the Site of the Present Town Was Built—First Planned in 1855, When Mr. Johnson Drove Stakes for the Townsite.

One of the Most Prettily Planned Towns in the State of Kansas—Surrounded by the Most Fertile Land in Doniphan County—Seat of Highland University, One of the Few Institutions of Its Class in the State—Now a Thriving Business Center.

Highland has done more than any other town in Doniphan County to uphold and advance the intellectual dignity of the county. The town being the seat of the great Highland University is noted for the culture and refinement of its environment.

The town of Highland does not take its name from being located topographically on an elevation. It owes its name to an idea of J. P. Johnson, the man who originally planned the town, and drove the stakes which defined its confines.

It was almost a year after the Indian treaty which removed the Iowa and Sac and Fox tribes of Indians to their new reservation that the town of Highland was first thought of. The treaty was signed in 1854 and the propinquity of the Old Mission inspired Mr. Johnson to lay out a town in the neighborhood. Up to that time the Indians had as a reservation some of the best land in Doniphan County, some of it extending back to the present site of Wathena, where the Kickapoos held forth.

Soon after the signing of the treaty with the Indians, J. P. Johnson conceived the idea that his quarter section of land on which the nucleus of the town of Highland was laid, would make an ideal townsite for an inland city.

It took some time in which to transfer the Indians to their new reservation, but Mr. Johnson was not dilatory in his actions and staked out his claim as early as 1854.

The old Indian reservation embraced the present site of Highland and no progress could be made toward building a town until the tribes had moved. Mr. Johnson laid out the future town single-handed in 1855, and the next year Gen. John Bayless came along and united with Mr. Johnson in locating the town. General Bayless was a civil engineer, and he went over the propsed site thoroughly before any attempt was made to form a townsite company.

In 1857 General Bayless had completed a survey of the proposed town and had laid out the blocks in such an expert and systematic manner that there was little difficulty in organizing a townsite company when all the details had been arranged. That year the town company was formed, the members being J. P. Johnson, Gen. John Bayless, B. N. Seaver, O. Bailey, G. S. Rice and Rev. S. M. Irvin, for twenty years missionary to the Indians and superintendent of the Old Mission.

At the time Highland was started there was considerable talk of a railroad coming that way. Railroad promoting was at a high-water mark at the time. Every manner of route was being mapped out and promoters were as thick as flies around a sugar barrel. It was a long way to statehood for the Kansas territory, however, and no railroad came through Highland. Even when the old Atchison & Nebraska Railway project was built toward the northwest, Highland was left four miles out of the reckoning.

When the St. Joseph & Western, now the Grand Island, was built west through Leona, the engineers could not see the advisability of laying out the route direct from Troy to Highland. So as far as the railroads were concerned, Highland was marooned in its own isolation from contact with the outside world by rail. But the time came when the railroads could no longer ignore the importance of Highland, and the town now has railroad facilities through a spur, or branch, built some years ago, from Stouts station on the Grand Island Railroad.

Although primarily a frontier town, Highland from the very first assumed the contour of some of the oldest colonial cities in the East. The principal streets are shaded by the spreading branches of trees planted more than a half century ago. It is a delightful town from external appearances and the residents are exceedingly sociable to the stranger. It can never be said that a stranger in Highland received an icy greeting. The people are constituted along such lines that they devote their best efforts toward entertaining the stranger within their gates.

The first few buildings in Highland were erected by the townsite company. In the winter of 1857 there had been several residences built, and the work of construction was not rough or crude by any means. In the spring of 1858 Campbell & Bonesteel erected two substantial buildings. The first store was opened by Devine & Stevenson, with a general stock, and the second was started by J. H. Wildey, with a similar line. The first drug store was owned by A. J. Minier, and was managed by Dr. J. Leigh, for many years one of the most highly respected and popular citizens of Highland.

There was no lack of business enterprise in Highland from the time the town was first started. Three blacksmith's shops were opened by S. F. Armsbury, Al Bruner and W. P. Gore, and Edward Evans started a hardware and tin shop. The first physician in Highland was Doctor Palmer, who settled there in 1858, and did a lucrative practice, both in the town and the surrounding country. There has been, in times past, a determined dispute as to who was the first carpenter to locate in Highland. Joseph Rankin was for many years given the honor of having been the first, but his claim was disputed by Elmer Snyder, who was known to have come to the town in 1857. Both of these men were active in putting up the first buildings, and some of their work shows the trace of skillful hands to the present day.

The town government of Highland was a go-as-you-please affair until the year 1871. No records had been kept up to that time, and there is nothing authentic upon which to write any historical matter. After the election of that year, there was some semblance of official realization manifested by the city authorities. Fred J. Close, who was afterward clerk of the Doniphan County District Court, was elected mayor, and J. S. Martin was made city clerk. Mayor Close was not re-elected, but Clerk Martin was made clerk for three successive terms. The present mayor and city clerk of Highland are, respectively, Dr. W. M. Boone, Col. A. J. Thomas. Walter Gilbert James is president of Highland College.

The first postoffice established in Highland was in 1858, when the office was opened with E. M. Hubbard, as postmaster. The office was located in the hotel kept by Mr. Hubbard, and the people who wanted to receive their mail necessarily had to patronize the hotel. The Hubbard Hotel was the first brick building erected in the town, and after it was closed, it was made the headquarters of the J. P. Johnson Bank. Rev. James Campbell succeeded Mr. Hubbard as postmaster, and he maintained the office in his own home. Other successive postmasters followed the lead set by Mr. Hubbard, and kept the office in their places of business, with the exception of J. F. Shields, who was postmaster in 1875, when the office had a building of its own. The present postmaster of Highland is Arch Bruner, Miss Carrie E. Keller assistant. He was appointed by President Wilson in 1914.

The town of Highland is one of the beauty spots of Doniphan County, and likewise of Kansas. It is an ideal town in which to live. The commercial life of the place is active all the year round, and the tone of culture and refinement is most pleasing to the visitor. The fact that Highland University is located there has had as much to do in the advancement of the town as the town has had to do with making the University famous as a great educational institution.

From the first days of its history, the business interests of Highland have been of the most substantial character. When the town was but a few years old, J. P. Johnson opened a bank in the building that had been used as a hotel. At that date, in 1862, there were but two other banks in the state of Kansas, one at Leavenworth, and the Exchange Bank at Atchison. The Wildey House was opened in 1866, with D. S. Campbell as manager. The year following Mr. Campbell sold out his interest to J. H. Wildey, who conducted the hotel until 1877, when Wilson Baird leased the property and ran the business for a number of years. The large lawn with immense shade trees which surrounds the hotel is one of its most attractive features.

Two generations ago the town of Highland had a number of general stores and business places. Now it has very many more. There is not a line of merchandise to be had anywhere that may not be found among the stocks of the Highland merchants. There are mechanics galore in the town, and whenever any one desires to build a house or addition to his place of business, the work is done so promptly that the people sometimes express surprise.

Highland is the seat of the Presbyterian faith in the state of Kansas. The first church in the territory was organized by a handful of Presbyterians at the Mission, in 1842, under the direction of Father Irvin, who was missionary to the Indian tribes since their settlement in Kansas in 1837. There were seven members in the first congregation at the Mission, but the town Indians insisted on joining the church and soon there was a good-sized membership, even if the majority happened to be red skins. After the removal of the Mission, when the Indians were transferred to a more curtailed reser-

HIGHLAND COLLEGE

Highland College maintains College courses leading to A. B. and B. S. degrees; also courses in Commerce, Music and Dramatic Expression, under first class instructors.

We direct your attention to our Junior College.

Those desiring to take the first two years of their college course in a small college in preparation for Junior and Senior work in a large institution, will find Highland College an ideal school for such work.

Highland College is the logical school for those living on or near the Grand Island Railway. It is possible to come and go conveniently every Friday evening and Monday morning.

Highland College is an ideal school for the city boy or girl who wishes to get in rural surroundings for part of the year. The village is situated on a high point of land overlooking the best farming country of Kansas. The climate is healthful and the environments conducive to study.

For the boy or girl of limited means Highland College offers first-class advantages. Tuition is very reasonable and board and room are as cheap as is consistent with good living.

For information concerning courses, write or interview the President or his helpers.

vation farther to the northwest, the Presbyterian congregation met in a frame building between Highland and the Old Mission for several years. In 1860 services were held in the University chapel where they were continuously held until the erection of the Presbyterian Church, which is one of the most attractive houses of divine worship in Highland.

In 1857 a Methodist Episcopal Church was organized at a point near Highland, by Rev. Dana Fox. No attempt was made to erect a church building for several years, and services were held in private residences and school houses, until 1865, when the use of the University chapel was accorded by the Presbyterians. In 1866 a lot was purchased and some preparations made for building a church, but the project was abandoned for the time and an arrangement made with the Congregationalists whereby the latter received a loan from the Methodists, who in turn shared the the use of the church building.

In 1873 an exclusively Methodist Church, thirty-five by fifty-two feet, was erected at a cost of $3,000. Rev. William Smith was pastor, and it was largely through the efforts of himself and Rev. Dana Fox that the church was built.

The Congregational Church of Highland was organized October 5, 1865, by Rev. H. P. Robinson, with fifteen charter members. Since that time the congregation has grown with the town and at the present time the Church is in a flourishing condition and has an exceedingly large membership. The erection of the first Congregational Church building was commenced in 1866, and completed in the fall of the following year, at a cost of $4,000.

Reverend Mr. Robinson remained pastor until 1869, and after his resignation, the pulpit supply was very irregular, and no permanent pastor had charge until 1877, when Rev. H. D. Kloss was installed.

With the coming of Smithton Lodge, A. F. & A. M., to Highland, the pace was set for other fraternal organizations. Highland Lodge No. 67, I. O. O. F., was organized January 27, 1871, with the following charter members: J. H. Close, S. F. Amsbury, F. J. Close, J. Myers, B. Costello, H. Myers, F. M. Unkefer and E. B. Gatchell. The first officers of the lodge were J. H. Close, N. G.; S. F. Amsbury, V. G.; F. J. Close, P. S.; H. Myers, R. S., and J. Myers, treasurer. Meetings were first held in the Masonic hall, but the fraternity later secured headquarters of their own.

Highland City Lodge No. 2261, K. of H., was instituted July 9, 1881, with fourteen members. The officers were A. Leigh, P. D.; W. Trevett, D.; W. H. Forbes, R. This body grew rapidly in membership, and was an exceedingly popular organization.

Elwood as it is and will be.—The town company who purchased the present site of the city of Elwood, was organized in May, 1857. Four hundred fifty-three acres were first purchased by the company, and subsequently Rose Port, a city laid off adjoining, was added by purchase. Immediately steps were taken to reduce the forest which bounded Elwood to subjection, and the streets were surveyed and lots staked out rapidly.

Highland Entertains 6,000 Guests at Celebration

Regular Army Drills, Chicken, Cake, Speeches and Stories in Honor of the Town's First Railway.

(By Col. Joe Rank.)

Highland, Kan., May 5, 1908.—Highland's celebration of its first railroad today was a great success, in spite of muddy roads and a cloudy sky. Only once did the sun shine, and then only for a few minutes. Six thousand is believed to be a conservative estimate of the number of visitors the town entertained. Most of the visitors came by train and were here only a few hours.

A cavalry and artillery drill by the regulars from Fort Leavenworth was held this afternoon in the pasture east of town. Military maneuvers are new to the residents of this section and Representative Anthony is being generously praised for his part in obtaining the attraction. It cost nothing, and was a big feature of the celebration. At the conclusion of the maneuvers the soldiers left for home. They camped tonight at Severance.

The speaking on the campus of Highland University resolved itself into something of a clash between the commercial interests of St. Joseph and Atchison. Both towns had sent their commercial clubs and large delegations of citizens. St. Joseph sent a band and sixteen coach loads of excursionists and furnished most of the speakers. Among the St. Joseph speakers were Mayor Clayton, Frederick T. Neudorf of the Business Men's Association; W. B. Norris, an attorney; J. Motter and Judge Muir. They lauded St. Joseph to the skies and spoke of the part they had taken in obtaining the road for Highland.

The Rev. R. F. Boyle spoke for Atchison and Kansas and took a good-natured rap at St. Joseph. Mayor Clayton and others came back with some spirited retorts, and St. Joseph had Atchison going, until ex-Governor W. J. Bailey took the stand.

"I want to say to you Missourians," said Bailey, "that if it were not for Kansas energy and enterprise the grass would be growing in your streets."

"Governor Hoch took my place once," said Bailey, referring to the executive chair, "I consented to take his place today."

Cyrus Leland was among the speakers. Mr. Bailey introduced Leland as the next governor, and there was loud applause. Politically it was a Leland crowd. Nothing else could reasonably be expected in Doniphan County. Hundreds of visitors wore Leland banners on their hats, and if there was a Stubbs man in the crowd he said nothing. Leland did not make a long speech. Speech-making is not his long suit. He spoke from the steps of the University.

"I have lived in Doniphan County more than fifty years," he said, "and finished my schooling in this old college. I was here in 1861, when there was so much war talk that we could not study."

A dinner, given by the women of Highland in a tent which seated 1,000, was a testimonial of the good living indulged in by the prosperous citizens of Highland. They mashed bushels of potatoes and cooked 200 chickens, 100 hams and several hundred pies and cakes. The food was the best an agricultural country could furnish. James Berlingett, general manager of the St. Joseph and Grand Island Railroad, thanked the residents of Highland for the silver loving cup, given by G. J. Ratcliffe, president of the Highland Commercial Club. Mr. Berlingett said a railroad alone could not make a town, and that Highland's future would still depend largely upon the efforts of its citizens.

To a large measure the celebration resolved itself into an old settler's meeting, for Highland is one of the very oldest towns in Kansas. Many of its former citizens returned to rejoice with old neighbors over the coming of the railroad. Frank Root of Topeka, who landed in Highland in January, 1859, to become foreman of the Highlander, a weekly paper, was here; so was T. H. Martin of Atchison, who lived near Highland as a boy in 1858. L. Meeker and Stevenson Hunter, both of Hiawatha, who lived in Highland more than forty years ago, were here. John T. Wildy, who located in Highland in 1857, is still a merchant in the town. He always has lived here, excepting the four years of the Civil War, when he was a member of the Seventh Kansas cavalry. An interesting character of Highland is W. D. Noble, who is in his eighty-sixth year. He settled near the present site of Horton in 1858, and told us that he had no complaint to make about anything.

Thomas Jefferson McCreary was the oldest settler of Doniphan County at the celebration, and it is doubtful if there is an older settler in Kansas. He came here with his parents from Pennsylvania in 1844. His uncle, the Rev. S. M. Irvin had established a Presbyterian mission near Highland seven years before, and it was this mission that attracted the McCreary's. Young "Jeff," who was eleven years old when the McCreary's arrived in Kansas, drove a team hauling stone and brick for the mission building, the ruins of which are still pointed out to visitors. Later on he attended the mission school. Now, at the age of seventy-five, he is still a resident of the county and one of the most widely known breeders of Aberdeen-Angus cattle in the West. He attends nearly all the large stock sales in Kansas City, Omaha and Chicago.

When a town is without a railroad, its people imagine it would readily become a metropolis if it had one. Yet Highland, which was without a railroad fifty years, is larger than several towns in this county which always have had railroad advantages. As a matter of fact, Highland is just about as populous as any town in Doniphan County. The official census of 1900 gives the following population for the principal towns: Troy, 947; Highland, 780; White Cloud, 713; Wathena, 623. Since 1900 Wathena and Highland have grown considerably.

Highland expects big things from its railroad. "Don't be too optimistic," said a citizen of Rushville, Missouri, to an enthusiastic Highlander. "We have four big trunk lines at Rushville, and not as many people as Highland."

Highland University, which is celebrating its semi-centennial today, along with the coming of the railroad, is the outgrowth of the Indian mission established among the Sac and Fox Indians in 1837, by the Rev. S. M. Irvin. The mission was one mile east of the present site of Highland and was conducted successfully until the Sac and Fox Indians were removed to a reservation further north. Then the building which was a commodious one, and constructed of brick, manufactured by Reverend Irvin and his coworkers, was utilized as a school for orphan Indian children of various tribes. This orphans' home did not survive long, and the building was abandoned. A storm two weeks ago carried away the roof and crumbled the walls.

The Reverend Mr. Irvin, or "Father" Irvin, as he was generally known, died in Highland in 1887, after having devoted fifty years of his life to religious and educational work among the Indians and whites. After the Sac and Fox Indians were moved up near the Nebraska line, the Reverend Mr. Irvin continued his work among them, but made his home in Highland and became the prime mover in the establishment of Highland University. The institution, in the fifty years of its existence, has had twenty-five presidents. Some of them held the position only a few months. The presiding officer at the present time is George E. Knepper, elected in 1905.

Town of Beginnings in Kansas

First in a house of worship; first in an institution of learning; first in Masonry; first in printing, and first in banking, is the record of Highland. The pioneer school and bank buildings still stand in the old town.—The history of the "Firsts."

Highland, Kan., June 22, 1909.—This town may be classed as the original "first" town of Kansas. It was the home of the first church of Kansas; the first institution of learning; the first printing press, from which the first book printed in Kansas was issued; the first bank, and the first Masonic lodge.

In 1837, when all of Kansas was known as "The Great American Desert" the Iowa and Sac and Fox Indians crossed the Missouri River at Robidoux Landing, where the city of St. Joseph is. They were being transferred by the government to a new reservation, now Doniphan County, in Kansas, which was then a sea of wild grasses without a white settler, over which vast herds of buffalo roamed.

With the Indians came the missionaries, the Rev. S. M. Irvin and the Rev. A. Ballard, and their wives. The Mission, one mile east of Highland, the missionaries built of logs; the first church in all this territory, and a log house for themselves.

The first church had seven members.

HIGHLAND PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

Oldest Congregation In Doniphan County Has Now a Beautiful New House of Worship in Place of the Building Destroyed by Lightning in October, 1913—Highland Church Has Interesting History Since It Was Organized at the Old Mission With a Membership of Six in 1843.

The congregation and pastor of the Highland Presbyterian Church constitute a delighted body of people ever since the dedication of their handsome new church building on October 25, 1914, by Doctor Gregg, D. D., of St. Louis.

Rev. Louis C. Stumpf, the minister of the Highland Church, is an energetic clergyman and he lost no tme in erecting a new place of worship on the site of the building that was destroyed by lightning on the night of October 6, 1913.

The new edifice is an attractive building, as the accompanying illustration will show. Architecturally it does not very much resemble a church, but the art glass windows at once show the true significance of the building.

When the old church was so suddenly destroyed by fire, due to a lightning stroke, grief and dismay seized the hearts of those who had such a veneration for the building. But this condition did not long exist for the members of the congregation, under the encouragement of their beloved pastor, threw off the pall of sorrow and put forth their efforts to provide a new building which is better adapted to the needs of the congregation than was the old one.

On March 17, 1914, a congregational meeting was held in the auditorium of Highland College, which had been used for services since the destruction of the old church almost five months before. The following members of the building committee were quickly selected with instructions to proceed with arangements for the erection of a new church: R. B. Chandler, chairman; A. L. Wynkoop, B. G. Whittaker, B. D. Allen, M. O. Corbet and John Hunter. The finance committee consisted of Scott Thomas, chairman; R. C. Miller, Lee Sharpe, A. J. Thomas, Tobias Larson and F. S. Minier.

Chairman Chandler was given authority to proceed with the work after it had been decided to erect a flat-roofed structure and save extra expense by going ahead without any architect's plans or specifications. The understanding was that the building should not cost to exceed $10,000. The corner stone of the new church was laid with impressive exercises on August 22, 1914, by Reverend Mr. Stumpf, and Rev. T. B. Haynie of Hiawatha delivered the address.

Work on the building was pushed with vigor, so that it was completed for the dedication by October 25, 1914. The dedicatory exercises were grandly impressive and were participated in by several clergymen. Reverend Mr. Stumpf, the pastor, had specially invited Rev. Dr. Harris H. Gregg, one of the great Bible teachers and preachers of the country, and that distinguished clergyman came direct from St. Louis to assist, and delivered three interesting discourses during the day and evening. Rev. Floyd A. Bash, of the Christian Church, offered the prayer.

In a brief statement by G. J. Ratcliffe, treasurer of the church, it was shown that more money was subscribed than was necessary to pay for the building and further subscriptions were at once forthcoming for the installation of a pipe organ. Arrangements were soon made for the purchase of the organ.

The new church building is a substantial and attractve structure with beautiful art glass windows which throw a light to harmonize with the delicate interior finish. The building is 52x64 feet and almost thirty feet in height. The basement foundation is of concrete, with stucco finish, and extends over six feet above ground. The main room is 40x40 feet, with a lecture room 22x24 feet. There is also a mother's rest room, a choir room, pulpit and pastor's study. The basement is only three feet below ground level and has an abundance of light from a number of large windows. It will be used mainly for Sunday school work and church entertainments.

The First Presbyterian Church at Highland has an interesting history which goes back to October 21, 1843, when it was organized at the old mission, while that part of the country was still occupied by Indians. The original membership included just six persons, all of whom were well known during the early settlement of Kansas territory. They were Rev. William Hamilton and Mrs. Hamilton, Rev. S. M. Irvin and Mrs. Irvin, and Elder Francis Irvin and Mrs. Irvin.

From the date of organization, Rev. William Hamilton officiated as pastor until May 26, 1853, but from that time until 1860 the church was in a state of transition. The beginning of Highland University at Highland, Kansas, was made about 1858, and during all that time, Rev. S. M. Irvin, better known as Father Irvin, ministered to the church and was chiefly instrumental in laying the foundations of the University.

The new chapel of the University was completed by September 7, 1860, and the first communion service was held there with Rev. John D. Paxton officiating. In July, 1888, the cornerstone of a church building was laid by Rev. Dr. A. B. Irwin, and under his leadership the congregation erected a handsome frame church. This building was held in the greatest veneration by former and present residents of Highland because of the many tender associations connected with its existence. So the grief and sorrow of the people may be imagined when a ruthless stroke of lightning set fire to the church and totally destroyed it on the night of October 6, 1913. The new church dedicated last fall was erected on the site of the hallowed structure and the congregation is happy once more.

Dr. Jonathan Leigh

A Native of Tennessee and a Resident of Doniphan County Fifty-Nine Years, This Remarkable Man Has Just Retired From the Practice of Medicine, Which He Has Followed All the Years of His Manhood—Now Active at the Advanced Age of Ninety-Seven.

It is not given to many men to live to be ninety-seven years of age, but for one to live that long, to devote all the years of his manhood to the practice of medicine, and still be as active as most men at sixty or seventy, is remarkable indeed. Such a man is Dr. Jonathan Leigh of Highland, who recently has retired from active practice of medicine and now is enjoying that peace and quiet to which his long years of service for humanity entitle him.

Dr. Leigh was born in the state of Tennessee, near Murfreesboro, on Sept. 24, 1818. The first ten years of his life were spent in that mountain region of Tennessee near the scenes laid by Miss Mary N. Murfree (Charles Egbert Craddock) in her great descriptive novel, "The Prophet of the Great Smoky Mountain." What education the boy who was to be a great physician received there did not amount to much, but it was enough to determine him to make for himself a great career in life. The family moved to Jackson County, Missouri, that year he was ten, and for a few years they resided in the region where Kansas

Dr. Jonathan Leigh.

City was to be erected. From there they went to Holt County, Missouri. The boy was growing to manhood and was gaining something worth knowing as he grew. Finally he went to Illinois and studied medicine, afterwards returning to Missouri to practice.

The year 1856, it was on the fourth day of May of that year, saw Dr. Leigh a citizen and medical practitioner of Doniphan County. He had settled near Iowa Point, where he remained for seven years and built up a good practice among the early day residents. The next move Dr. Leigh made was to establish himself at Highland, and so well did he establish himself there he remained until 1893, a period of over thirty years. On April 6, 1893, he moved to Hiawatha, in Brown County. There for eighteen years more he led a busy life as a practitioner, devoting his mind, his heart and his God-given talents to the noble profession of healing the sick.

After so many long years in the harness the good Dr. Leigh concluded he was entitled to a little rest and recreation and three years ago retired from active practice, moved back to Highland, where his wife's people resided, and where he had endeared himself to so many of his dearest friends and associates. He is now past ninety-seven, having celebrated his birthday anniversary Sept. 24th of this year.

Dr. Leigh is a living testimonial to the truth of the idea of sane living, the proper care of one's physical and mental condition through health-sustaining food, exercise and habits of living. His mind is clear and while he is no longer actively engaged in practicing he never fails to give his fellow physicians the benefit of his counsel when sought to do so, or to advise an old patient. He is freer from bodily ills than most men who have just reached seventy, and only a few days ago when the writer visited him, he walked from his home down town. Dr. Leigh, if ever he was ill in his life, may not have "taken his own medicine," but he has certainly followed his own teachings as to how to prolong life. Such men as he are indeed benefactors of the human family, and as such we delight to do them honor.

Dr. Leigh was twice married. His first wife was Miss Eliza Brown, a popular lady, and a loving helpmeet and the mother of his five children now living.

The present Mrs. Dr. Leigh, and the second wife, was Miss Mary R. Baird, who was born in Pennsylvania, Oct. 9, 1839. Their marriage occurred Feb. 10, 1859, at Highland, the ceremony being performed by the Rev. Mr. S. M. Irvin, who established the old mission east of Highland. She was educated at Chambers, Pennsylvania, in Dr. Wilson's school, which was one of the most thorough of the scholastic institutions of the United States for young women in that day. She is a woman who has endeared herself to the people of Highland and wherever her husband has practiced, since their lives were joined together. A truly noble woman and a good wife, her influence and her sympathy have gone out from her home to bless humanity.

The five children of Dr. Leigh are two sons and three daughters, all living. The sons are Abraham Leigh and Dr. Eb. Leigh of Hiawatha. The daughters: Lucinda, now Mrs. J. W. Gebhart; Delia, now Mrs. J. J. Baird; Ollie, now Mrs. C. W. Connor. The daughters are splendid examples of Kansas womanhood and are the wives of honored citizens who are making a success in life. The sons, also, are doing well and are worthy to bear the name which their father has made a household word throughout northeast Kansas.

Dr. Eb. Leigh, the youngest of the two sons, is a practicing physician and bids fair to occupy a high place in that profession which so long has been ennobled by his father. Dr. Eb. already has earned for himself a name as a skilled practitioner that causes his father to be filled with pride, and we predict for him a long and successful career.

NELSON A. STULL

A Writer and Teacher Who Left the Impress of His Teachings and His Splendid Christian Manhood on the People of Doniphan County—His Great Six Weeks Revival Which Resulted in the Organization of the Christian Church in Troy.

One day in the month of December, 1889, a young man fresh from college appeared in Troy and held a conference with Cyrus Leland, Jr. Doubtless there was speculation among the men of the town as to what was the young man's mission—what political office he desired—but all speculation was cleared up and the mystery of the conference explained when the young man cause it to be heralded about town that he had secured the Cy Leland hall and would begin a big revival meeting there on the following night.

The announcement of a revival meeting in Cy Leland hall was something new to Troy people. They turned out at the opening meeting until the hall overflowed with the crowd. Not only was their curiosity satisfied, but they marveled at the wonderful preaching of the college youth, his familiarity with the Bible and his power of expounding the Gospel. Night after night the crowds gathered at the hall and listened to the preaching, such as they had never heard before. Many were converted and filled with the Holy Spirit and turned out as helpers to win others.

Cy Leland furnished the heat, seats, lights and the hall, and the budding evangelist brought the Word to the people. The direct result of it was the organization of the Christian church in Troy with fifteen charter members, and an addition of one hundred members during the remainder of the six weeks of the revival.

The young enangelist, as they were pleased to call him, was the Rev. Mr. Nelson A. Stull, a native of Pennsylvania who had been born in Williamsport in that state Oct. 8, 1865. He had received a common school education in his home town and then attended Burlington College in the city of that name in Iowa, for which it was named, later attending Drake University at Des Moines, and finally completing his education at Garfield University at Wichita, Kansas.

At Wichita, the young theologian met, wooed and won a Doniphan County girl. She was Miss Della Martha Beeler, who was born in Highland Sept. 6, 1867. She grew up there, attended the Highland school and then taught two years in Atchison County. She had just finished a course in the university at Wichita when the wedding occurred at Wichita, May 16, 1888, the Rev. Mr. A. H. Hobbs performing the ceremony.

Thus it was that the young Nelson A. Stull, equipped with a fine education and with a life companion and coworker, whose culture, learning and lovely personality were both a help and an inspiration to him, was prepared for the big revival meeting in Cy Leland hall which marked the beginning of a new epoch for Troy and the beginning of his ministerial career. It is said by old citizens who heard him that his sermons were gems simply for his masterful handling of the English language; likewise for the clearness with which he presented Scriptural truths, for his spirituality and for his convincing appeals to his hearers when bidding them to come to Christ.

The Rev. Mr. Stull was the first pastor of the Christian church of Troy, which he organized in 1889. He served four years continuously, during which time he raised money and built the new church which was completed and dedicated in the spring of 1890. He had rendered a great service to Troy and her people and they appreciated everything he did. At the end of four years the Rev. Mr. Stull went abroad. He was gone a year, and upon his return, the Christian church promptly called him back to his pulpit and he preached there for two years more.

Upon finally leaving the Troy church after preaching there six years, the Rev. Mr. Stull was called to preach and teach in the Christian College at Lincoln Center, going from there to Cotner University at Bethany, Neb. As a teacher he entered into his work with much the same energy and Christian spirit that he put into his work as a minister, winning the close fellowship of his students and the esteem of the faculty and all who observed his work.

Rev. Mr. Stull's life was one of unceasing activity in the Master's cause. In his struggling days he taught school during the week and preached on Sunday, thus combining the work of preaching and teaching. He taught or filled pastorates in the following towns: Huron, Round Prairie, Highland, Troy, Leona, Lincoln Center, Salina, White Cloud, Sparks, Bendena and others. Besides the church at Troy he organized one at Leona. He also preached several years at North

Rev. Nelson A. Stull.

Bend and Hastings, Nebraska, and during this time edited the Hastings Harbinger, a weekly newspaper. He was a man of marked literary ability. He wrote for several newspapers and did most excellent college thesis work in German.

In 1904 he began a five year evangelistic campaign, reaching almost every county in the state. His latter years were spent in Flora and The Dalles, Oregon, in preaching and teaching, after which he returned to Highland, broken in health. From that time on he failed steadily until the end came, Dec. 9, 1914, as a result of Bright's disease. He suffered greatly during these last days. His funeral services were conducted from the Christian church in which he had so patiently labored. There were many touching tributes paid the deceased.

Mr. Stull's children in order of birth are as follows: Marian Mellune, Nov. 27, 1889, in Highland; Julia Elizabeth, Jan. 8, 1892, in Troy; Errett Dungan, Sept. 5, 1894, Highland; Charles Beeler, June 20, 1897, Hastings, Neb.; Martha Faythe, Nov. 18, 1905, Highland. Mr. Stull always desired to educate his children well, and the older three are now grown and doing well for themselves. Miss Marian is a teacher in Highland University; Errett is at Cambridge, Neb., as superintendent of the city schools; Elizabeth is a trained nurse at Ellsworth Hospital, St. Joseph.

Many citizens of Troy recall the splendid service rendered to their town by the Rev. Mr. Stull, and with much joy and pride do they refer to his kindly ministrations. Surely he was one of the most active young men who ever came to Troy. Deeply religious and conscientious, a faithful servant of the Lord, he, like Sam Jones, left this world better than he found it.

Highland Christian Church

This Institution Has Had a Remarkably Successful Existence and Has Continued to Grow Since the First Days of Its Organization—From a Modest Beginning the Church Has Expanded Until Today It Has a Membership of Three Hundred and Forty, With an Enrollment of Four Hundred and Six in the Sunday School.

(Contributed by Rev. F. A. Bash.)

The career of the Highland Christian Church has been marked by faithful and properous activity since the first years of its existence. There have been many prominent men members of the congregation since its organization and there have also been a number of leading ministers to administer to the rapidly growing flock.

Complete records of the history of the Highland Christian Church, and of the clergymen who served the pastorate are not available, but sufficient facts have been gathered to give a general outline of the progress of the church since the days of the first preacher of the faith in Highland.

As far back as 1872 W. D. Starr is known to have preached occasionally to the Christians in Highland, and in 1874 William Gardner held a successful revival for the Christian community, using the Congregational building. Pardee Butler, S. M. Nesbit, J. H. Bosserman and a number of other leading men, laid the foundations for the future organization.

During the year 1882 the Highland Christian Church was organized under the leadership of Rev. C. H. Pierce. There were seventeen charter members in the original church body which has increased to the grand total of 340 members at the present time.

The first building for the Highland Christian congregation was dedicated October 16, 1884, with Rev. Morgan Morgans in charge. The original building was soon outgrown, as the growth of the membership was rapid and steady. In 1904 the present substantial brick structure was erected during the ministry of Rev. J. M. Morris, and it is now practically outgrown by the thriving Bible school.

The remarkable growth in the membership of the Highland Christian Church is directly traceable to the many revivals that were held under the direction of such noted evangelists as Rev. J. S. Myers, Rev. J. E. Irwin, Rev. Walter Scott Priest and Rev. Harry G. Knowles. In addition to these revival meetings, many of the regular pastors were successful evangelists, and conducted meetings with gratifying results.

The chief factor in the growing strength of the Christian Church of Highland has been the well organized and efficient Sunday school. The school was organized in October, 1887, and J. Wesley Bowers served as superintendent for the remarkably long period of twenty-two years. The first enrollment in the Sunday school was forty-five, while the enrollment today is 406. It is the plan of the pastor and congregation to soon enlarge the present church building, so that the Sunday school can be properly accommodated. Since the retirement of Superintendent Bowers, A. D. Connolly, and J. F. Stricker have served effectively as superintendents.

The Highland Christian Church is characterized by its liberal missionary spirit and maintains its own missionary in Shanghai, China, beside lending generous support to all missionary causes. It is a noteworthy fact that only three churches among the Disciples in Kansas gave more to missions last year than did the Christian Church of Highland. The Church has also a strong Christian Endeavor society, an energetic Women's Missionary society and a faithful Ladies' Aid.

Since the organization of the Highland Christian Church there have been a number of able ministers in charge following the pioneer work of Rev. W. D. Starr. Among them were the late Rev. Nelson A. Stull, Rev. J. A. McGuire, Rev. W. H. Speer, Rev. J. E. Prophater, Rev. F. S. Wright, Rev. L. S. Didnour, Rev. J. E. Holly, Rev. J. M. Morris, Rev. Hugh Lomax and Rev. F. E. Day. The present pastor is Rev. Floyd Allan Bash.

Early last September, Rev. Mr. Bash of Sheridan, Wyo., was called to minister to the spiritual needs of the Highland Christian congregation. Rev. Mr. Bash had been a successful pastor at Sheridan for four years and is an able and forceful preacher. He is a graduate of Cotner University, of Lincoln, Neb., and in 1909 was married to Miss Carrie Hubbard of that city. Three children have come to brighten the home of Rev. and Mrs. Bash, all of whom were born in Sheridan. They are Lawrence, born April 2, 1911, Wendell, September 21, 1912, and Miss Marjorie, born March 14, 1914.

Old Presbyterian Minister

Duncan Brown, Formerly President of Highland College—Helped Raise First Endowment for the College.

Duncan Brown, D. D., A. M. and A. B,. is one of the pioneer teachers of Highland, who was instrumental in making Highland University the great and well-known school that it is today. In 1882, he was elected a member of the faculty of the college, where he served in such a capable manner that he was ultimately rewarded in 1885 by being made president, which position he held for five years.

In 1885, when the Reverend Brown assumed the position of president of Highland College, there was urgent need for more money to carry on the work, so this energetic pedagogue and preacher got busy, and when he got busy, that meant something was going to happen, and it did—J. P. Johnson gave $10,000, and the president of the college raised the $12,000 balance. There was also a second endowment raised, and Spencer Allen did very effective work in securing the money necessary.

Duncan Brown was born at Hannibal, Mo., on June 6, 1844, on the day that George Williams held the first Y. M. C. A. meeting in the city of London. He attended the common schools, and his ecclesiastical training was received at Pardee College, Louisiana, Mo., from which place he graduated in 1868, with the degree of A. B., and at Princeton Theological College, at Princeton, N. J., where he graduated in 1871, the proud recipient of the titles of A. M. and D. D.

After graduating, he secured a position in Warsaw, Mo., as principal of the schools, where he remained for two years.

While teaching school in Warsaw, he also served a small Presbyterian congregation as minister. He had no time those days to fret over the high cost of living; he worked hard six days a week, and was glad to consecrate the seventh to the service of his Master.

On leaving Warsaw, he betook himself to Mound City, Mo., where he opened a private academy, and had very good attendance.

In 1874, on August 25, Duncan Brown was married to Mattie Y. Lewis of Clarence, Mo. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Abram Steed. Mrs. Brown was born in Chester County, Pennsylvania, March 8, 1853. She is still living, and has throughout her life been a fit companion for her husband, and both their lives abound with good works. Of the union, five children were born, one of whom is married. The four at home are as follows: Elizabeth Lewis, who was born at Mound City, October 4, 1879; Martha Johnson, born at Highland, Kansas, Feb. 11, 1887, and the twins Lewis Duncan and Helen Bullard, born June 15, 1892, at Macon, Mo. The oldest child is Julia, now Mrs. Rupert F. Asplund, born in Palmyra, Mo., Oct. 6, 1875. They live in Santa Fe, N. M., where Mr. Asplund is chief clerk in the department of instruction, and author and publisher of the Journal.

The Reverend Mr. Brown was ordained as a minister of the gospel in April, 1862, at Pleasant Hill, Mo., and it was the same year that he went to Highland. He became interested in the work of the college at once, and was made a trustee. He is a trustee to the present day, and is very proud of the fact. The subject of this sketch was the first man to start a movement to build a new Presbyterian Church in Highland in the early '60's.

He recalls that Bruce Chandlor was the contractor for the new building. The young preacher raised $1,500, of which amount he gave $200 out of his own pocket, to wipe out the indebtedness. Before the church was erected, services had been held in the college chapel.

Reverend Brown remembers distinctly the old Mission when it was in its prime. He knew Father Irvin personally. He states that when Father Irvin came to the mission, he was a consumptive, and expected to live but a year or two. As it turned out, he lasted fifty years, and accomplished a wonderful amount of good. He attended the funeral of Father Irvin, and with Rev. A. B. Irwin, conducted the funeral services. Mr. Brown was at Highland, in 1887, at the fiftieth anniversary of the old Mission.

The Rev. Mr. Duncan Brown, although well along in years, and old enough to be taking a well-earned rest, after a long life of usefulness, preaches in St. Joseph, Mo., to the Plymouth Congregational Church, to all intents and purposes their pastor, but inasmuch as he retains his membership in the Presbyterian Church, he cannot be accepted as a Congregational minister. The church is located at Thirty-Third and Penn streets. The home of the family is at 1810 North Twenty-Second street, St. Joseph, Mo.

The Teachers of Long, Long Ago

(By Mrs. Lyda Massey of Iowa Point.)

Where are the teachers we all used to know,
In the long, long ago, long ago?
Why they are "the people" now where ever we go,
Who taught long ago, long ago.
They built their castles, the kind that would last,
They're now retired— and in Fords they go past,
Who sowed the seed of knowledge o'er the country broadcast,
In the long, long ago, long ago.

There are some little swarthy men, a hunting schools to teach,
Just as we did, long ago.
To show in speech and action to get a job to preach,
Just as they did long ago;
Also some homely maidens—faces covered o'er with frowns,
Are wobbling round among us in their little narrow gowns,
Trying to look handsome, but they look like Barnum clowns, did
Long, long ago, long ago.

There are some of the tutors and some of the marms,
Of the long, long ago, long ago,
The one are old bachelors, the other—lost their charms,
In the long, long ago, long ago.
Who in the ranks now, were in then you know,
They're all slightly stooped, and their step is quite slow,
And their foretop, if not dyed, is white as the snow,
White as the snow, as the snow.

We can't help them now, they'll just have to go,
Just have to go, have to go.
They didn't climb the ladder very highly and so
Their chances are gone, long ago.
They'll just have to teach on—that's all that they know,
'Till with roses and lilies we follow them—slow,
Out o'er the hillside, to the old family row,
Where the weeping willow branches, bend down low.

STRONG WOODMAN LODGE

Rosewood Camp, No. 1426, of Highland, Was Organized in 1893 and Now Has 115 Members — Insures in Any Amount Up to $3,000—Present Oficers.

The town of Highland takes pride in having the strongest body of Modern Woodmen of America in Doniphan County, with headquarters in that hustling little city.

Rosewood Camp, No. 1426, is now in its twenty-second year of existence and has an active membership of 115 diligent spirits in wooderaft.

The Highland camp is a substantial body of men and they take the most intelligent interest in the continued growth and future success of their organization.

It is the largest camp from a numerical standpoint in Doniphan County, and it is on a solid and safe financial basis. Insurance policies are issued in any amount up to $3,000, and all claims are promptly paid.

The present officers of Rosewood Camp are F. P. Blair, clerk; W. W. Dolly, consul; Lee Blevins, worthy advisor; Lige White, banker; Tom Lawhon, escort; Charles Scoon, watchman, and Robert McNett, sentry. Joe Bingham was recently installed as one of the managers to succeed Wesley Bowers.

The members and officers of Rosewood Camp take great delight in entertaining their friends and their social affairs are one of the charming and enterprising features of life in Highland.

Highland, the College Town

A Thriving Educational Community—Full of Pep and Punch From Alpha to Omega

(Contributed by Mrs. W. B. (Lola) Stanley.)

Contrary to what is usually true of college towns, Highland is a wide-awake business place, a trading place for farmers miles around, and the natives encourage home industry and home trade with all their might. The town was designed primarily for an educational center, and when the town was laid out, a site was designated for the erection of a college building; consequently one year later, in 1858, work was begun on a building for that purpose, which still stands, with additions and improvements, and is the Highland University of today.

The school is religious in its nature, being the oldest Presbyterian college in the state. However, it offers a full modern curriculum, and an able staff of teachers, to any young man or woman desirous of advanced education. From the first, the school grew with bounds of prosperity, and only once in its history has it ever languished, and then, like the phoenix of ancient lore, rose from the ruins with new life and new energy, better prepared for the development of young manhood and young womanhood than ever. Highland University is proud of her record and counts among her graduates many prominent men and women, of no small importance in the public eye.

In addition to the college, there is the Barnes High School, a most worthy institution, and many excellent public schools, taught by efficient teachers. The schools are well attended, and there are few delinquent scholars. A truant officer wouldn't earn his salt in this town. The youth of Highland is well educated, if nothing else. Good fellowship and co-operation of heart and hand are denoted by the numerous fraternal orders and the churches in the town.

Smithton Lodge No. 1, the first Masonic lodge organized in Kansas, is in Highland. The women have clubs of different kinds, and get together for social times and discuss their husbands and, incidentally, do a great deal of nice sewing and fancy work which turns many a pretty penny for the benefit of sweet charity at the excellent suppers and bazaars which are held from time to time. The five churches are all broad in their views and join together in having good times and winning souls for His Kingdom. Practically everybody attends church or Sunday school, and it is plain, unvarnished truth, that there is not an undesirable citizen in town.

Highland is more than a trading place and educational seat. It is a business center, and there has been established lately a first-class mule and horse market. Mule buyers have always been keen for Highland stock. There is more totaled wealth here than in any town in the county, and this has greater bearing when one considers that Doniphan County is the richest county in the state. Many retired farmers have come here to spend their old age in comfort and live on the fruits of their labor; consequently there is an aggregation of splendid residences.

The surrounding country is rich farming land, and some of the most highly improved and valuable farms of the state are contiguous to Highland.

The town was laid out in 1857, and some of the men participating therein were: J. P. Johnson, Rev. S. M. Irvin and Gen. John Bayless. Some of the first settlers were Rev. H. N. Seaver, Rev. C. Graham, E. M. Hubbard, A. J. Minier, John O'Neal, E. Snyder, carpenter; Aaron Baldwin, blacksmith; George Bird, plasterer and bricklayer, and Dr. James Myers.

The City of Highland was incorporated April 10, 1871, and F. W. Close was the first mayor. The present administration consists of Dr. W. M. Boone, mayor; and council, towit, A. L. Martin, Prof. J. A. Jones, W. F. Bauer, A. J. Thomas; city treasurer, of Highland and W. S. Robinson of of Highland and N. S. Robinson of Sparks; justices of the peace, George Winters, Highland, and B. B. Green of White Cloud; trustee Iowa Township, W. H. Noble, Highland; clerk Iowa Township, J. S. Mallows of Sparks, and treasurer Iowa Township, R. E. Mauck of White Cloud.

There is a lively weekly newspaper, edited by Tobias Larson, and it has a large circulation. Two well-heeled banks take care of the money, and it requires two garages to keep everybody's Fords going, not to mention the numerous automobiles owned by the comfort-loving class. Arch Bruner is the postmaster and W. H. Hargis the station agent. The last named has been in the employ of the St. Joseph & Grand Island Railroad for twenty years. A branch of the Grand Island runs up from Stouts Station on the main line. There was no railroad until this spur was built in 1907.

Rev. Louis P. Stumpf

The Rev. Louis P. Stumpf, minister of the Highland Presbyterian Church, is a clergyman endowed with many fine traits of character. He is an indefatigable worker in his sacred calling and a personage who is highly esteemed by all with whom he comes in contact. He was married to Miss Alice Jane Renfeldt, at St. Louis, on October 12, 1905. Mrs. Stumpf is a member of a family long prominent in St. Louis Presbyterian circles and is a lady of many noble and kindly qualities of heart and mind. The Reverend Mr. and Mrs. Stumpf have one son, Paul Louis, who was born March 28, 1907.

President W. Gilbert James of Highland College

Highland College as a college is all that could be wished for, but, like everything else, it excels in some particular branches, and we feel safe in saying that its department of public speaking is an innovation in college training that will prove a huge success. The course includes fundamentals for good reading and speaking, lectures, principles of argument and oratory, and special attention is given students preparing for the ministry to receive instruction in Bible and hymn reading.

The professor in charge of this department is W. Gilbert James, A. M., and it is being demonstrated that under his ability, training and experience, the development of a strong department is assured.

Mr. James is a native of Illinois, and his education was received from the schools of that state. In 1898 he entered Hedding College, where for four years he pursued the classical course, and in the meantime completed a course in public speaking. In the fall of 1903 he entered Illinois Wesleyan University, from which he was graduated in June of the same year, with the degree of bachelor of arts. His advanced work in oratory was done under Dr. R. L. Cunnock of Northwestern University, from which he graduated with the class of 1904. The summer of that year he was elected director of the school of oratory in Upper Iowa University, resigning that position in 1906 to take post-graduate work in Northwestern University. After completing post-graduate work, he was chosen professor of oratory and English in the University of Omaha. This position he held for two years. In December of the year 1909, he was called to take the work of English and public speaking in Highland College.

At the commencement following his election to the faculty of Highland College, the trustees saw fit to bestow upon him the degree of master of arts. There are quite a few initials following Professor James' name, denoting the high place he has attained in the world of letters, including A. B., A. M. and Ph. D.

Professor James was made acting president of Highland College January 1, 1914.

OWNS NORTHWEST CORNER OF COUNTY

William Ogden Lives on the Quarter Section of Land That Was Part of Ti-an-kan-ha's Original Allotment.

It is safe to state that a small minority of the people of Doniphan County today are cognizant of the fact that there are 1,200 acres of Indian lands within the confines of the county.

The quarter section owned by William Ogden at the extreme northwest corner of the county formerly belonged to Ti-an-kan-ha, one of the best known of the braves who had been given land by the government in the early days.

This 160 acres was bought from the Indians by Mr. Ogden, who has transformed it into a fine farm. It was part of the original allotment to the Iowa Indians and was sold to the present owner with the consent of the government.

The remainder of the Iowa Indian lands is located in Brown County, Kansas, and Richardson County, Nebraska. There is an iron post on Mr. Ogden's place at the northwest border of the county marking the state line between Kansas and Nebraska. The lettering is plain and may be seen by anybody passing that way.

THE HIGHLAND POSTOFFICE

The postoffice is a splendid index or barometer as to the business activities in any community. We consider that in a little city of less than a thousand, that postal receipts in excess of $3,000 is positive proof of a busy, prosperous community.

There is but one rural route operating from this point.

Mr. Arch E. Bruner, the present postmaster, received his appointment in May, 1914, and took charge on the 24th of the same month. He has proven a thoroughly able, courteous official, and his services are highly satisfactory in every respect.

He is ably assisted in the conduct of the office by Miss Carrie E. Keller, whose photograph, as well as that of the popular Mr. Bruner, appears in this issue.

(By Prof. J. R. Gibbins.)

The panic of 1837 was only in the money market. The religious zeal of Christ's followers never suffers a panic. Ever since His presence here on earth men have followed His teachings. They have suffered privation, hardship, fire, famine, pestilence, heathendom, death, to spread His Word. They have crossed the Alps, the Pyrinees, the Balkans, the Himalayas, the Tiber, the Rubicon, the Rhine, the Rhone, the Danube, the Tigris and Euphrates, the Ganges, and the Yantsekiang of the Old World to do His will. They have faced the chill of the Arctics, the fevers of the Tropics, have traversed the seas, climbed the mountains, and spanned the continents of the New World for His sake.

It was this zeal that inspired Father Juan DePadilla to follow Coronado and his thirty Spanish horsemen into the then unnamed Kansas, heart of this continent in 1541 and to again return almost unaccompanied to tell the old, old story of Jesus and His love to the untutored savage, to face their tomahawks and arrows, to suffer death at their hands, as he did that year.

No less zeal caused Father Samuel Irvin to leave a good home in civilized Pennsylvania to come to the then unnamed Kansas. He came facing the same deadly tomahawks, and piercing arrows of the same Sioux tribes that had assailed his predecessor and worker for Christ, Padilla.

In the same eventful year above mentioned, that of 1837, did the Reverend Mr. Irvin come to Kansas and make the rude beginnings of Iowa mission among the Iowa, Sac and Fox tribes of Indians. Withing eight years he had created such an interest among the tribes that the Presbyterian board of home missions aided him materially in putting up a most commodious brick building for school and religious purposes. Here he labored for nine more years or until President Pierce signed the Douglas Kansas-Nebraska bill which named and threw open to settlement the great territory of Kansas. This took place on May 30, 1854. Then the white settlers came and the Indians were confined to very narrow boundaries. Soon Father Irvin found his usefulness in this line had ended in that place and he threw his energies with his white brethren to aid them to found a school which would teach Christ and Him crucified along with a good English education. He was aided by J. P. Johnson, mention of whom may be found many times in this magazine, by General John Bayless, a very enterprising and influential leader of men, and by many others.

These gentlemen formed with others a town site company, chose as a site a place a little south and two miles west of the mission, surveyed the same and named the embryo town, Highland. It was so named from the fact that it was located on high land. An ample campus was marked off and in May, 1857, a school was opened for the first time in a log cabin by Prof. Wm. McGookin. As the school increased in numbers, it was found that the cabin was too small, consequently a larger and more suitable building was erected by the energies of Rev. Mr. Irvin and others, who took a deep interest in the enterprise.

A charter for Highland University was procured from the territorial legislature of 1857-1858, through the efforts of Rev. Mr. Curtis Graham, one of the representatives of Doniphan County. The first trustees for the new school were James Campbell, Walter Lowrie, Curtis Graham, C. Van Rensalaer, S. M. Irvin, John Bayless and C. M. Hubbard.

An assembly of people with appropriate ceremonies laid a cornerstone for the new building for the school on May 11, 1858. At this meeting, the Rev. Mr. Gary Hickman delivered a fine oration, Hon. B. A. Seaver read a paper giving the history of the town and school, Gen. Bayless acted as president, and Thomas J. Key as secretary of the proceedings, Hon. J. P. Johnson first called the meeting to order, and Rev. Mr. S. M. Irvin made the first introductory speech, introduced the speaker of the day and was appointed by the people present to deposit the sheet lead box containing a Bible, the charter, circulars issued by the board, a copy of the Iowa Point Enquirer and Mr. Seaver's paper, a copy of which he had just read to them, in the cornerstone of the university building.

The following paragraph is taken from Mr. Seaver's paper: "As it has become an axiom in the history of our country, that military posts grow up into large and important commercial points, so may we not have an example in this case, that a mission, established by benevolent men, for the propagation of civilization and Christianity, among a savage people, shall never lose its influence, but remain a nucleus around which will gather all the elements of educational enterprise and become an active agent for spreading a high hearted and noble refinement among the pioneers of the Far West."

The following is taken from the remarks made by Rev. Mr. Irvin: "I think there is no reason why the people here should not rejoice over the laying of the foundation of a university. Twenty-one years since, I saw a war party of Indians, painted and equipped for warfare, passing over this very spot, shouting and rejoicing, returning from a successful battle against their enemies, with scalps, heads and human limbs dangling on poles! What a strange and wonderful sight! Now how changed the scene—the savage civilized, and attending the celebration today. We have assembled to lay the cornerstone of a large university, the first in the territory of Kansas. I see no reason why a Harvard or Yale college should not be built here. Kansas is now in its infancy, feeble and helpless, yet the object of dispute between two powerful contending political parties. In her infancy she could have but little to say in the great controversy, but the time is not far distant when her voice and influence will be heard and felt in the halls of legislation and the world. Kansas, with her neighboring states and territories, has a mighty work to do in strengthening and holding together this mighty republic. Could we with one foot upon the mountains of the East and one

HIGHLAND COLLEGE CORNERSTONE LAYING

A Memorable Event of Fifty-Seven Years Ago Recalled By Old Pioneers.

The cornerstone of Highland College was laid Tuesday, May 11, 1858, the Reverend Mr. Fackler of St. Joseph delivering the address of the occasion before a great crowd, and it was a memorable occasion. The day was propitious. The morning dawned bright and clear. And early that day lights winked in scores of one-roomed pioneer homes. Long before the stars had paled on many farms men moved about the buildings, ghostly in the dim star light, doing up the "chores," so as to get an early start to Highland. Breakfasts were eaten hurriedly. Dobbin was hitched up to the lumber wagon while the eastern sky was beginning to grey. By eight o'clock, the winding rough roads were lined with teams of the families who were on their way to see the great event of the year.

These were ambitious people, and many of them foresaw that the prospective college would give their sons and daughters and coming generations the opportunity for the education for which they had yearned, but which circumstances had denied to them. They were a sociable lot. One family would catch up with another, and remarks about crops, weather and exchange of names, with invitations of "Be sure and ride over to see us soon," would follow.

By noon the ground in front of the campus sight was crowded with people and teams. The settlers ate their luncheon and gossiped or strolled around looking at the college foundation stones.

A little after two o'clock in the afternoon in the presence of the trustees and other college officials, the Reverend Mr. Fackler of St. Joseph, began to speak. He told of the struggles in the past to found the school and of his hopes for its future and for the future of the new territory.

Then a few directions were given. Pulleys creaked until a certain stone rested on its bed of cement and mortar. Amid the impressive silence of hundreds, the cornerstone of Highland College was laid.

THE MARRYING JUDGE

Might Have Been President.

Morgan S. Mauck was born 'way back in Virginia, in 1839, nineteen years before he came to Kansas, which was in September, 1858. Virginia has a way of making presidents of her favorite sons, and Mr. Mauck lost out by leaving in his youth, but he has been probate judge of Doniphan County, which, perhaps, is better and carries more distinction. During his four-year tenure of office. Mr. Mauck became famous for making one's out of two's; that is, in plain Jayhawker lingo he issued more than 650 marriage licenses, of which number he performed over one-half of the ceremonies. The subject of this sketch lives at White Cloud in the same home which he purchased fifty years ago. He has three daughters and one son, as follows: Irene (Mrs. Bert Pugsley), Gussia (Mrs. W. S. Jones), Bertha Mauck, and Ralph E. Mauck. Mr. Mauck went out of office January 11, 1915, after a very successful term, and was succeeded by Edwin Brown.

George A. Cutler was a pioneer physician who located in Doniphan Jan. 7, 1857.

A Noted Educator

EARLY EXPERIENCES OF THOS. H. DINSMORE

Mr. Dinsmore Came to Kansas in His Boyhood—A Brother of Dr. R. S. Dinsmore of Troy.

On a bright May morning in 1855 I opened my eyes in th ecabin of a missionary in Iowa, to behold the kindly face of a minister looking down upon the form of one who was to become his namesake, and doubtless wondering whether the new-born infant would be worth the rearing. After spending the first five years of my life in that good state, I was taken away from the same, without my wishes being consulted in the matter, since the good father decided to remove to Missouri and locate at a point not far from Hannibal, where he soon built up a large and prosperous school, but upon the breaking out of the Civil War, more than sixty young men left at practically the same time to join the Southern army. Within a short time it became necessary for him to move to a more congenial place, because, on account of his pronounced views in favor of the freedom of the slaves, it was unsafe for him to remain in that portion of the state, and the family then moved to St. Francisville, Mo., about fifteen miles from Keokuk, Iowa, where my father renewed his ministerial work, and again established a seminary of high order, which he conducted until the close of the war, when, on account of failure of health, he was advised to spend a few years upon a farm. Having decided to do so, he leased an attractive farm near Athens, Mo., a distance of some fifteen miles from where we were then living, and there for a few years, during the formative stage of childhood, I enjoyed myself to the utmost. We represented a family of seven children, including four brothers and three sisters. The work on the farm was arduous, and we were busy from morning until night, but the exercise was productive of good health not only to the children, but especially to the father who, after three years' work in the open air, was ready to return to his literary pursuits.

The Trip to Kansas.

In my fifteenth year, my father having accepted an invitation to take the department of mathematics in Highland University, located in the village of Highland, Doniphan County, decided to dispose of all machinery and equipment used in farming, and moved to Kansas in order to educate his growing family. While the sale of the stock was in progress, it occurred to me that it would be a good plan to reserve a pony, in which I was interested, and take it with us, and I requested my father to withdraw it from sale. He replied somewhat as follows: "I would like to do so, but the family will go upon the cars, and there will be no way of sending the pony out to Kansas, and we must, therefore, dispose of it now." I then suggested that if he would withdraw it from sale, I would go alone to the new state and ride the pony to that place while the rest of the family could go upon the cars. The proposition was submitted immediately to my mother, a woman of rare judgment combined with a lovable disposition. Upon hearing my request she at once stated that if I thought I could make the trip alone, covering a distance of nearly 400 miles, she would be perfectly willing to trust me to do so. It then devolved upon me to make good, and at my repeated request the pony was reserved from sale, and with the exception of a dog, everything else was either sold, given away or packed for removal to the new home. The day following the members of the family, with the exception of my two older brothers, who had previously gone to Highland to attend the University, took the train for Kansas, and left me standing upon the platform, feeling a bit lonely, and wondering how in the world I might hope to make my way to the new home, since I had never been further from home than to Alexandria, Mo., twenty-five miles distant, where I had gone once to take to the market a load of grain. Upon inquiry as to the most desirable route for my Western trip, I learned that the roads crossing northern Missouri were very poor, and that it was unsafe in many sections for grown men to attempt to travel that way, and doubly so for a half-grown lad. Having secured a pocket map of Iowa, I decided to go first to the county seat of Van Buren County, and then travel almost due westward across the entire state, from one county seat to another through the southern tier of counties, after which I would then ride across the northwestern part of Missouri on my way to Kansas.

My trip was undertaken during the latter part of September, a most delightful season of the year, as I now recall. My equipment consisted of the simplest garments that could be considered. It is possible that I took with me an overcoat, but I have no remembrance of it, or of anything more than the fewest toilet articles that a boy can be induced to use. I had neither rubber coat nor storm-protecting garment, but fortunately the weather was pleasant during most of the trip and I got on very nicely.

Prof. Thomas H. Dinsmore.

It was my hope as I entered upon my long trip, that I might fall in with some caravan where there would be a group of youngsters of my own age, but no moving trains appeared to be going that way at that time, and I started alone. My only companion, aside from my pony, was a dog which we had raised and was then pretty well along in years. It was neither birddog nor setter, but just simply a common dog, whose chief value consisted in the fact that it seemed to have the deepest affection for me and was ready to share all the experiences that might be in store for us. The first day's journey was a pleasant and successful one in every respect, for I passed through a country that was well settled, where the roads were good and an abundance of grain on every side gave to it a natural homelike appearance. At the close of the day I stopped at a small farmhouse, and upon asking for shelter for the night was received cordially, and everything that could be desired was provided for both the lad and the beasts. Upon the following morning, when I offered payment for our night's lodging, the good farm folk refused to accept a cent, and sent me on my way with best wishes for a safe and pleasant journey.

As we started out upon the second morning, we represented a footsore and backsore group, for the pony, which had not been accustomed to long journeys, was somewhat stiff-legged, and I then realized, as never before, that the saddle which I used had been constructed more for durability than for comfort, and I wondered how I could endure it for nearly two weeks to come. The poor old dog suffered more than any of us, for his feet were sort and the constant traveling over the hard, dry roads, wore them off so that he could scarcely walk. As I started from the farmhouse, the dog remained behind, howling as he saw me ride away. When I whistled for him to come, with many a whine, he ran limping on, then passed me and laid down upon the ground, licking his sore feet until I should come up with him, after which he remained in his position until I was far in advance, and then, with renewed whines, he repeated the same course all day long. At the end of two or three days, however, we became hardened to the road and jogged on in comparative comfort to all.

At that time the southern part of Iowa represented a beautiful rolling plain, the cultivation of which had scarcely begun, and in many cases I traveled along but faintly outlined roads for distances of from twenty to forty miles, with scarcely a house in sight and often without meeting with a soul.

About the fourth day of our trip, after having completed a distance of nearly forty miles, I found myself with nothing in sight, save a rolling, treeless plain. The setting sun was followed by darkness so intense that it was almost impossible to see the road, and we traveled on, hour after hour, until about midnight a faint light in the distance revealed the location of a new settler who very kindly allowed us to spend the remainder of the night with him and his people. The following day we reached a sluggish river about noon, and my pony, which was extremely thirsty, rushed frantically down to the water, and while taking a drink, sank into a quicksand formation which threatened both its life and mine. After many a struggle and flounder, we succeeded in reaching solid ground and continued our westward way.

The entire journey was to me a source of deepest interest. I was then at an age when all nature represented a new world to me, but it would have been extremely interesting if I could have had as a companion someone of mature years who might have called my attention to the topography of the country and suggested desirable points where future cities would rise, or to the beautiful valleys through which railway trains would pass in the future, and where rich and prosperous civilization would soon change the face of the country.

I finally reached Bedford, the county seat of Taylor County, Iowa, and from there turned southwestward and traveled a distance of 100 miles through northwestern Missouri across Nodawway and Andrew counties, until, after traveling through a dense forest for many miles, I reached the banks of the Missouri River, opposite the hamlet of Iowa Point. After shouting vigorously a number of times, I attracted the attention of an individual on the Kansas shore, who operated a small ferry. He came across and transferred the three of us over to Kansas soil. The journey, though very interesting, had been made alone for the greater part, and at the end of the trip of nearly two weeks, it seemed good to me to think that I was nearing the place where I could rejoin the family and enjoy the pleasures of home. It was a ride of about five miles from Iowa Point to Highland, and I examined every part of the way with keenest interest and anticipation. It was my good fortune to have as a companion during that part of the way, a kindly hearted old gentleman, whom I afterward learned was Major Vanderslice, a former Indian agent, who traveled with me until we reached the top of a hill, and then, looking westward, said to me: "There, my boy, is Highland, your new home," and as I looked at the village containing a few hundred people, it was to me more beautiful than any place I had ever seen. Just as the sun was setting, I arrived in the town and found the members of my family awaiting my arrival with special interest, since they had heard nothing from me for ten days.

A surprising feature of that long and lonely journey was that comparatively few seemed to be surprised at it. It was simply a case of a Western lad carrying out his chosen plan, as hundreds of others were doing at all times, the results of which tended toward self-reliance and calm confidence in times of trial that has proved helpful through all the experiences of life.

Life in Highland During Early '70's.

The town of Highland was located, as its name implies, upon an elevation, and at the time of my arrival in Kansas, gave promise of becoming a large and prosperous place. The population consisted of something like 500 people, not including the students, but at that time the so-called University was filled with students and was attracting widespread attention. The principal teachers, including my honored father, the Rev. Thos. H. Dinsmore, D. D., who had the department of mathematics, were Rev. John A. McAfee, who later left the institution to found Park College at Parkville, Mo., who occupied the chair of Greek; Wm. T. Gage, a graduate of Dartmouth College, and one of the best teachers I ever had, filled the chair of Latin, and the three named, together with half a dozen others, most of whom were just beginning their work as teachers, constituted the faculty.

The educational work of that early day was painstaking and thorough on the part of the teachers, while the students as a rule represented a body of young people who were impressed with the determination to prepare carefully for work in after life, and, by the way, the town of Highland may well take modest pride in the many men of highest standing and usefulness who have gone out from its Missionary College.

Among the promising boys of my day were the five sons of Dr. John A. McAfee, three of whom now occupy positions of presidents of institutions of learning, and the two others are engaged in equally important work. My two older brothers, after completing their college work, devoted their lives to law and medicine, and have been successful in their chosen careers, while a younger brother generously gave up the hope of an education in order to help support the family.

Fred T. Gates, a son of a good Baptist minister, lived upon a farm about two miles from the village, and walked in daily, while attending the school, which later he left for a life of usefulness in the East, and for more than twenty-five years has devoted all of his time in advising John D. Rockefeller how to give away his untold millions. The conscientious devotion of young Gates' efforts along this line of benevolence has resulted in enabling him to wield a widespread influence, and the making of a name for himself which is known throughout the land.

In the line of sports, Fred J. Close, who had recently returned from the war, with the loss of his left arm, was the pitcher of the college baseball team. In those days none of the players wore gloves, but all caught with bare hands. Fred had the strongest arm, and pitched the swiftest ball that I have ever seen, and the college team seemed to me then, and in memory even now, as good as any of the professional teams of today. Fred has retained a close association with the State of Kansas, and now occupies the honorable position of president of the board of managers of the National Homes for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers. Among the other young men of that day may be named John Wilson, who devoted his life to the ministry, and later was honored by being elected moderator of the Synod of Kansas. Chas. W. Peyton of Virginia, who entered the ministry also, and has for nearly forty years proved his worth by a life of unselfish devotion to the cause of missions, chiefly in the South. Elwood W. Lewis, a graduate of the class of '75, studied medicine and for several years was recognized in Doniphan County as one of its leading physicians, and is now equally successful on the Pacific Coast. Peter McMillen and Edwin M. Murphy, members of the class of '77, entered the ministry and have been preaching constantly since 1880; the former in the East, where he is now pastor of a large Presbyterian church in New Jersey, and the latter in the West, where, for more than a generation, his influence has been wide-spread in behalf of home missions. In my own class, that of '76, there were but three of us—Oscar S. Long, whose father was one of the wealthy men of the county and a man of high character, and Miss Lizzie Young, a most faithful student, who, by her high record in the class, kept the remaining two of us hard at work in order to receive honorable mention. On account of the limited number, our class honors went begging upon graduation day, for we had scarcely sufficient persons to provide for the necessary positions of salutatorian, class orator and valedictorian. We were graduated with the best wishes of hundreds, and then entered upon our life work, which has continued with ceaseless activity.

Among the many advantages which the trustees of Highland University held out to her settlers and students who might be interested in educational affairs was the fact that the town was located in an unusually healthful section which was true, and that it was especially favored morally because it was sufficiently removed from all railroads as to be free from their pernicious influence. The village was favored in this respect, so its guardians thought, for more than a generation, but when finally a branch line was constructed from the Grand Island to the town, a change of both heart and mind took place among all of the people, for with better transportation facilities the town took on a new growth of life.

I have been permitted to travel somewhat extensively throughout our country, and after careful consideration of the advantages offered by the climate, fertility of the soil and the high character of people, it affords me special pleasure to recall the fact that there is no part of our land that can compare with that section included within a radius of fifty miles from Troy, the county seat of Doniphan County.

Hunting in Doniphan County.

Our chief recreation during my boyhood days in Highland consisted of hunting, which was a necessity, as well as pleasure. Nearly all of the people in those early days were poor, and the ministers and teachers especially so, since the salaries for both preaching and teaching, which were small in the first place, were paid about equally in promises and money, the latter in small amounts covering long periods. It was, therefore, absolutely necessary for us to depend upon wild game to a great extent for meat for the family. Fortunately, this was quite plentiful for several years and consisted of wild geese and ducks during the migrating season, prairie chicken, quail and rabbits during the winter months, and occasionally lots of turkeys were found on the bluffs of the Missouri River. With my older brother, Robert, who was stronger than I, and somewhat more successful in taking the birds on the wing, I tramped over almost every part of Doniphan County within a radius of ten miles of Highland. It was our invariable rule to try to earn enough small change during the week to purchase a supply of ammunition for Saturday which we devoted to a long hunt. We usually started out before daylight in order to reach points in the country from two to three miles away where the wild geese were accustomed to feed. They left the sandbars on the Missouri River between daylight and sunrise and in many cases appeared in flocks of hundreds. When we were successful in knocking over from one to three, we would spend the remainder of the morning hunting quail and chicken and return home toward the middle of the day, but in many cases we tramped from Highland to Wolf River, passing near Leona, and hunting as we traveled, then carrying quails, chickens and other game we hunted wild ducks on the river, which at that time was a stream from thirty to forty yards wide in many places. The ducks were fairly plentiful in that locality. We hunted on the stream from near Leona to about two miles below Severance, and then returned to Highland across the country almost where the branch line of railway now extends from Stout to that place. The day's outing included a tramp of from twenty to twenty-five miles, and we usually returned home about dark, or later, with a supply of game sufficient to meet the wants of the family for three or four days. In many cases we were able to sell some of our game for sufficient money to provide powder and shot for the next trip, and this was always a source of special satisfaction. Our scale of prices approximated as follows: Quails 5c, fat, juicy prairie chickens 15c apiece or two for a quarter, rabbits from 5c to 10c apiece, ducks 15c, plump, fat geese from 20c to 25c each. When we consider that in the city we now pay many times the price quoted, and are then compelled to eat game that has to a great extent lost its flavor, it makes the mouth water to think of the abundance of appetizing food that we had in those days of long ago.

The Price of Land.

The scale of the price of game just quoted serves as a fair basis for estimating the value of land and many forms of animal life used upon the farm. I recall that upon one occasion when we were hunting on a tract of unimproved land about two and one-half miles northwest of Highland, someone raised the question as to its value, and when we referred the matter to a farmer whom we met, he said: "Well, this quarter section is now held at $3.00 an acre, but the improved land all around here is worth from $8.00 to $10.00 an acre." There were many chances in those days to lay the foundations for fortunes through the purchase of the richest farming land in the world, but unfortunately very few had sufficient funds or credit to secure even a few acres.

My Experience in Teaching.

While in the preparatory department at Highland, whatever amount of funds that I may have been able to accumulate through work during vacation gave out entirely, and although I was young and inexperienced, I decided to try to secure a school. The best opening was that known as the Colored School in Highland, which was taught as a rule by young ladies who were living in town and, therefore, could accept the position at a nominal salary of $25 per month and save almost all of the money. By a stroke of good fortune, my application for the place was accepted, perhaps it was because the young ladies, during that particular season when I wanted the place, were more interested upon other things than teaching. Be that as it may, I taught the school through one term of three months, during the early spring, and found the pupils not only eager to learn, but very responsive to all efforts put forth toward teaching them. There was no trouble whatever with the discipline, and I have always looked back to that experience with feelings of special pleasure. A year or two later I was again so reduced financially that it became necessary to seek another school, and this time I turned to the district about two miles southwest of Highland, where the original "red school house" was located. It was a good district, and the school was sought for by many persons. When I made my application, the reply was somewhat as follows: "We think that we would like to have you as a teacher this year, but Miss Rebecca B. Kiner taught our school last year and gave such uniform satisfaction that we will not consider anyone else, so long as she may wish to retain the place. It was a worthy tribute to one of my classmates in college who, by her studious energy and unusual thoughtfulness, won the respect and confidence of all who knew her, and showed in her life that she would become a teacher of the rarest merit. And her continued work in this line in Doniphan and Brown counties for a period of forty years, has won for her the love and respect of thousands of young people

Turning away, somewhat reluctantly, from the "little red school house," I went next to see the directors of the Winona school, which is about two and a half miles west of Highland. Although the people in that district represented a high type of farmers, there were at that time several young men, from twenty to twenty-five years of age, that were exceedingly troublesome and a year before had turned the teacher out and caused the breaking up of the school. Upon making my application, the directors hesitated for a time about granting it, on account of my youth and the fact that I was an undersized lad of apparently not more than seventeen years of age, although a year older. On account of the fact that I had no horse and could not afford to pay my board in the country, I walked to and from the school during the entire winter months, and upon many occasions the mud and snow were so deep that more than once overshoes were left behind as mementoes that my successors possibly looked upon with special interest. Although I began my work in the Winona school with fear and trembling, there were a few months during the early fall, when the students were made up mostly of younger persons who gave me no trouble whatever, and when the older boys came tramping in, about the 1st of December, the feeling in favor of courtesy and discipline, good work and mutual respect between the teacher and the members of the school had become so well established that the young men took hold readily and assisted me in making the work for the winter so successful that an invitation was given at the close of the year to continue for another season. I was, however, unable to do so, since I desired to return to college and complete my course of study.

After my graduation I was invited to become one of the assistant teachers in the college, and accepted at a salary of $600 per year. Of this amount less than one-half was paid during the year, and the second year, even less than the first, but I continued my work there until toward the close of the third year when, on account of a vacancy in the principalship of the High School at Troy, I resigned my position in the University at Highland and took charge of the Troy school for the remainder of that year.

At the end of that terms work I received an unexpected invitation to the department of applied sciences in an institution in Pennsylvania, where I spent several very busy years, and then returned again to Kansas to take the department of physics and chemistry of the State Normal School in Emporia, and there I spent twelve of the happiest years of my life. The institution was attended by about 2,000 students annually, all noted for their hunger for knowledge and greatest zeal in pursuing their studies. The friendships there formed between the members of the faculty and the great body of students will remain so long as life shall last.

Highland Methodist Episcopal Church

(By Hugh Robert Orr, Pastor.)

More than forty years ago, among the early pioneers of Kansas, came the Rev. Dana Fox, a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church and a native of York state. Together with his family he began a pastorate as the first Methodist preacher in Highland. It was all pioneer work. No church building had yet been erected by the several Methodist families residing in the community. Rev. Fox organized the church and after a year or more of zealous and beneficent labor gathering the people for religious services in the early school houses and homes, the first Methodist Church edifice was erected and dedicated in 1871. This first and successful pastorate was suddenly broken, however, when the faithful pioneer leader was called from all earthly service. His body lies in the Highland cemetery and a beautiful monument over his grave reminds the few who still survive that early day, of the man who, with others of his noble type, gave himself humbly to the glorious task of laying the foundations for a Christian civilization in Kansas.

Highland Methodist Episcopal Church.

Since that day the church has continued its work of human uplift for the Kingdom without cessation. The following names appear on the roll of pastors who have served the church: Fox, Shackleford, Corkle, Treseis, Gates, Tolman, McCurdy, Gano, Jones, Clark, Peddleford, Scott, Whitney, Perry, Eels, Ryan, Geyer, Templeton, Clawson, Orr, the latter having been pastor of the church since 1913. Among the earliest members who still reside in Highland are Mr. and Mrs. Allen Keller, Mrs. Ralls, Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Marston, Mrs. Springer, Mr. and Mrs. Overlander and Mrs. Holland. Others, deceased, are Mr. and Mrs. E. G. Kitzmiller, and Mr. J. B. Holland.

In 1901 the first church building was lost by fire, having caught the blaze from a burning restaurant near by. The loss was complete. But the people had the vision and courage for larger things and, recovering themselves immediately from the misfortune, they went to work on the new church proposition and the following year dedicated the present building Dec. 7, 1902, the new church being a great improvement over the old one.

In the earlier days the church was on a circuit charge with other points, but for the last several years it has constituted a station charge, standing by its own strength. At present it is at the highest point of efficiency in its history, both in point of material equipment and support and also in its development and training for Christian service through its various departments.

The members of the present quarterly conference are: Rev. C. T. Durborraw, Dist. Supt.; Rev. Hugh R. Orr, pastor; C. C. Webb, W. C. Heikes, W. S. Keller, C. H. Marston, W. W. Dolly, J. C. Maurer, W. K. Stout, A. D. Buckley, trustees and stewards; Prof. T. J. Holland, Sunday School Supt.; Miss Mary Holland, president of Epworth League; Mrs. C. H. Marston, Supt. of Junior League; Mrs. C. H. Hughes, president of Ladies' Aid Society and W. F. M. S. Together, the modest but well equipped church and the almost new eight room parsonage give the people and pastor a splendid opportunity to carry on successfully their work which they consider is not to be ministered unto but to minister.

Doniphan County People See Liberty Bell

Many Troy Citizens at St. Joseph July 8, 1915, When Bell Which Proclaimed Independence of United States from England Was on Exhibition—Relic Was En Route to San Francisco Exposition—Trip to Coast Cost $35,000, Which Was Paid By Philadelphians.

One of the events in the history of Doniphan County which will be long remembered was the excursion which many of her citizens made to St. Joseph, July 8, 1915, to see the Liberty Bell, the famous bell, which rang out the tones proclaiming that the American colonies had declared independence from Great Britain, was on exhibition while en route to the San Francisco fair. Hundreds of Troy people saw the venerated relic.

The bell and its frame was mounted on a flat car especially equipped for the trip to the exposition. The car was fitted with huge steel springs which absorbed the jar from the motion of the train. The clapper was held in place by a steel rod which prevented its striking against the sides. Over the bell was a dome equipped with electric lights which were turned on at night, making the bell visible for miles. Mayor Blankenburg of Philadelphia accompanied the bell. The expense of the trip, $35,000, was born by the citizens of Philadelphia, where the bell sent out its message of liberty.

The bell had made other trips. Just before the British captured Philadelphia, during the American Revolution, it was taken to Allentown, Pennsylvania, for safe keeping. It was sent to New Orleans for exhibition in 1885; to Charleston for the same purpose in 1902; likewise to Boston for exhibition in 1903, and to the St. Louis exposition in 1904. However, its removal to the San Francisco fair was its first trip across the continent and is a matter of history.

The Liberty Bell was first procured in England by order of the Pennsylvania assembly at the celebration in 1751 of the foundation of Pennsylvania by William Penn. It is called the Liberty Bell because it rang out the tidings of the Declaration of Independence to the people of Philadelphia on July 8, 1776, so that was 139 years ago on July 8, 1915. Although the Declaration was adopted on July 4, it was not read to the people of Philadelphia until July 8. The bell was first cast by Lester & Cist, of Whitechapel, London, by order of the Pennsylvania assembly in 1751, and arrived in Philadelphia in September the following year. It was twice recast by two young Americans, John Pass and Charles Stow of Philadelphia. In order to make it less brittle they made a change in its composition, adding one and one-half ounces of copper to each pound of metal. That also made it more resonent. The bell is twelve feet in circumference at the base and three feet from the lip to the crown, and when made it weighed 2,080 pounds.

The bell bears this inscription: "Proclaim Liberty throughout all the land unto all the inhabitants thereof. Lev. xxv:10." It also bears the names of Pass & Stow, the casters.

Besides the proclamation of Independence its tongue has announced other important events. It announced the surrender of Cornwallis at Yorktown on Sept. 26, 1781. It proclaimed peace with England, April 16, 1783. It tolled the death of Washington, Dec. 26, 1799, and welcomed Lafayette back to America in 1824. It was tolling for the funeral of Chief Justice John Marshall on July 4, 1835, when the big crack which it now bears was discovered. An attempt was made to restore its tone by drilling out the crack, but the attempt failed.

It was given the name of Liberty Bell during the celebration of the Centennial of American Independence in Philadelphia in 1876.

First Congregational Church, Highland

This church was organized October 5, 1865, and is, therefore, fifty years old next October. The Rev. H. P. Robinson was the first minister. During these fifty years there have been about twenty ministers. The present pastor is Rev. Horace Hastings, B. D., M. A.

In securing Mr. Hastings as its pastor, the Congregational Church has brought to its pulpit a man singularly gifted, and abundantly equipped to advance the best interests of that religious organization. Mr. Hastings has enjoyed educational advantages of an exceptional nature. Always a student and thinker, he has availed himself of the liberal opportunities open to him, to advance himself along the lines essential to and in harmony with his high calling.

The Rev. Horace Hastings

Mr. Hastings began his early education in the public schools of Massachusetts, and later studied at the high school of Watertown, New York, and also the New York University. He studied at Folts Institute and Ives Seminary. He studied also at Illinois Wesleyan University, where two degrees were conferred upon him. Mr. Hastings' polished and forceful personality, his broad scholastic attainments, and his practical earnestness in his church work, have made him a factor in the life of Highland that means results both to himself and his congregation.

Mr. Hastings is a man whose virile personality has extended beyond the boundaries of his church work. Practical in his conception, a fine public speaker and with broad humanitarian ideas, he has made friends both inside and out of regular church circles. He and his excellent, charming wife are distinct additions to the social and religious life of the community in which their latest work has called them.

An Interstate Auctioneer

Charles M. Scott, of Hiawatha, Has a Reputation of Being the Best Auctioneer, Not Only in Kansas, But in Nebraska, Also.

It is commendable for a man to have earned the reputation of being the best auctioneer in the state, but it is a much greater honor to be unequivocally styled the best auctioneer in two states —Kansas and Nebraska.

That is the situation with Charles M. Scott of Hiawatha, who is universally conceded to be at the head of his profession as a sales caller, not only in his home state of Kansas, but in the neighboring state of Nebraska.

Col. Charles M. Scott.

Mr. Scott has been an active auctioneer for a number of years, and his work in that difficult and exacting calling has been eminently successful. He is energetic and resourceful, and the general public and his clients have equally strong confidence in his integrity and ability. Even the most skeptical who attended the Herman Groniger sale last fall was convinced that the Colonel has few equals as an auctioneer.

Although coming by his gifts naturally, Mr. Scott has had his knowledge supplemented by a thorough course in the Missouri Auction School at Trenton, Mo. He is, consequently, fortified with the most modern and approved methods which insure for the best results in the most business-like way.

Mr. Scott is a native of Brown County, having been born ten miles north of Hiawatha on June 11, 1882. His early education was obtained in the public schools and he later took a complete course in the Missouri Auction School at Trenton.

On March 29, 1902, Mr. Scott was married to Miss Leora Kemp, of Bethany, Mo., and three children have been born to the union, two daughters and one son. They are Nellie A. and Nettie L., and Charles E. The Scotts have a lovely home on Rural Route No. 1. ten miles north of Hiawatha.

THE HOME LUMBER COMPANY—BUILDING MATERIALS OF ALL KINDS AND COAL

No single enterprise in a town or community takes a more active or substantial interest in upbuilding and trade expansion than a lumbering concern. It usually takes the initiative, and by example and enterprise paves the way for succeeding industries, and encourages capital.

The Home Lumber Company, of which C. H. Rooker is president, is no exception to the above general statement. Its yard is advantageously located near the business section of Highland and close to the Grand Island Railroad terminal. It is completely stocked with all kinds of rough and finished lumber, doors, sashes, cement, brick, tile, wood, slate and composition roofing, etc. The company has recently enlarged its plant, and all lumber is under sheds, keeping it at all times in the best possible condition. The size and equipment of the Home Lumber Company would do credit to a city several times the size of Highland.

Coal

This ambitious concern also handles coal. The best grades of hard and soft coal are for sale here at prices that attract buyers from long distances. Mr. Rooker, the president and manager, has been identified in this line of business for several years, and is thoroughly competent to direct the establishment. He was born and raised in this vicinity and is well and favorably known throughout the entire region. The growth and success of the Home Lumbering Company is due to his ability and personal popularity.

Mr. C. C. Webb, secretary and treasurer, is widely known as the cashier of the popular Farmers' State Bank.

LOUIS DEGGINGER

Started Out of St. Joseph With a Pack on His Back and Today Is One of the County's Richest Men.

Starting in 1868, out of St. Joseph, Missouri, as an itinerant pack peddler, Louis Degginger amassed a fortune, and has reared a fine family. This is the story of success in a few brief words. Louis Degginger, who will be recalled by hundreds in Doniphan County, was born in Bavaria, Jan. 4, 1846. He left his mother country when twenty years of age and came to the land of opportunity, as America was then called, arriving in New York in 1866. In the early spring of 1868 he went to St. Joseph, Missouri, and although without any money or much knowledge of the English language, he had courage, and from R. L. McDonald he bought enough goods on credit to start peddling. In the summer of that year he arrived in Doniphan County.

It was tedious work, but the young Bavarian had pluck and plenty of it, and the time was not long until he had money enough to open a store at Sparks, Kansas. For five years he prospered, but in 1883 he saw another opportunity and went to Rulo, Neb., and was in the mercantile business there five years. Returning to Sparks again he started another store and made a snug fortune buying and selling grain of which he was an expert judge and a shrewd buyer. It was said that Louis Degginger never made a mistake in a transaction. Five years after his return from Rulo, Nebraska, he located at Highland, where the family lived for twenty years and where Mr. Degginger made most of his fortune.

On April 10, 1873, he was married to Miss Ella Herring, who was born near Natchez, Mississippi, Nov. 22, 1851, and who came to Doniphan County with her parents in the early part of November, 1868. To their union three children were born. They are Bertha Degginger, born at Highland, Oct. 10, 1893; Nathan Clyde, at Sparks, Jan. 3, 1882, and Mrs. F. P. (Pearl) Blair, at Highland on the old mission farm, Jan. 19, 1874.

Louis Degginger.

In the latter part of 1910, Mr. Degginger retired from business and on Jan. 1, 1911, moved with his family to Kansas City, Missouri, where they now reside at Number 2823 Harrison street. Mr. Degginger owns 800 acres of fine Doniphan County land and several business blocks in Highland. His life and success has been an example and shows what pluck and perseverance will do.

Man Killed on Train

Saturday morning, May 25, 1871, Michael Dawson, a section man on the road of the St. Joseph & Denver railroad, met sudden death two miles east of Troy while riding in an engine which was coming up from St. Joseph, bringing a flat car load of iron for the repairing of the broken bridge near Severance. The tender struck a cow at this point, killing her and throwing both the tender and the engine from the track, the tender falling to the left and the engine falling over on its side to the right. The fireman and engineer were thrown from the engine, but Mr. Dawson was caught under the cab, horribly mashing his body from one side, across to the opposite hip. He died shortly afterwards. Mr. Dawson's wife died some time before this accident occurred and he left one child an orphan.

Cold-Blooded Murder

On Monday, Aug. 21, 1871, a most designing and cold-blooded murder was committed in St. Joseph. A farmer named John C. Foster, of Cainsville, Harrison County, Missouri, had been to Amazonia with wagon and team and went from there to St. Joseph and a man, a stranger to him, asked to receive the privilege of riding with him. When passing out of St. Joseph, on Frederick avenue, they took a glass of beer and the stranger managed to put poison in Foster's glass, which resulted in his death after forty-five minutes of excrutiating agony. The murderer, John Doyle, escaped unmolested.

J. R. Plowman of Iowa Point, who was one of the first members of Smithton Lodge No. 1 of A. F. and A. M., departed this life at Iowa Point, Kan., March 23, 1871. The funeral services were conducted by the lodge and a committee was appointed to draft resolutions of condolence for the county papers.

Friday morning, April 14, 1871, J. L. Thompson, an old and well known citizen of Atchison, was killed at Winthrop, Missouri, by being run over by a car. He jumped off of the car upon the track, in front of another car, it being in motion, and fell as soon as he struck the ground.

side ten miles north of Hiawatha. She was born July 27, 1904, on the farm where the family now reside. She has made a perceptible showing in school during her youthful days. During the summer she has been taking music lessons and plays well on the piano for a girl of her age.

Colonel C. M. Scott is the celebrated auctioneer who has the reputation of being the tri-state auctioneer, presumably because of the fact that he cries sales in Nebraska, Missouri and Kansas.

History of the Christian Church at Sparks

(By Miss Anna Mallows, editor of The White Cloud Globe.)

"The Work at Sparks as I have seen it,"
Is my subject for today,
But of it I know so little
For I'm only a lay-member, neighbors,
No great thing can I achieve;
No D. D. wear I as a title,
Yet can I tell you a simple story,
Concerning Sparks Christian Church
Concerning the work as I remember it,
And as gathered from a history search.

The old building here was erected
In the year 1878;
And was built for union worship
At this very early date.
But in 1886 the Christian people
Held a revival campaign,
With W. T. Maupin as evangelist,
And thus the foundation of the Christian Church was lain.
He effected the organization
With members seventy-one,
And with these the work of the disciples
Was at Highland Station begun.

Ministers followed in rapid succession.
The names of some I can tell:
T. J. Williamson, J. A. Anderson, J. Speer and F. A. McCarthy,
All of whom we knew very well;
For all these preached at White Cloud,
While they also labored here,

The next I knew of the work here,
Was in the winter of '98 and '99, and during this lull,
I was over at Highland
And sheltered in the home of the late N. A. Stull.
How hard Brother Stull labored with this people,
Teaching all through the week,
Then on Sunday, he'd come down here again,
And to a handful of people speak.
As yesterday, do I remember,
How through sleet and storm would he come,
And if there was anything to discourage,
On that subject Bro. Stull was dumb.

Oh, that long, cold, dreary winter—
Yet all winter through did he come,
And his reports were that the work was excellent;
He never was known to act glum.
While Bro. Stull held this pastorate
In 1898 and '99,
D. D. Boyle conducted a revival
Considered very fine.
The result of this evangelistic campaign
Was near 100 members to add,
But from that time until the present
The work has been quite bad.

The next I heard of the work here,

Then vengeance rose mighty within you,
With your neighbor brothers at work
It seemed that you made a determination,
That from duty, you could not now shirk.
For the neighbors would think that was shameful,
And other towns their proud lips would curl;
So you went over to Severance and borrowed the use
Of the Rev. A. J. Pirtle.

And you said by your actions that you must make up
For the time you had already lost,
And Bro. Pirtle was equal to the occasion,
(Our bouquets at him should be tossed.)
Did you think he would fear and be fickle,
And scamper before he was hit?
Well, maybe; but Bro. Pirtle has been tested
In places to show he has grit.
This courageous, tireless worker,
He may not have seemed so to you,
But to those who have watched his efforts
He is earnest, tried and true.

He held a two weeks special meeting
Resulting in members 136 or thereabout,
And that the work will now be permanent
We have not the slightest doubt.

They are wondering what you can do.
They are wondering if all these glowing reports
Are really and surely true.
And they are saying, "If Sparks can do it,
"Is there not something which we can do.
"It's an effort for Sparks to do so much,
"With such an effort, could we not do something too?
"Each might have a modern building,
"If he'd make an effort himself,
"He might save somebody's darling,
"Lay one victim less on the shelf."

So this enthusiasm is among us,
With these thoughts and more of their kind;
Let us push the hand war with more vigor,
To drive the heart war from the mind.
Every one is surely delighted and pleased
That Sparks would not know defeat,
And when your new building is finished
Our joy will be complete.
Because we know of the struggles
Which you have already passed thru,
And we'll be glad to watch your progress
In everything that you do.
We're expecting great things to be accomplished
Because of the earnestness already displayed,
And there will be a new inspiration now,

GROUP OF GRADE SCHOOL IN HIGHLAND.

Picture taken Nov. 20, 1914 by Photographer Cook of Tenth and Jule streets, St. Joseph, Missouri. Teachers for 1914 and 1915 as follows: J. T. Holland, Mabel Hague, Bly Whittaker, May Thorp, Lois Mueller, Emma J. Starr.

And thus their work was divided too much,
For very successful work, I fear.
F. F. Wright then held a pastorate,
While J. A. Irvin did a revival hold
Which resulted in 95 additions.
(By others, this we're told.)

But when I taught my first school at Fanning,
In the year 1891,
There was no preaching service here conducted
Except an occasional one.
The town was nearly deserted on Sundays,
As we remember it now;
The workers went to Iola,
(For this act to them we should bow.)

They kept up the Sunday school at Iola all winter,
And a rousing good school it was, too;
Sometimes the building was crowded,
Yet at times there were only a few;
But these things were easy of doing,
For we all loved the work so;
And then at times we'd come down to Sparks
For a meeting or so, you know.
The people, as a whole, at Sparks, though, were not much interested,
And those who wanted to work would get blue,
For there were some faithful workers,
This fact is surely true.
There were aged, young and middle,
Who each found a work they could do,
Though they could do but a little,
They proved themselves "true blue."

The Sunday school was no more;
Then I'd hear of a union undertaking,
Then gone again as before.
The work was exceedingly discouraging,
It seemed no use to try;
The efforts seemed almost to have ended,
With tears glittering in many an eye.
The long, dreary Sundays, with no services,
Was what I'd find when down here I came,
And for weeks and weeks the reports from down here
Were always much the same.
The neighboring ministers attempted the work—
Attempted it o'er and o'er—
But each time they pronounced the result
Was always just as before.
Until a reorganization was effected
About two months ago
Floyde A. Bash of Highland, was organizer,
With fifteen members or so.
No better man could have been found for the work;
No one a more stable work could fix
Than our own dear Brother Bash, who preached his first sermon at White Cloud,
On September 2, 1906.
But finally your denominational brothers got busy.
And stirred up things in your town,
Then, as we heard the story,
You people began to look roun'.

I was invited down here during the late winter,
To attend a banquet on a dreadfully dark, muddy night,
And what I saw on that evening,
To me was a wonderful sight.
There was the choir in the corner
In their places, on time every one,
And every pew filled with anxious listeners,
Long before the hour for services had begun.
And Brother and Sister Pirtle were surely at the helm,
And the inspiration of that evening,
Did my whole soul overwhelm.
After an able sermon,
Which seemed to me only too short,
Brother Pirtle on the money question
Began now to extort;
And in less than thirty minutes,
$1,400 we saw raised
To place with the building fund,
And for this action you people should be praised.

We then went over to the school building
Where the feast had been prepared
For at least three hundred people,
No effort had there been spared.
Everyone was there good natured,
In the work which he knew was right,
And from that day to the present
Every report from you has been at all times bright.

The county's eyes are all centered on the doing of Sparks,
With the corner-stone once laid.
There is plenty of the best of material
Right here in your town, you'll see,
To make one of the strongest churches in the county,
Than no other kind should it be.
And now—I have told you my simple story,
And sisters all the county o'er
Could tell you a similar story,
If asked for the same from their store.

Harry Shaner, a former resident of Troy, died at his home in Chicago, Thursday, Feb. 26, 1914, of heart disease and other complications. He was county superintendent of Doniphan County from 1881 to 1885. He left Troy shortly after the Rock Island road was built through that place and went to Topeka to take a position in their offices in that city. He was later transferred to Chicago, where he remained until his death. He was born in Wyoming County, Pennsylvania, Aug. 28, 1848, and came to Doniphan County in 1870.

Harvey M. Hogue died at his home in Highland, Sunday night, Feb. 22, 1914, of heart trouble. At the time of his death he was postmaster of Highland and had held that position for eight years. He had lived in Highland some twenty years. He was a veteran of the Civil War. Mr. Hogue was seventy-one years of age and left a wife and six children.

Religious Awakening at Sparks

It Has Resulted from the Splendid Work of the Rev. A. J. Pirtle, and Has Touched the Lives of Nearly All the People of the Entire Community—The Erection of the Pretty House of Worship of the Christian Denomination Is a Fine Illustration of How the Religious Fervor Has Taken Hold of the People.

Sparks is a village of one hundred inhabitants, prospering as other communities prosper in worldly goods. Yet the citizens of Sparks can boast of a spirit which is not confined to that of earthly things, but looks to the things of life eternal. The religious awakening which came to Sparks last fall reached into the home of practically every man, woman and child in this little country village.

This religious atmosphere is manifested in the new church edifice erected by the Christian denomination. It is a church of the people, for each and all had a part in its building. From the time the first shovel full of earth was turned by Z. N. Newton, to the preaching of the dedicatory sermon by Chancellor Oschlager of Cottner University, Lincoln, Neb., the progress of the builders was watched with daily eagerness by all the citizens. When the three thousand persons crowded into and around the new church on June 10, 1915, to listen to Chancellor Oschlager tell of the work of God in the community there was an intense interest and religious fervor aroused. People came from far and near. The population of the little village was multiplied thirty-fold for the momentous day.

The corner-stone was laid less than two months before, on April 25, 1915. So eager were the members to worship in their new structure the work was rushed to completion. The members of the building committee were a unit in planning the details so that the work would not be in any way retarded. When the last nail was driven and the scaffolds were torn away, the finished product was one that was really a monument to the thrift, the enthusiasm and the zeal of the planners and builders.

Sparks wasn't without its churches. The Baptists several years before had built a structure that had been used for worship, but the membership had fallen away for various reasons until only a few were to be found, and there were no regular sermons. A union church held occasional meetings, but the religious fervor was lacking.

Then came the Rev. A. J. Pirtle into the community. He held the charge in Severance, where he was doing an admirable work. His zeal was unbounded, and he was anxious for the good work to spread. Being a man of strong convictions, and ardent in his effort to spread the kingdom of God among his fellow men, he decided to hold a protracted meeting in Sparks in the fall of 1914. He saw the opening there for effective work in his Master's vineyard and he was not slow to seize the opportunity.

This prophetic vision of the Rev. Mr. Pirtle was rich in results. Crowds flocked to hear him. His earnestness grew upon the people and he was rewarded by a large number of converts. Seventy-five members were added to the church roll. The religious awakening had taken hold upon the people. The revival spirit was aroused, and the community joined hands and forgot sectarianism.

The pastor did not neglect his work at Severance, but continued his ministerial duties at that place. Nor did he neglect his flock in his newest vicarage. He attended them both with the same tenderness and care as a shepherd brings in his sheep at night to the fold. On Sunday afternoons and in the evenings during the week, especially on Saturday evening, he came from Severance and preached to the people of Sparks. The good people of Sparks responded heartily and willingly to his call.

The time was now ripe for a new church building. The seed had been sown, and was producing a bountiful harvest. When the persevering minister sent out word to his followers, they came forth and offered him their services, their means and their personal support.

A building committee was organized, composed of the substantial farmers of the community, also including the pastor, the Rev. A. J. Pirtle and an influential merchant, W. A. Robinson. The prosperous and busy farmers who found time amid their many duties on the farm to help guide the destinies of the new venture, were J. W. Bonham, George W. Thomas, F. M. Lovejoy, J. S. Mallows, Samuel Caudle and J. D. Taylor. These men worked in harmony and unity, joining their energies and their brains in the production of the artistic and convenient edifice which is the religious and social center of the community today.

Realizing the value of co-operation and community spirit in the completion of their hearts' desire, the members vied with each other in doing all they could in the way of donating work. All the material was hauled by the members free of any charge. Claud Collins, J. D. Taylor, J. W. Bonham, J. W. Jenkins, Claud Randall, J. S. Mallows, J. R. Bonham, Joseph Jenkins, John Sparks, Shurman Dawson, William Rawles, Samuel Caudle, Willis Caudle and John Alfry brought out their teams and wagons and hauled the materials.

The contract was let to H. T. Schafer, and W. M. Slyter was the foreman. They did their work well and without loss of time, for in less than two months after the cornerstone was laid the pews were in place and the dedicatory services were held. More than eighteen hundred persons gathered on April 25, 1915, and witnessed the placing of the cornerstone with appropriate ceremonies. Z. N. Newton was the first man employed on the contract, and threw the first shovelful of earth. Frank I. Simpson, Shurman Dawson, Bert Zimmerman and Joseph Newton were the residents of Sparks who labored daily that the people might have a worthy place in which to worship. The other men who were engaged in the construction, came from Atchison.

The church cost $2,600 and is considered one of the neatest little churches in the state of Kansas, in a village the size of Sparks. The art glass windows are beautiful productions of the artisan, and are in perfect accord with the spirit which has long actuated the placing of stained glass windows in the churches of this country. They were created by the Art Glass Company of St. Joseph, Mo. The plastering was done by Ad Dyer and a man from Atchison did the painting.

The Sunday school organized by the it comprises the majority of the boys and girls in Sparks. The seeds of light and goodness sown in the hearts and minds of these young people will reproduce manyfold as time goes on. Here on Sundays the young folks from the homes in the village and on the farms gather for instruction in the truth of life as were first taught by the Master and the guide and friend of the little children, who said: "Suffer little children to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of Heaven." The Sunday school teachers here seize the opportunity of a lifetime to lead these little ones in the way of the Master.

The social life of the Sunday school can hardly be estimated in a community of this kind. The social center idea can here grow to its full fruition and scatter the germs of hospitality into the lives of every boy and girl of the countryside. The village youth here commingle wtih their cousins from the farm and a spirit of true helpfulness grows up that is lasting in results.

The community church such as the Christian Church in Sparks, has grown to be and is one of the best assets for the farmers. When a man goes into a new location seeking a home for his wife and growing children, he first inquires of the church and school. He is anxious that the daily routine of farm life be broken at least once a week by the healthful and helpful surrounding and environment of religious influence. He wants his son and daughter as they grow, to be associated with other boys and girls who have a wholesome respect for the good things of life. He wants his wife to be neighbor to the woman who loves her church and her religion. Oftentimes he does not ask what denomination the church is, but he wants to know there is a church influence in the neighborhood. He may not be an ardent church goer himself, but he does not want his family to be deprived of that privilege. If he lived close enough to Sparks to come into touch with the church there and the work of the pastor and his members, he is apt to fall into line before he has lived in the community very long.

The Christian Church in Sparks is now exerting just such an influence upon the citizens who are already there, and upon the prospective farmers and villagers who are looking for a new home. When the real estate man takes a visitor over the town he invariably points out the new Christian Church as an example of the civic pride, the indomitable will power of the people, the religious attitude of the neighborhood, and the forward looking point of view which is seen on every hand. The school teachers tell of the work that is being done there which indirectly and quietly but effectively, supplements their work in the school room. The mothers are proud of their church societies, where they meet not for idle gossip, but to do the work of the missionary, the ladies' aid, the relief work, if any be needed in the winter, and the various duties which they can always find to do.

Nor does the sectarian idea stand out prominently. The broad-minded pastor preaches those sermons which take hold upon the souls of his hearers and which causes them to feel that "it is good to be here." The members of the church are ardent in their faith, but they are not narrow-minded. They welcome their friends and neighbors, and visitors in their little city, whether they be Baptist, Presbyterian, Methodist, Congregational, or perhaps have no active church connection at all. The spirit of universal brotherhood has taken hold of this congregation since the revival last fall, and the great amount of good to the whole vicinity is difficult to estimate.

This new spirit has been productive of many good things aside from and outside the confines of the four walls of the church itself. There is a closer bond of sympathy between the merchants, the tradesmen, the farmers, which means happiness to everyone. Evidences of the influence are seen in a better civic pride, in cleaner streets, in brighter homes, in a fuller contentment, in less avarice, in a kinder feeling of friendship, in broader view toward education, in less fault-finding, and deeper appreciation of the higher things of life.

The team work developed by the various members of the building committee has taught the residents the value of such team work in building up a better town. For who is there that derives the benefit of a modern community spirit more than the people who live in the community?

The school, the newspaper, the home, the church—these are the great educators in our modern civilization. The school takes the child for a few hours each day and attempts a systematic training of the mind and the body. The child is taught to read that he may gain the great truths that will come to him through these other agencies. He is taught to think in arithmetic that he may take his part in the business affairs of life. Geography, history, grammar, all have their place in modern education. Manual training and domestic science and agriculture are the more practical subjects that are being taught.

The home has the training of the child when he is not in school, and this is usually three-fourths of the time in winter and all the time in summer. The mother here takes the place of the teacher, aided by the father when his time will permit, and the two try to bring up the child "in the way he should go."

The newspaper brings the daily world in all its activities, good and bad, and places them before the child, often before he or she is able to discriminate the good from the bad. Used in the right direction, the newspaper is a powerful agency in the upbuilding of the community. Used wrongly it may become as powerful an influence for evil.

The church, however, must counteract all the evil that may result from poor instruction received in the school, in the home and by the newspaper. In a few brief hours on Sunday and perhaps a few evenings during the week, the church, with its Sunday school, its young people's societies, its prayer meetings, its aid societies, its missionary meetings, its brotherhoods, and its boys' and girls' clubs, attempts to do a vast piece of work in a short time. It can readily be seen that it is a powerful factor in community life.

This is all the more true in the smaller communities. Here the pastor is at one and the same time a leader, a counsellor and a guide. He finds his arduous duties among the young folks, among the women, among the men. He must be pastor, comforter, helper in time of sickness, and preacher to all the community.

Doubtless these ideas were strongly in the mind of Pastor Pirtle when he undertook to guide the religious life of the people of Sparks and its vicinity. He came to the little village with many misgivings of the task before him. He pointed out the way, and soon his followers were many, for they realized that he was a true leader and one they could feel safe in following. And he has not disappointed his trusting followers. They have been led in the right paths, as his increasing work among them is a full and complete testimony.

The work of this congregation is continuing to grow and spread. The church activities are becoming more numerous and better organized from day to day. The pastor is meeting with more willing support as time goes on, and as his efforts are more fully appreciated. The church on Sunday is the meeting place of the countryside, and here there are many happy gatherings. The young people of Sparks find in the minister one who is willing and anxious to hear of their troubles and of their happiness, especially when the time for matrimony arrives. He pays a fitting tribute to those who depart this life, and pronounces the words of baptism upon those who are taken into the fold. In all these ways he has become the advisor and the friend of all the people, and they have profited by his coming. They show their appreciation by giving the church their hearty and increasing support.

The laying of the cornerstone was not only an eventful occurence in the life and history of the church itself, but in the history of Sparks as well. Fully eighteen hundred persons gathered on the eventful day and listened to an excellent program and feasted upon the bountiful dinner which was prepared by all of the women of Sparks and vicinity. It was a day long to be remembered and marked a milestone in the progress of this section of Doniphan County.

The cornerstone was laid in its final resting place by J. W. Bonham, F. M. Lovejoy and David Guy. With impressive ceremonies the stone was opened and in its recesses were deposited a number of articles of intrinsic worth and historic value. These consisted of coins, hymnbooks used by the congregation, a list of three hundred names copied and compiled from those in attendance, by P. V. Miller, cashier of the Sparks State Bank, and Walter B. Montgomery, editor and compiler of this historical edition.

In addition to these articles one of the most valuable articles deposited in the cornerstone was a copy of the Weekly Kansas Chief. The importance was not so much because of the particular copy of the newspaper, but because of the fact that the Weekly Kansas Chief, published each week in Troy, has the proud distinction of being the oldest paper in Kansas. It is owned and edited by Henry J. Calnan. Much of the material contained in the edition in the cornerstone was of a historical character, and preserves for all time, during the life of the beautiful little church edifice, historical incidents of Sparks and Doniphan County. Probably the man who discovered the brilliant idea of depositing articles of such character in cornerstones has been lost to history, but his plan still lives and is a good one, as is attested by the interest which always attends a ceremony of this kind. This same spirit of keen appreciation was shown on this memorable Sunday when the cornerstone of the Sparks Christian Church was laid.

The members of the congregation recognized the claims of the Weekly Kansas Chief as being the best weekly and county paper in the state of Kansas by depositing the copy in the cornerstone alongside the other valuables selected. This recognition came from the fact that the Chief has always served the interests of the people of Sparks as no other paper has or can do.

Copies of other papers published in Doniphan County were also deposited in the cornerstone. The White Cloud Globe is edited by Miss Mallows. The Severance Weekly News is published by Pat Gray. Tobias Larson presides in the sanctum of the Highland Vidette, while Col. C. W. Ryan owns and edits the Wathena Times.

The value of newspaper workers was further given prominence by the selection of Miss Anna Mallows, editor of the White Cloud Globe, for an important place on the program. She wrote the history of the church in rhyme and read it as a fitting climax to the exercises of the day. In this beautiful contribution to the literature of Doniphan County she wove together the fabric of history in a manner that was fully appreciated. The trials and tribulations, the successes and failures, the vicissitudes of the early struggle of the church were portrayed in graphic and finished style. Her telling descriptions, her narrations and arguments, her exclamations, were all interwoven, leading up to the final triumph of the day. Her delivery was masterful and scholarly and brought forth comment from every quarter of Doniphan County.

The victory for her, however, was not yet complete. So deep and lasting was the impression which she left with her hearers on this first important day in the life of this congregation, that she was invited to add more to the epic. On June 10, 1915, at the dedicatory services, she brought the narrative down to date, and brought about a climax when she told of giving $100 for the maintenance. All in all the program was declared to be the best that those who were privileged to hear it, had ever heard. Miss Mallows won the hearts and best wishes of the large audiences which assembled at both the laying of the cornerstone, and the dedication. Her style was full of life and human interest, and the subject matter was of that nature which gave her an opportunity to wield her pen to the highest advantage. In this line of effort she naturally excells and on these two occasions she was at her best.

The program of speech-making, songs, and recitations of the good deeds done by the builders whetted the appetites of those who were assembled. Many had driven miles to attend the exercises, and were hungry.

Picture taken from the George M iller store building at Sparks, Sunday, June 13, 1915, by J. W. Admire of Hiawatha.

But this hunger did not go unallayed. Here the women, not alone of the congregation of the Christian denomination, but their sisters from every denomination in town and country snowed to the best advantage. Not one nor two, but sometimes as many as three baskets were laden with all the delicacies of the farm, the vineyard, the poultry yard, the orchard and the garden. There was no "groaning of the festal board," as they were too heavily laden to groan.

Dinner was served in the school house and in the big tent owned and provided by Bert Zimmerman. Its spacious canopy stretched across the greensward and vied with the permanent building to accommodate the visitors. Merriment of the children was one of the features that spread good cheer to everyone present. While no prizes were offered for the daintiest and best filled basket, one would naturally have thought that a contest was being staged by the managers of the various culinary departments in the different homes. Domestic science teachers would have been overjoyed to have peeped in upon the merry throng.

John Alfrey took an estimate and declared that five hundred and twenty-six chickens were placed upon the tables. Everyone was fed and there was plenty for a bountiful supper at the close of the exercises. No one went home hungry, unless he were too bashful to eat. The newspapers had published several times that the dinner was to be free, and everyone took advantage of this announcement. The credit for this big overflow dinner and supper was due to the women, who worked together in most commendable harmony and unity.

The entire day of the cornerstone exercises was made a community day, spreading the full gospel of good fellowship throughout the community. The gathering was one of the best opportunities to knit more closely the bonds which have made Sparks the desirable neighborhood that takes front rank in the rural life of Doniphan County. Men left their farm work of the early spring and came together for a richer communion and outpouring of their daily existence. Women forgot the cares of the day and commingled their joys at the hopes of having a permanent house of worship. Young people joined hands in the successful effort to show to the pastor and their parents the earnestness which actuated them in helping to carry the plans to completion. Children played and enlivened the occasion with their cheers and laughter. It was a gala day.

To exemplify the fact that no feeling existed between the different churches at the dedicatory services, in the evening the pastor was pleading for a completion of the necessary pledges. He had succeeded in getting all except a final $50 pledge. In the quiet of the moment, Josh Dutton, a member of the Evangelical faith, arose and said: "Put me down for that $50."

The program for the cornerstone and the dedicatory exercises were as follows:

Rev. J. Tilden Sapp, pastor of Christian Church, Troy; Rev. Floyd Bash, pastor Christian Church, Highland; Rev. A. J. Brokaw, pastor Christian Church, Hiawatha; Rev. Harry Smith, pastor Christian Church, Horton; Wesley Jenkins, Miss Taylor, Rev. T. V. Hubble of Everest, Ruth Agee, Pearl Baldwin, Eva Pirtle, Judge Edwin Brown, probate judge of Doniphan County; Miss Anna Mallows, editor White Cloud Globe; Joe Griffin, ex-sheriff; Rev. A. J. Pirtle, pastor of the Severance Christian Church; Chancellor William Oschger of Cotner University, Lincoln, Nebraska; Rev. Hugh Orr, pastor of the M. E. Church, Highland; Prof. Charles Marble of Troy, L. W. Bonham and Tom Springer.

On Nov. 7, 1871, Samuel P. Blair, aged fifty-six years, died of pneumonia at Blair's Grove, near Troy. The deceased was a native of the state of Tennessee, but had lived in Kansas for many years. He was a man of positive character, of strong sense, warm heart and true friendship, a good husband, a generous, kind father and a useful citizen.

The Town of Sparks

Name Changed About Eight Years Ago From Its Original of Highland Station in Honor of John Sparks, One of the Most Highly Respected Residents of that Part of Doniphan County—Thriving Community With Energetic Citizens and Substantial Farmers in Adjacent Country—Does a Lively Business and Is Destined to Prosper.

The town of Sparks is one of the most enterprising and substantial communities for its size in Doniphan County. It would not be natural that it should not, because it has been so named in honor of one of the most respected and popular citizens in that part of Kansas.

Sparks had for many years been known as Highland Station, in fact, since the first house was erected there. Eight years ago, however, Cyrus Leland, Jr., who was then one of the leading Republicans in the county and state, had the name changed to that of Sparks in honor of an old friend and greatly esteemed pioneer of the county.

Delia Evarts, Gladys Lovejoy, Celista Alfrey, Theo. Guy, Bowen Alfrey, Ethel Guy, Zada Caudle, Willie Grankie, Harvey Lamborn, Annie Laura Herring, Willie Lamborn, Myrtle Helen Searles, Bessie Jane Swogger, Johnnie Collins, Jewel Baskins, Harold Burton, Doris Burton, Mayetta Burton

John Sparks, in whose honor the present name was given to Sparks, was long a leading resident of Doniphan County. He came to Doniphan County in the pioneer days and raised a large family. He was known always as a hard worker and attended strictly to his own business. He treated all neighbors alike and that principle was even carried out in his own family relations.

When Mr. Sparks died a few years ago, his will was found to provide equally for each of his children in disposing of his property. He was eighty-five years old.

The fact that Mr. Sparks left such a large family will be a great factor in the prosperity of the town of Sparks in the future. There are now forty or more grandchildren substantially fixed in the locality who are sufficiently strong financially to insure the stability of any community. In addition to these there are numerous large farmers within a convenient radius of Sparks which will be another commanding influence why the town should never sink into oblivion.

When the original town of Sparks was started it was named Highland Station because of the fact that it was the railway point of the parent town of Highland, four and one-half miles away. The town was located in the winter of 1869-1870 by a company partly formed of Highland men, and partly of representatives of the Burlington & Missouri River Railroad.

The incorporators of old Highland Station were J. P. Johnson, B. F. Herring, J. A. Kennedy and G. W. Glick. The townsite comprised forty acres which had been owned by J. A. Kennedy, and was situated in the southwest corner of Section 21, Township 2, and Range 20.

Immediately after the town was laid out, Kennedy & Herring opened a general store. The same year another store was opened by L. Degginger. After that the town began to assume important proportions. J. Browning started a good hotel and a blacksmith shop was installed. A depot was built and a postoffice established, with J. A. Kennedy as postmaster. The first church was a union structure, which was intended to be a place of worship at alternate times for the different sects of all denominations.

The Sparks School House, District No. 46.

From the very beginning the present town of Sparks was endowed with many natural advantages. The soil in the neighborhood was rich and there was an abundance of timber for all purposes. There were unmistakable indications of fine rock quarries and enough clear, sparkling water to supply a community ten times more populous. The neighborhood was thickly settled when Sparks was started, but it is much more so now. It is estimated that at present there is a population of more than two thousand people within a radius of three miles of Sparks.

In the early days of Sparks there was a lively business done in the cordwood industry. The timber was plentiful and the owners availed themselves of the opportunity of disposing of the wood at a good price. Besides supplying the entire locality with firewood and other lumber, the woods were sufficiently studded with timber that it appeared to grow faster than it could be cut down. So it is little wonder that over one thousand cords had been shipped each year, and it brought top price on the market.

It would be too trite an expression to say that the town of Sparks is a comer. It is here, and here to stay. Of that fact there can be no gainsaying. The town is good from every standpoint, and it is getting better with the dawn of every day. The citizens are enterprising and progressive and the residents of the surrounding country are financially situated to help the good work along in the matter of trade and commerce.

There is nothing that any good, hustling town should require that Sparks hasn't got. There are two churches, schools, a strong bank, and business houses of various kinds. The town has a good restaurant, two general stores, an elevator, a blacksmith shop, a drug store and, last, but not least, a depot on a big railroad trunk line.

One of the best of all assets for Sparks is not included in the above list, for the good and sufficient reason that it attracts more people to the town in a brief period than most all others combined. That is the annual fair and picnic. This event has occurred regularly for the past sixteen years and it embraces the best of all fall festivities in Doniphan County.

The fair and picnic at Sparks lasts four days and is usually held the latter part of the month of August each year. It is not only the most attractive feature of the harvest season in Iowa Township, but it provides the best fall festivities for every section of Doniphan County. The people all around become enthused to a high state over the event and it is beyond peradventure the greatest occasion for a brief season of annual enjoyment and sociability that is known in any community the size of Sparks.

Frank M. Lovejoy, secretary of the fair and picnic, is one of the most enthusiastic boosters and hardest workers for its promotion to a successful termination every year. Last year he was ably assisted by John Stricker. Those two men have given their best efforts to making the event one to be remembered for a whole year and with a little more concentrated unity on the part of the people of the county, the fair and picnic can easily be made the greatest thing in Kansas.

The Sparks State Bank is one of the soundest financial institutions in that section. It has a capital of $20,000, fully paid up. Its directors are responsible and prosperous citizens and the cashier, Pleas Miller, is one of the popular young men of the town who was raised in the neighborhood. He is the son of George Miller, one of the leading merchants of Sparks.

The business men of Sparks at the present time include Frank Troxler, general store and implements; George Miller, general store; J. O. Swauger, hotel; John Lyons, elevator; Erwin Newton, restaurant; Dave Guy, blacksmith. The drug store so long owned by Dr. A. Herring is now conducted by his son, Dr. Hubert Herring.

Saturday night, Aug. 13, 1871, the large brick steam flouring mill at Doniphan, run by Mr. Lowe, but owned by Mr. Abbott of Atchison, was burned to the ground. An insurance policy of several thousand dollars on the building had expired a short time before and was not renewed, so the building was a total loss. The stock, owned by Mr. Lowe, was fully insured.

WRITES FIRE AND LIFE INSURANCE

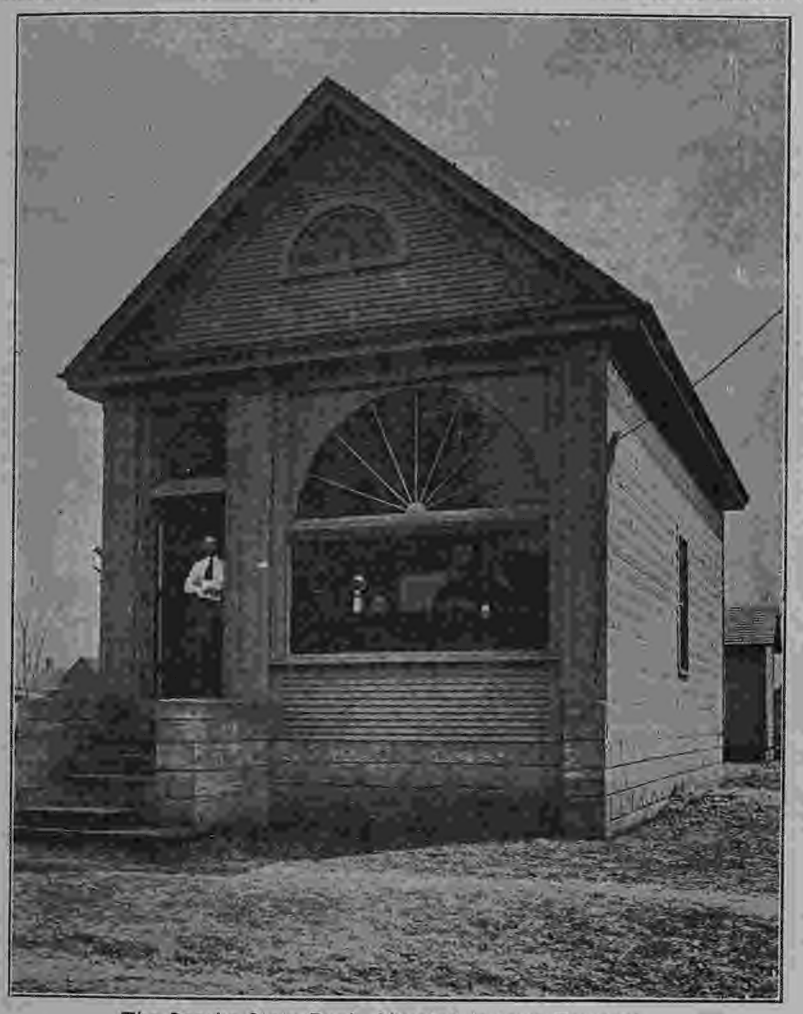
Cashier of Sparks State Bank Behind Counter When Only Nineteen Years of Age—Native of Doniphan County—Conservatism His Motto in All Business Dealings.

When a boy achieves success at the age of nineteen by reason of his unbounded integrity and conservative ideas, he is open to congratulations. A community certainly must have confidence in a youth to place him behind the counter of a bank at that early age. That is what came to P. V. Miller, cashier of the Sparks State Bank, when the institution was organized Aug. 16, 1909. At the same time the proud distinction was his of being the youngest banker in the state of Kansas.

This successful young business man was born on a farm, as most successful men are. Here he received the early training which he has adapted to the ways of the city, never however, forgetting the value of that life of the fields, the meadows, the woods which it was his privilege to enjoy. His father, George Miller, taught him the lessons of frugality and conservatism during the early years on the farm, and these have stood him in good stead during his banking career.



The Sparks State Bank, Situated in Iowa Township.

This successful young business man was born March 21, 1890, on a farm two miles northwest of Sparks and is the son of Mr. and Mrs. George Miller. He was educated in the schools of Sparks, and prepared for the banking business by attending the Whitmore Business College in St. Joseph, Mo., where he received a diploma. He was considered one of the best boys who ever grew up in Iowa township, and for this reason was chosen when the directors of the bank were looking for some one for the responsible position of cashier. They did not find it necessary to go to some city. Instead they chose the Iowa township country lad, and when the first customer stepped up to the counter he found P. V. Miller at his post. Here he has been ever since, and has grown as the bank has grown, and developed into one of the strongest financial institutions in the state for a town the size of Sparks. A glance through the list of directors and stockholders reveals the fact that many of them are financial bulwarks, some of them counting their wealth in the hundreds of thousands of dollars. To be trusted with the care and direction of this immense wealth is a mark of confidence that comes to few. His continued service as cashier speaks volumes for Mr. Miller.

While his duties as cashier are arduous, yet he finds time to give attention to other business pursuits. He has built up a lucrative clientele in the fire and life insurance business, and the companies he represents have a large number of policies outstanding as a result of his solicitations among his many friends. His banking connection has made it possible for him to gain a hearing which in many cases would be difficult for another less experienced to obtain. The people of Sparks and its vicinity know of his conservative methods and know that when he has a proposition to submit there is merit in it.

One of the chief duties as cashier is that of making farm loans. His connection with farm life has made it possible for him to place a conservative estimate upon the value of farm property offered as security for these loans, and in this way he has always protected the stockholders of the bank, as well as serving the customers. When any of the farmers in and around Sparks wish to make a loan they know they will be accorded fair treatment and due consideration by the young banker who is always alive to their best interests. He makes a study of the needs of the community which he serves and is thus able to offer expert service, both to the bank and to those dealing with it.

Mr. Miller has one sister and a brother. His sister is Miss Dillie G. Miller, and his brother, Robert, is station agent for the B. & M. railway at Sparks.

Popular Conductor

John L. Hopkins, the popular conductor, who runs between Atchison and Rulo on the B. & M., enjoys the distinction of being one of the most obliging conductors who ever punched a railroad ticket. He is one of those thrifty fellows and by his economic methods has purchased a fruit farm in the North Yakima Valley, which is situated in the state of Washington, in one of the most extensively advertised fruit belts in the United States.

THOMAS E. WAGSTAFF FUTURE STATESMAN

Kansas Man Made Many Friends in Doniphan County—Expects to Be Governor Some Day.

Thomas E. Wagstaff, the young man who made a phenomenal although unsuccessful race against ex-Governor W. R. Stubbs for a gubernatorial nomination in Kansas in 1910, made many friends in Doniphan County when campaigning here that year. Mr. Wagstaff is one of the "coming" men of Kansas.

Thomas E. Wagstaff was born July 23, 1875, at Galesburg, Illinois. He came to Lawrence in 1878, and was educated in the Lawrence schools, graduating from the high school and from the University of Kansas in 1897.

Thomas E. Wagstaff.

In the fall of 1897 Mr. Wagstaff went to New York, where he took a post-graduate course in law at the University of New York. Returning to Kansas in 1899 he practised law in Coffeyville. That year he also served as clerk of the House of Representatives, and was both popular and efficient. No one called him Clerk Wagstaff or Mr. Wagstaff, but he was affectionately addressed as "Tom."

The people of Coffeyville elected the young man as city attorney the following year, in 1900. He made an enviable reputation in this office and was appointed judge of the court of Coffeyville by Governor Bailey. In 1904 he was appointed deputy county attorney, and in 1905 he was elected county attorney of Montgomery County.

In 1910, through the insistence of his friends, he became candidate for the nomination of governor against ex-Governor W. R. Stubbs, who was seeking nomination for a second term. Considering that he was a young man and comparatively unknown, and was running against a man who had served one term as state executive, Mr. Wagstaff made a brilliant compaign, and surprised many on both sides. Although he was defeated the campaign was good advertising for him. He won great popularity while making speeches in Doniphan County, and hopes for the support of the county when he becomes candidate for governor again, which is among his future hopes.

The Wagstaffs were married at Coffeyville in 1903. Mrs. Wagstaff was Miss Jane Norma Wilson of Coffeyville. Two of their children are living, Morna Zel Wagstaff, nine years of age, who was born in 1906, and Robert Wilson Wagstaff, five years of age, born in 1910. A son, Thomas Wagstaff, Jr., died in infancy.

Iola

William Henry Dutton

A Former Doniphan County Resident Settled at Iowa Point in 1855—Is Staunch Democrat—Was Guard Eight Years at Kansas State Penitentiary at Lansing.

One of the most highly respected pioneers of Doniphan County, whose friends are to be found in every nook and corner of the county, is William Henry Dutton. He came to Kansas from the neighboring state of Missouri when the prairie state of Sunflowers was still young. Here he has built his life story into the history of Kansas and Doniphan County, and many of the incidents which have gone into the making of this section of the West were a part and parcel of his life. He enjoys the opportunity of recalling with his friends these stirring events of the ante-bellum days, when Kansas was the storm center of the pro-slavery and abolition sentiment. His part in the historical development of northeastern Kansas is one to which he can point with a deep sense of pardonable pride. While he was only a mere lad at the outbreak of the Civil War, yet he recalls with a memory vivid and full of enthusiasm the border ruffian fights and the struggles of the early pioneers.

William Henry Dutton of Topeka.

This hardy pioneer was born in Andrew County, Missouri, March 31, 1855. His mother died in 1872 when he was only seventeen years old, and his father, Jobe Dutton, died July 4, 1874. Thus on the birthday of the nation, when most boys are filled with joy and hilarity of spirit, young Dutton, then only nineteen years of age, felt the deep responsibility of being thrown upon his own resources. He was face to face with the grave necessity of assuming the duties of manhood. Furthermore, during the interval between the death of his beloved mother and his worthy father, he had taken upon himself another grave responsibility, that of supporting a wife.

The subject of this sketch was married to Miss Sarah A. Martin on Oct. 10, 1873. The marriage ceremony was performed at the farm residence of I. M. White, east of Highland, by the Rev. Thomas H. Moore, pastor of the Christian Church. For forty-two years Mr. and Mrs. Dutton have prospered and lived in happy contentment, and thirty-seven of these years have been spent among their numerous friends in Doniphan County.

This marriage was blessed with five children, three sons and two daughters. All these children have grown to manhood and womanhood, and have lived the lives that shed honor upon their parents. Maude is now Mrs. T. M. Watson, and is living at 824 Chestnut street, Topeka. Vineta, married Arthur Beach and resides at 708 Lake street, Topeka. Zell is a boiler maker and makes his home in Kansas City, Mo. O. B. is employed as a chef on a dining car. Roy is a painter and also lives in Kansas City, Mo.

Mr. Dutton went to Iowa Point in his youth, and can recall the events of the pioneer days as vividly as though they were but yesterday. These stirring times left a strong impression upon his boyish mind, and have furnished material for many reminiscences. They were imbedded in his memory, and have had a lasting influence upon his future life.

He has always been an ardent and consistent Democrat of the Jeffersonian type, and has always been a staunch admirer of Buchanan, Tilden, Bryan, Wilson and the other sturdy leaders of his party. He has followed the principles of Democracy because he believed in them, and because they were to him of vital importance.

Mr. Dutton had but a scanty opportunity to attend school in the early Kansas period. Two months in a year meant a full term to him, and the equipment of the little country school was meager indeed. He sat upon the puncheon seats and there learned the lessons of honesty, integrity, industry, and frugality, which he ever afterward practiced in his daily life. He became the owner of a good farm through honest efforts of his own and by the helpfulness of his good wife.

His loyalty to the Democratic party was rewarded by his appointment as assistant doorkeeper of the house during the Hodges legislature in 1913. He was also a guard at the Kansas state penitentiary for eight years. He was a resident of Doniphan County for thirty-seven years, Leavenworth eight years, and of Shawnee County for fifteen years. He and his wife now reside at 822 Chestnut street, Topeka, where they own their own home. He is employed by the Frank S. Thomas real estate firm in Topeka.

CHARLES A. KELLER

One of the Best Known Farmers in the County, Who Sees Great Possibilities in Fruit Growing—His Experiences on His One-Hundred-Acre Farm Near White Cloud.

Charles A. Keller, who owns a farm of 100 acres of fertile land near White Cloud, is one of the best known and most successful farmers in the county. He has been engaged in general farming and stock raising for nearly thirty years and his fine fields and substantial farm improvements tell better than any language can portray, the kind of a farm he has and the kind of a farmer he is. Just now he sees great possibilities for the high priced lands of Doniphan County in fruit culture, and as this article goes to press he is enlarging his fruit-growing operations by planting raspberries, strawberries and pears in addition to the small acreage he now has in bearing fruit.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Keller of Iowa Township.

Mr. Keller was born in Cumberland County, Pennsylvania, near Harrisburg, the capital of the Keystone state, on Aug. 31, 1867. Until he was ten years old he was an attendant at the public schools, but at the end of that time his father died and the boy was compelled to give up further schooling that he might help to support his widowed mother and the rest of the family.

In the spring of 1870, the Kellers moved to Nodaway County, Missouri, and young Charles Keller worked on a farm during the major portion of his early life. He applied himself diligently to his task, learning by practical experience as he went along until it could be said there were few young men who knew the farming business as well as young Charles Keller. He was not one of the young farmers who, having acquired a smattering of theoretical farming from books, imagine they know it all, but he listened with a receptive ear to the recitals of experiences of successful men and their methods of farming. He was at all time progressive.

Feb. 10, 1887, Mr. Keller was married to Miss Minnie Taylor, daughter of Joseph and Minerva Taylor of White Cloud. The following year, 1888, he came to Doniphan County and rented a farm for two years. After that he went to White Cloud and engaged in the meat business three years. He wasn't satisfied, and disposing of his business, it was back to the farm for him; not a rented farm, but the farm he now occupies and owns, and on which by his skill and knowledge he has made a good living and laying up something beside.

Mr. Keller is what might be called an all-round farmer. He has been successful with O. I. C. hogs and has some of the finest in the county. He raises grain and hay. He also has an orchard of fruit trees and strawberry and raspberry patches. These he is enlarging, for he believes in more fruit because there is money in it. He finds there are larger financial returns from an acre of fruit than from any other crop. Hence he says he intends to gradually increase his fruit-growing operations.

Mr. and Mrs. Keller are the parents of nine children. They are: Sylvester G., Della Pearl, Daisy M. now Mrs. Brann, Lida Agnes, Jesse Arthur, Lawrence A., Elmer Lloyd, Norman Z. and Christian Clarence.

Mr. and Mrs. Keller are among the plain substantial people of the country roundabout White Cloud, and are highly respected. Their children are intelligent and industrious and worthy sons and daughters of the father and mother. The Kellers are active members of the Christian church in White Cloud.

Residence of Mrs. Sarah Nuzum, Near White Cloud.

Mrs. Sarah Nuzum

Another woman pioneer of Doniphan County is Mrs. Sarah Nuzum, and the fact that for fifty-three years she has lived on the same place, thoroughly illustrates that perfect peace and tranquillity which comes to those who choose Kansas for an abiding place. The farm, two and one-half miles south of White Cloud, is a nice piece of property, and is a credit to its owner. Mrs. Nuzum was born in Pennsylvania on December 11, 1837, and came to Kansas January 3, 1861, settling on the place where she now resides. She has two daughters, Mrs. John Bell and Mrs. J. P. Kelley, and three sons, George, Jesse O., and Flavel C. Nuzum.

This family ranks among the highly respected citizens of Doniphan County and is known to everyone in the northwest corner of the county. The boys are known as good business men and extensive farmers.

William H. Keller

William H. Keller was born in Illinois Star County, Illinois, July 22, 1844, and came to Doniphan County between Christmas and New Year's in 1865. When the call for arms was sounded in the Civil War, he enlisted with Company K, regiment 86, Illinois volunteer infantry, at Princeville, Illinois. Mustered out at Chicago, Illinois. The family consists of Mr. and Mrs. Keller, Florence Grace, Frances Eulalia, Mert. G., Lewis Henry, Rufus Pratt and Harold H. Keller.

White Cloud

White Cloud is a station on the Burlington & Missouri R. R., on Section 9, Town 1, Range 19, in Iowa Township. A portion of the original townsite was laid off by Messrs. Utt and Spaulding, in 1856. In 1857 a town company was organized and improvements made.

John Young

John Young, a native Scotchman, is one of the many foreigners who participated in the great Civil war in this country. His birthplace was Glasgow, Scotland, and he settled in Doniphan County in the spring of 1858, when only thirteen years old. Was enrolled in Kansas state militia July 18, 1864, at Iowa Point, and was ordered into active military service in Company F, Ninth regiment, October 12, at Atchison, Kansas, and mustered out on October 27th. He enlisted a second time with Tenth Kansas volunteer infantry March 11th, 1865, at Fort Leavenworth, and was mustered out in May of the same year at Benton barracks, Missouri. The family consists of himself and wife, and children as follows: Zula Young, Mrs. Zettie Swinney of Ament, Oklahoma; Mrs. Grace King of Robinson, Kansas, and Mrs. Vinnie Branson of Seattle, Washington; George, John F. L. D., and Lewis I. Young. Mr. Young says his worldly goods consist of fifty acres of land and a dog.

On Sept. 6, 1871, Rev. F. E. Sheldon performed the marriage ceremony of Mr. Edmund Bryan, of St. Joseph, and Miss Lizzie Ferguson, of Wathena.

History of Iowa Point Schools

Since the First School Was Established in 1869, There Have Been Many Changes With the Passing of Time—No Record to Be Had of the Teachers and Members of the Various Boards Previous to the Year 1887—Two Rooms With Sixty-Eight Pupils in the Two Rooms at Present.

(Contributed by Prof. George Medeker.)

The first public school to be established at Iowa Point was organized on January 8, 1869, but there are no records obtainable which would give any data regarding the promoters or the principal factors in the organization work.

It is the general supposition that there were records kept in the earlier years of the existence of the schools, but they have either been mislaid or lost up to the year 1887. From that date there is a fairly comprehensive record of the teachers, with the years of their incumbency.

The school board for the year 1887 was composed of H. D. Guthrie, director; Pryor Plank, treasurer, and W. O. Noble, clerk. The list of the teachers, with the years of their occupation from then until the present time, are Sallie T. McKinney, 1886-1887; William Campbell, 1887-1888; J. E. Campbell, three consecutive years from 1888 to 1891; Susan J. Beeler, from 1891 to 1893; Bettie Thomas, 1893 (resigned); Mattie Myers, from 1893 to 1894 (finished); Ben Dillon, 1894 to 1895; Elizabeth (Lizzie) Turkelson, 1895 to 1896 (now Mrs. Brandt of Morcroft, Wyo.)

At the conclusion of the 1896 term, the school board decided to maintain two rooms, and Elizabeth Turkelson and Pearl O. Wells were engaged to conduct the double establishment during the years 1896-1897. They were succeeded by F. G. Eschbach and A. B. Carnahan, who served for the terms 1897-1898. Lyda Mallows and Yula Powell had the schools for the 1898-1899 term, and E. C. Voorhies and Yula Powell taught during the 1899-1900 period. In 1900 the board re-engaged Yula Powell and Florence Mabel Montgomery, now Mrs. G. R. Armstrong, of Salt Lake City, Utah, was also employed for the 1900-1901 term. Yula Powell was again engaged the next term, 1901-1902, and Miss Montgomery was succeeded by Myrtle Wyncoop, now wife of Arthur Fenton, county treasurer of Doniphan County.

The school board combined the rooms in 1902, and Ella Barber was given charge until the close of the 1903 term, when Yula Powell was again engaged to teach the 1903-1904-1905 terms. She was succeeded by Jessie Bowman, now wife of C. J. Vinsonhaler of Wathena, during the 1905-1906 school period.

The two-room system was again installed in 1906, with James Holland and Gertrude Anderson as the teachers for 1906-1907. Worthy Neel and Florence Peck had charge during 1907-1908, and J. H. Holland and Elizabeth Snyder in 1908-1909. Ida Bradley and Elizabeth Snyder were the teachers in 1909-1910, and the 1910-1911 session was taught by Nellie Farrar and Sarah Friend. Elizabeth Snyder and Mary L. Snedeker were the teachers in 1911-1912, and Elizabeth Snyder and Lela Bowman in 1912-1913. Bessie Taylor and Elizabeth Snyder had charge during 1913-1914, and George A. Medsker and Elizabeth Snyder, 1914-1915.

The foregoing dates show that in point of service Yula Powell and Elizabeth Snyder have been connected with the Iowa Point school longer than any other teachers in the history of the school. Each had been engaged for six terms, and the probabilities are that Elizabeth Snyder will beat the record of Yula Powell, as she is still connected with the school and is giving highly efficient and satisfactory service.

The present school board is made up of S. B. Snyder, station agent for the B. & M. Railroad, treasurer; George Taylor, an extensive farmer and stock raiser, director, and Ambrose S. Naugle, likewise a prosperous farmer, clerk.

There are sixty-eight pupils in the Iowa Point schools who are a cheerful and intelligent lot of children.

The sexes are equally divided. They are especially interested in the study of the history of the nation and the state, and the classes in civics are remarkably well advanced. The schools have a prize spelling team which has not lost a match yet, and the members of this team are intensely interested in their work.

[The conduct of the Iowa Point schools is characterized by its complete harmony in all matters pertaining to intellectual progress and advancement. The faculty is able and efficient, and they receive substantial encouragement in their work by the hearty co-operation and generous assistance so uniformly given by the members of the school board.—Editor.]

ARNOLD SCHOOL DISTRICT NO. 31

Records Most Complete of Any School in Doniphan County—Dawson Arnold Its Sponsor—Present Teacher, Miss Edna Whitney.

(Contributed by Mrs. M. E. Zimmerman.)

The school or educational history of Doniphan County has been very carefully preserved, but in no township or district has such a complete record been kept as in old Arnold district, or officially, school district No. 31. The name was derived from the man whose home housed the first meeting of the voters of the district.

The meeting was convened on May 16, 1863, and after much consideration the following officers were elected: Orison Conklin, director; Dawson Arnold, treasurer, and J. J. Morris, clerk; and pioneers of today will agree that it was a very capable committee. They decided to purchase one acre of land and build a frame house twenty-two feet long, eighteen feet wide and nine feet high, with one door and five windows. The contract was let to Moore & Gibbons, who completed the house according to specifications in March, 1864, at the cost of $282.35. The amount expended was small indeed, and the building would not in these days be considered much of an educational institution; however, back in those pioneer days it was a huge step forward in the evolution of the Kansas farmer for these little log school houses to be springing up all over the country. Naturally the name Arnold was given to the district.

The official count was fifty-five children of school age who were promptly enrolled. Jake Bowron taught the first term of three months. Perhaps not much was accomplished in actual results for that first semester, but the foundation was laid for future success and endeavor. The first school house stood just west of the present one in district No. 31, and it sufficed for the needs of the community until 1876, when a frame building 34 feet long, 24 feet wide and 12 feet high was erected. John Shields of Highland took this contract and completed the building in August, 1886, at a cost of $874.00.

In the year 1870, it was agreed to use the building for religious purposes also, which has been greatly appreciated. The patrons of the school with their friends and families have met there on many occasions, picnics, exhibitions, basket dinners and literary societies, not forgetting the old fashioned spelling bees. Miss Edna G. Whitney, the present teacher in district No. 31, says she remembers that candles were purchased for use at spelling schools and that frequently it took more than one evening to spell Arnold school down. It might be well to mention here that pupils of Arnold school have always been hard to down, either in school or in after life. A large number have been teachers.

In 1871, a Mrs. Nilbung taught a school for colored children. Another item of intense interest at the time was the building of a nice long hitch rack and a stepping stile in the early 70's.

In the spring of 1871, Dawson Arnold dug the well on the grounds, which is still in use. During the time Mr. Arnold was engaged in the construction of the well, the school children would stand around and in various ways exhibit their interest. One high spirited Irish girl climbed up and while walking around the curb, lost her balance and fell, and would probably have been drowned had not a quick-witted lad of her own race snatched at her long auburn hair and yanked her quickly to safety. That same boy and girl are citizens of Doniphan County today and will recall the instance clearly.

The school board at different times has been honored by the acquisition of such men as the following: O. Conklin, D. Arnold J. J. Morris, Joseph Scott, J. A. Williams, S. Neal, E. C. Nuzum, J. J. Brown, Sam Jones, W. I. Collins, W. C. Scheer, J. S. Beeler, P. Wineinger, J. S. Bell, C. Winler, B. Johnson, A. L. Lowell, W. Koelling, P. R. Penny, Dell Schofield, C. F. Wineinger, C. Hopper, Ed Simmonds, J. L. Collins, M. E. Zimmerman and E. F. Park. ,

E. C. Nuzum, D. Arnold and W. J. Collins contributed twenty-seven years apiece in the service of the school board, and shifted their burdens only when old age demanded that they take a well earned rest. J. L. Collins, M. E. Zimmerman, and E. T. Park have each served about ten years.

Arnold district is still flourishing under the capable management of Miss Edna Whitney, who was herself a pupil there at one time. Miss Whitney leaves nothing to be desired in the way of modern teaching, and her services are highly prized by the patrons of district No. 31.

Born in White Cloud

William C. Harkins is a sure-enough native of Doniphan County, having been born in White Cloud when that town was practically in its infancy in 1858.

Mr. Harkins has followed farming almost all his life, and he now owns one of the best pieces of land in Iowa township. He has never been married and takes life easy.

The farm home of Mr. Harkins is snug and comfortable and shows all the evidence of prosperity and industry on the part of the owner.

JACK HENDREN A RESIDENT FOR SIXTY-ONE YEARS

Town Located on One Hundred and Sixty Acres of Land That Had Been Presented to Rev. S. M. Irvin by the Iowa Indians When the Tribe Ceded Their Doniphan County Lands to the Government in 1854—Site Laid Out in the Spring of 1855 and Building Started With a Rush—Once the Greatest Business Point in Kansas and Next in Population to Leavenworth—Down and Out Now.

The history of Iowa Point is directly connected with the life and labors of Reverend Father Irvin, the pioneer missionary to the Iowa and Sac and Fox Indians in Doniphan County.

The land on which the town was platted was a gift from the Iowas to Rev. S. M. Irvin, in recognition of his untiring zeal and faithful efforts to bring the tribe to a modicum of civilization and Christian understanding.

At the time of the opening of the Kansas territory to white settlement, in 1854, the greater part of northern Doniphan County was owned by the Iowas. Upon ceding their title to the government for a financial consideration and a diminished reserve the Iowas retained 480 acres for "private reasons."

The lands thus released to the government were known as the Iowa Trust lands and were subsequently sold to the highest bidder. The 480 acres retained by the Iowas was for the purpose of rewarding Father Irvin and J. B. Roy, the United States interpreter.

Mr. Roy was presented with 320 acres, situated in what had in those days been known as Wolf Grove, and the remaining 160 acres were donated to Father Irvin with the privilege of locating his tract at any point in the reserve. The good missionary chose the land upon which Iowa Point was soon after to be built.

The possibility of promoting a great trading center and eventually a large city at some point along the river was early realized by H. W. Forman, J. W. Forman and John S. Pemberton. This trio had selected the land of Father Irvin as the most desirable, but they were puzzled how to get control of it. They figured that it would be an ideal site for a town and finally made up their minds to build one there.

After feeling out Mr. Roy, the Formans and Pemberton concluded that if they could get control of his half section in Wolf Grove, they could strike up a deal with Father Irvin. They made a good, stiff offer to Roy for his half section, which he accepted. This land they traded to the missionary for his quarter section at the Point.

The Formans and Pemberton had, a year previously, erected two dwellings at the Point, so confident were they that they would eventually come into possession of the townsite. They had no sooner effected the trade with Father Irvin than they started to lay out the town in 1855, early in the spring. It was stated shortly afterward that the work of platting the town had been done so rapidly that the three promoters had the thing all arranged long before they got control of the land.

Before the summer of 1855 was far advanced there was a scene of wonderful activity on the site of Iowa Point. Buildings went up like skyrockets, and were immediately grabbed for stores and residences. The first store in the town was opened by Beeler & Williams with a general stock for man and beast. The doors of their establishment hadn't been opened very long when X. K. Stout and Richard Leach started keeping store. A hotel was opened the same year by Bolivar Beeler and Benjamin B. Leach was right on his heels with a large storehouse and retail store.

While the town was not yet two years old, before the end of 1856 it had the appearance of a juvenile metropolis. John White had a blacksmith shop, where the swing of the hammers on the huge anvil made most harmonious music for the busy population. Dr. J. Leigh set up his shingle as a practicing physician, and F. M. Brown opened a drug store. The first meat market was started by Burkhalter & Hobbs and before the late fall of 1856 the sawmill of Forman & Pemberton, the townsite promoters and owners, was in operation.

The fore part of 1857, Forman & Pemberton built the Iowa Point mills for grinding wheat and corn. During that year a fine hotel was erected at a cost of $10,000, a church edifice was built and the Smithton Lodge of Masons was moved to the town, and the first lodge of Good Templars in the territory was organized.

In 1858 Iowa Point reached the zenith of its power as a steamboat town and a great commercial center. It was then the second city in Kansas in point of population, and had Atchison and Leavenworth in the discard from a business standpoint. Its wholesale and retail trade extended as far west as the Little Blue River, and over a considerable portion of Nebraska territory.

The situation looked fascinating for the residents and storekeepers in Iowa Point and money was flowing in steams like water. William D. Beeler told his friends in the time that it was an ordinary day's business to take in $1,000 in sales, all in gold, and that gold was so common it became fatiguing to handle all of it.

It was during the year 1858 that the ferry company was organized, with Harvey Forman as president, and a steam ferry put in operation on the Missouri River. Wood became unsatisfactory for building purposes by this time, and a brickyard was started by Joseph Selecman, his product having been used entirely on new buildings after that.

The establishment of other towns farther inland in Doniphan County put the first crimp in the prosperity of Iowa Point, and the breaking out of the war almost broke the commercial bank roll of the town. Business ceased to rush at first, and soon the town became stagnant. When the great fire in 1862 destroyed the hotel and many of the finest stores and buildings, the fate of Iowa Point was sealed. The next disaster was the sinking of the ferryboat, and then the newspaper suspended.

The great fire which destroyed the main portion of Iowa Point in 1862 was always believed by many to be of incendiary origin. Previous to the breaking out of the Civil War, a large proportion of the population were either pro-slavery sympathizers or lukewarm in their support of the cause of abolition. By the time the war was a certainty, Kansas was strongly free state, and there was little room left for any slavery adherents. Their position was made so uncomfortable around Iowa Point by the loyal citizens that it was always thought the Southern sympathizers set fire to the town.

From the very outset Iowa Point was a hotbed of politics and there were many bloody political rows and election squabbles there. It was the voting precinct for the entire township and the adherents of both the abolitionist cause and the pro-slavery men were most bitter in their hatreds. At the great election fight in 1860, there was a battle that almost resulted in a riot when Bill Hendrick nearly killed Rufus Edwards while the latter was on the warpath for an abolitionist.

On the breaking out of the war, in 1861, the citizens of Iowa Point organized a company of militia under command of Capt. C. J. Beeler, and this organization saw its share of fighting during the four years which followed. Later, in 1862, when there were fears of an invasion of "Johnnies" from the Missouri side of the river, a company of the Eighth Kansas infantry was stationed in Iowa Point in order to repel the expected attack. The marauders never made an appearance, and the town was left like many others on the river bank, threatened, but never infested.

It was through the efforts of Father Irvin that the first church was erected in Iowa Point in 1857. The grand old pioneer missionary interested the Presbyterians in the project and the edifice was soon built. At about the same time the Methodists began to hold services in the hall of Smithton Lodge, A. F. & A. M., which had been moved to the Point, and the Baptists held services at regular intervals in the Presbyterian church, with Rev. E. Alward as the preacher.

Few if any of the old residents of Iowa Point returned there after the war to make their permanent residence. Occasionally stray members of the old guard would appear on the scene, but a few days seemed to satisfy their knowledge that the town had the jinx on it, and they left for new fields to conquer.

Iowa Point is little more than a landmark now. Its history is the livest thing in connection with the early boom there, and even that is ancient, and not very authentic, by any means. Some of the substantial old brick buildings are still standing, but the ravages of time have brought them to a sad state of decay. The population numbers somewhere about seventy souls, but there is not a vestige of trade or commerce to encourage them to remain at the seat of such a delapidated reminder of former commercial triumphs.

Fanning Catholic Church

This Catholic Mission Was Originally Called Wolf River, and the First Priest to Come to the Place Was Rev. Father Kelly of St. Joseph, Mo., Some Time During the Fifties.

Holy Mass Said by Rev. Father Philip, from the Benedictine Abbey at Atchison in the Homes of the Resident Catholics—Rev. John Stader, O. S. B., Has Charge of the Parish at Present.

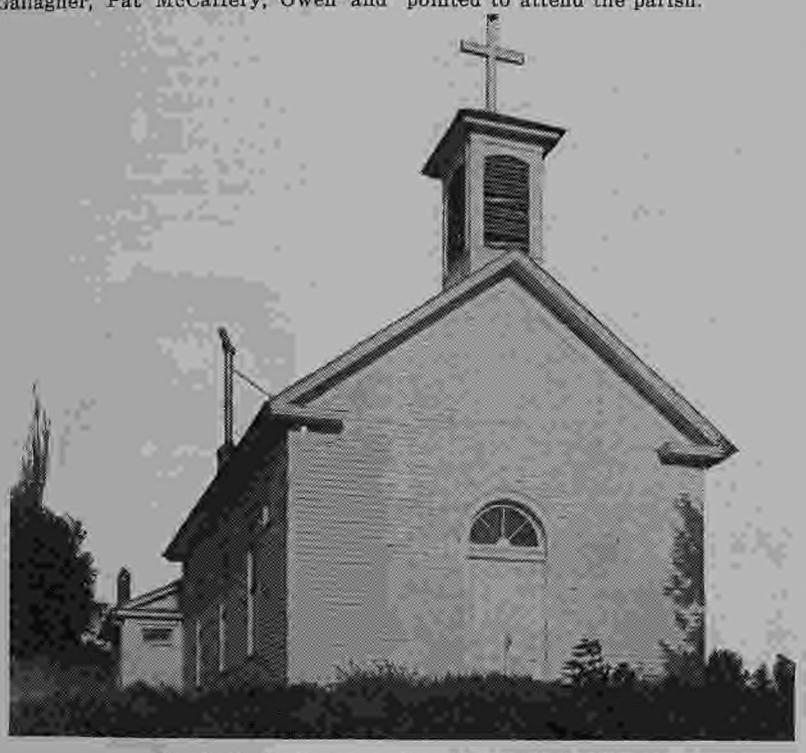
The Roman Catholic parish of Fanning dates back to the '50s, when the first missionary work of the church was performed there by the Reverend Father Kelly, who came from St. Joseph and was compelled to trudge his way across the unbroken prairie.

There was no town there those days, and the settlement of Catholics was sparsely populated, so much so that few people could even reach a neighbor's house in time to attend religious services. Still a few more Catholic families came in and by 1860 the Benedictines from the Atchison Abbey were represented at the mission by Reverend Father Philip, O. S. B.

Like his missionary predecessor, Reverend Father Philip had no place in which worship might be held, and the few Catholic houses around that section were used for the purpose. Mass was said in the homes of James Gallagher, Pat McCaffery, Owen and



The Catholic Parish in Fanning, Built in 1882.

John Corcoran, Pat Kelly and James McIntyre.

The country was very much unbroken and wild during the ministrations of Reverend Father Philip, but that good missionary seldom failed to come to the people on Sundays, even if he had to walk many miles over rough ground. He continued to come at almost regular intervals until 1862. Then Rev. Thomas Bartl, O. S. B., was assigned to that broad field of missionary labor.

During the years 1862, 1863 and 1864 Father Bartl came almost regularly to the Fanning mission. In the year 1864 Rev. Placidus Pilz came there and continued the work until Reverend Father Bartl came back in 1865, and he was the regular missionary visitor until 1869. That year Rev. Anthony Casper, O. S. B., took charge of the mission and remained until 1871, when Rev. Casimir Rudolph, O. S. B., attended until the latter part of 1873. Rev. Boniface Moll, O. S. B., was the missionary priest from 1874 to 1876; Rev. Boniface Verheyen, O. S. B., served as minister during 1877, and Rev. William Walter, O. S. B., during 1878. Following Father Walter, Rev. Peter Kassens, O. S. B., served the mission until the latter part of 1879, when Father Schreiner of Wathena, organized the parish and began to build a church.

Early in 1882 Reverend Father Timphause succeeded Father Schreiner. He completed the church and dedicated it the same year. With the transfer of Reverend Father Connelly to the Troy mission, and his final recall to the diocesian seat at Leavenworth, the Fanning mission again reverted to the Benedictines at Atchison. Father Matthew Bradley assumed charge until 1887, and Father Bernard Ullrich succeeded him until 1889. Father Placidus McKeever attended the mission until 1896. That year Father Peter Kassens was again sent back to the mission, and he remained until 1901. Father Gregory Neumayer, who came to the mission in 1901 remained until 1904 and during his pastorate he enlarged the church, added two sacristies, and purchased a bell which was put in place. Father Fabian Stindel, O. S. B., came to the mission from September, 1904, to August, 1905, and he was then succeeded by Rev. George Keim, O. S. B., who remained in charge until September, 1906, when Father John B. Stader, O. S. B., the present pastor, was appointed to attend the parish.

There are fifteen or sixteen families in the Fanning parish, in addition to some single male adult Catholics who do not maintain a home. The church is a nice substantial little building and is equipped with good furniture and other essentials for a Catholic house of worship. The congregation is in a good measure prosperous, and in time is destined to make up a strong church body.

Since the town of Fanning became a factor in trade and commerce, the people in the surrounding country have, in a large measure, materially benefited by the change.

St. James' Church is convenient to most of the Catholic population in that section and now the Catholic residents have a great opportunity to see their former little mission develop into one of the great parishes of Doniphan County.

While it is an admitted fact that there are only fifteen or sixteen whole families coming to the support of St. James, it is also a fact that the country is building up and there are lots of good, husky young Catholic men coming to that section of Doniphan County.

Two generations of time has taught the original settlers of Doniphan County that land values are getting higher every day. Where local conditions are so unequivocally favorable for trade and industry, there does not seem to be any valid reason why all churches in the community, Catholic and Protestant alike, should not be able to support a resident minister of the gospel.

The old folks who had their own sacrifices to make in contributing to the fund for the erection of their churches are proud of their good work in those trying days. And it might not be amiss for the present generation to emulate the precedent so nobly set by their parents and grandparents

J. I. JOHNSON

Is a Texan and Known All Over the Country as the Best Buyer of Apples in the United States.

J. I. Johnson of League City, Texas, is known all over Kansas, Missouri and Nebraska as the best apple-buyer who ever handled this luscious fruit, and is often termed the tri-state buyer. He not only is the best buyer, but the best friend the fruit raiser in northeastern Kansas ever had, because when other commission men become afraid of the market and of Corporal Ben Davis, or run out of funds, Mr. Johnson always plunges in and gets the output. He has never been known to fail to come to the front in a crisis and from his work here, it appears that he has the unlimited backing of the best houses in the country, who know that he can combat with Lieutenant Wealthy or Sergeant Duchess, when Troy is the mecca for fruit men.

Mr. Johnson is a familiar figure to all of the fruit raisers in this section. He purchases the crops of the best known men in the community and always pays in cash for what he gets. It is not only his business connections and way of dealing with men that make him popular, but his manner as well. Never has he been seen to frown over anything and as a friend he will stick closer than Damon did to Pythias. It would not surprise anyone in Doniphan County to see Mr. Johnson ascending a twenty-foot ladder and assisting in the picking of the crops he buys, if his services were needed. He is just that accommodating.

Every year in the early fall when Captain Winesap, Colonel Grimes Golden, General Blacktwig and Major Jonathan begin to color and "Bo" pickers begin to flood the county, Mr. Johnson makes his appearance. He buys in the biggest of quantities and always of the best that is to be afforded. To him, more than to any other one man, is due the high prices which have been received in the past years by the fruitgrowers of this section. Mr. Johnson never quibbles over a price if the fruit is what he wants. He would just as soon pay $1.25 a barrel or $2.00 for the right kind of apples, as he would 50 cents. When other commission men are grumbling over prices and attempting to keep them down to the lowest point and deprive the grower of his legitimate profit, Mr. Johnson always steps in and raises the bid so high the others are forced to come up to him in order to get a share of the output.

The subject of this sketch pretty generally makes his headquarters at Troy while in Doniphan County, as he has a penchant for apple dumplings, but he is out and hustling most of the time. He is a young man of about thirty-five, with the brightest possible future before him, due not only to his ability and energy, but to his cheerful and obliging manner. All of the big and best fruit farmers in the district love to have him at their home, because he combines business with pleasure, and brings a ray of sunshine with him. J. I. can head a barrel of apples with as much finesse as a "nigger" can skin a coon. The fruit farmers of Doniphan County and particularly the apple growers, extend their felicitations to Mr. J. I. Johnson and wish him a long life and a mighty happy and prosperous one, for he has done much for them. He is known as an apple magnate and if all of the apples he has shipped out of Doniphan County were made into apple jack and apple butter, it would allay the thirst of the entire German army and furnish nutriment for all of the allies.

The Mount Zion Church

The Little House of Worship Sits on a Beautiful Hill Near the Jeffers School, a Beacon to Light the Way to the Higher Life —Something of Its Early History—The Present Membership and Its Beloved Pastor.

(By Miss Mae Thorp.)

Out in what is known as the C. E. Miller and Jeffers neighborhood, and a little to the east and south of the Jeffers school house, stands the Mt. Zion church on one of the most beautiful spots in Doniphan County. The structure fronts bravely toward the west where the effulgent rays of the setting sun lights up the path to the very door. It is a beacon to the entire countryside and every Sunday the farmers and their families, often some from the towns and villages, gather there for worship.

It is a Presbyterian church and as far back as 1870 was known as the Wolf River Cumberland Presbyterian church, located near where the present Wolf River school house No. 52 now stands. The church building of the earlier days, before the present pretty edifice was built, was an unpretentious affair, but it served the people of the then sparsely settled community as a house of worship, and still living and who is an elder today.

Thorn T. Davis was made clerk in the year 1899, and he holds that position at the present time, being one of the faithful members and most valued workers during all these years intervening. From 1899 there have been about fifty members, some of these having been taken in by letter, until at the present time there are just twenty-nine resident members.

The following citizens and their wives and children, are now members: Jordan O. Marcell, Thorn T. Davis, John T. Thorp (all of whom are elders), Louis I. Davis, C. F. Miller, Samuel F. Lewis (all deacons), John Lewis, Mrs. Carrie Miller, Misses Ollie and Emma Davis, Miss Eliza Huss, Miss May Thorp, E. C. Clark, Hanley Lusk, Mrs. Sophie Pierce and W. H. Black. There were twelve accessions last year, among the number being Mr. and Mrs. Carl E. Davis.

Miss Thorp is superintendent of the Sunday school and Mr. Clark, Mr.

The Mount Zion Church in Iowa Township.

its influence left its impress on the lives of many who are now gone from us. They had no regular pastor in the earlier period, but many able ministers of the Gospel paused in their travels to preach the Word to the good people—and when some noted divine was announced the people for many miles around went to the meeting, and the church yard and the roadway were thronged with vehicles, linch pin wagons and ox teams, and conveyances of all kinds. The plain farmer folk were deeply and sincerely religious and their loyalty to the Master and to His church was beautiful.

The new church which we have described in the introductory paragraph of this article was erected in the summer of 1891 and was dedicated to public worship on July 20, of that year, the dedicatory sermon being preached by the Rev. Mr. King, a Presbyterian sent out by the Presbyterian board.

At that time the name was changed from the Wolf River Cumberland Presbyterian church to Mount Zion church by the Rev. Mr. T. K. Roach, who held a commission as colonel in an Illinois regiment of which he had been chaplain. The elders of Mount Zion church at the time of the dedication, in addition to the Rev. Mr. Roach, were E. J. Whitsen, S. D. Gilmore (both deceased), and Jordan Marcell, who is Lusk and Mrs. Pierce are teachers. The Methodists and Presbyterians of the community worked together at one time in keeping the Sunday school and church running, but in later years the Presbyterians have had main charge, with occasionally some help from some other denominations. Members of different denominations at times attend the services, and they are always welcome, for it is God's house for His children to worship in.

This little church that points the way to the higher life has no regular pastor, but is supplied each Sunday by the Rev. Mr. Louis C. Stumpf, pastor of the Presbyterian church at Highland. The good preacher is faithful, never missing a Sunday in spite of his regular duties, and has given conscientiously of his time and labors.

The Rev. Mr. Stumpf is a minister of the old school, plain and outspoken, full of religious zeal. His sermons are deeply spiritual and they have the power that moves men and women to serious reflections on the higher things. Those familiar Bible stories, read and expounded by this good shepherd to his little flock in simple language that all can understand, possesses a charm that is more convincing as religious truths than do the eloquent doctrinal sermons of the modern theologians.

The people of the community round about this little church are proud of it. It is their house of worship, their institution, and it is a part of the life of the community, and as such its influence will be felt throughout the years to come, and as minister of the Gospel come and preach the Word, there will be little gatherings of the faithful ones who gladly will hear.

How Edward Doyle Lost His Life

On the evening of May 22, 1904, occurred one of those tragedies which come to all well-regulated communities once in a while, and which cause a cloud of sadness to come over the lives of the people. Edward Doyle and his consin, Thomas Doyle, both of Omaha, were on the way to the country to pick blackberries. They grew tired from walking and lay down on the Rock Island railroad tracks to rest, neither of the boys thinking of the danger of falling asleep. Edward was lying directly on the track, and his cousin was nearby lying at the side of the track, when the Rock Island passenger train appeared. The train was moving at full speed when Sam Walker, the engineer, saw the boy on the track. He sounded the whistle and applied the air brakes, but Edward Doyle did not arise and was cut into eighteen pieces by the train. The body was placed in a gunny sack and taken to the undertaking establishment of W. D. Byers, from whence it was buried the next day. The conductor, R. O. Sumner, made a report of the accident, for which the company was held blameless.

DISTINGUISHED SON OF DONIPHAN

The Rev. Dr. Leon C. Hills Is a Noted Presbyterian Divine Who Was Born in Highland in 1874—His Intellectual and Manly Qualities Have Shed Lustre on the State of His Nativity—Now a Leading Personality in the State of Wyoming.

One of the most distinguished sons of Doniphan County is a Highland boy. In referring to Rev. Leon C. Hills, D. D. as such, The Chief takes pride in unequivocally stating the fact. He is an able man in every sense of the word and his native state has good reason to be proud of him.

There are hundreds of Doniphan County men today who look back with pride to the time that they were playmates of Leon C., not because he was any better than they were those days —all were boys then—but because by his sterling qualities he has shed lustre on the place of his birth.

The good and worthy doctor has surely made his mark in the world and the home folks might well feel proud of him. It is not a far-fetched prediction to say that the name of Hills will always be honored and revered in Doniphan County.

The subject of this sketch comes from New England ancestry. William Hills came to Massachusetts in 1632. He is also a descendant of Noadiah Gridley, of Revolutionary fame. On the mother's side, there is a relative well-known, namely Samuel Wilson, the original Uncle Sam. The grandfather, Leander Hills, was a strong abolitionist.

Leon Corning Hills was born in Highland, November 2, 1874. His parents were Henry A. and Mary (Corning) Hills, who have been highly esteemed residents of Doniphan County for forty-five years. Henry Hills, father of Leon, was a veteran of the Civil War. He was born in Nunda County, N. Y. and won distinction during the Civil War as an officer of Company F., Thirty-third New York Infantry, Volunteer. Mr. Hills settled in Doniphan County after the conclusion of the war and his home place is a fine looking spot adjacent to Highland. The son received the rudiments of his education in the preparatory department of Highland College, and in 1895 had gone through the full Academic and College course. He took a post-graduate course in Princeton University and in 1900 was graduated from the Princeton Theological Seminary with the degree of B. D., and the degree of D. D. was conferred on him by Highland College in June, 1910.

As will be seen by the above facts, Dr. Hills may claim to have some education. As teacher of history in Highland College in 1895-96, he was regarded as one of the ablest expounders of that great branch of education, and during the seasons of 1896-97 he was teacher in the public schools of Doniphan County.

When the United States government had things pretty much its own way in the Philippine Islands in 1900, this young minister went to the islands as a foreign missionary and was also engaged in Y. M. C. A. work during the Spanish-American war. His work in the Orient was very successful and on his return he was appointed assistant pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Colorado Springs, Colo., in December, 1902.

Doctor Hills remained at the Springs until September, 1903, when he located in Wyoming, and he was pastor in Evanston, that state, from that time until August 3, 1907, when he was made pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Cheyenne, which charge he is acceptably filling at the present time. This church is the largest Presbyterian organization in the state of Wyoming. The Reverend Mr. Hills was united in marriage to Miss Ada Truesdale Sample, at Roodhouse, Illinois, June 1, 1905. To this union has been born one son, at Cheyenne, who bears the name Dellmore Henry.

Doctor Hills was elected secretary of the Wyoming State Humane Society in December, 1911, and held the position until April, 1913, with an office in the capitol building. He was chaplain of the Wyoming National Guard from

The Rev. Mr. Leon Hills.

October, 1909, to April, 1913. He was chaplain of the house, in the legislature of 1909. The Doctor takes a keen interest in Masonic matters, and is a thirty-second degree member of the fraternity in Wyoming Consistory No. 1. He is also a Shriner of Korein Temple, and a member of the O. E. S. and W. O. W.; president of the Wyoming Society, Sons of the American Revolution, from 1911 to 1913, and is past president of the Young Men's Literary Club of Cheyenne, a famous organization in the West. His sermons and addresses have been published in Eastern magazines.

Reverend Doctor Hills makes his permanent residence in Cheyenne, where he has a host of friends, and is looked upon by all as one of the leading men, not only of the city, but of the state at large. Doctor Hills has a brother and sister living in Doniphan County, L. B. Hills on the home farm near Highland, and Mrs. Joseph Hagenbuch, of Troy. Mrs. H. F. Tolle, of Meridian, Miss., is another sister.

A notable incident in the career of Reverend Doctor Hills took place about sixteen years ago, after he returned home from college. The subject of this sketch was selected a delegate to the county convention, and in a brilliant speech placed S. M. Brewster in nomination for county attorney. Many of Mr. Brewster's friends to this day regard that event as being the forerunner of his future success, and as having an important bearing on his recent election as attorney-general of the state.

Latter Day Saints

Only Church of This Denomination in Doniphan County Was Built in 1896 at Fanning.

The only church of the Latter Day Saints in Doniphan County, stands at Fanning and is a tribute to the fidelity of the little band of this denomination who made that section their home. The first of that faith to settle at Fanning was William Gurwell, who later became Fanning's first postmaster on Dec. 14, 1870, and to him and his son A. L. Gurwell, as much as to any one else, belong a good part of the credit for the erection of the present edifice.

At a meeting of the congregation held on November 26, 1894, it was decided to build a house of worship. Isaac E. McGalliard, Louis Herzing and A. L. Gurwell were the prime movers in the project and were named as a building committee to have entire charge not only of the raising of funds, but to superintend the construction as well. The foundation was begun on December 11 of the same year and the committee selected A. D. Whetstine to direct the masons and Mark Cordrey to have supervision of the carpenters. Many members of the congregation assisted in the work, making little or no charge for their services. Others, while not taking an active part in the work, donated lumber, or its equivalent in money.

The structure was soon completed, and on Sept. 20, 1896, elaborate dedicatory exercises were held. The sermon was preached by Elder Henry A. Stebbins, who gave a history of the congregation. This was formed sometime in 1870, and, in addition to Mr. William Gurwell, those who had an active hand in its organization were Thomas Davies, Josiah Price, J. F. Reed and Charles Herzing. Before the erection of the church, the members gathered at the home of one of their number and there gave themselves over to worship. The prayer at the dedicatory ceremonies was made by Elder Phineas Cadwell.

The first marriage that was solemnized in the edifice was on Oct. 26, 1896, when Mr. and Mrs. Frank G. Hedrick were united in matrimony. There was a feeling of especial sadness in the first funeral to be held in the church on July 1, 1900. It was that of Isaac E. McGalliard, one of the most prominent members and a member of the building committee. At the present time the church is in a flourishing condition and the congregation numbers 125 members. All are workers, and are at service each Sunday unless sickness or storms detain them.

The congregation of the church is composed of the most prominent families of Fanning and vicinity, and all are upright, honest and Christian people. They support not only their church but are earnest workers for the welfare of the community in which they live. Their children are always in attendance not only at divine services on Sundays, but at Sunday school; and are growing into the future kind of men and women that Doniphan County and the nation needs. They are not clannish, but are to be found behind all religious movements that go to make a better place in which to live, regardless of the denomination which fosters that movement.

Their church at Fanning, while not a fashionable structure, is a substantial edifice, and one in which they take pride. This is due, no doubt, to the fact that the men of a generation ago who established the faith there and who worked so nobly for its erection, gave freely not only of their labors, but of their money as well. The church at Fanning is prosperous now and always will be, because of the class of men and women who are behind it. They are of the flower of Doniphan County.

The first preaching of the doctrine of this church in the county was by Elders Robt. Murdock and John Richards in 1866, near what was then Walnut Grove postoffice. In the year 1868 Charles Herzing, Sr., of Wisconsin, and Josiah D. Price, of Idaho, with their families, settled in that vicinity. An organization was then effected, known as the Wolf River branch. Meetings were held in the school houses at Wolf River, Iola and Hedrick. In the summer of 1870, Elders Hugh Lytle and Davis H. Bays, did much preaching at White Cloud, and among the members that were active in organizing a congregation at that place were John W. and Benjamin B. Brackenbury. Through the preaching of Elder Bays at Fanning, Thomas Davis and wife, and William Gurwell and wife, were baptized during the summer of 1868. The family of B. B. Brackenbury having located at Fanning, they and Josiah D. Price, and family, together with the baptism of new members, made a good sized congregation which was organized into the Fanning branch, in May, 1872. William Gurwell was elected presiding elder of the congregation, and for but a few years continued as such until his death in 1903. Since his death until the present, Frank G. Hedrick has been the presiding elder.

FRANK G. HEDRICK

Native of Doniphan County Was a Successful School Teacher and Now Is a Merchant.

Frank G. Hedrick, at one time one of the best school teachers Doniphan County ever had, was born on the old Hedrick homestead, one mile and a half north of Fanning, on April 30, 1872. His parents were William and Mary A. Hedrick and were among the first settlers. They were essentially religious folk, being members of the Latter Day Saints and the elder Mr. Hedrick was one of the pillars of that church. He located on his homestead in 1856.

Frank G. attended the district schools of his county, having for teachers some of the foremost educators of the state, among whom were Miss Gillie Wood, Albert Ewing, Charles Floyd and Dennis Landis. In 1891 he entered Campbell University, where he remained for two terms, and then he took up the profession of teaching in which he was very successful. He was at the Hays, Mount Ayr, Herzing, Hickory Grove and Number Six districts, and all of his former pupils give testimony today to his efficiency and geniality.

School teaching did not then and does not now prove itself to be very remunerative, and so in 1895 Mr. Hedrick entered the grain business at Fanning. Five years later his success had been so marked that he erected a store building and branched out into general merchandise. In 1901 he lost the building and expensive stock by a fire, having almost no insurance. He did not become discouraged, however, and rebuilt in a few months. Now his business is increasing rapidly.

On Oct. 26, 1896, Mr. Hedrick was married to Miss Emma Price, a Doniphan County young woman, and to their union have been born only one child, Gilbert F. Hedrick, who now is a student in Graceland College, Lamoni, Ia.

In addition to his general merchandise business, Mr. Hedrick is the owner of a fine farm east of Fanning, which is registered under the name of Sunnyslope. It is being cultivated for berries, apples and peaches and its owner has a great amount of confidence in the fruit outlook for the county.

Mr. Hedrick, who is a Republican in politics, is deeply religious, following in the path of his parents before him. He is now a member of the Latter Day Saints Church and is an elder in that body.

FANNING—A LITTLE TOWN FULL OF BIG PEOPLE

A Brief Sketch of Its Past and Present Inhabitants.

(Contributed by F. G. Hedrick.)

When the old A. & N. Railroad, now the Burlington, was built through the county in 1870, Jesse W. Reed and John J. Bradley laid out the town of Fanning. It was named in honor of Major Fanning, the chief engineer in the surveying and building of the railroad. Reed and Bradley set up a general store, and the government established a postoffice with Wm. Gurwell, the first postmaster, December 14, 1870. Frank G. Hedrick, the present incumbent, was appointed June 6, 1907. Jesse W. Reed removed to California in 1876 and has become quite wealthy. J. J. Bradley, his partner, was struck by a locomotive while walking on the railroad tracks between Elwood and St. Joseph, and died later in Troy, at the St. Charles Hotel.

After the advent of the railroad and the laying out of Fanning as a townsite, the then thriving river town of Lafayette, situated on the Missouri River, about four miles north of Troy, received a solar plexus blow, many of the buildings being moved to Fanning, including the large hotel building erected there in the early '50's. It was Fanning's main hostelry for many years. Mr. Merrick and William Hedrick are remembered as genial landlords. The first story of the building is now occupied as a dwelling by Thomas Lang and family.

In the winter of 1876, William Hedrick erected a steam flouring mill, but Mr. Hedrick died the following year. Matt Mutter, an old-time miller of Doniphan, managed the mill for Mrs. M. A. Hedrick, the widow.

One of the first blacksmiths in Fanning was Charles Peterson; he was followed by Joe Hobbs. Other smiths were E. W. Gustin and F. W. Simpson, the latter of whom is still in the business, an excellent mechanic and enjoying a large patronage. People unfriendly to Hobbs used to assert that, as a side line to his blacksmith business, he sold whisky, keeping a barrel or keg on tap under his work bench.

Frank G. Hedrick

If, while busy on a customer's plow, said customer became thirsty, he stepped to the barrel where a cup always hung handy and drew his own potation, the price of same being added to his blacksmith bill. Mr. Hobbs removed his shop to Highland Station in 1889, and was the last man to sell whisky in Fanning.

In 1886 William Gurwell opened a general store which he operated until the time of his death in 1905. Frank G. Hedrick entered the grain business in 1895, buying for himself for eight or nine years, and at the end of that time, he entered the employ of B. W. Williams of Highland. He is now the agent of John H. Lynds Mill and Elevator Company, which owns large cribs and warehouses for the handling of grain. In 1899, Mr. Hedrick erected a store building and engaged in the general merchandise business. He carries a large stock of goods and has a successful and increasing business. This very prominent citizen was born and reared in the community, and he is highly respected. He was an efficient school teacher prior to the time he opened the store. He is a devout Christian gentleman, being one of the leaders in the Latter Day Saints Church.

The Latter Day Saints Church erected a house of worship in 1894. They have a membership of over one hundred and a large Sunday school, which has not missed a session in twenty years.

The St. James Catholic Church was the first church erected in Fanning, it being built in 1879. There are fifty communicants residing in the parish, mostly Irish.

This edifice was erected under the supervision of the Priest, Father L. Shriner, and a committee of James Gallegher and Patrick Corcoran.

The following families now reside at Fanning: Frank G. Hedrick, A. L. Young, C. O. Franken, Thomas Lang, A. R. Hedrick, Fred Simpson, G. W. Thomas, Mrs. Eph Blanton, W. Thomas and Thomas E. Gilmore. Those living within two miles of the postoffice are: On the road running east, Lewis Blanton, Grant Blanton, Wm. A. Gurwell, John Roberts, B. F. Thomas; on road north, J. A. Gallagher, Samuel Twombly, William and James Kelley, John McDonough, Mrs. T. W. Jackson, Buz Simpson, John and Mike Corcoran, Jesse Barrow, M. J. Barrow, Henry Simpson, John E. Simpson, Bert Simpson, James E. Simpson; on roads running west and northwest, C. F. Gallagher, Thomas Etherton, John Thompson, Mrs. J. W. Long, J. D. Bloss, C. E. Taylor, Mrs. Jennie Thompson, Ike Muse; on roads to the south, southwest and southeast, Jackson Thomas, Mike and Joe Hanlan, Jesse Blanton, George Hopkins, Willard M. Gurwell, George Pennell, Omar Pennell, Dave Goacher, Jesse L. Roberts; on Troy road, Ben Culp, Thomas Briggs, Henry Briggs, C. F. Jeschke, L. C. Jeschke, John and Patrick Corcoran, P. F. Werner, R. L. Tilden.

Beside general farming, the country adjacent to Fanning, like the eastern part of the county, is particularly adapted to fruit culture. Henry and John Simpson have been very successful in cultivating blackberries. Frank Hedrick expects to add five or ten acres of berries and orchard each year until he has his entire farm in fruit. Alfalfa is a big paying crop. Samuel Twombly has fifty acres, and Henry Simpson eighty in alfalfa, and they load many cars for the Kansas City market.

Last year Buz and Ernest Simpson loaded one or two cars of watermelons, the first melons to be shipped out of the country in carload lots.

One and a half miles east of Fanning is the beautiful country home of John Roberts. The residence, surrounded by fruit and forest trees, is ideally situated on an eminence north of the public highway. It is equipped throughout with every conceivable modern convenience. Just across the road are the large barns that shelter thoroughbred Shorthorn cattle and Duroc hogs. Mr. Roberts is very proud of his herd of Duroc hogs, and well he may be, as they are as fine as any in the country.

One-half mile north of Fanning is the site of an old Indian village which, from indications, was inhabited for hundreds of years. It is situated on the Kelley farm, in a strategic position for defense in time of war, at equal distances from two large springs, one on the old Noonan farm, and the other on the Hedrick place. The site of the ancient place has been visited by noted archaeologists, and much potsherd, flints, arrows and implements have been discovered.

Of the pioneer settlers, William Hedrick and James Simpson were the first, followed by James Gallagher, the Corcorans, Gurwells, Suttons, McDonoughs, Edwards, Wagmiller. Descendants of all these families still reside in the vicinity and are among the leading citizens.

The following is a complete and accurate list of the postmasters who have served since the office was established December 14, 1870:

William Gurwell, appointed December 14, 1870, and served until his death, when his son, William A., was appointed March 24, 1903. The latter served until September 11, 1903, when Frank G. Hedrick was appointed, serving until April 11, 1906; when C. L. Conard assumed the duties of said office and served until June 6, 1907, when Frank G. Hedrick was again appointed.

Chief Apprentice Made Good

Fifty-Six Years Ago E. C. Grumley Entered the Chief Office as an Apprentice in White Cloud—Finished His Time and Enlisted in the Fourteenth Kansas Cavalry, serving Till the Close of the War—Connected With the Government Printing Office in Washington for Over Thirty-Eight Years—Prominent in G. A. R. and Odd Fellow Circles—Home Still in White Cloud.

While the Chief admits the distinction of having a history unique in the annals of Kansas newspapers, it takes intense pride and keen delight in relating the history of an apprentice boy who entered the old office in White Cloud to learn printing fifty-six years ago.

Prospects for riches in the newspaper field were discouragingly dim in the territory those days, and it was not every newspaper that could afford the luxury of an apprentice. It was invariably the case for the owner to be editor, printer, "devil" and general utility man all at the same time. Of course, there were expert journeymen employed on the Chief from time to time who assisted Sol Miller getting the paper out, but times were hard and money scarce in the new country.

The inducements for an apprentice were not alluring those days, and the crude facilities for publishing a newspaper were not of the kind that would arouse enthusiasm in an apprentice of the present time. Still the lovers of the craft persevered, and many first-class mechanics were turned out from the frontier offices to make their way through life equipped with man's best asset—a good trade.

E. C. Grumley, the subject of this sketch, entered the Chief office at White Cloud on June 6, 1859. He was a stout farmer boy of fourteen years, and possessed all the grit and energy that characterized the boys of pioneer settlers. He knew nothing of the intricate and, to many, puzzling interior of a printing office, but he was endowed with the application which is the great essential to success, and soon became an invaluable acquisition to the Chief.

Young Grumley was born in Wisconsin in 1845, and with his family moved to Kansas territory in 1857. The trip across Iowa and Missouri consumed four weeks and was made with one yoke of oxen. The family crossed the Missouri River at St. Joseph on May 14, 1857, and settled on land in the Wolf River district, the ground cornering with the quarter section on which Fanning is located.

That summer of 1857 the boy, E. C. Grumley, drove a breaking team of four yoke of oxen for his brother-in-law, William Fairall, and although only twelve years old at the time, he turned up a great deal of sod in that portion of the territory during the summers of 1857-1858.

In 1859 young Grumley's father moved to White Cloud and on June 6 of that year the lad entered the Chief office as an apprentice to learn the printing trade in all its branches. With an intermission of a few months needed to go on a visit, Grumley remained with the Chief till he had finished his trade, on July 7, 1863. Then he enlisted in Company C, Fourteenth Kansas cavalry, and served with distinction with his regiment until the close of the war.

Upon being mustered out of service Grumley became a journeyman printer in earnest. He had not forgotten any of the trade which he had mastered in the Chief office, and encountered very little difficulty in obtaining employment in many of the leading printing establishments of the country.

In 1876 Grumley secured a position in the government printing office in Washington and has been connected with that limb of the government ever since. He has held many important executive posts in the office and is at present filling the responsible position of proofreader.

Mr. Grumley enjoys remarkably good health for a man who has taken such an active part in the work of the world. He has been quite prominent as an Odd Fellow for several years, and has occupied practically all the chairs and offices in the order. In 1879 he was Noble Grand of his lodge. He has held the office of Grand Patriarch of the grand encampment, and in fact has held mostly all the offices of responsibility and trust within the gift of the order.

Mr. Grumley is past commander of his G. A. R. post in Washington, and has been its secretary for over twelve years. He takes an active part in the labor movement, especially in his own union, and has been president of Columbia Typographical Union, the strongest labor organization in the District of Columbia.

Since starting for the war, Mr. Grumley has not resided permanently in Doniphan County. Occasionally he comes to the old scenes for a few months at a time when he fraternizes with the old-timers who were boys in his own youthful days. He calls White Cloud his home, as he votes there whenever he can find the opportunity to make the trip at election times. His Washington address is 1015 Massachusetts avenue, N. E., Washington, D. C.

Elliott Irvin, a Son of Rev. Mr. S. M. Irvin

Elliott S. Irvin, postmaster at Coffeyville, Kansas, and grandson of Father Irvin of Mission fame, relates some interesting history that was related to him verbally by his venerable grandfather before his death. His father, Elliott Lowery Irvin, was the second child born in Doniphan County. Elliott, Jr., says that his grandfather was of a very retiring disposition, and only upon much coaxing, could he be induced to tell much about his early life. He seemed to feel that he might be accused of taking too much credit to himself for the work performed while at the Mission. The grandchildren, however, often got their grandmother to tell circumstances connected with their early married life while engaged in religious work among the Indians. She told the children that when they got to the Missouri river on their way from Pennsylvania to Kansas, there was no ferryboat, and that Father Irvin swam across with his Indian pony on the first trip, and that for a number of years the only mail they received was through the office at "Fort Leavenworth," where he was compelled to go to get same. She also said that they became well acquainted with Joseph Robidoux, the Indian trader. The Irvins' first child was a girl, Mary, but she died in girlhood, and there are but few know that Elliott Irvin, Sr., was the second child of the union. Mrs. Irvin died in 1886, and Father Irvin in 1887, at their home in Highland, and are buried in Highland cemetery.

Surprise on Preacher

Saturday night, Jan. 5, 1867, the residence of the Rev. Mr. H. P. Robinson of Highland was forcibly entered by a party under the leadership of a prominent lady of that place. Several depredations were perpetrated, among which was the seizure of a bed, bedding and bedstead and all hurled into a promiscuous heap out of doors. The rioters then took possession of the kitchen and kitchen stove and used them for their own benefit. The rioters were forced to leave about 12 o'clock or submit to capture and left behind them pies, cakes, chickens roast beef, roast turkey, three hickory smoked hams, corn, oats, firewood, ginger bread and a good quantity of apple sass, greenbacks, etc. This game was played on Rev. Mr. Robinson a year before. What made this affair most remarkable was the fact that most of the persons engaged in this breach of peace were supposed to be Rev. Mr. Robinson's own friends, some of them being members of his church.

Old Mission Offered For Sale

On Dec. 27, 1866, the Rev. Mr. S. M. Irvin, on behalf of the Presbyterian board of foreign missions, offered the mission buildings, the farm and lands which were situated two miles east of Highland, to the highest bidder. The advertisement said: "Iowa Mission Building For Sale. Large dwelling and school, 107 feet long and 38 feet wide and three stories high. The first story is of hewn stone and all the others of brick. It contains over thirty rooms, some of them very large, and is well constructed for a boarding school, orphan asylum, poor house, soldiers' home, insane or blind asylum or other public purposes. The farm is well watered and well arranged for raising cattle or grain."

Mrs. Sarah James, wife of Jeremiah James, died in January, 1882.

Some Early Day Churches

First Congregation Organized at the Mission Seventy-Three Years Ago—Next Oldest Church Was Built in Doniphan in 1855—White Cloud, Iowa Point and Elwood Had Flourishing Churches in 1857—Wathena Had a House of Worship Going in 1858.

Seventy-three years is a long way to look back, but it has been that long since the first church was organized in Doniphan County. The congregation was of the Presbyterian faith and numbered seven members.

This original church was started at the Iowa and Sac Mission by Rev. S. M. Irvin in 1842. All the members were white people attached to the Mission or employed at the Nemaha agency, but as the church grew, there was a large admixture of Indians. After the removal of the Mission, the church society met in a frame building, part way to Highland, for several years, and then held services in the University chapel.

During the year 1855 religious services were held in the town of Doniphan by Father Alderson, a missionary clergyman who preached at stated intervals for almost twelve months. The services were usually held in a warehouse or residence and were unusually well attended. There was no attempt at church organization, however, and all denominations were glad to attend the services.

The Methodist Episcopal Church, South (Southern Methodists) organized in Doniphan in 1856, while the state and county were still in the hands of the pro-slavery element. No church edifice was built, but services were held at different points in town until the breaking out of the war. Then the society scattered.

At about the same time in 1857, four other congregations were formed at Iowa Point, White Cloud, Highland and Elwood. Early in the spring of 1857, through the efforts of Reverend Father Irvin, the first church in Iowa Point was built by the Presbyterians. The building was used for services for over a quarter of a century, but with the removal or death of many of the old members, they were discontinued long ago, and the church fell into decay. About the same time that the Presbyterians built their church at the Point, the Methodists and Baptists started to hold services, the former in the Masonic hall, and the latter in the Presbyterian church.

Thirty members of the Methodist Episcopal persuasion were organized into a congregation in White Cloud by Rev. A. L. Downey, in 1857. The founder of the church remained pastor until 1859, when he was succeeded by Rev. C. Graham, who remained in charge two years more.

Early in the year 1857 a Methodist Episcopal Church was organized at a point near Highland by Rev. Dana Fox. Private residences and school houses did duty for places of worship until 1865, when the use of the Presbyterian chapel at the university was freely given. Subsequently the Methodists effected an arrangement with the Congregationalists for the use of their church, but in 1873 the former built an exclusively Methodist house of worship.

Late in the fall of 1857 services were held in a frame residence in Elwood by Rev. J. E. Ryan, an Episcopalian clergyman, who later was pastor of a church that had been erected under the supervision of John Tracy, the following year. The Congregationalists were also early on the ground at Elwood, and one of their preachers held services during the summer of 1858 at different places in the town.

The First Baptist Church of Wathena, was organized in 1858 by Elder William Price. There were eight members and the building of a house of worship was out of the question for the time being; and services were held in school houses until 1871, when the congregation grew strong enough to erect a handsome brick church building at a cost of $5,000.

The First Methodist Church of Wathena was organized in the autumn of 1868, by Rev. T. M. Munhall, and Rev. D. H. May was appointed the first pastor. In 1860 Rev. O. B. Gardner was assigned to the church, which he administered two years in spite of fierce opposition, growing out of the slavery question. It has frequently been related that while residing at Elwood during the second year of his pastorate at Wathena he discovered near his house a rebel flag, with a notice on the flagpole stating that death would be the portion of any person daring to remove the emblem of the Confederacy. With the agility of a sailor, Reverend Mr. Gardner climbed the staff and tore down the flag, which he first trampled in the dust, and then burned.

St. Benedict Catholic Church, situated a few miles from Severance, is the second oldest Catholic Church in Doniphan County. It was organized in 1862 by Rev. Father Thomas Bartl, O. S. B., of the Benedictine Abbey, at Atchison. A stone church building was at once begun, seventy by thirty-six feet, and completed in 1865. No estimate of the cost could be obtained, as much of the work was done voluntarily by members of the congregation. A handsome parsonage was built two years after the completion of the church. In 1880, the parsonage was made a priory by the Abbot of St. Benedict College, and was then occupied by a number of priests and brothers of the order. The land on which the church and other buildings are located, with a half section more, is the property of the college at Atchison.

If a Sabbath school can be called a church, or congregation, Troy had one in 1861. That year a Union Sabbath school was organized, with E. Case as superintendent. Later it became a Presbyterian and Methodist organization until the final separation in 1873.

The congregation of the Troy Presbyterian Church was organized about 1863, and work started on a new church building in 1864, which was ready for dedication on January 16, 1866. The cost was a little in excess of $2,500. Rev. F. E. Sheldon, the first pastor, remained in charge five years, and he was succeeded by Rev. J. L. Chapman, who was instrumental in building a parsonage during the three years of his pastorate.

The oldest Catholic church in Doniphan County was built in the town of Doniphan in 1857. It is known to the present day as the Catholic Church of St. John, the Baptist, and was erected under the direction of Rev. Father Augustine Wirth. The structure was a frame one and was destroyed by fire in 1864. In 1867 the Catholics of Doniphan built a handsome brick structure in the western part of the town, under the supervision of Rev. Father Timothy M. Suber. There is a stately tower on the building in which was installed a bell weighing half a ton. The site of the church comprises two acres of valuable ground and was donated to St. John's by the Hon. Adam Brenner, of Doniphan.

The First Methodist Episcopal Church of Doniphan was organized May 10, 1857, with five members. In 1864 the project of building a place of worship was taken up and a church site donated by Adam Brenner. The building was finished the following year, and on the day of dedication the entire church debt was assumed and paid by members of the society and citizens of the town of Doniphan and vicinity.

The First Methodist Church of Troy was incorporated in 1866, but there had been preaching in the court house, the old school house in the southwest part of the city, and the Wicker building for eight years. Rev. A. Bennett was the first Methodist clergyman to hold services in the young town of Troy. He came here in 1858, and preached occasionally during that year and the next.

The Congregational Church of Highland was organized by Rev. H. P. Robinson, October 5, 1865, with fifteen members. A brick church, costing $4,000 was begun in 1866 and completed the fall of the following year. Rev. H. P. Robinson remained as pastor until 1869.

The German Methodist Episcopal Church of Wathena was organized in October, 1867, by Rev. H. M. Meniger, who remained as pastor for three years. Since 1868 the church has supplied two missions in adjacent territory from the resident pastors at Wathena.

The Roman Catholic Church at Wathena was organized in 1869 by Reverend Father Thomas, O. S. B., from the Benedictine Abbey at Atchison. The same year a church edifice was erected at a cost aggregating $6,000. The membership at that time was approximately 100, but it has almost increased ten-fold in the succeeding years. In 1880 a building was erected for the Benedictine Sisters, who opened a parochial school which had a large number of pupils. In the latter part of the same year a parsonage was built at a cost of $1,500.

The First Congregational Church in White Cloud was organized by Rev. H. P. Robinson on May 25, 1867, with a membership of eleven. Reverend Mr. Robinson remained in charge until 1869, when he was succeeded by Rev. W. H. Shaw, who greatly increased the membership and built a neat brick church at a cost of $3,500.

The Methodist Episcopal Church of Severance was organized on January 25, 1871, by Rev. W. K. Marshall, presiding elder of the conference. The original membership numbered nine persons. A church building was erected in 1874 at a cost of $2,800, and a parsonage was also built at a cost of about $1,000. There was no regular pastor until Rev. G. W. Wood took charge in 1875.

The Norwegian Lutheran Church in Wayne Township was built in 1871, and dedicated the same year. The land on which the church was located contains half an acre, and was donated by Lars Nelson. The church building cost about $400. The first preacher was Reverend Mr. Brown, a native of Norway, who remained but a short time.

In the year 1874 a Baptist Church was organized at Moray, and meetings were held in the nearest school house. The congregation was not large at first, and preachers who attended the society came occasionally from other towns.

The Catholic Church of Fanning was erected in 1879, a spacious edifice. The congregation was a large one at the time the church was built and it has greatly increased since then. The communicants are mostly farmers and their families, who come from the surrounding country.

The Baptist Church of Leona was organized with eight members in October, 1880. The first services were held in a school house by Rev. E. Alward, the organizer of the society. The congregation had a healthy growth and in a few years almost quadrupled in membership.

After the town of Highland Station, now Sparks, was well under way, a number of religiously-inclined people got together and built a Union church for the use of all religious denominations.

A colored Baptist church was established at White Cloud in 1875 by Rev. J. H. Strother. The society was small and scarcely able to support a regular pastor. So the brethren were supplied monthly by Rev. Daniel Wilson, of Atchison, who held services in the school house.

The Brush Creek Methodist Episcopal Church was dedicated in 1871, and the first pastor was Rev. John Cook. The church was a neat little building, well furnished and cost about $1,000.

The Second Colored Baptist Church was organized in Wathena in 1873 by a council composed of the Rev. Messrs. D. Lee of Lawrence, John Bourn of Fort Scott, S. Jackson of Wathena, and Williams and Clarkson of Elwood. A church building was erected the same year, the members of the society doing most of the work. The congregation grew rapidly from the start, and under the pastorate of Rev. S. Jackson, soon had a membership of almost 100.

Lafayette

Lafayette was located on the Missouri River, on Sections 13 and 14, Town 2, Range 20, in Center Township. Was entered as a townsite under United States laws in July, 1857. Simon L. Ryan, who is well and favorably known throughout this judicial district, as an attorney, owns the old townsite.

He brought about the official government test of 1909, at Kansas City, at which time serum was recognized by the press the world over as a sure preventive of hog cholera. Following this test the Daily Drover's Telegram said:

"This immunizing agent is perhaps the most useful service that veterinary science has rendered live stock and the world."

Hon. Charles F. Scott, then chairman of the Committee on Agriculture in Congress, wrote:

"For the service rendered by Mason S. Peters to the farmers of this country they should erect a monument to him a mile high."

WHITE CLOUD

Town Was Originally Laid Out in 1856 by John Utt and Enoch Spaulding, But They Could Not Obtain a Clear Title to the Land Until After the Famous Indian Lands Sales in 1857 Gave Them Unquestionable Rights—First Building on the Townsite Was a Log Cabin Near the Old Ferry Landing, and Owned by J. F. Lease—Vast Crowd of Speculators Attended the Land Sales on July 4, 1857.

The men who selected the present site of White Cloud had an eye for beauty as well as for business. The location is exceptionally beautiful, with a sweeping expanse of the Missouri River in front and commanding wooded bluffs back of the town.

White Cloud is one of the early pioneer towns of Doniphan County, which has held its own from a business standpoint right along, and prospered to a considerable extent through the many years of its existence. The country adjacent is productive and the residents in the locality are in a fair way to be among the wealthiest in that section of Doniphan County.

It has been forcibly demonstrated recently that the bluffs around White Cloud are admirably adapted for fruit raising, the same as at Troy, Wathena and Blair, and already there have been a number of both small and large fruit farms set out. It has been confidently predicted by leading men in the Doniphan County fruit industry that there can be no reason why the land in the vicinity of White Cloud should not be producing as heavy fruit harvests in the near future as land in any other part of the fruit belt.

The town of White Cloud was started in a small way and almost accidentally. The townsite company had been organized in Oregon, Mo., in 1856, with the idea of founding a real good town on the banks of the Missouri River in the then Kansas territory.

When the company was organized at Oregon, Missouri, it had been hoped that the Indian lands would be parceled out and sold that year, but it was not until 1857 that the lands were brought into the market. The original company, which was composed of James H. Utt, James Foster and Dr. H. W. Peter, of Oregon, Mo., and Cornelius Dorland and Enoch Spaulding, who were located on the townsite without authority, was disbanded when the members realized that they could not proceed with the formation of the town while the land was still in possession of the Indians. There was no way by which the promoters could secure title to the land just at that time.

Stephen A. Douglas, on May 31, 1854, had secured the passage of the Kansas-Nebraska bill which opened the territories to settlement, and just two years afterward John Utt and Enoch Spaulding laid out a portion of the present town of White Cloud. They had been on the ground for some time, and had concluded to build a town there.

The fact that the Indian lands had not yet been sold by the government caused Utt and Spaulding to realize that it would be a dangerous and risky proceeding to undertake the building of a town until they first had secured title to the land. So they decided to hold off on any extensive improvements until after the land sales on July 4, 1857.

In the meantime a townsite company was formed with a capital stock of $45,000, and a membership of thirty. The officers of the company were: James Foster, president; R. J. Gatling, who later invented the Gatling gun, secretary, and Dr. H. W. Foster, treasurer. The members of the company were men of energy and means, and they had the money to go ahead with building operations from the very day the organization was perfected.

Two years previous to that time there had been a number of small buildings roughly constructed on the proposed site of the town, but there was an air of uncertainty about the place that had a deterrent effect on further operations. Among those old shacks was a log cabin that had been put up by J. F. Lease, near the old ferry landing. There was also a frame building erected by M. K. Byrd, and Briggs & Jennings had put up a store building on what is now Main street.

Even those "sooners" knew they were taking chances on the final ownership of the townsite, and they rested on their oars until the government had given a clear title to the land. They did not make any great efforts to do anything towards a title to their townsite until after the government sale of the Iowa trust lands, which took place the first week in June, 1857. Then the title was made secure from Uncle Sam and the promoters were made happy.

Then the White Cloud Town Company could sell their town lots, and preparations were made to have the greatest event not only in the town, but in the entire territory. As the great and glorious Fourth of July, 1857, the day set for the sale, approached, arrangements were carefully made to take care of the crowds which were known to be coming.

Prospective settlers, speculators and land sharks of every degree of desperation flocked to White Cloud, some of them arriving a day or two in advance of the great event. Steamers with bunting flying to the breeze shot up and down the river all the morning of the Fourth. They carried up crowds and went back for more. There could never be an accurate estimate obtained of the number of people who attended, but as they came from most everywhere it is believed there must have been almost 6,000.

The day was one of general jollification. There was music galore, and a big barbecue had been gotten up to feed the hungry. There was also a plentiful supply of liquor to be obtained, but it was generally kept under cover. All the steamers carried bands of music and there were a number of local flute players and fiddlers on hand. The affair turned into a regular frontier picnic and everybody was happy. There were many notable men of the day present who made patriotic speeches and extolled the virtues of the American eagle to the queen's taste. White Cloud had an aggregation of musicians, styled a band, of its own, and the members almost blew their lungs out trying to make more noise than the outfits from the other towns down the river.

The speculators were a determined bunch of individuals, and the bidding for the land was spirited. The local men, however, were fortified with a bank roll of $45,000, so that they had little trouble in protecting their townsite rights. Very few outsiders got within hailing distance of the new town, as the members of the townsite company bid in every desirable piece of land that had been put under the hammer. The net proceeds of the sales amounted to $23,794, and it was said that a sum equivalent to that amount had been spent by the crowds who visited White Cloud that day.

Immediately after the sale the work of building a town was begun with vigor. Shreve & Macy had already taken a chance and opened a drug store, but all the other business people got busy at once. Enoch Spaulding erected three frame houses, one of which was converted into a hotel before the roof had been properly nailed down. They were afterward torn down and the old City Hotel erected on the site. A great number of other buildings quickly sprung up, and during the year T. C. Shreve opened a physician's office.

The first drug store in White Cloud was opened in 1857 by Shreve & Macy, in a building adjacent to where Hines' grocery was later conducted. In 1858 the City Hotel and a store for Shreve's drug store was built and Mr. Shreve moved into his new quarters.

The first mayor of White Cloud was C. Dorland, who had been elected at the first election in the town. The city clerk was a Mr. Brown. The present mayor and city clerk are, respectively, Dr. J. H. McGaughey and Emil L. Marker.

White Cloud Kansas

The first sawmill to be put up in White Cloud only came to the town because the owners were refused permission to land their machinery at Leavenworth. Early in 1856 Charles G. Scrafford and Samuel Lappin shipped the sawmill from their home in Ohio, intending to operate in Leavenworth, but the pro-slavery people of that place would not allow them to land, because they were abolitionists. They met a similar reception at Iowa Point, the only difference being that the mill was landed on the river bank, but the residents dared the owners to try to operate the mill. In desperation Scrafford & Lappin procured ox-teams and hauled the mill to White Cloud, where the people were glad enough to have a sawmill, and it was successfully operated there. The mill was an old-fashioned affair with an upright saw, known as a "muley," but it relieved the necessities of the situation and did a rushing business. Later John H. Utt built a sawmill with a circular saw equipment, and secured most of the business of the town.

A postoffice was opened in White Cloud immediately after the land sales in 1857, with C. F. Jennings, part owner in one of the general stores, as postmaster. The office was located in a little lumber shack adjoining the site where Pugsley's drug store was later erected, but every time a new postmaster was named in after years he usually moved the office to a building either owner by himself or one of his business partners. The office was made a money order one in 1869, the first order being issued in favor of a Boston firm for $43.38, but there have been thousands of orders drawn back and forth ever since that early day. The present postmaster of White Cloud is James P. Kelley, and the assistant is Miss Agnes Kent.

The first newspaper in White Cloud was the Kansas Chief, started by the late Sol Miller, in 1857. The first issue bore the date of June 4. On July 4, 1872, the paper was removed to Troy, where it has ever since been published. Mr. Miller had arrived in White Cloud in March, 1857, but the equipment for the printing plant was slow in making the journey from Cincinnati up the Ohio River to the Mississippi and thence up the Missouri to White Cloud.

The first murder in White Cloud was committed by a man named Hurst, who cut his wife's throat in the presence of the city marshal on the night of July 29, 1875. The crime was a most atrocious one and shocked the entire community. Hurst's wife had been a widow named Titus, who came from Cincinnati with her father and sisters. Her father was named Jacob Fisher. Hurst had only been married to the former widow a very brief time when they got to drinking and quarreling almost continually. Finally the woman left him and, fearing for her life, sought refuge with a negro woman on the outskirts of the town.

A week before the murder Mrs. Hurst had applied to the police judge for his arrest on the charge of abuse and cruelty, and he was fined heavily, and placed under bond to keep the peace. Learning the hiding place of his wife, Hurst sought out the marshal and requested that official to accompany him to the house, as he expected to effect a reconciliation. The woman met Hurst at the fence and the marshal, thinking that a reconciliation had been affected, turned to one side. In a second Hurst loaned over and cut the woman's throat with a hook-bladed pruning knife. Dying, she gasped, "My God, he has killed me!"

Hurst at once broke away and ran to the office of a justice of the peace, where he gave himself up. He was promptly jailed and the news of the terrible crime spread rapidly. A mob was quickly formed, headed by the marshal, carrying a rope. A noose was made in the rope, and although the mayor with a posse tried to head off the marshal and his crowd, the latter reached the jail first. At the point of a revolver the marshal tried to compel Hurst to put his head in the noose, but the murderer refused. After a fierce struggle between the contending mobs, the marshal was ejected and imprisoned. The excitement was so intense that a locomotive was procured and Hurst was taken to Troy for safekeeping. He started to feign insanity, but the dodge failed to work and he was convicted, and sentenced to be hanged, at the following September term of court. According to the law he should be confined in the penitentiary one year before the sentence of the court could be carried out. Upon reaching the penitentiary Hurst tried the same crazy tactics with such success that he was confined in an insane asylum, where he died a miserable death several years ago.

That same summer Cornelius Dorland erected a three-story brick building on the levee, and a steam ferry boat was brought from the East by R. P. Moore, J. W. Moore, Joshua Taylor and James Swartz. The first pilot of this craft was N. B. Pavey, familiarly called "Pole" Pavey, a boon companion of Mark Twain in his river days on the Upper Mississippi. Dr. Thomas C. Shreve was the first physician to locate in White Cloud.

Gregory Amann, who later moved to Hiawatha, supervised the building of the first school in White Cloud in 1858. There was little done in the building line then for a number of years, or until John H. Utt put up a planing mill in 1863. Isaac Cleveland was the first "village blacksmith" in White Cloud, and W. H. Forncrook, later county clerk, and now a ranch owner in Fontenelle, Wyoming, worked in the forge as a journeyman horseshoer.

Late in 1857, Ben Ruffner came to White Cloud from his home in Missouri and opened a general store under the Chief office. The first livery stable in White Cloud was kept by J. C. Pierce, who also ran a hotel, and R. S. Wakefield was the first carpenter to make his permanent residence in the town.

While the people of White Cloud were mostly a law unto themselves in the early days of settlement a Mr. V. D. Markham had the temerity to hang out his shingle as a lawyer in the fall of 1857. Mr. Markham remained for several years and later moved to Denver, Colo., where he became immensely wealthy.

There was a lively boom on in White Cloud during the year 1859-1860, occasioned by the town having been made the starting point for government freighting across the plains. Russell, Majors & Waddell held the contract and the residents of White Cloud persuaded the firm to make the start of the long journey from the town with the result that things were humming for over an entire year. Then the contracting firm for the government work became financially interested in another town, and they concentrated their business there.

When the printing office for the Chief arrived in White Cloud in 1857, on March 28, there were a number of bright young men boarding at Spaulding's and holding down claims in the adjacent country, waiting for the sales of the Iowa Trust lands. Among the best known were N. J. Coffey, Royal C. Torrey, Sterling B. Sloane, John M. Cannon, Arlon M. Aldrich, E. O. and Philo Adams, William Hoskins, E. H. Minard, and William H. Holbrook. A few days after the arrival of the Chief outfit, J. C. Pierce, Dr. Henry Graves, Langdon M. Risley, with his cousin, Mrs. Ridgeway, arrived overland in buggies by way of Iowa. They had heard of the outrages committed on prospective settlers from the East by the Missouri border ruffians, so they did not tempt fate by coming through that state.

Torrey and Coffey died in the '70's; Sloane later moved to Oswego, Labette County; Cannon went to Oklahoma when that territory was opened to settlement and was elected to office.

WILLIAM H. STEWART

William H. Stewart, superintendent of the electric lighting plant at White Cloud, is one of the best, if not the best, electricians in Doniphan County. He has made an extensive study of lighting plants throughout the Middle West and has given such general satisfaction in his present position that the citizens would hardly know what to do without him. In fact all ordinances and measures of any kind pertaining to the street lighting are referred to him by the White Cloud city council before any action is taken.

Mr. Stewart was born in Linn County, Iowa, Aug. 28, 1882. He was educated in the public schools up to and including the high school; after which he took the International Correspondence School course and finished his education in Highland Park College in Des Moines, Iowa, a practical engineering school. Leaving college he took charge of and helped to build the telephone system in his home town of Overbrook, Kansas. After three years there he entered the service of the Bell Telephone Co. at St. Joseph, Mo., and spent seven years in their service, the last four of which was as manager of three exchanges with headquarters at Sabetha, Kan.

Leaving the services of the Bell Company, he entered into the construction of electric light plants, building the plants at Union Star, Mo., and several other places. On Sept. 21, 1904, Mr. Stewart married Miss Lillian Viersen, of Overbrook, Kan., and to this union two children were born: Leo L., eight years old, and Ralph, five. He went to White Cloud shortly after the electric plant was established there, having had a part in its construction. The people of the city think highly of Mr. Stewart, who is also a member of the Masonic order and the Knights and Ladies of Security.

Charles H. Lupold

The Manager of the Well-Known Firm of Lupold & Company of White Cloud, Began His Business Career in Doniphan County as a Clerk in the Store of Gilmore & Martin, and Has Risen to His Present Position By Meritorious Work and Business Ability.

The men who are at the head of the successful business institutions of this country are those who began at the bottom and worked their way to the top. The business houses of Doniphan County in particular owe their success to the clerks who, through long association with the trade, have come to know it thoroughly and are qualified to manage the business of a large concern which undertakes to supply their patrons with honest goods at honest prices. A great many honest and well-meaning merchants fail through a lack of intimate knowledge as to the needs of his patrons, for it is the possession of this knowledge and its application that makes for success in the mercantile field.

The firm of Lupold & Company of White Cloud is fortunate in having for its manager such a man as Charles H. Lupold, whose entire life since boyhood has been devoted to mercantile pursuits. Mr. Lupold's experiences along the highway that has led to the place we call Great Success, have been somewhat similar to the experiences of many other business men we might mention. It has cost him plenty of hard work, often at a small salary, to learn the business as one should learn it; but along with it all there have been many pleasant associations, for who can come in contact with the hundreds of patrons of mercantile establishments without forming many acquaintances and winning many friends and sharing with them their joys and sorrows?

Charles H. Lupold was born in the town of Loganton in the state of Pennsylvania. He was educated there and grew up with the boys of the town. Like most of the boys he had his ambitions, and his particular ambition was to some day become a successful merchant. Whether he had any idea of the patient effort that it would cost him to realize his boyhood ambition, the one fact remains that he was constant in his devotion to the pursuit that has won him a high position among the best business men in the county of Doniphan which is noted for its successful business men, farmers as well as merchants.

The landing of Charles H. Lupold in Doniphan County on Feb. 10, 1889, was a red letter day in the life of this then ambitious young man. He had only $2.45 in money in his pockets, but he had the wherewith to make more. He went to work on the farm of John Hale, now the richest man in Doniphan County, afterward going to the farm of his uncle, Sam Lupold, one and one-half miles from Highland on what is known as the Breeding Place. The farm work was hard, but it gave him good health and a good appetite. Still, it was not exactly what Charles H. Lupold wanted. He had set his heart on being a tradesman and a tradesman he would be.

The first business opportunity came to Charles H. Lupold in a clerkship in the store of Gilmore & Hart at Highland. The pay was only $30 a month. He remained in the employ of that firm for one year. Then he went to White Cloud to work in the store of E. C. Nuzum & Son, being employed six months by that firm. From there he went to the firm of Burckhalter & Cotton, where for nine years this future business man performed excellent service, his work putting him in touch with the people of the White Cloud community among whom he found many lifelong friends.

Mr. Lupold's next move was to enter a wholesale house in St. Joseph, where he worked six months. He accepted a position on the road, selling dry goods and notions for two years. While thus engaged he was employed by the Opl Supply Company and sent to Wyoming, where he remained two and one-half years. From Wyoming he went to Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and sold lumber for six months.

Having had a lot of experience on the road and away from his home and friends, the subject of this sketch had a longing to go back to White Cloud, which had been the scene of several years of pleasant store experience. He lost no time in getting back, and for the next four months he engaged with Kelly Brothers in their general store.

Desiring to engage in business for himself he bought in with J. W. and E. V. Campbell on Feb. 1, 1904, and from that start finally grew the splendid business concern now known as Lupold & Company, which is one of the most extensive and most substantial business enterprises of White Cloud and Doniphan County.

Later Mr. Lupold further showed his preference for Doniphan County by taking one of the county's choicest girls as his wife. She was Miss Frieda Lehr, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Lehr and a pleasant young woman who had been born and reared and educated in and about White Cloud. The Rev. Mr. Saville, pastor of the Methodist church of White Cloud, performed the ceremony on March 28, 1915. Soon after the marriage Mr. and Mrs. Lupold entered their beautiful home, which was purchased of A. Poulet, and they are enjoying the blessings of an ideal home in White Cloud, which is the place of all the world to them. Mr. Lupold is a member of White Cloud Lodge A. F. and A. M.

While Doniphan County ranks first as a fruit county, we are proud of the fact that some of our citizens rate as professionals in the breeding and selling of fine animals. Chief among these is Billy Webb, who specializes on Poland China hogs. His hogs are known the country over as absolutely pure strain. He resides in Wolf River township.

Mr. A. L. Perry, local abstractor, has the absolute confidence of Doniphan County people in all matters relating to transfers of property, and other like duties. They know that the papers drawn up by Mr. Perry will be legal and binding in every particular, and absolutely correct.

Townsend, Wyatt & Wall of St. Joseph, solicit any out of town business which Doniphan County people find it necessary to do. It is very fit and proper that they receive your patronage, as the Townsend family has been identified with Doniphan County for sixty years.

It has become an established custom for the youth of this section who desire business training to enter Platt's Business College of St. Joseph, where all the branches of business are capably expounded.

Peter Taylor

Has Been a Farmer All of His Life and Is Well Known as Breeder of Fine Stock.

The raising of fine, thoroughbred stock is one of the things which Peter Taylor, too well-known in Doniphan County to need introduction here, enjoys on his magnificent farm of three hundred and seventy-nine acres, about three miles south of White Cloud. General farming is his occupation, but Mr. Taylor has an especial fondness for stock, and he is one of the most progressive and respected residents of this community. Also it may be said that he is another of those who came mighty near being a native, as his father and mother came here when he was an infant.

Peter Taylor was born March 29, 1877, in Brown County, Kansas, the son of Joseph and Minerva Taylor, well-to-do residents of that section. Shortly after he came into the world, the elder Mr. and Mrs. Taylor decided that the opportunities were far better in Doniphan than in Brown County, and so started this way. They settled here in about 1878 on the place which the subject of this sketch now owns and resides. Peter Taylor received all of his early education in the district schools of that period. There was no high school then and after acquiring what the state educational authorities of that period considered a sufficient amount of knowledge for one to secure in the country school, he went with his parents to their farm and was fortunate in having their extensive and valued experiences as a guide in starting him on the footpath of life.

Peter Taylor and Family

On Feb. 12, 1902, when he was twenty-five years old, Mr. Taylor was married to Miss Ada Park, daughter of an old and respected Doniphan County family. The wedding was solemnized in the church at Falls City, Neb.; and after a honeymoon, cut short by the desires of the young couple to get back to their work, they returned to the farm. To their union four boys have been born: Orville, Frederick C., Herman L., and Leo R.

From the start, Mr. Taylor decided to become a progressive agriculturist and so he applied all of his own spare time in reading and studying the latest and most improved methods of soil cultivation. He attended all of the farmers' institutes which he could, and there exchanged ideas and gained many helpful bits of information from his associates. Also he was a booster for the state agricultural college and, from the booklets and advice which they sent out, absorbed all that he could. Not only did he give of his spare time to this study, but he put his theories into practice and today his success has justified all of his efforts. Not only has it been a financial success, but something deeper.

Mr. Tayor has a fine, substantial residence on his place, and, graced by the presence of Mrs. Taylor, a home loving, affable and charming woman, it is the scene of frequent gatherings of the neighbors and at any time Peter Taylor can be found around his own fireside with his family. The door is always open, and if it isn't, as one of his friends has said, the latchstring can always be found hanging just outside. It is not necessary to knock—all that is needed to obtain a hearty welcome is to walk in.

Besides his farming, in which he is intensely interested, and which naturally takes up the major portion of his time, Mr. Taylor is a powerful factor in community life. He has always assisted in every way possible any religious endeavor that called for his aid. Behind any propaganda that has for its ultimate aim the uplifting and betterment of White Cloud, or the entire county, for that matter, Mr. Taylor will be found boosting. Politically he has taken an active part in his party, although he has never been and probably never will be, a candidate for any office. Mr. Taylor is honest, fearless and true to his convictions. He is of the type of citizenship of which Doniphan County is proud and which she always welcomes and heaps success upon.

RAILROAD ACCIDENT

Two men were killed in a serious railroad accident near Troy on Saturday night, June 8, 1872. There had been heavy rains in the county for a week or more and Major First, superintendent of the Atchison & Nebraska Railroad, accompanied by his secretary, a man named Allen, had been inspecting the roadbed. They left White Cloud on a train at dark and shortly after 9 o'clock reached a bridge across a gully between Iowa Point and Highland. Although Superintendent Firth had just seen a freight train cross this bridge, he was suspicious and with his secretary, climbed out on the cow-catcher of the engine and gave the signal to proceed slowly.

When half way across the structure, it gave way, having been undermined by the rains. Allen, the secretary, was killed instantly, being crushed against one side of the embankment. Superintendent Firth was pinned under the wreckage and one of his shoulders severely burned. James Strahan, the engineer, and N. B. Drummond, the fireman, leaped from the cab into the water and received only minor bruises. They hurriedly extricated themselves and went to the assistance of Superintendent Firth. Although fatally injured, he was conscious and gave directions as to what should be done. A call was sent to Atchison and Iowa Point, and physicians came. The superintendent finally was released from the wreckage and was taken to Atchison, where he died a few days later.

THOMAS TAYLOR

Prominent Fruit-Grower of Doniphan County Also Is in General Mercantile Business

Thomas Taylor, of White Cloud, is another of the many prominent and successful citizens of Doniphan County who came mighty near being a native, but missed the mark by a hair's breadth. Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Taylor, his parents, decided to come here from Holt County, Mo., when Thomas was a tottling babe in his mother's arms. The elder Mr. Taylor located on a farm near White Cloud, and his son has been in that community ever since.

Thomas Taylor received his first book learning from the old-fashioned country school teacher in the district school. After leaving he went with his father on the farm and worked for nearly fifteen years, absorbing all of the knowledge he could and reading extensively, especially in relation to intensive fruit cultivation. This has always been his hobby; and how well his time has been applied is shown conclusively today by his fine orchards and acre after acre of strawberries and blackberries.

On Aug. 4, 1882, Mr. Taylor was married to Miss Mary Bowen, a native of White Cloud and a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Bowen, old and respected residents of that city. Mrs. Bowen is a kind and indulgent parent, and an ideal wife and makes the home a pleasant place. Six children were born to their union, four of whom died young. The two now living are Berl and Julia, The latter is at home with her parents and is receiving her education in the public schools. Later she will enter the high school and complete her course.

Mr. Taylor is one of the expert fruit raisers of the county, and has recently planted four acres of raspberries and four acres of strawberries. He owns some of the most valuable land in the vicinity of White Cloud, having one hundred and twenty-five acres on the edge of the city limits, all of which is under cultivation. He is an active member of the White Cloud Fruit-Growers' Association and was one of the men who helped his best to organize it.

In addition to his farm pursuits, Mr. Taylor finds time for other lines. He is engaged in the general mercantile business at White Cloud with G. G. Keller, and his popularity in the community has increased patronage to a large extent. Mr. Taylor is a self-made man, an honest, upright citizen, and one of the type of progressive Kansans who are a credit to the county, the state and the nation.

Schools of White Cloud

Interesting History of the Educational System of White Cloud, From Early Times to the Present, With a Brief Reference to a Number of the Leading Instructors Who Taught the Young Idea How to Shoot—Mixed Schools Since 1886—First School Building Erected in 1857—Prof. C. G. Landrum, Present Superintendent.

The history of the White Cloud public school system dates back to the year 1857, when the first school building was erected on the identical spot where the Catholic Church now stands.

The town was little more than a small village at the time, but the settlers were coming in fast and the urgent needs of some kind of a school building were realized by the leading element of the community.

Miss Lulu Johnson's Room in the White Cloud Public Schools, Taken February 3, 1915.

So a frame structure containing one room was built and it served its purpose all right until the following year, when it was struck by lightning and totally destroyed. From that time until 1865 school was held in rented buildings, but during that year a one-story brick building was erected on the site of the first school.

In a short time the number of children of school age had increased to such an extent that the little one room brick was too small to accommodate the crowd and additional space was secured in the basement of the Methodist Church which was used for school purposes for a number of years, or until 1871, when the citizens took up the question of sufficient school facilities in earnest.

The population had grown with leaps and bounds and the indications were for a continued influx of people to the town. The taxpayers felt the needs of a better and larger building become more pressing with each succeeding semester and a proposition was advanced to vote $25,000 in bonds for a new school building. This amount was considered entirely excessive by a majority of the citizens and a compromise was effected so that on June 21, 1871, a special election was held when $15,000 in bonds, bearing ten per cent interest, were voted for a new school building.

The bonds were sold to Jones & Howell, of Leavenworth, for 87 cents on the dollar, on June 1, 1871, netting a total of $13,050. All this amount was devoted to the erection of the present attractive school building, which bears testimony to the liberality of the early settlers of White Cloud. The building was erected during the years 1872-1873 and the last of the bonds was redeemed in full on November 1, 1886.

A separate school for negroes was conducted in White Cloud from 1872 to 1886, when the negro school as a district organization was suspended, since which time there have been mixed schools in the community. The graded system was adopted in the school in 1883, and since then graduates have been admitted to the Kansas State University without further examination.

The one-story brick school building that was erected in 1865 was sold in 1890, and it has since been used as the Catholic Church of White Cloud. The members of the school district board at their annual meeting in April, 1914, voted to erect an addition to the present building to take the form of a wing on the west side. The contract for this work was awarded to A. G. Gibson, of Shubert, Neb., and the work was completed several months ago, and the addition is now being used for class work.

Since the establishment of the first school in White Cloud, there have been many changes in the teachers, several of whom have made a bright mark in the educational world. There have been, in all, fifteen principals, with several valuable assistants, in the White Cloud school, from 1873 to the present time, but the longest individual term filled by any that the Chief can find record of, was that of Miss Leona Sullivan, of Salt Lake City, Utah, who had twenty years' continuous service to her credit. Miss Sullivan was a lady of strong but pleasing personality, and the impress of her influence among the pupils can be readily discerned among the men and women of Doniphan County, and other parts of the country to the present day.

Miss Anna Mallows, editor of the White Cloud Globe, was a teacher for some time, and the ability and thoroughness she exhibited during her career as a teacher, is reflected in the sterling manner in which she conducts the publication she is so fortunate as to own.

Charles Thomas was the first principal of the White Cloud school, serving during 1873-1874, and he was succeeded at the next term by Thomas H. Dinsmore, 1874-75.

Prof. C. G. Landrum, the present superintendent of the White Cloud school, is a capable and competent educator, and is endowed with executive ability of a high order. A. D. Moffet, at present running a newspaper at Elwood, Ind., was school principal from 1886-1888, and W. H. Greider of Topeka, one of the leading educators of Kansas, was principal in 1897-1898. Mr. Greider was known as one of the most brilliant students in the State Normal School under President A. R. Taylor, at Emporia.

C. S. Hambleton, now principal of the Barnes High School at Troy, was principal at White Cloud until he was induced to accept a more lucrative position in Troy. Mr. Hambleton was a good man, and the residents regretted to see him leave. He served from 1898 to 1907. Other principals at White Cloud since the early days of the school were: A. H. Miller, 1875-1878; J. W. Cranmer, 1878-1880; Ralph Hunt, 1880-1881; A. H. Miller, 1881-1882; T. H. Cecil, 1882-1885; D. E. Todd, 1885-1889; Charles A. Read, 1888-1893; L. A. Baughman, 1893-1895; J. N. Banks, 1897-1898, and G. H. Baird, 1907-1908. Doctor Dinsmore of Troy was also one of the teachers during his young days.

Hospitality

One thing which appeals strongly to the visitor to Doniphan County is the big-hearted hospitality with which strangers are invariably greeted, and the delight our people take in entertaining visitors.

This characteristic has, perhaps, been a factor in the building of a large number of substantial and fine homes here, in greater proportion than are ordinarily found in the Middle West.

Its homes and social life is a subject of praise from everybody who has visited the county. Our citizenship ranks higher than the average. Our people are extensive readers and independent in their thoughts and actions.

The professional and business people are not only progressive and fully abreast of the times in all matters pertaining to the late achievements in the centers of commercialism and trade, but they are highly cultured and refined, comprising a community of intellectuality and of great strength.

Order of the Eastern Star

White Cloud Chapter, Founded in 1900, One of Largest in County.

The White Cloud Chapter of the Order of the Eastern Star is one of the largest in Doniphan County, having more than 72 members in good standing. It was instituted May 29, 1900, by Mrs. Eva Johnston and Miss Hattie E. Castle of Troy, who were authorized by the grand patron. Miss Castle is now an efficient clerk and has a fine position in the federal building at Kansas City, Mo. The chapter was operated under a special dispensation from the grand lodge until a charter was granted on May 16, 1901. At the first meeting held on the evening of June 4, 1901, the following officers were elected:

Worthy Matron, Mrs. Jennie Peek; Worthy Patron, John W. Campbell; Associate Matron, Mrs. Louisa Orton; Treasurer, Mrs. Terzah Harpster; Secretary, Harvey T. Bradley; Conductress, Miss Gussie Mauck; Associate Conductress, Mrs. Martha Ryan; Warder, Mrs. Susan E. Bradley; Marshal, Mrs. Nannie Martin; Sentinel, Emil L. Marker; Chaplain, Mrs. Martha Garlock; Ada, Miss Kitten Orton; Ruth, Mrs. Dora Shreve; Esther, Mrs. Emily Campbell; Martha, Mrs. Mary Marker, and Electa, Mrs. Rebecca Gribling. The chapter was known as White Cloud Chapter No. 233, and the membership since its establishment, has practically tripled.

The past matrons who have served since 1901, are: Mrs. Jennie Peek, Mrs. Louisa Orton, Mrs. Dora Shreve, Mrs. Mary Marker, Mrs. Effie Utt, Mrs. Kitten Kelley, Mrs. Emma Kelley, Mrs. Pearl Van Valkenburgh, Miss Mamie Pohl, Miss Bessie Taylor, Mrs. Grace McCahan, Miss Clara Pohl. The list of past patrons also is given. They were John W. Campbell, John W. Harpster, Garner Van Valkenburgh, Emil L. Marker, Dr. J. H. McGauhey, Claude G. Landrum, Louis H. Pohl and William H. McCahan.

The present officers of the chapter are: Worthy Matron, Mrs. Clara Pohl; Associate Matron, Mrs. Genevieve Mauck; Worthy Patron, W. H. McCahan; Treasurer, Mrs. Emily V. Campbell; Secretary, E. L. Marker; Conductress, Mrs. Emma Kelley; Associate Conductress, Mrs. Mary Marker; Ada, Mrs. Anna Osgood; Ruth, Miss Hazel Birchfield; Esther, Mrs. Dora Shreve; Martha, Miss Etta Idol; Electa, Miss Lois Wakefield; Warder, Mrs. Lillian Stewart; Sentinel, McIntyre Ryan; Marshal, Dr. J. H. McGauhey, and Organist, Miss Fay Wakefield.

The members manifest an unusual interest in their lodge, thereby making it the best and largest membership lodge of its kind in Doniphan County. The ladies are alive and on the alert at all times, and the interest shown in the Eastern Star work in White Cloud is remarkable. Let the good work continue and may other lodges of its kind in the county prosper because of the commendable work of the White Cloud lodge.

A. D. MOFFETT

Former Doniphan County Teacher, Now Newspaper Man in Indiana.

Many present residents and teachers of Doniphan County, and especially some of those in White Cloud, who can remember back to the days of 1886 to 1888, will remember Alonzo D. Moffett, who, during those two years, was superintendent of the White Cloud public schools. An able educator and a man who inspired the confidence of all with whom he came in contact, he will be recalled by not a few who were either his pupils at one time or another or who were associated with him in the work of educating the young of the land.

Being dissatisfied with the emoluments of teaching, he decided to look about for a more lucrative profession, and soon engaged in newspaper work.

Prof. A. D. Moffett

In 1897 he went to Elwood, Ind., and purchased the Daily Record, a fine progressive journal over whose destinies he has presided ever since. It will delight many of Mr. Moffett's old friends here to know that he is "making good" with a vengeance. He was born in Indiana and was educated in the public schools of his native state, graduating from the Spencer high school in 1878. In 1883 he was graduated from the Indiana University, with a degree of A. B. For two years he taught school in his home county and in 1886 went to White Cloud.

Writing of his service there, Mr. Moffett stated he enjoyed many pleasant and profitable hours. The teachers, he declares, were all interested in their work and that on many of the pupils an impression was made for a higher and more beautiful life. Some of them have since attained wide prominence. After leaving White Cloud, the young professor attended Indiana University for another year, taking a postgraduate course and obtain an A. M. degree. Later he spent one year at Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore, Maryland.

In addition to the distinction which has come to him as an editor, the subject of this sketch is a former president of the Indiana Democratic Editorial Association. He was elected president of the national organization at Chicago, Ill., in 1912, and presided over the meeting held at Colorado Springs, Col., in 1913. He is a life member of the national body, and is at present a member of the advisory committee of the International Press Congress, which met in San Francisco, Calif., July 5 to 10, 1915.

John W. Ford was the first operator in the first telegraph office established in Troy. The office was discontinued on May 20, 1866, because of the fact that it did not justify the expense of maintaining the office in Troy. The operator, Mr. Ford, went to White Cloud and took charge of the telegraph office at that place.

REV. C. I. FREARK

A Former Doniphan County Preacher.

The Rev. Mr. C. I. Freark is a former Doniphan County minister. He was born at Fosterburg, Ill., Dec. 29, 1854, and was married Sept. 4, 1882, in the Methodist Church at Waterville, Kan., to Miss Anna M. Brooks of Bentonsport, Iowa. Mrs. Freark was born Feb. 28, 1859. To their union were born seven children: Sarah Winona, May 28, 1884; Maudie, May 13, 1886, died in infancy; Francis E., July 20, 1888, died when seven years old; Christine B., July 6, 1890; Clinton Joyce, March 16, 1893; Ruth Adelaide, July 4, 1897, died in infancy, and C. S. Freark, Jr., Nov. 11, 1899.

The Rev. Mr. Freark will be remembered best through his pastorate at White Cloud in 1886. For more than two years he gave of the best of his labors to build up the church there. Frequently he had as many as three pulpits to supply on a Sunday. This was in the early period when the country was going through its most important period of development. The influence which the church, through the Rev. Mr. Freark, exerted on the community is bearing fruit now in the prosperity of the citizens and their religious atmosphere. At the present time, the Rev. Mr. Freark is at Lawrence, Kan., where he has a large congregation.

ANDREW J. HENDREN

A Soldier of the Civil War—A Pioneer of Iowa Point.

Andrew Jackson Hendren has the distinction of being one of the oldest men in Doniphan County. He is a civil war veteran and a man with an exceptionally keen memory. Today, after his valued services to his country, and his keen recollections, he is really an integral part of Doniphan County. The community would not be complete without him. At his home in Iowa Point he has the veneration of young and old alike, who love to hear him talk of the by-gone days and much of the history of this section is at his finger tips.

It was in the famous Madison County of Kentucky, where Mr. Hendren was born. His parents were farmers and Kentucky then was just being fully claimed from the wilderness. He came into the world on May 20 of the year 1825. It can easily be seen where his name came from. "Old Hickory" was on the crest of a popularity wave at that time. He was in the thick of every fight and the nation was burning with political issues. The civil war had never been dreamed of, as none of the questions which led up to it had been broached, but there were other questions almost as vitally important then. So the young Hendren was named Andrew Jackson Hendren.

He came to Kansas, May 10, 1854, and settled at Iowa Point, where he built a small brick structure and started business as a butcher. The Iowa Point Hotel was built about a year after he arrived, and Mr. Hendren remembers it well. It burned some time before the war. Iowa Point was quite a thriving settlement then, so Mr. Hendren with William Banks, started a ferry. In this they were very successful. When the war broke out, however, Mr. Hendren went to his country's aid.

He enlisted Sept. 1, 1863, in the 14th Kansas Cavalry, and served during the hardest part of the southern campaigns, when Sherman was marching to the sea, and Grant was hammering Lee's line. Mr. Hendren was mustered out June 20, 1865, at Fort Gibson, and returned to Iowa Point, where he has since resided. He was married in Kentucky and has the following children: Mrs. Mary Coates, of Chester, Neb.; Mrs. Emma Haskel of Eugene, Ore.; Mrs. Maggie Tracy, of Eugene, Ore., and Addison Richard Hendren, of Iowa Point. Mrs. Hendren died twenty years ago and since then Mr. Hendren has made his home with his son.

Joseph F. Hampson, sheriff of Doniphan County, was married to Miss Bashford, at the Great Western Hotel, in Elwood on Sunday, June 24, 1860.

Mark Ethelbert Zimmerman

A Popular Young Man Who Received a Collegiate Education and, Marrying an Accomplished School Teacher, Settled Down to a Life of Independence and Enjoyment on a Doniphan County Farm—Has Collection of Indian Relics.

Mark Ethelbert Zimmerman, who, with his accomplished wife and their bright and interesting children, resides on the old Mallows farm in Doniphan County, is a good example of a man with a collegiate education who is content to live the life of a farmer and is making good at it. Likewise, Mrs. Zimmerman, well educated and successful as a school teacher, is content to be the wife of a farmer and the mother of their children. After all, while farming is not generally considered as among the learned professions, there is no other avocation or pursuit in which one can engage in which intelligence and education count for more than on the farm.

Mr. Zimmerman is a native of Illinois, born in Rushville, that state, June 1, 1866. His parents were Jacob and Columbia Ann Zimmerman, who came to this country Feb. 22, 1873. The parents were educated and it was their desire to give the son Mark, a good education. They sent him to the Troy schools, where he proved to be an apt scholar. Later on the boy went to the Campbell Normal University of Holton, Kansas, and finally completed his education at the University of Sherwood, Michigan. Thus Mark Ethelbert Zimmerman returned to his Kansas home one of the best educated young men in the county.

Being an educated man it was only natural that he should become interested in educated people, particularly those engaged in educational work. This explains how it happened that Mark Ethelbert Zimmerman and Miss Mary Alice Mallows, a charming and popular school teacher, became attached to each other. Their marriage was celebrated Oct. 30, 1887, the ceremony being performed by the Rev. Mr. James A. Anderson, now of Iowa Point, at the Mallows home.

Mrs. Zimmerman's parents were Samuel and Sarah H. Mallows, the father a native of England, and the mother of Boonville, Missouri. They had settled in Doniphan County in the Alma Winnifred Zimmerman.

1860's, the daughter who is now Mrs. Zimmerman, having been born Aug. 19, 1868. She was educated in the public schools and previous to her marriage to Mr. Zimmerman, had taught school.

Mr. and Mrs. Zimmerman are the parents of seven children, upon whom they have bestowed every parental care within their means to give them the best of educational and social advantages. The children are: Ralph M., born May 8, 1889; Mary Mildred, May 8, 1892; Laurence Vern, March 30, 1894; George Elza, Oct. 28, 1896; Helen Richey, March 25, 1900; Alma Winnifred, Aug. 2, 1905; Mark E., June 11, 1909.

These children were born in Doniphan County, near where their mother was born, the farm of 100 acres having been purchased of the heirs after the death of the parents of Mrs. Zimmerman. The children are an honor to their parents, each one having an ambition to acquire a good education and to be of as much use in the world as possible. They love the old farm, and while nearly all some day will go away from it to enter new homes of their own, the old place will be treasured as one of the dearest spots on earth.

Mr. and Mrs. Zimmerman are esteemed by their neighbors and by their acquaintances whom they number by the hundreds as an honor to the community. Not only are they active in the educational advancement of the community, but they are taking an interest in about everything that concerns the general welfare of the people. They are interested in religious affairs and in everything that tends to culture and the general uplift.

Residence of Mark E. Zimmerman, Situated in Iowa Township.

As a farmer Mr. Zimmerman is a success, and in fact he has been succesful in every undertaking. The farm of 100 acres is in a high state of improvement, the result of the efforts of Mrs. Zimmerman's father, Samuel Mallows, who was one of the best farmers that ever came to Doniphan County. Under the ownership of the Zimmermans, however, the improvements have been kept up, and its fields have been cultivated with the hand of a skilled farmer, producing large crops and a good quality of live stock. They have a small bearing orchard which brings them large returns and are successful with poultry.

Mr. Zimmerman is not a theoretical farmer by any means; he has brought to the farm a stock of practical ideas which have been applied with the best results. He knows a good deal about the soil and he knows how to cultivate it to the best advantage. He is a believer in efficiency in everything, and in farming in particular. He is the right kind of a public-spirited citizen for any community and an honor to the farmers of Doniphan County.

The subject of this sketch is a member of the Kansas State Historical Society, also an international archaeologist, and collector of pre-historic Indian stone relics. His collection includes the George J. Remsburg collection, the P. L. Grey collection, and the collection of the late Charlie Davis of White Cloud. Also thousands from the camp sites, mounds, stone graves and earth lodges of northeast Kansas. Mr. Zimmerman has been instrumental in the identification of the aborigines of Kansas and Missouri, who were the stone age people of Doniphan County. Day by day this persevering and energetic archaeologist is adding to his collections. He will soon have a historic home, where educated people, who prize relics of this kind highly, will congregate.

LLOYD CURTIS JEFFERS

A Prosperous Farmer Who Owns a Fine Farm and a Beautiful Country Home in Iowa Township, Where He Was Born—The Son of a Pioneer Settler of Doniphan County—Mr. and Mrs. Jeffers Active in the Religious Life of Their Community.

To own one hundred and sixty acres of good land that will grow anything worth growing, and on it a nice country residence in which to live, one would say that such a man and his family are well fixed. There are a good many such farms and farm homes and farmers and their families in Iowa township of Doniphan County, and among these is our friend Lloyd Curtis Jeffers and his interesting family.

Mr. Jeffers and his pleasant wife and their two young children, so delightfully situated as they are, constitute a little family whose members are about as nearly contented with their lot in life as one could find by searching the country over. With a farm of such wonderfully productive soil, well stocked and improved, a good home neatly furnished, with everything they really need at their command, and with a host of friends and neighbors of the good, old-fashioned kind of people whose personal worth as men and women count more than their dollars, one should say that the Jeffers family is living in the ideal state.

The subject of this review, Lloyd Curtis Jeffers, was born in Doniphan County, Iowa township, Feb. 11, 1880. His father was Richard P. Jeffers and his mother Georgia Ann Pierce Jeffers, who were among the substantial people who came into Iowa township and who, after contributing much of their fine personality and splendid influence for the general good of the community in which they lived, finally moved to Norton County, this state, where they now reside. To such families we of today are indebted for many of those things that make for our comfort and prosperity and happiness.

The son of these noble parents received the right kind of parental training and was educated in the schools of Iowa township, mingling with the people with whom he had been associated from childhood to manhood. He was the sort of a farmer's boy who appreciated the advantages that were afforded him for an education that would fit him for the practical duties of farm life—and he loved the life and the farm.

Mr. Jeffers was fortunate in being born in Iowa township and he also considered himself fortunate in choosing a wife who was born Dec. 6, 1879, near Highland, in the same township. She was Verna E. Gilmore, a daughter of William Robert Gilmore of near Highland, in whose home the ceremony was performed on Jan. 6, 1904, by the Rev. Mr. A. B. Irwin. Mrs. Jeffers is truly a daughter of Kansas and one of the young women whose beautiful influence is exerted for the establishment of Christian homes and a state of purity and righteousness in our society.

To Mr. and Mrs. Jeffers have been born two children, both boys, Robert Lloyd, on May 2, 1905, and Harold Peyton on Nov. 24, 1910. They are bright and interesting children and an honor to the parents. The eldest of the two is attending school and is getting a fair start toward a good education which Mr. and Mrs. Jeffers intend to give both of the children, believing as they do that education is as essential to successful farming as it is to any other profession or calling.

Stone ax and petrified Indian baby.

The farm on which the Jeffers family resides is in Iowa township, five and one-half miles south of White Cloud and six miles northeast of Highland. It is a fine farm of 160 acres, in a high state of improvement, with good buildings and a neat and substantial residence. By his industry and patience, and the application of practical common sense business ideas to his work, Mr. Jeffers has made his farm pay good dividends and at the same time has kept it up to a high state of improvement.

Mr. Jeffers is one of those men who believe in progressing as they go along. He is unselfish to the extent that he desires to see his neighbor do as well as himself, but he usually makes the neighbor hustle to keep up with him. Efficiency in farm management, coupled with efficiency in farm work, with a little recreation and sane living, will make any farm in Doniphan County pay good dividends, he says.

As a public spirited citizen, Mr. Jeffers has frequently shown himself to be a valuable man to his community by his advocacy of good schools, good roads and many such other things as tend to help make conditions better for the farmers and their children growing up.

Mr. and Mrs. Jeffers and their children are members of the Presbyterian church and Sunday school. The parents are active Christian workers whose splendid example and influence make them among the valued people of their community, and for which they are held in popular esteem by their neighbors and all who are fortunate in knowing them.

The First National Bank of Troy in its many years of square dealing has established itself as one of the foremost banking institutions in Kansas. It has a heavy patronage that has been built up through naught but honest endeavor, intelligent service and liberal treatment of its customers. It makes a specialty of savings accounts, on which it pays the gratifying interest of 4 per cent.

The State Bank of A. Poulet of White Cloud is one of the most popular banks in this section of Kansas. Its customers are a satisfied lot of depositors and they repose full faith and confidence in the policy of the State Bank. Its rates for loans are low and exceedingly liberal as to terms.

The White Cloud Pow-Wow

Great Event in 1859 Arranged for the Tribal Nations by Some of the Fun-Loving Old Timers of Doniphan County—Indians in Full Regalia Narrated Their Exploits on Promise of Getting a Supply of Whiskey, Tobacco and Sugar.

One of the most amusing events in Indian tribal history of the early days in Doniphan County was the pow-wow held in the town of White Cloud in the fall of 1859.

The affair was arranged by a number of noted characters among the early settlers who had planned to induce the Indians to give an exhibition of what such things looked like. There was not going to be any half way dope in this, for the stipulation was made that the braves should give the whole works.

The inducement offered to the Redmen was a quart of red liquor apiece, supplemented with a pound of tobacco and sufficient sugar to take the bad taste from their mouths in case there should be any left. That offering was sufficient bait for the most friendly Indian and a big crowd of bucks and sub-chiefs gathered to enlighten the white brothers on the mysteries of the pow-wow.

The doin's were of a high order and the promise of the promoters of an extra swig of whiskey caused the Indians to outdo themselves in their efforts to obtain additional firewater by showing off before the crowd.

The white men who first proposed the scheme were supposed to be W. H. Froncrook, more generally known as "Forney," and who is now an extensive ranch owner at Fontenelle, Wyo.; Jim Moore, Dana Sayers, Sam Jennings and Jim Ralston. All are dead now except Bill "Forney" Forncrook.

There was a vacant building in White Cloud away down town that had been erected by Sam Lappin and that place was selected as the scene of the pow-wow. The Indians were on hand long before the appointed hour and were under the leadership of Chief To-hee, John Ma-hee, with Jim Whitewater as interpreter. Frank Armstrong acted as master of ceremonies and the way he introduced the Indians to do their stunt aroused the braves to the highest pitch of excitement.

After a series of dancing, drum beating and gourd rattling, accompanied by an Indian war chant, the speech-making began. All of the high moguls present told of their deeds of valor and of their accomplishments in the art of scalping, not forgetting to mention the number of scalps they had appended to their belts.

The understanding was that the chief or buck who could show the greatest number of head trimmings would be awarded a prize of an extra quart of whiskey and for a while it looked like To-hee would capture the prize. He was laden down with scalps, red, black and white. He appeared a sure winner until Ma-hee, who was last on the boards, solemnly arose and began by telling of his battles with the Pawnees and the Sioux.

Chief Ma-hee was not getting very far in the estimation of the crowd and after pointing to the number of scalps in his belt it appeared that he was going to lose out. In a last desperate attempt to capture the extra bottle of booze Ma-hee pointed to a span of scalps he had concealed under his belt. They had grey hair and looked something like the tail of a superannuated horse.

Assuming a tragic but heroic pose, Chief Ma-hee exultingly pointed to the two grey haired scalps and raising his voice, related how he had killed and scalped his own father and mother a few days before in order to win the extra bottle of squirrel whiskey. The crowd appreciated the situation and Ma-hee was exultant when he was awarded the two bottles of liquor as being the best bad Indian in the show.

SQUATTER SOVEREIGNTY

First Association of Newcomers to Kansas Territory Was Formed in Doniphan County When the Settlers Met at Jim Whitehead's, Bellemont, and Banded Together to Force Recognition of Their "Rights"—Law Unto Themselves.

After the organization of Kansas Territory there was a mad rush of people to settle on the choicest land in the eastern portion of that great stretch of country.

New comers were known as squatters and they were a law unto themselves. Their "rights," as they were proud to call the privileges allowed by the federal government, were almost universal, and they set up claims to practically everything in sight.

There was no established local law by which to regulate conditions of settlement and the squatters took everything they wanted and sometimes "hollered" for more. Once a squatter got his feet firmly planted on a piece of nice looking land, its area did not seem to make any difference to him. He usually took it all, and laid claim to more beside.

Sometimes new arrivals would dispute the wholesale claims of the first squatters and then there was sure to be trouble. It was a case of get it all or none, with the men who landed on the ground first, and there were no means too violent to scare off the new comers. Their squatter ideas of right were crude, but these were invariably enforced by having recourse to might.

Hundreds of the early squatters were men of uncouth personality, but there were many sensible and intelligent among them who used reason in both their methods and their conduct of life. Sometimes the rougher element of the squatters would have resort to the most extreme measures in enforcing their imaginary "rights," but the more rational usually prevailed in their definitions of right and wrong.

When the squatters of Burr Oak Township got fairly well established, they came to the conclusion that it was about time to organize a little government of their own, so as to best protect each other's rights and prescribe rules for the existence of all others who might come to the territory. They were earnest in their sentiments and did not propose "outside" interference.

It was in order to unequivocally proclaim the proposed code for the government of the territory that a meeting of the Burr Oak Township settlers was held at Whitehead (afterward Bellemont), in 1854, when a "Squatter Sovereign Association" was formed. Every one of the participants were from Missouri, and a number of them were never permanent residents of Kansas. They were nothing more nor less than a gang of floaters that crossed the river for the purpose of attending the meeting and helping make the laws for their friends to govern by.

The meeting resolved itself into a primitive legislative body, and with the greatest deliberation proceeded to declare the future status of Kansas and to proscribe men who should presume to either hold or give utterance to certain views which were deemed to be objectionable to their own predilections. There were no half way matters tolerated in the discussions and, in fact, none were attempted, as the few of the more timid Missouri characters quitted the gathering before there was an opportunity to put them on the grill.

The list of names of the men who attended comprised some of those who later must have cause to blush with shame when they looked backward at the rampant spirit of slavery which was so brazenly displayed there. Among those who were present were: A. M. Mitcheli of St. Joseph, J. R. Whitehead, John H. Whitehead H. Smallwood, J. B. O'Toole, Sam Montgomery, J. W. Smith, Jr., Benjamin Harding, J. I. Keaton, Thomas W. Waterson, Cary B. Whitehead, Anderson Cox, Joseph Siceliff, W. Broadus Thompson, Benjamin S. Whorton and J. R. Custine. The records of that meeting were kept in regular order, and later turned over to the State Historical Society. Dr. W. W. Carter of Wathena kept the secretary's book in his possession for several years, having found them in an old building which had been deserted. No doubt they would make interesting reading to the present generation, whose ancestors helped swell the membership of that remarkable body.

The photograph above was taken Jan. 3, 1914, at the funeral of Mrs. Washburn, a full-blooded Iowa Indian, on the state line between Kansas and Nebraska, just south of Falls City, Neb. Her death leaves but one living full-blooded member of the tribe that roamed these hills in days gone by. Years ago Kansas was infested with countless tribes of vicious and hostile Indians, who resented bitterly the coming of white settlers; but through terrible experiences, in which scores of whites were massacred and many braves lost their lives, the red men were subdued and taught that their pale-faced brothers meant them no harm. Mrs. Washburn belonged to a tribe that was early conquered, and friendly with settlers.

After resolving in emphatic terms in what way claims should be taken and pledging themselves to protect to the last ditch one another in their rights, they proceeded to recognize slavery as already existing in the territory. It was further recommended to all slave holders that they could introduce their property into the territory without delay, and giving notice to all abolitionists that they would be afforded no protection as settlers in Kansas territory.

All the men who attended that "law-making affair" have long since been gathered to their forefathers. It is significant to the progress of the world along humanitarian lines, even in those early days, that in less than ten years after they recognized slavery as already existing in Kansas territory the infamous institution had ceased to exist, even in the United States. Some of those men must have suffered their full share of remorse in after years, to remember that their names were attached to a paper to afford protection to no abolitionist.

LIGHTS IN WHITE CLOUD

Municipal System One of Finest Small City Plants in the Country.

One of the finest municipal lighting plants of any small city in the country is at White Cloud. Much of the credit for its successful operation is due to W. H. Stewart, the conscientious and trustworthy electrician who has charge and who was employed by the city before the construction work was started, and has been retained ever since. The total cost of the plant as it stands today has been about $8,000. It was built by the Alamo Engine and Supply Company of Omaha, Neb.

The history of the plant is a tribute to the progressive citizens of White Cloud. The movement for the plant was started in the early part of 1911, although it was not until more than a year later that any definite action was taken. On August 6, 1912, the city council ordered a special election, submitting the question of a plant to the qualified voters. It carried by the following vote: For, 97; Against, 55. There were 156 votes cast, three of which were spoiled and one was a blank. Contrary to the expectations of the boosters for the improvement, some opposition developed a few days before the election, and this accounts for the negative votes.

At a meeting of the council held in the following September, on the 16th, it was voted to issue $5,000 in bonds to bear 4½ per cent interest, the bonds to be issued in $500 denominations of 20 years duration, with the privilege of paying one or all bonds at any interest-paying date. The issue was given the approval of the Fiscal Agency at Topeka, but it was refused by the State School Fund Commission, because of the rate of interest. It was alleged this was too low. The entire issue, however, was sold to the citizens of White Cloud at par value and has never depreciated.

On the 14th day of October, after the preliminaries had been arranged, C. I. Stocking, a prominent architect and construction engineer, was employed to draft the plans and specifications of the proposed plant. When these were completed, bids were advertised for, and the first were received Jan. 16, 1913. The contract was awarded to the Alamo Company, the price being $4,872.10 for the system complete, this not to include the cost of the building or storage battery. There were seven bidders and the contract was awarded at $1,000 less than the next lowest estimate. The cement block building used as the power house was erected by day labor and special contracts at a cost of about $800 and the complete plant was ready and a final settlement effected with the contractors on July 28, 1913.

The city has twenty-seven street lights and approximately two miles of pole line. There are seventy current consumers all connected. On Aug. 26, 1913, the city council voted to purchase the storage battery on the terms of the original contract with the Alamo Company. This was done in the early part of January, 1914, and since that time the patrons have enjoyed continuous service day and night. The cost of the building and the storage battery have been paid out of the city's general fund. Two of the light bonds have been paid and the city now finds it necessary to add another engine and generator to take care of the remarkable growth of the patronage.

The lighting project was inaugurated and carried to a successful completion only through the tireless efforts of Dr. J. H. McGauhey, the mayor and the city council, composed of M. Ryan, John R. Taylor, R. E. Mauck, Gilbert Bowen and Charles Sesna. These men and E. L. Marker, the city clerk, worked almost day and night to interest other citizens in the improvement. To Mr. Stewart, the electrician, much of the credit of the success of the plant has already been given. He has charge of all matters pertaining to it. All electrical matters are referred to him before the council takes any action. It is believed the plant will have to be enlarged soon to accommodate the greatly increased patronage.

White Cloud's Electric Light Plant

DR. WILLIE T. OWEN

Popular Young Dentist of White Cloud—His Office Filled Daily With Patrons.

Doniphan County has a number of successful young dentists, but none is more deserving of or has had more of the people's patronage than Dr. Willie T. Owen, D. D. S., of White Cloud. His offices are filled daily with men and women from the surrounding country, who are compelled to await their turn. All of this patronage is due not only to Dr. Owen's expert ability, but also to the large number of friends and acquaintances he has made over the country.

Willie T. Owen was born in Roanoke, Texas, Oct. 12, 1880. When he was eleven years of age his parents moved to Oklahoma and in the public schools of that state he received his early educational training. When sixteen he entered the Oklahoma State Normal School at Edmond, Okla., and upon his graduation received a life certificate as a public school teacher. For the next ten years he taught very successfully in the public schools of that state and saved his money for his course in dentistry which he had mapped out.

On Sept. 5, 1906, he was married to Miss Minnie Huffman, also a teacher, of Omega, Okla., who was recognized as a promising educator in the state. They had been friends for a few years, meeting when the future young dentist was fulfilling his position as an instructor. To their union, one child, a girl, has been born. She is now four years old. In October of 1911, Dr. Owen matriculated in the Western Dental College of Kansas City, Mo., one of the best institutions of its kind in the United States. He graduated in May, 1914, with the highest honors in his class and on May 25 of that year located in White Cloud, where he has been ever since. Dr. Owen is not only an efficient dentist, but he is painstaking, and to this quality can be attributed a large part of his deserved success. He is not only popular in his new home, but has the respect and esteem of the entire community, and deserves his large practice.

30 YEARS STATION AGENT

James K. McCahan Went to White Cloud as Station Agent of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad When It Came to Town in 1885 and Has Been on the Job Ever Since.

One of the present-day landmarks in White Cloud is James K. McCahan, who came there with the "Q" road, and is there at the present time.

When the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad was built into White Cloud during the year 1885, Mr. McCahan was appointed as the first station agent. He evidently liked the place, for he has never evinced any desire to move away.

Mr. McCahan is married and has two children, a boy and a girl. He has had occasion to observe many changes in the residential and industrial conditions of White Cloud during his thirty years' residence there and is firmly convinced that the town is better now from a business standpoint than ever before in its history.

The genial station agent entertains great hopes for the future prosperity of White Cloud on account of the fact that fruit culture is certain to be developed along the bluffs and in other adaptable lands around the town. He has had ample opportunity to size up the fruit situation in other parts of Doniphan County and is not backward in stating that with the right methods of culture, both small and large fruits can be raised to great financial advantage in White Cloud.

Terence Harkins Killed By Indians

In the spring of 1867, Terence Harkins of White Cloud, took his family and went to Wyoming to work for the Union Pacific Railroad, on the construction of viaducts and culverts. On Thursday, Sept. 17, 1868, he was working about 125 miles east of Laramie, Wyo., on the culverts, when he went to the quarry, about one and a half miles distant, to get some material. When about half way to his destination he was attacked by eight Indians and killed with an arrow. His fellow workmen heard the yells of the redmen and rushed to the scene, arriving too late to save his life, but in time to prevent the Indians from scalping him. The body was taken to St. Joseph by the widow, and thence to White Cloud, where it was buried. Mrs. Harkins preserved the arrow which caused her husband's sudden death, until her own demise.

Bellevue School House

Building Modern in Every Respect—Represents Best Ideas of Prosperous and Intelligent Community—"Is a Model School," Says Miss Whitney, County Superintendent—Cost $3,300.

The Bellvue school house, District 14, Doniphan County, is literally and in an educational sense, one of the landmarks of the community. Built at a cost of $3,300, in the spring and summer of 1913, it represents the idea of a prosperous and intelligent commuity, desirous of giving the coming generation educational advantages denied its pioneers.

The building is modern in every respect, in fact "a model school," as Miss Edna S. Whitney, county superintendent says. She also urges the members of other boards in Doniphan County who contemplate building new school houses to visit the school.

The school is thirty-eight by forty feet, and the seats are so arranged that the pupils face the east, the ideal lighting arrangement. When artificial light is needed on dark days or for evening entertainments, acetylene gas is used.

One of the features of the school is the library room, well supplied with the best of books. Incidentally the wash rooms and cloak rooms are among the conveniences of this up-to-date country school. The slate blackboard, a decided improvement over the wooden boards of the old time school, may also be noted.

The present attendance is more than fifty, but more pupils can be accommodated.

The teacher for the coming school year is Charles Ukena, who is one of the leading young men of the community. Wm. Bingman and Mart Weidensaul were among those who did the carpenter work on the building. In short the school, with its equipment, is a credit to any community. It indicates both advanced ideas and prosperity; and incidentally the land of the farmers who have contributed to its support is worth from $175 to $250 an acre, made so by patient toil as well as natural advantages of location and climate.

One of the prominent farmers and cattlemen of the county, who is among the leading directors, is E. L. M. Benfer. He is the father of an even dozen children and thus his natural interest along educational lines is given a personal impulse which is shown in his advocating all things for the uplift of his neighborhood. Others who are the leaders of the district are J. L. Acker, J. L. McCauley, and Louis Hiskey. Their efforts have done much to make the vicinity a good place in which to live.

Through these men, no other community in Doniphan County without stores or postoffice is so well advertised as is Bellvue neighborhood. It is close to the Iowa township line and three miles north of Leona. The Evangelical church is situated in Wolf River township and the United Brethren church and school house is across the line in Iowa township.

The religious side of the people is represented by the United Brethren and German Evangelical churches.

However, another well known community, minus stores and postoffice is "Beanville," made famous by its correspondent, William H. Bryan. His notes appear regularly in the Troy Chief and are as popular as cider in apple picking time. By the way, he is no relative of William Jennings Bryan. William H. Bryan is a staunch Republican.

James H. Acker, Prosperous Farmer

Came to Doniphan County in 1869—Worked Through Early Day Hardships to Prosperity—On School Board Twenty Years.

Whenever a teacher is applying for district school No. 14 in Iowa township, he or she is invariably referred to James H. Acker, who has been on the school board of that district for more than twenty years. He lives just a quarter of a mile of Bellevue school, which is one of the finest country schools in Doniphan County. Mr. Acker was largely instrumental in securing the construction of this building, as he has always taken an active interest in education. Perhaps his own lack of schooling when a boy, has made him determined that the children of the neighborhood, as well as those of his family, should have the best educational advantages possible.

This active work in school affairs he carries on in addition to considerable farming interests. He farms 160 acres where he lives, three miles north of Leona on the south line of Iowa township on the southeast one-fourth of Section 31, Range 19, and also owns 240 acres of farm land two and one-half miles west of Highland. When he first came to Doniphan County this land averaged about $5 an acre, but is now worth $200 an acre. The land values have increased with the growth of the state and also through constant care of farmers like Mr. Acker, who have brought their acres to give abundant yields.

Mr. Acker is another one of the "Buck Eye" state people who have helped make Doniphan County the banner county in the state of their adoption. He was born in Seneca County, Ohio, on a cold winter day, Jan. 9, 1860, when the shadows of the Civil War were gathering. His early boyhood was spent amid war times, when nearly all the gossip of visitors in the family circle related to battles and rumors of battles and the ever threatened invasion of the rebels.

The newspapers of those times, the small papers which were far and few between, contained more than anything else, accounts of battles, lists of dead and wounded, or that list which caused more mental agony than the news of dead or wounded—the "among the missing" list. Likely Mr. Acker's earliest recollections are of seeing neighbors rush into their home to try to glean some message or hope of comfort from a stray bit of war information that may have reached the Acker household.

After the war was over and the question of slavery was forever settled, and there was no danger of slavery in Kansas, this state appealed strongly to the Ackers. Reports of broad, untouched fields came to them and like many other Ohio people, they began to regard the new state as a place which had a great future. On the other hand, likely some of their neighbors tried to dissuade them from this purpose. "Kansas will never amount to anything." They said, "Kansas should have never been surveyed. All that can grow on it are buffalos, prairie dogs and Indians." "You can't raise nothing in Kansas but a fuss," was another saying in those days.

Likely, too, grewsome tales of charred remains of early settlers and smoking wrecks of cabins reached the Acker family, but the more optimistic spirit prevailed. Kansas to them was a state of undeveloped opportunities. Some call the instinct to migrate West the foundation for the evolution of mankind through change of environment. Those who have this instinct strong enough to obey its call are usually the picked people of their communities. The Ackers were the leaders of the Ohio township even as they and their son became among the most influential people of the Kansas community.

Thus James Acker's parents, Alvin and Sarah Acker, substantial Ohio people, came to Doniphan County. It was a typical March day, March 9, 1869, when the Ackers arrived in Doniphan County. The prospect was not alluring and the March Kansas wind blew clouds of dust in their eyes as they looked over the land of their future home. The first impressions of Doniphan County to the Acker boy, who was then only nine years old, was likely of a row of houses in a small town, rough frame business buildings with rectangular fronts extending over the gables, and sagging porches supported by lean shaky pillars, where rough looking men and Indians loafed or traded.

His first view of Kansas farm operations was likely that of oxen pulling the clumsy plows of the time. Over rough roads against the March winds the family rode until they finally selected a farm of their own. The land was then worth about $5 an acre, with little or no improvements on it. Crops were yet in the experimental stage, for no one was positive as to what grain was best adapted to a most changeable climate and somewhat raw and unknown soil.

In such an environment young Acker grew up, learning a little each day of the hardest and most practical things of life, and in a few months of the year dangling his legs from the rough slab benches of the country school. Here he made the most of the limited opportunities and doubtless here, while longing for better advantages, he made up his mind that his posterity should have a much better chance than he. Probably he felt the indifference of older people toward education and realized that the ever shifting school board members did not pay as much attention to the needs of their district as they should. Quite likely he then made up his mind that should be come into contact with the school affairs he would devote much of his spare time to them.

Meanwhile he realized the joy and hardships of farm life in the early days of Kansas. As to so many others, hard times came to the Acker family when the grasshoppers settled down on the crops and then passed on, leaving all bare like the passing of a hostile army.

In the weeks that followed Mr. Acker can recall the worn, discouraged faces of the farmers as they attended church and prayed for better times—or went to the store for supplies and begged for a little more credit until times should grow better. Those who have passed through the experiences of those early days and retained anything of cheer and optimism, and were not embittered by the scourge, are now among the pillars of their neighborhoods, even as Mr. Acker.

This may be also said of those who were cramped in their vision by the limited light which the teachers, poorly educated themselves, could give them, but longed for a broader view of life and of the intellectual world. The sons of the pioneers and early settlers will recall those teachers and schools—the smelly one-roomed shacks, with rough pine blackboards and cracked plastering on the walls, and the few maps and less conveniences. Likely, too, will come back the memories of the teacher rubbing half frozen hands while the big boys brought in wood to start the fire in the sheet iron stove. In a more pleasant memory will be the social affairs, the spelling matches, when different classes and different districts "spelled each other down," and then of course the box social where the young man would bid an extravagant sum, seventy-five cents sometimes, to get a box on which a secret mark or trimming was evidence that his best girl owned the box and would eat supper with the winner.

These same social functions are carried on in the new Bellevue schools, for human nature has not changed since Mother Eve sent her Cain and Abel to school and warned Cain not to bully his little brother. However, times and school houses have, and also school boards.

Mr. Acker is a representative of the modern school board member. He has been a leading director in the affairs of District No. 14 for more than twenty years and always on the alert in the interests of education. The troubles of the little school marms with the pupils and their parents have been his troubles. He knows what it is to have a parent complain that the teacher was making Johnny study too hard or that the school marm "wasn't learning the kids nothing," and to explain why he thought it best not to "git rid of a teacher" whom some though did not come up to the requirements.

This is not to mention the settling of school supplies and looking up those who apply for the school, but Mr. Acker for nearly a quarter of a century has taken the best of care of all of these details.

Residence, J. H. Acker, southwest corner Iowa township, near Bellevue school

Meanwhile he has attended to the regular work on his extensive holdings which by good judgment and economy he has acquired.

Perhaps his interest in education is augmented by Mrs. Acker, who is one of the most up-to-date women of her neighborhood. She, like her husband, was born in Seneca County, Ohio, and came to Doniphan County at an early day with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Elden T. and Kate Conser. They settled on a farm in Iowa township and in this home Mr. Acker and Miss Conser were married, March 17, 1881. They became parents of six children. Ester M. Acker was born March 17, 1891, and is now Mrs. Herman H. Ukena of Iowa township; Blanch E., July 11, 1893; Mary M., Oct. 22, 1895; Edwin R., June 30, 1889; Forest L., June 9, 1902, and the youngest, William D., was born July 5, 1906.

The children are all exceptionally bright and when in school have made good records. They will reflect much credit on their parents when their life's history is told. All are good citizens and are among the best young people of their communities.

Mr. and Mrs. Acker are leaders in the affairs of their neighborhood as well as being active in school and church work. Incidentally the Acker farm is just a quarter of a mile from two churches, the United Brethren and the Evangelical.

Lewis A. Hiskey

A Native Son of Kansas Who Has Achieved Success as a Progressive Farmer and a Grower and Feeder of Live Stock in Prosperous Doniphan County.

As a representative farmer and successful grower and feeder of livestock, Lewis A. Hiskey, whose highly improved and attractive home farm is located three and one-half miles north of Leona, has proved his right to title as valued citizen and a boon to mankind. For, who more than the man who at all times and in all seasons is to be found standing up for Kansas and for those things which make for the public welfare, or whose unceasing energy is ever bent on the task of producing those things which are necessary to sustain life, is to be considered in the light of a benefactor to the human family! Moreover, it is worth while to say that Mr. Hiskey is public-spirited, progressive in all things that count, a stickler for the square deal of the Kansas brand, a man honored in his own community, enjoying the confidence of his fellow men. Such men—everyday heroes, if you please—are the kind who have brought Kansas up from a desert plain to the great commonwealth which today occupies a position in the eyes of the world as the greatest producing state of food stuffs and animals in the Union; and it is such men the writers of history and achievement delight most to honor.

Accident and place of birth do not necessarily determine all things, but we would count that man fortunate who was born in Kansas at a time when the state was in its youth, or when it was just entering on its wonderful period of development after being cradled through infancy during the long and sanguinary conflict, otherwise the Civil War. Lewis A. Hiskey, the subject of this sketch, was just such a fortunate son of Kansas. He was born on his father's farm in the neighboring county of Brown on Feb. 13, 1868. His parents were Solomon and Sarah E. Hiskey. They were of the plain, old-fashioned kind of folks who settled in northeastern Kansas and started in to develop its soil and to people it with the right kind of men and women needed to establish a high order of civilization and citizenship.

Lewis A. Hiskey was only two years old when his parents moved from Brown County to Doniphan County—and it was a fortunate move, fortunate for Doniphan County, for from that day in 1870 down to the date of this writing, Doniphan County has been the home of the then two-year-old. From his early boyhood Lewis loved the soil and he loved farm animals and poultry. Like all other boys who ever amounted to anything, he had boyhood ambitions, built castles in the air, but he never really got away from the one central idea that his was to be the life of a farmer and stockman. Every step forward was taken with an eye single to his future in this honorable avocation. He attended the public schools, and excellent public schools there were in Doniphan County in those days, for they provided for the youth of the county the knowledge which was essential to equip boys and girls for intelligent, industrious, patriotic citizenship. Lewis read all of the good books he could get his hands on, and but few of the bad ones. He read the newspapers and the magazines. But most of all he read the farm publications, which told what other farmers were doing and how they were doing them. Much reading left much that was useful stored up in his brain. It broadened him.

Lewis was a handy boy on the farm. He could do almost everything about the place, and everything he undertook to do he did well. He studied farm problems on his own account. He observed what his neighbors were doing, and he tried to do better than they. None of the other boys in the neighborhood would get ahead of him, insofar as achieving things was concerned. All of which combined in the making of the boy a thoroughly practical up-to-date business farmer.

Lewis A. Hiskey, now in his forty-eighth year, may properly be regarded as an all-round farmer and stock grower and feeder, who has followed that business all of his life. He is the owner of 420 acres of as fine farming and stock growing lands as will be seen anywhere west of the Missouri, or east of it for that matter. His home farm of 160 acres, three and one-half miles north of Leona, is well improved and is kept in a high state of productiveness; while his other farm, which is in Iowa township, also is considered as one of the very best in that locality.

Experience has taught Mr. Hiskey that the soil of Doniphan County will produce about everything a farmer ought to grow in the temperate zone. His fields of wheat, corn, oats, hay, as well as his other field and garden crops, and his fruits, yield abundantly, thus attesting the soundness of his judgment; and with his advanced methods of farming, with business methods of management and marketing his products, he certainly is one of our successful agriculturalists. His knowledge of livestock, cattle and hogs, and his methods of handling them have brought him substantial returns, even though many persons will tell that land in this section is getting too high priced for profitable cattle growing. Mr. Hiskey believes in good stock, and by growing his own feed and feeding scientifically, he is enabled to put his cattle, and hogs as well, into prime condition and market them at a good profit. His success as a feeder of cattle is recognized, and his offerings on the market find eager buyers at good prices.

And all of this success comes not so much from hard work as from intelligent application of business methods to farming and stock raising and feeding, for in no sense is Mr. Hiskey a plodder. The successful man on the farm is he who, when he prepares his field and plants the seed, knows to a reasonable degree of certainty what the yield will be under proper cultivation, as by the same rule he knows to a reasonable certainty how many pounds this or that calf will weigh at a certain age and under his methods of care and feeding. It is the business farmer in Kansas, like Mr. Hiskey, who is putting the state on the map as a banner agricultural and livestock state.

Mr. Hiskey's love for the farm is not exceeded by his love for his home, which is attractive and inviting. He was married Oct. 18, 1894, to Miss Nellie May Rockwood of Oklahoma City, Okla. She was born in Buchanan County, Missouri. They are the parents of two children, Elmer E., born Feb. 21, 1900, and Edith Pearl, born May 20, 1912. The family is one that occupies an honored position in the social life of this section of Kansas. Mr. Hiskey, it should be said, is not entirely engrossed with the cares of his farming. He is a great favor of music, and in fact is himself a musician of recognized ability and prominence, finding in music a delightful pastime for himself, as well as a joy to his family and friends. The son Elmer, now a boy of fifteen, is a bright youth who bids fair to become a successful farmer in due time.

Aside from this happy household, Lewis A. Hiskey has three sisters and one brother—children of Solomon and Sarah E. Hiskey—now living. They are: Mrs. Alice Goforth, of Wathena, Kan.; Mrs. Annie Streator, of Highland, Kan.; Mrs. Laura Close, of Highland, Kan.; and Freddie Hiskey, of Robinson, Kan. These representatives of the Hiskey family are honored members of their respective communities and are all reasonably well-to-do. Their combined wealth, at this time, is estimated conservatively at $350,000.

GEORGE W. SCHEER

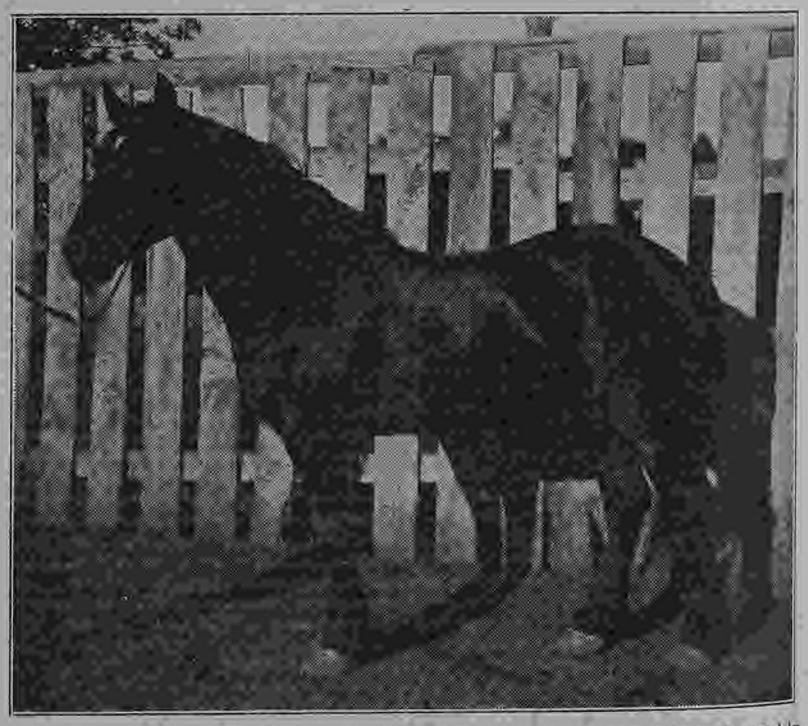
Young Farmer Is Believer in Good Roads and Drags Without Pay From the County.

George W. Scheer, one of the youngest farmers in Doniphan County, is a thorough believer in good roads, and those in the vicinity where he lives, three miles southwest of White Cloud, are pretty generally in fine shape, for Mr. Scheer drags his own thoroughfares and asks no compensation from the county. There is only one thing further to be said in connection with this matter and that is to voice the wish that there will some day be more like him in the community.



The Thoroughbred Percheron Stallion of George W. Scheer in Iowa township.

George W. Scheer is a native of Missouri. He was born in Lincoln County, Aug. 31, 1881, and when a baby one year old, came to Doniphan County with his parents, who settled on the farm he now occupies and owns. He received his early education in the district schools and then attended at White Cloud. After leaving school he returned to the farm with his father and mother, being fortunate in having their kindly advice and suggestion during his early experiences. His father was one of the best farmers in that section of the country.

On July 15, 1904, he was married to Miss Effie McCall, of Brown County, at the home of her parents, and to this union two girls were born: Evelyn Georgie, nine years old, and Mabel Lucille, age five. After their honeymoon the couple went to the farm and began their life there, Mr. Scheer making an extensive study of all branches of agriculture and specializing in stock raising. He is widely known as a breeder of thoroughbred Percheron horses, and has two of the finest stallions in Kansas. Mr. Scheer's farm comprises 200 acres, and in addition to this he has found it necessary to rent 70 more acres to accommodate his extensive interests. He is a public-spirited young man, who in the years to come, will be one of the wealthiest farmers in Doniphan County and vicinity. He is a fine type of the progressive young agriculturist. Mrs. Scheer is a devoted wife, a kind and indulgent mother, and a master of the culinary art.

Indian Earth Lodge

Situated in Iowa Township on Flavel Nuzum's Land—A Curiosity Worth Going Miles to See—Unique in Its Appearance.

These old saucer shaped depressions on the bluffs along the Missouri river, in northeastern Kansas, were thought to be buffalo wallows until very recently.

The Iowa Indians call them "Pawnee forts." This one is situated on a bluff on the Flavel Nuzum farm east of Mill creek, where it enters into the Missouri river between White Cloud and Iowa Point. The Pawnees were the last tribe to arrive in Doniphan County.

The Arikara and tribes of the Padouca were here before the arrival of the others. Between Wolf river and the Kansas and Nebraska line are three distinct types of earthlodge ruins, also stone graves and mounds. As no stone graves have been found in Nebraska it is evident that the people who made the stone cist type of graves became extinct or were driven away from this locality in a hurried manner. The earthenware buried in the mounds in this region is the same in texture, decoration and temper as the historic Arikara ware from the Dakotas. And the same as that from the Brower Harahey and Qivira of east central Kansas. The stone and flint Artifacts of this region are the same type as those described by Mr. Brower as Harahey specimens.

The Bureau of American Cethnology believe the Harahey people who visited Coronado while in Quivira were Pawnees. The Bureau also believes the Haraheys were Caddoan stock. The early French and others called them Pani and Padouca. Tribes of this part of the Caddoan family made the stone cist graves and lived in the earth lodges of Doniphan County. They were a people of very low foreheads and were of the same family as the "Nebraska Laessman." Crania of these people examined by Dr. Hrdlicka, chief anthropologist of the National Museum, Smithsonian Institution, Washington, D. C., were decided by the doctor to approach the Neuderthral skull of western Europe very strikingly.

The doctor, upon examining two skulls from near Trenton, New Jersey, classified them as skulls of emigrants from western Europe. The earliest inhabitants we know anything about were these ground-house, mound-building and stone grave making tribes who were the long sought and "Mythical White Welsh" Indians.

The Chieftain Tatarrax of Harahey was probably a Celtic Indian, who with two hundred friends visited Quivira while Coronado was there in 1541. As this old Pawnee fort or lodge ruin was very large, being at present about 100 feet in diameter and four feet deep, and as there was a stone cist grave not far from this lodge, containing the calcined bones of two persons, would it be unreasonable to believe the large lodge was the dwelling of Tatarrax, and the cist stone grave the last resting place of him and the Turk?

The Kanza, Otoes and Iowas belong to the great Siowan family of Indians. The Kanza or Escansaques came to Donphan County after 1601.

The Iowas and Otoes came about 1833. The Sacs and Foxes came to Kansas after 1837, and belong to the Algonquian family.

The River, Yesterday and Today

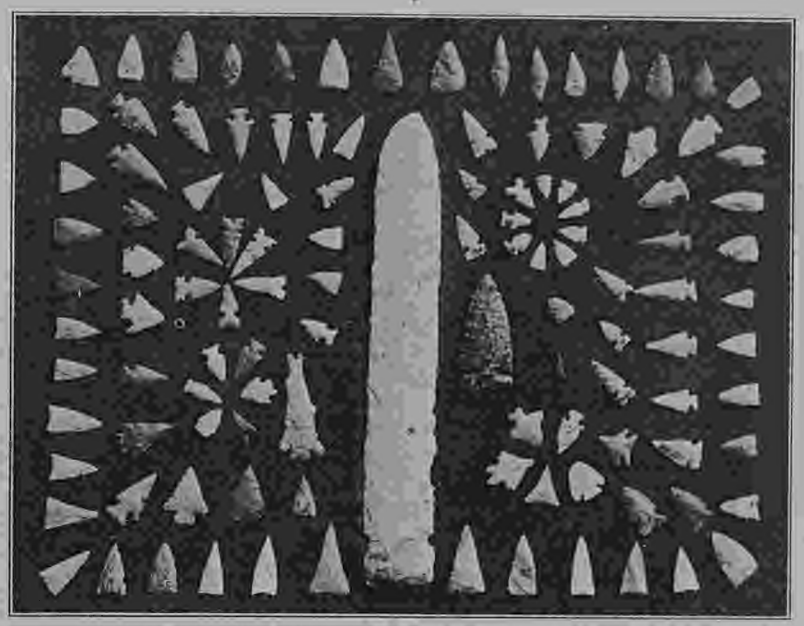
By Mrs. Fred (Lida) Marsey.

In fancy I gaze at the river,
With its sandbars, its shallows, and turns,
Its big fish, its turtles, and willow,
And its banks in spring covered with ferns;
In the autumn all yellow and crimson
With sumach, while the wild ivy vines,
(With the goldenrod and sunflower bending over)
Round the gray rocks so gracefully twine;
I see its length, breadth, winding, deepness,
The color and the hue of its wine.
Its cottonwoods growing so stately,
And many a tall lonely pine.
In its shallows it concealeth its dangers,
Though noiseless and still do they rest—
Its waters floweth so calmly,
To conceal the deceit of its breast.
The turtles creep slow and sedately,
Adown the river's vast crook,
And while they are journeying onward,
Pause oft, for a long backard look.
Ah, even the snail's a most welcome guest,
Though he moves so slow o'er the sands,
For departing, he leaves his little white house
To be picked up by "The little brown hands."
The wild blooming grapevine makes a canopy sweet,
As past them the breezes go by,
Sending the clouds of rich perfume, far over the waves,
Ere they float away back to the sky.

As in fancy, we follow its windings,
We pass by many a town,
But this one as a gem set in emerald,



A Part of Mark E. Zimmerman's Collection of Indian Relics.

Is the fairest of any yet found;
With high hills to the north, south and westward,
(Where the blooming fruit trees reach the sky)
In the vale, the old store, brown church and school house,
And the point where the red man doth lie—
While to the eastward the beautiful river,
Flows slowly and silently by,
Its tumbled down stable and shanty,
And many a romantic pig sty.
Here the beautiful maidens trip gayly
With faces as bright as the day,
With never a thought of a shadow
That a stormcloud might cast over some day;
The lads just as gay, too, and winsome,
And as the mountain deer most as fleet—
Together respond to the summons
When the bell brings them in from the street.
There they're taught that they, too, like the river,
Should select a pathway sublime;
That the reflection they cast on its landscape,
May fade not, through the ages of time.

From the joyboats of those who sail onward,
Come back laughter and song on the breeze,
The blue bird makes an echoing warble,
As he flits to and fro 'mong the trees;
They go with the river to somewhere,
We know not in a day where they be,
But for the last roll call, together,
They'll line up on Eternity's sea.

* * * * * *

'Tis true, if gathering its daisies and ferns is delight,
When fresh with the morning dew—
But if you've warmed by the fire of its driftwood for years,
It would seem more like this way to you;
For in fancy I strolled down to the river
Near as I could, for the drift and soft clay—
The river's always cold, raging and mild,
When the snows from the North fade away—
'Tis just at this time that I strolled back again—
It has just been so raging and wild,
Scattering rubbish and decay o'er its once mossy banks,
And the carcass, and an occasional "somebody's child,"
To moulder away, by the duft weed, held fast—
His pale face in the sun's beaming ray,
His mother waiting his coming at home
And in fancy I see—kneel to pray;
The doves' mournful coo—the frogs' guzzly croak,
Chill your soul with so ghastly a fear—
The acres of land and tall trees going in,
Are the only sounds that you hear—
Save the river's own rumbling roar,
Which seems trying a story to tell,
No sound now of blue bird or joyboat we hear,
'Tis more like a funeral knell.

The tears fill my eyes when I think, when a child,
Mother led me oft to the river before
To my grandmother's bent, and only childhood so blessed
Knows what grandmother's house holds in store.
And the jolly old ferryman, who with his little canoe,
While he would in safety carry us o'er—
Would tell all about what our town used to be—
And of the scenes of the old Civil war.

The tears, did I say? I'd forgotten the change
That custom has made through the years—
Tears—nay; I am brave—too brave to cry,
'Tis only the weak who shed tears.
But my grandmother's gone, the kind ferryman's gone,
And there's no one to lead me today.
The sailboats are gone, the strong oars too, are gone,
They lie 'neath the dust in decay.
Some day, though, I'll start to my grandmother's house
That is built in "The Beautiful Land."
I've "The River" to cross, but I'll need naught beside,
If He, who can walk on the waves —holds my hand.

IOWA POINT

Iowa Point is located on Sections 25 and 36, Town 1, Range 19, in Iowa Township. Was laid off in the spring of 1855 by H. W. Forman, J. H. Forman and John S. Pemberton. Original townsite consisted of 160 acres.

On Monday morning, Feb. 5, 1872, James Toner, one of the pioneers of Troy, died from the effects of morphine. He had been suffering from neuralgia and had taken a few doses of morphine to quiet the nerves and give him rest. It is supposed that while the family were absent from the room, he had arisen and in a partial stupor from the morphine, took a double dose, and from its effects he died Monday morning, notwithstanding the efforts of his friends to preserve his life.

J. G. Kelsey and Mr. Parker of Brown County, bought the Doniphan County Dispatch May 6, 1861, and moved same to Hiawatha.

Great Collection of Indian Relics

Work of George J. Remsburg Extended Over Quarter of a Century and Comprised Thousands of Unique Specimens of Great Historical Value—Many Were Unearthed in Doniphan County and Mostly the Entire Collection Is Now Owned By Mark E. Zimmerman, of Near White Cloud.

(By Mark E. Zimmerman.)

Eminent archaeologists and antiquarians of national renown are unanimous in agreeing that Doniphan County and the northeastern portion of Kansas has produced more valuable ancient and modern relics than any other section of the state or the country.

These relics are of the utmost historical value and the collection of them represents over a quarter of a century of the most diligent and painstaking labor on the part of that noted antiquarian, George J. Remsburg. The great work accomplished by him will prove a boon to posterity to the same extent that it has given present-day historians and curators invaluable material with which to compile much historical data for the information of the people of the present time.

The work performed by Mr. Remsburg embraced every possible avenue of exploration, not only in Doniphan County, but throughout all the northwestern area of Kansas. Hundreds of ancient objects replete with immense historical interest were unearthed among the sites of old Indian villages and deep down in the prehistoric mounds along the western bank of the Missouri River. Possession of these relics of departed ages enables ethnologists to pry into the habits and customs of peoples long since extinct and of what is left of the great race of American Indians now fast approaching disintegration.

It is greatly to be regretted that the delicate state of Mr. Remsburg's health required him to abandon the work of a generation when he was compelled to go to California to recuperate a few years ago. To continue this great work in the interest of human enlightenment was one of the supreme objects of Mr. Remsburg's life, and it is gratifying to know that his health has so far been restored as to permit him to a certain extent to carry on this noble ambition in the future.

Before leaving for the Pacific Coast Mr. Remsburg was obliged to dispose of his famous collection of Indian relics and archaeological specimens, and the writer feels gratified to have had an opportunity to purchase an interesting part of the collection. A good part of the Kickapoo Indian relics was purchased by the McLean Historical Society of Illinois, which is making a special study of and preserving ethnological and historical material of the Kickapoos before their removal to Kansas in 1833.

The material pertaining to the Kickapoos was exceedingly valuable. It was personally collected by Mr. Remsburg, while thoroughly exploring their old village site at the present townsite of Kickapoo, a short distance from Fort Leavenworth. During the period in which he was conducting his explorations Mr. Remsburg visited the Indians on their reservation in Brown County on several occasions and held frequent discussions with the head men of the tribe regarding their knowledge of the historical significance of the many objects unearthed on the site of the old village.

Notwithstanding the fact that the splitting up of Mr. Remsburg's original collection was regarded at the time as a distinct loss to the state and people of Kansas, the fact that much of the collection was retained in Doniphan County may help dispel any misgivings about the transaction. As that portion of the collection which left the state is to be used and preserved for educational purposes, the loss to the state will not be so pronounced as if the purchaser had bought it just for the pleasure of owning it and keeping it under lock and key. The writer is happy to state that, as the owner of that portion of Mr. Remsburg's collection which remained in Doniphan County he will be delighted to at any and all times have the privilege of showing the relics to all so desiring at his home near White Cloud, Kan.

It is to the everlasting credit of Mr. Remsburg that he tried to interest the state in the purchase of his collection for the Historical Society, but an appropriation could not be procured for the project, and as the State Historical Society had no funds available for the purchase of the relics the matter was dropped. But the fact that Mr. Remsburg's health was greatly impaired and the gathering of these thousands of specimens represented untold labor and considerable expense he could not, in justice to himself let them go without a remuneration. He was obliged to dispose of them at private sale, much as he would have liked to have made a donation of the collection of the State Historical Society.

All lovers of archaeology, and antiquarians generally, give the utmost credit to the zeal and perseverance with which Mr. Remsburg followed up his first work in laying the foundation of the collection more than a generation ago. It was undoubtedly the largest and most complete private accumulation of original relics in the state or in the country, and in getting the collection together Mr. Remsburg devoted the spare moments of all the best years of his life from boyhood. During the period that he was engaged in making and adding to his collection, he explored every nook and corner in the northeastern part of Kansas and northwestern Missouri, and is acquainted with every remote spot in the solitude of this region. Twenty-three years ago Sol Miller said that Remsburg was so enthusiastic in the work that he would succeed.

During the many years through which Mr. Remsburg's explorations extended, he discovered hundreds of old Indian villages and camp sites and delved into the mysterious recesses of many ancient mounds along the banks of the Missouri River. Among the more important of his many interesting finds are those connected with his identification and exploration of the famous old Konza Indian village site at Doniphan and the excavation of the Ingalls Indian mound to the south of Atchison. While the discovery was not at first hand, it was productive of more actual results than that which marked the visits of explorers of a century and two centuries before.

The Doniphan village was visited by Bourgmont, the French governor of Louisiana, in 1724, by Lewis and Clark in their Western explorations early in the nineteenth century, and by a number of other noted explorers subsequent to 1804. When Mr. Remsburg identified the locations of the Doniphan village in 1904, it was just one hundred years to a day that it had been visited by Lewis and Clark.

The Ingalls mound was discovered by the late Senator John J. Ingalls many years ago, and was explored by Mr. Remsburg in the summer of 1908, when he uncovered many archaeological specimens of great interest. All the results of Mr. Remsburg's earlier researches, up to a few years ago, have been printed in various scientific publications and books and have attracted considerable attention from scientists and historians through the country.

Mr. J. W. Brower's "Memoirs of Explorations in the Basin of the Mississippi," published in eight handsome volumes, devotes several pages to Mr. Remsburg's work and says, "George J. has long been a capable and painstaking archaeologic explorer in the Missouri valley." Chapell's "History of the Missouri River," says he is an acknowledged authority on early Western history and the archaeology of the Missouri valley.

Mr. Remsburg was for some time president of the Quivira Historical Society and in 1897 was elected a member of the Western Historical Society on the personal recommendation of the late United States Senator Vest of Missouri. In 1909 he was made an honorary member of the McLean Historical Society of Illinois in recognition of his valuable researches regarding the Kickapoo Indians. He is first vice-president of the International Society of Archoeologists and a contributing editor to its official organ. He is also a member of the National Geographic Society of Washington, D. C., the Kansas State Historical Society, and the American Society of Curio Collectors, etc.

Early in life Mr. Remsburg was engaged in newspaper work when he first took up exploration activity, and soon his writings began to attract the attention of scientists all over the country, and it was without his knowledge that Senator Vest recommended him for the membership in the Western Historical Society. He keeps up an extensive correspondence and is in continual touch with scientific men and collectors in every state in the Union and in many foreign countries where his advice is eagerly sought on archaeological, ethnological and historical matters.

During his sojourn in California Mr. Remsburg devoted considerable time to locating the remains of Indian villages. Since returning to Kansas in an improved state of health, his many friends are glad to know that he keeps up the good work and continues to make more interesting discoveries, whenever the state of his health will permit.

In company with Dr. R. S. Dinsmore of Troy, Mr. Remsburg has made many important discoveries in Doniphan County since his return from California. Not so very long ago he took fifty-one skulls and other parts of skeletons from a mound near the mouth of Mosquito Creek, and also discovered a razor which had been used in the barber tepee of one of the tonsorial ancestors of United States Senator Charles Curtis. The blade of this implement was made of copper and was evidently not intended for amputating beards, but was of a type used by the Welch and other Celtic nations in the eleventh century, and is similar to that used by many women for various purposes at the present time.

Mr. Remsburg is now in fairly good health and it is the sincere hope of his friends that he will continue to be robust for many years to come. He is contented and happy in his home at Potter, Kansas, where he devotes much of his time to writing matters of historical interest, and there is no better equipped archaeologist in the state or nation to do the work.

Hardware Merchant Absconds

W. H. Smith opened a hardware store in Troy on the northwest corner of the public square, opposite where the postoffice stood, June 9, 1872. He employed J. T. Wheeler as his clerk. He continued business until about June 20, when he absconded. Thursday, June 20, 1872, he drew from Boder Bros.' bank $1,000 of his own money received from the sale of a house previous to his leaving. At the time he drew the money he remarked to Mr. Boder, who was the father of Mrs. Anna Strong of Troy, that he was going to St. Joseph to pay his creditors. On Wednesday, June 26th, Boder Bros. received a letter from him saying that he was going to the mountains and would not return to Troy and instructed the bank to settle bills due a number of persons. Mr. Smith's conduct struck everybody with surprise. He was about the last person whom people in that day would have thought of doing such an act. He came to Troy with $2,500 in cash and left with $1,000. The assumption is that he became tired of going down hill and concluded to change his base. His stock of hardware was attached by a couple of creditors in St. Joseph.

Two Men Drowned

While attempting to cross the Missouri river, four miles below St. Joseph, Thursday, April 18, 1872, Isaac F. Price and Milton H. Seward were drowned. The wind was very high and the frail boat in which they had embarked became unmanagable. Hiram Wallington tried to persuade the unfortunate men not to go, but being under the influence of liquor, they refused to listen to his kind advice and recklessly threw themselves into the jaws of death. Mr. Wallington, accompanied by three other citizens, found the bodies seven miles from where the accident occurred. On the body of Price was found $165.00 and a note given by Thomas Barrell, dated Sedalia, Missouri, March 23, 1872. On Seward were found papers showing that his name was James H. Gilbert and that he had been connected with Hildebrand.

Women Were Hilarious

Streets were made lively at Coffeyville, Kansas, on Saturday, June 15, 1872, about 5 o'clock, when three women of ill repute were having a high time in a saloon and created such a disturbance that the city marshal, Flynn, interfered, and one of them, a reckless brunette by the name of Flora, taking umbrage at the intrusion, opened fire on the marshal with a small pocket revolver, firing five shots, one of which took effect in the abdomen of Marshal Flynn, inflicting a dangerous wound. At this juncture of the hostilities, a man ran into the saloon from the street with a horse pistol and shot this woman, Flora, through the head, killing her instantly.

Prominent White Cloud Man

Philip Kelley Was Honored by Three Kansas Governors and Was Three Times Elected to the State Legislature by the Voters of Doniphan County—Settled in White Cloud in 1865 and Built Up a Prosperous Business From Which He Retired With a Competency Many Years Ago—Wounded in the Civil War.

The citizens of White Cloud especially, and of Doniphan County generally, have reason to feel honored over the successful business and public career of Philip Kelley, one of the most substantial and distinguished residents of Doniphan County, or the state of Kansas.

Mr. Kelley is what every true American likes to call a self-made man. He started in life with a good trade and a determination to succeed. This, coupled with more than the average amount of intelligence, has been Mr. Kelley's guiding star since he started to make his own way in the world.

Three times Mr. Kelley has been honored by many governors of the state of Kansas and three times has he been selected by the voters of Doniphan County to represent them in the state legislature. It is needless to say that he executed the trust reposed in him in an efficient and upright manner.

Mr. Kelley is one of the real old timers now living in White Cloud. Settling in the town in 1865 he has seen it thrive and prosper, and incidentally he kept right up in the forefront of the prosperity. He has always been a good business man and his sterling integrity has never failed to win him hosts of friends.

Philip Kelley is a native of Cincinnati, Ohio, having been born there on New Year's Day, 1840. He had just passed his twenty-first birthday, when President Lincoln issued his first call for troops, and on April 19, 1861, he enlisted at Cleveland, Ohio, in Company A, Seventh Ohio volunteer infantry, and was soon afterward sent to the front.

After about fifteen months of the hardest kind of service, Mr. Kelley was dangerously wounded at the battle of Cedar Mountain, and for a time his life was despaired of. This was on August 9, 1862, and for fully three months his life was practically despaired of.

Mr. Kelley's wound was so bad that after the most careful nursing, the army surgeons pronounced him incapacitated from further military duty and he was mustered out of service at old Fort McHenry on November 29, 1862. The old fort near Baltimore is only a memory now, but Mr. Kelley well remembers its historical associations and the incident which inspired the writing of the "Star Spangled Banner" by Francis Scott Key, on September 14, 1814.

In July, 1865, Mr. Kelley came to White Cloud and on October 19, of the same year, he was married to Miss Josephine Bates of Tabor, Freemont County, Iowa. The happy couple at once took up housekeeping in White Cloud, where they have resided ever since.

Early in life, Mr. Kelley had been apprenticed to the shoemaking trade and, notwithstanding his period as a soldier, he had not forgotten his youthful training. He was a remarkably expert mechanic and never forgot the art of either making or cutting out the material for a pair of shoes.

After conducting a shoemaking establishment for some years in the town of his adoption, Mr. Kelley soon branched out and engaged in the grocery and general mercantile business in White Cloud. He had saved enough money from his shoe business to try his hand at a more general line and his success in the succeeding years demonstrated that his judgment was unerring.

The subject of this sketch continued to operate the general store until his boys had grown up and were able to take charge of the business. He has three sons: George B, Rufus G. and James P. The only daughter, Abbie J., died when she was five years old. Mrs. Kelley is a hale, hearty woman who has a wide circle of friends and is well liked by all.

Mr. Kelley has had an honorable public career. He was elected to the state legislature in 1879 and again in 1881, and after being out for two years was re-elected again in 1885. When Mr. Kelley turned over the management of his store to his sons, he began to take life easy. He had earned a competency by hard work and careful attention to business, and his sons took up the management of the store where he had left off. His store is one of the most extensive in Doniphan County, and is ably and prosperously conducted by John and James. Rufus G. is in business in Kansas City, Mo.

In April, 1899, Mr. Kelley was appointed by Governor Stanley as a member of the board of managers of the Hutchison Reformatory, and he was reappointed by Governor Bailey, and by Governor Ed Hoch. He took a keen interest in the welfare and treatment of the inmates of this institution, and his efforts to make better citizens out of those confined there have been generally commended by all right-thinking people throughout the state of Kansas. The subject of this sketch prides himself in the fact that his boys are recognized as good business men and are all prosperous.

Inventor of Gatling Gun Lived at White Cloud

(By Geo. J. Remsburg.)

Some authorities on the history of American firearms, notably the Hon. George C. Maynard, of the United States National Museum at Washington, have taken exceptions to the statement recently made by the writer in the Magazine of Antique Firearms that Dr. Richard J. Gatling, the inventor of the famous Gatling gun, once lived at White Cloud in Doniphan County, Kansas. Mr. Maynard says he doubts that there is any truth in the statement, for some years ago he received from Doctor Gatling a long account of his life history, and that he does not mention his residence in Kansas. That Doctor Gatling resided for a time at White Cloud, however, is an established fact in Kansas history. Sol Miller, the pioneer Doniphan County journalist, who lived at White Cloud in the early days, mentions the fact in his historical edition of the Kansas Chief, November 23, 1893, and says that Gatling was not only a member of the original town company of White Cloud, but when the company was organized and enlarged in 1875, he and his brother, Wm. J. Gatling, of Iowa, became stockholders. Gray's "History of Doniphan County" mentions Doctor Gatling and his brother as being among the stockholders of the White Cloud Town Company in 1857, but on what authority is not stated. According to Gray, Doctor Gatling once asked Sol Miller to retract some statement he had made in his paper, the Chief.

Pryor Plank, the Doniphan County pioneer and historian, in a letter under date of October 31, 1912, in response to inquiries, writes: "While I don't remember ever having met Doctor Gatling, inventor of the famous gun which bears his name, nor how long he remained in White Cloud after he assisted in organizing the White Cloud Town Company in 1857, yet I do know that his name always appeared in the list of active members of that company at the time of its organization."

M. E. Zimmerman, an old-timer of White Cloud, writing under date of December 5, 1912, says: "I made inquiry about Doctor Gatling and found two good men who were personally acquainted with him here. These men have been residents of White Cloud ever since the town was laid out, and for some time before. Mr. Kenneth Wakefield and Mr. John H. Lynds are the names of these men, and they will sign statements to the fact if required. Mr. Wakefield says that Doctor Gatling was here with his son, who was a lawyer, and was a member of the original town company."

Josephus Utt, another pioneer of White Cloud, in a letter dated October 30, 1912, says: "You are correct as to R. J. Gatling having been a member of the White Cloud Town Company. He was thereabout for a couple of years. I met him frequently. He was a notably fine-appearing man. Some town lots were advertised for sale until recent years as R. J. Gatling, owner. The original town company was composed of the following members: John H. Utt, Enoch Spaulding, Cornelius Dorland, Henry W. Peter, James Foster, Ozias Bailey and R. J. Gatling. White Cloud had a boom in the early days and was the depot for the shipping of government supplies.

Mayors Russell and Waddell were the freight contractors. They had large corrals, thousands of work cattle, teamsters, cowboys, and all the etceteras belonging to a government freighting business. Those were the days when R. J. Gatling was about White Cloud."

Dr. R. S. Dinsmore, of Troy, under date of October 31, 1912, writes: "I do not know how long Doctor Gatling resided in Doniphan County, but there was a recent suit in our courts to quiet title, and I notice that Dr. R. J. Gatling was named as one of the defendants. I saw him a number of years ago when he was here for a visit."

The editor of the White Cloud Globe, in the issue of December 12, 1912, says: "There are a number of citizens here who knew Doctor Gatling quite well and can testify to the fact that he belonged to the old town company. His son, William, was also here and took an interest in the early history of White Cloud."

The late Hon. D. W. Wilder, the Kansas annalist, knew Doctor Gatling well when he lived at White Cloud, and in a speech made at the quarter centennial celebration at Topeka in 1886, he stated that Gatling matured his famous gun invention in Doniphan County. This, however, seems to be in question. Another question in regard to Doctor Gatling's connection with the town of White Cloud is as to whether it was his brother or son who was associated with his in this pioneer municipal enterprise. It will be noted that Sol Miller and W. H. Forncrook give it as his brother, while Mr. Wakefield states that it was his son who was with him at White Cloud.

Samuel N. Johnson of Troy, who was treasurer of Doniphan County in the '70's, and was deputy treasurer for four years, before being elected to that office, says he distinctly remembers writing tax receipts, year after year, for R. J. Gatling, the famous inventor, during the years he was in the treasurer's office. Mr. Johnson also makes the statement that another equally famous inventor, Remington, the inventor of the repeating rifle, owned lots in Elwood and Belmont, and consequently paid taxes in Doniphan County.

W. H. Froncrook, formerly of White Cloud, writes from Denver, under date of April 30, 1913:

"I was secretary of the White Cloud City Company during the last year of its existence, and up to its final dissolution, some time in the '70's, I think. R. M. Williams was its last president. Dr. R. J. Gatling was a member of the White Cloud City Company, which was reorganized in the spring of 1857 from the original White Cloud Town Company, which was organized at Oregon, Mo., in 1856, by James Foster, Dr. H. W. Peters, John H. Witt, Cornelius Dorland and Enoch Spaulding. The land upon which the town was located was a part of the 'Iowa Trust Lands,' which were sold by the government at Iowa Point in June, 1857, for the benefit of the Indians. The townsite was held under a squatter's right, in the interest of the original promoters until the land sales at Iowa Point in June, 1857. Doctor Gatling was also one of the original promoters and stockholders in the town of Padonia in Brown County, and was its first president. Ozias Bailey, Orville Root and a man named Reed were among the members of the company. Doctor Gatling was also interested in land. Among his holdings was a quarter in the northwest corner of Doniphan County, which he sold to Giles A. Briggs, who improved it and owned it until his death several years ago.

"The first time I saw Doctor Gatling in 1857, he was pointed out to me as the man who was working on the model of a machine gun that was expected to discharge bullets at a marvelous rate. To me he appeared a very pleasant, thoughtful, genial gentleman, who left the impression on those with whom he came in contact that his talents were not of the mediocre order.

"W. J. Gatling, his brother, was a resident of Des Moines, Iowa. He was a vivacious lawyer, and 'was wont to set the table in a roar' with his 'gibes and gambols.'"

Doctor Gatling owned land near Oregon, Missouri, in the early days. The Oregon Sentinel, however, in its issue of February 20, 1913, says: "He was here at Oregon for awhile, but his stay in this part of the country was mostly made at White Cloud, just across the river in Kansas. Doctor Gatling remained in White Cloud for many months, and was in every sense of the word a resident of White Cloud, remaining there to not only look after his own interests, but those of his brother."

Richard J. Gatling was born in Hertford County, N. C., September 12, 1818. As a boy he assisted his father in perfecting a machine for sowing cotton seed. He later invented a machine for sowing rice. Then he adapted this machine for sowing wheat, and patented it. He graduated from the Ohio Medical College in 1850, but never practiced. A biographical authority states that he invented the revolving gun known as the "Gatling gun," in 1862. Doctor Gatling was not living at White Cloud at that time, but he might have had the invention in his mind at the time of his residence there. In 1886 he invented a new gun metal, composed of steel and aluminum. Congress voted him $40,000 for proof experiments in a new method of casting cannon. He also invented a hemp-breaking machine, a steam plow and other devices. He died in Connecticut in 1903.

Extensive Fruit Farmer Is the Popular and Genial Secretary of the White Cloud Association.

Robert H. Banner, secretary of the White Cloud Fruit-Growers' Association, is the first man in that vicinity to go into fruit farming on an extensive scale. At the present time he has more than sixty acres in strawberries, blackberries, raspberries and pears, and has a portion of the best land near White Cloud. His farm is about one mile south of that town and borders almost on the city limits. Mr. Banner is making a big success of his venture. His various interests testify to that.

Robert H. Banner was born in Morehead, Kentucky, November 6, 1873. He received only a common school education. Later he took up the study of telegraphy and became an expert, working as an operator and station agent for practically ten years. He was the station agent at Troy Junction for nearly three years and went from Troy to Ong, Nebraska, for two years.

On June 22, 1902, Mr. Banner was married to Miss Sarah Elizabeth DeLong at her mother's home in Troy, by the Rev. Mr. Stanley of the Christian Church. She was a native of Doniphan County, born on a farm near Troy, Feb. 3, 1881, and a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Eaton DeLong. To this union were born two sons and three daughters. Ronald Gordon was born March 31, 1904, at the farm home of his grandmother, Mrs. Sarah DeLong, now occupied by H. E. Page. Cedric Delbert was born April 9, 1906, at Ong, Nebraska, where the father was then station agent. The three daughters were born on the farm near White Cloud, Evelyn Elizabeth, on Dec. 5, 1908; Mildred Roberta, on Nov. 7, 1909; Georgia Loraine on Nov. 22, 1913.

Mrs. Banner before her marriage, was one of the most popular and efficient school teachers in Doniphan County. She taught her first school in 1901 at Burr Oak and her second term at Eclipse, District No. 59. Although the schools of Doniphan County suffered a distinct loss when she gave up her duties as an instructor to become Mrs. Banner, her husband made a distinct gain and White Cloud took one of Troy's finest young women.

In the spring of 1906 Mr. Banner resigned his position with the Burlington railroad and entered the lucrative business he now owns. He began in a small way, but by increasing his acreage little by little the tract now comprises the sixty acres under cultivation.

Mr. Banner was one of the first to realize the erping need of an association of the fruit-growers of his community, and gave unsparingly of his time to its organization in White Cloud. As a consequence when the organization was effected, he was unanimously elected secretary, and has held the position since, to the satisfaction of every member. There has never been dissension among the fruit-raisers in the White Cloud organization, and much of this spirit of harmony and cooperation is due to the work of Mr. Banner. He is a splendid type of the fine young, progressive farmer of Doniphan County.

Residence of Robert H. Banner, Situated in Iowa Township.

On Saturday, July 27, 1872, the B. & M., which was known as the Atchison & Nebraska railroad at that time, carried an excursion party from Doniphan County to Falls City, Nebraska, the occasion being recreation for both old and young. The Chief, at that time in commenting upon the picnic, said that there were over 1,500 parties on the excursion train. Cyrus Leland, Jr., called the meeting to order and Hon. A. Lowe, of Doniphan, was made president. The president introduced Senator Pomeroy, John M. Price, Rev. A. S. McConnell of Highland, D. M. Johnston, father of Walter Johnston, who is so well and favorably known in Troy, and speeches were made by all of them. The Doniphan Sunday school then regaled the audience with some choice music. M. M. Towne was the superintendent of the A. & N. railroad at that time and was in company.

On July 24, 1866, Mr. Dillon of St. Joseph, Missouri, who formerly was engaged in business in Elwood, was murdered by the Indians at Brown Springs. It appeared that Mr. Dillon, with his train, was several miles in advance of a train belonging to Kuykendall, and hearing the sound of musketry in the direction of that train, he nobly, but injudiciously, started to the rescue, accompanied by but five of his men. His party was soon surrounded by some thirty or more Sioux Indians and a desperate fight ensued at once. Mr. Dillon was killed at the start, and no other casualities were reported. After four hours hard fighting the redskins retreated and the unfortunate man's body was taken to the train and then, with solemn services, consigned to the earth and the place of burial plainly marked.

On Saturday evening, May 20, 1872, Americus D. Patterson, who lived in a house in the northwestern part of Leavenworth, belonging to Aleois Wager, killed Mr. Wager with a dirk knife. It seems that there had been trouble between the two relatives as to the renting of the house. Patterson, it was alleged, had been drinking and laid down at home to sleep off the effects of it. Wager approached and aroused him, demanding his money, when the said Patterson sprang up and drawing a pocket knife with a dirk blade about four inches long, plunged it downward in the left side and lower part of the neck, barely missing the jugular vein and making a dangerous wound, which proved fatal.

During a rain storm Sunday night, Oct. 14, 1866, John More, residing six miles southeast from Troy, while protecting his cellar from a flow of water, was struck by lightning and instantly killed.

John Landis, J. O. Larzelare and James Saxton had fifty acres of Norway oats four miles south of Troy, which were harvested Aug. 4, 1872, which average eighty bushels per acre.

White Cloud Fruit Growers' Association

Organization Composed of the Most Active and Progressive Men Who Have the Future Interests of This Thriving City at Heart—C. G. Landrum, President; Robert H. Banner, Secretary; Ralph Mauck, Treasurer—Campaign for the Setting Out of Fruit to Be Inaugurated so That the Ultimate Prosperity of White Cloud May Be Assured.

The Fruit Growers' Association of White Cloud is one of the most potential agencies ever formed for the advancement of the fruit industry in that section of Doniphan County.

This body is composed of men endowed with progressive business ideas and having the best interests of the community at heart. They are alive to the enormous possibilities for gains through properly advancing the availability of their neighborhood as a great fruit-producing center.

The members of the Fruit-Growers' Association do not propose to sit idly by and see great advantages for wealth slip through the people's fingers. It is their intention and their duty to make the land-owners awaken to the unequaled opportunity of developing their resources by planting fruit.

It is a long-established fact that the land at White Cloud and vicinity is admirably adapted to the raising of fruit. There is no better spot in Doniphan County for the permanent establishment of such a profitable industry, and considering the rapid strides that have been made in other sections of the Doniphan County fruit belt, it is a business have not become millionaires as yet, it must be admitted that the industry is still in its infancy around White Cloud. Their prospects for immense returns soon cannot be gainsaid and their intensity of purpose will soon be realized.

The men who are promoting the fruit-growing industry at White Cloud are able business men. They are all young in years, and it is a safe bet that before they reach the ages of Judge M. S. Mauck, R. S. Dakefield, Andrew J. Cox and Philip Kelley, White Cloud will probably be shipping from between ten to fifteen carloads of fruit a day during the season.

There is no valid reason why it shouldn't. The soil all over that section abounds in fertility, especially adapted for successful fruit farming. The climate is the equal of any in the county, and with proper diligence in the handling of the crop, the record of ten to twenty cars a day shipped from Wathena, Blair and Troy, would be equaled, if not exceeded. The ground is just as good, if not better, at White Cloud, as in the other great fruit-raising centers of Doniphan County. Why

THE PASSING OF A PIONEER

(Contributed by George J. Remsburg.)

With the death of Josephus Utt, at Highland, in Doniphan County, there passed away one of the most interesting of the real pioneers of northwestern Kansas. The writer enjoyed an intimate communication of many years with Mr. Utt and from him secured much valuable and interesting data concerning the very early history of this region. His memory was a wonderful storehouse of local history and reminiscence. Next to the late Pryor Plank he was, perhaps, the best posted and most reliable local historian in Doniphan County. He was a scholarly gentleman, and both in conversation and writing he had the facspectacle was published in the writer's "Short Stories of Local History" in The Globe of November 26, 1909. In 1853, before Kansas was opened for settlement, Mr. Utt was a teacher among the Iowa Indians, in what is now Doniphan County. During the war he was first lieutenant in Company K, 14th Kansas volunteer cavalry. During most of his life he was engaged in the mercantile business in Doniphan County, and was also a commercial traveler for some time. He was a native of Ohio and was born in 1830.

The following interesting bit of reminiscence is from Mr. Utt's pen: "In the year 1838, my brother located cause for wonder that the White Cloud folks have not cut into the game before this.

The White Cloud Fruit Growers' Association is, strictly speaking, a baby organization, but judging by the perceptible progress that has been made during the brief life of that body, it is destined to accomplish wonderful things in the near future.

Having been organized only a few years ago, the White Cloud Fruit Growers' Association has taken up the question of boosting the fruit industry in their section with remarkable vigor. The members are practically all young men, but they have a clear conception of what the future is bound to bring forth.

Naturally, the members of the Fruit Growers' Association are interested in the development of the fruit industry in White Cloud, otherwise it is not to be supposed they would take such pains to promote it. They are mainly attracted by the impending profits that are certain to accrue, but aside from that feature of the situation they are desirous to advance the productivity of their own particular section of Doniphan County before the eyes of the world.

For more than a generation it has been known all over that White Cloud and its contiguous territory could produce as good fruit as any part of Doniphan County. But the opportunity for so doing has been sadly neglected, except in a few instances where enterprising, wide-awake citizens set out some of their land in fruit. While these pioneers in the fruit-growing not take advantage of the situation and become a live cog in the wheel of progress.

The only requisite necessary to begin the development of the fruit industry on its predestined scale around White Cloud, is setting out enough acreage. The land is adapted to both berries and large fruit. All varieties will thrive and return good harvests. The people of the locality have an opportunity within their grasp that they do not seem to realize. The Fruit Growers' Association gives the growers an advantage not possessed by individual fruit farmers who undertake to market their own product. All the fruit growers around White Cloud will have to do is haul their product to town and the association will market it for them. They will not be compelled to seek a market of their own in some remote city of the country and take chances on the result. The association finds the market and the grower will be all the gainer.

The officers of the White Cloud Fruit Growers' Association are C. G. Landrum, president; Robert H. Banner, vice-president; George H. Osgood, secretary, and Ralph Mauck, treasurer. This list of capable men speaks for itself. They are not only interested in the future of the fruit industry, but they are interested in the welfare of White Cloud and its environs. They have realized that within the development of the fruit farms around the town, White Cloud will have more population, more business for the tradesmen, more money in the banks, and more general prosperity and happiness all around.

Josephus Utt visited northeastern Kansas as early as 1842, and was in what is now Atchison County, in 1846, when the only white man in the county was Paschal Pensoneau, the Frenchman, who had a trading establishment among the Kickapoo Indians on Stranger Creek, near the present site of Potter. Mr. Utt visited Pensoneau here in that year. This was during the Mexican war. Mr. Utt had two brothers in the Oregon battalion, which was rendezvousing at Fort Leavenworth, and while visiting them he took occasion to ride out to Pensoneau's place with a party of soldiers. In a biographical sketch of Pensoneau published by the writer in The Globe of April 10, 1907, is given Mr. Utt's account of that visit and his recollections of Atchison County's first white settler, whom he met on several occasions afterwards. The writer has furnished The Globe with much other interesting reminiscence of Mr. Utt from time to time. In the issue of May 4, 1909, appeared his recollections of the Major Benjamin Bean family, from whom Bean later derived its name. Mr. Utt was frequently at the Bean mansion at Bean Lake as early as 1841 and '42, and attended the funeral of Major Bean's charming and gifted daughter, who was the acknowledged belle of Missouri society at that time.

Mr. Utt witnessed the last visit of the Pawnee Indians to Doniphan County in August, 1854, and his graphic account of this impressive a general merchandise store midway between the Blacksnake Hills and Weston, on the Missouri river (a little above where Rushville now stands) and did a general business with the inhabitants of that country, and also had a large trade with the Sac and Fox Indians. In the year 1841, my father's family moved to the Platte Purchase and settled on a claim opposite the place where Doniphan now stands (Mr. Utt's father at one time in the early days built and operated a mill on the "pass" between Sugar and Bean Lakes.—G. J. R.) In the year 1842 the Indian agent at Fort Nemaha notified my brother that a payment was about to be made to the Sac and Fox Indians and invited them to be present and make their collections. They proceeded to the agency, I going along. My age was then twelve years. We crossed the Missouri river in an Indian canoe, and taking the old Indian trail to the divide near Independence Creek and passing near where John Berry lived, crossed the Wolf river near the Sac and Fox village, and arrived at Nemaha agency in the evening.

"Major Richardson was the United States Indian agent, and John W. Forman was the farmer for the Iowa and Sac and Fox Indians. The Major and Mr. Forman were Kentuckians, and from the blue gress region, and here we beg to remark, that their latch strings were hanging out and the proverbial Kentucky hospitality was constantly on tap. Our visit was extended for several days, and was a very pleasant one, the major taking great interest in the matter of the collections for which purpose my brothers were at the agency. We digress to remark that a few years afterwards the major's only child, a daughter, was married to Willard P. Hall, who accompanied Gen. A. W. Doniphan on his memorable campaign through Santa Fe and Old Mexico, and was at the round-up of the Mexican army at Sacramento, where General Doniphan captured the entire outfit and 'ten acres of sheep.' Willard P. Hall was afterwards governor of Missouri, and one of the ablest judges of the supreme court of Missouri.

"Our trip to the Nemaha agency has always been a pleasant memory and reminiscence that will never be forgotten. John W. Forman is well known to the people of Doniphan County, and the destiny of the writer is closely linked with the interests of advancements of the county. In the year 1851 James F. Forman, who had been assistant farmer at the agency, was granted permission to establish a trading post at the point where afterwards the town of Doniphan was located. The appointment of Mr. Forman as a trader was only to secure the location for a townsite when the land should be purchased, as the Indian agent evidently knew would soon occur. In the year 1854, the writer, with some others, crossed the river at Iowa Point, Wm. Banks operating the ferry. We camped near the river the first night, and the second night we camped on Cedar Creek at the crossing of the St. Joseph Overland route. We recall that on that night there was a Frenchman with some eight or ten wagons and voyagers encamped there, going to Brown's Hole in the mountains. The wagons were loaded with Indian goods and provisions, ammunition, etc. I suppose the "etc." was about ten barrels of copper-distilled whisky, which is said to be an antidote for snake bites and tarantula and centipede poisons. Our destination was Fort Kearney, where we remained for a considerable time, buying broken-down cattle, horses and mules. On our return to Big Blue river, Francis J. Marshall informed us that a treaty had been made for the lands embracing the territories of Kansas and Nebraska. We then proceeded to the Missouri river and camped on the bottoms below Iowa Point, which afterwards became the property of H. Guthrie."

Claude G. Landrum

White Cloud Educator Worked Own Way Through Schools and Has Made Success.

Professor Claude G. Landrum, B. A., educator, church worker, and upright citizen, is in the forefront of the ranks of men whom the citizens of Doniphan County reverence. Balked at almost every point in his efforts to obtain an education, by the stern necessity of having to work in order to make a living, he never became discouraged or gave up the fight; and the result is shown today, in the wonderful system he has injected into the White Cloud schools, of which he is the superintendent, and the measure of success he has attained. Professor Landrum not only has diplomas from three different state institutions, but is noted among educators for his marvelous thesis of thirteen thousand words on "The History of Education in Kansas" written while he was yet a young man in the medical department of the University of Kansas. It is only necessary to say that this tract is an authority on all matters educational and copies of it are in the state educational department and university and college libraries.

Prof. Claude G. Landrum.

Claude G. Landrum is a native Kansan and has never left the state. He was born at Frankfort, Jan. 27, 1877, and received his early education in the public schools as have so many men who have since become a power in their different communities. For three years he was a student in the Frankfort high school and during that latter summer came a blow that was to have a vital effect on the rest of his life. It was the death of his father. Upon the young man was thrown the responsibility for the support of his mother and a younger brother. So he gave up his cherished education and went back to the farm. For more than five years he shouldered this burden, but in the fall of 1898 his opportunity came again, and he entered the Modern Normal College at Marysville for the one year term. After receiving his certificate he returned to his home and taught in the school there three years.

During this time he managed to lay aside a small sum of money and in the fall of 1902 he entered the law school of the State University at Lawrence, where he spent one year. During this time he did odd jobs to help to defray his expenses—such as carrying paper routes and working on Saturdays and holidays. In the fall of 1903 he entered the departments of arts and science, and remained three years. To obtain money for this venture he served as janitor of the Jackson block in Lawrence. His course was a general one in the history and science departments, and, completing these studies, he received his degree of Bachelor of Arts and Sciences. It was during this period that Professor Landrum wrote his famous thesis, which since has become a state authority on matters educational. In addition to his degree, he received a state certificate and a special teacher's diploma for professional research work. He also completed one year's work in the medical department of the university.

This completed his studies in the university, and the following year he was sent by the State High School Inspector to Gardiner, Kan., where he served as principal of the high school from 1907 to 1908. While there he effected several material changes in the system, building up a curriculum that would cover the most ground in the most efficient manner. The townspeople wished him to remain indefinitely, but it was not to be, for in the fall of 1908, the same state educational officer who had sent him to Gardiner, saw an opening at White Cloud, and having Professor Landrum in mind, ordered his transfer there. And in Charlotte and Edna Landrum.

September of that year he came to Doniphan County and took up his new duites.

Conditions in the White Cloud schools were not all that could be desired. There was much friction, and the courses had not been mapped out properly. It was a Herculean task to straighten matters out, but Professor Landrum did not waiver. He immediately sought to put himself on good terms with the members of the school board and the citizens—in which he succeeded far beyond his expectations—and then plunged into his plans for a complete reorganization. The first thing he wanted to do was to bring the schools under the Barnes law and obtain a first-class rating. The requirements for this are exceedingly severe, but with the limited material he had on which to work, he decided to make a try for it. There was an insufficient number of teachers and the courses of study were not formed so as to make for the best results. Professor Landrum changed all this, and after a few months of vigorous labor, success crowned his efforts and he received word that the state educational department had ranked his school under the Barnes statute. As an example of his success in White Cloud, where he has been for seven years, the school today has three more teachers than it had when he went there, the attendance has materially increased, he has started a library with three hundred and fifty volumes and two additional rooms have been added to the school house.

Professor Landrum is a man who was born to be a teacher. He has all of the qualities which are necessary for a successful and efficient instructor. He is a lover of young men and women, and during his years of service in White Cloud he has taught them to not only learn their lessons from day to day like an automation, but to think for themselves and rely upon themselves. He has regarded his calling as second to none in importance to the community, not even excepting the ministry. The training of the future men and women of this country in his opinion, is of vast importance, and should be regarded as a sacret trust. How well he has brought all these ideals into practical demonstration is shown by the remarkable success he has achieved.

In addition to his school duties, Professor Landrum finds time to be a useful citizen in other lines. He is a member of the A. F. & A. M. No. 78, and in the fall of 1911 he was elected senior warden. In the fall of 1913 he was elected W. M., which honor was accorded him a second time in the fall of 1914, when he was re-elected. He helped to organize the White Cloud Fruit-Growers' Association, and was selected as its first president. For three years he was unanimously re-elected. He also was a material factor in the organization of the White Cloud Farmers' Institute, of which he was the first secretary, holding that office for two years. Also he has been actively identified with the First Christian Church, and is always to be found in the vanguard of any civic move that is for the betterment of the community. Professor Landrum is one of the men of whom Doniphan County is justly proud. He was married April 1, 1905, to Miss Grace Weaver, of Frankfort, and to this union two daughters have been born. They are Charlotte and Edna.

MASONRY GREAT AID TO MANKIND

Is More Than a Mere Fraternal Order, as Its Teachings Neither Proselyte or Persecute—The First Masonic Lodge Organized in Kansas Was Under a "Black Jack" Tree Near Old Smithton.

In classifying Masonry as a fraternal order, we are giving to it its most restricted meaning and purpose, even if we use that term in its broadest sense.

It is more than a mere fraternal order. It is educational in its conception and purposes, teaching a strict morality, and inculcating a philosophy that makes for the constructive individual enfoldment and evolution of its students, along high moral lines, thus enabling man to intelligently pursue his search for happiness and his proper sphere in the eternal scheme of things. The result is the right conception of personal responsibility to God and man, and an acknowledgement of the brotherhood of man and the fatherhood of God.

It neither proselytes nor persecutes. Those who come into it must come of their own initiative, and of their own free will, and when they come they are met with no dogmas or creeds. The symbolism is displayed and explained, and the interpretation left to the individual intelligence, it being a cardinal principle with us that there is in the world some truth for each created intelligence, which that intelligence should be required to search for always, but not required to find, from our standpoint, since we may not sit in judgment.

ZACK SINGLETON IN KANSAS CITY

Formerly One of Troy's Best Depot Agents.

Zack Singleton, who was depot agent for the Burlington at Troy Junction for ten years, and agent for the Grand Island at Severance for nine years, is now located at Kansas City, Missouri, residing at 2400 Olive street. He was one of the best agents who ever stamped a ticket or juggled with time tables for puzzled passengers.

The former classmates of his daughters will be glad to know that they married well. Allie married L. G. Peaslee, and Mattie married E. C. Donahue, both of Kansas City.

The White Cloud Congregational Church

It Was Organized in 1867, After the Close of the War, and Has Been a Great Factor in the Religious Life of White Cloud and the Community—Something of Its History and Its Activities.

The Congregationalists, from the time of the arrival of the famous "Andover Band" in the territory in the 1850's down to the present year, have wielded a powerful influence for the spiritual and educational advancement of Kansas and her people. In no other part of the state is this influence more observable than in the eastern half of the state, and particularly in the counties bordering along the Missouri river. Doniphan County, possibly as much as any other, has felt this influence in its splendid citizenship, its high ideals of education and culture and refinement (for the Congregationalists always appealed to the intellectual as well as the spiritual), and in the moral quality of its civic life.

The town of White Cloud and the country round about has been blessed for nearly one-half a century by the influence of its Congregational church. The organization was started on May 25, 1867, when the Christian people of the community met in White Cloud for the purpose of banding together for religious worship and to carry on God's work among their home people. There was a goodly representation of the Christian people at that meeting and C. F. Jennings was called to the chair as president, M. B. Bowers being chosen secretary. The minutes of the meeting show that it was the sense of all present that a church organization be formed and that a committee to examine the applicants for membership was elected, consisting of the Rev. Mr. H. P. Robinson, Dr. Pugsley and M. B. Bowers.

It is further shown by the minutes that the following were received into the church on May 25, 1867, as charter members: Dr. Pugsley, C. F. Jennings, Mrs. Pugsley, Mrs. Jennie Jennings, Mrs. Rebecca Jane Macey, Mrs. Emma Taylor, Mrs. Nannie Armstrong, J. W. Moore, M. B. Bowers, Mrs. Malvina Moore, Mrs. Hulah Bowers, Mrs. Lucy Whitman, Henry H. Walker, Mrs. Henry H. Walker.

With the persons named above as charter members the meeting voted that the name of the church should be "The First Congregational Church of White Cloud."

It follows that from that memorable time in the summer of 1867, until April, 1871, the little band of Christians who had thus banded together in Christian fellowship, held regular meetings every Sunday morning in different buildings, wherever they could find suitable accommodations. In the meantime, however, the members were looking to the future of the church by providing a house of worship of its own. A suitable lot was purchased and graded, upon which was erected a neat and substantial brick church, 30x65 feet in dimensions, at a cost of near $3,000, the brick having been burned in a kiln in White Cloud.

The dedication of the new church on April 9, 1871, was an event that is still looked back to by many of the older citizens of the community. There was a great congregation present to hear the very able dedicatory sermon delivered at 11 a. m. of that day by the Rev. Mr. Merrill, a Congregational missionary preacher, and the dedicatory prayer ever ascended to the Throne than that which was so eloquently and so fervently spoken by the Rev. Mr. Shaw.

The building committee on which had devolved the great work of building the structure, reported the church free from debt, whereupon the entire congregation tendered the committee a vote of thanks. The people of White Cloud, who had generously contributed to the building fund, were on motion of M. B. Bowers, heartily thanked by the members. A vote of thanks also was given J. D. Moore for the gift to the church of an eight-day clock.

The following is a summary of the expenditures of the committee, the total representing the cost of the church building and grounds:

|---|---|
| Cost of lot | $ 300.00 |
| Grading and fencing | 208.90 |
| Building and seating | 2,726.42 |
| Total | $3,235.32 |

After this showing appears a summary of the receipts of money for the new church, which follows:

|---|---|
| M. B. Bowers' donation | $1,895.62 |
| Congregational Union | 500.00 |
| Citizens of town and county | 840.70 |
| Total | $3,236.32 |

The gift of more than one-half of the cost of the church by M. B. Bowers attested his great interest in the church of which he was one of the charter members, and also his generosity and public spirited citizenship. It was appreciated by the members of the church and the entire community.

On Aug. 1, 1883, a large bell was purchased at a cost of $88.07, as shown by the records, and since that time this bell has called the people to worship.

Prof. T. H. Cecil was pastor at the time of the purchase of the bell.

During the life of the church pastors have come and gone, leaving behind them a record of faithful service and of good seed sown into the hearts of the good people. For seven years the church has had no regular pastor, but the religious work still goes on uninterrupted, the pupit being supplied by ministers of the denomination.

The Sunday school of the First Congregational church is popular, many of the best citizens of White Cloud being members. George B. Kelley is superintendent of the Sunday school and about sixty are enrolled as members.

Thus the little church that was organized nearly fifty years ago in White Cloud, and which through that many years had been a home for the Christian people, still stands and its grand work will continue through the years to come.

The Catholic Parish at White Cloud

(Contributed by Father P. Alphonse.)

While the Catholic Parish at White Cloud, considering its diminutive size, is figuratively still an infant in arms, it is historically a very old infant. Its story goes back to the beginning of Kansas history.

The Catholic Church in White Cloud.

It was placed on the map of Catholicity in Kansas by the pioneer Benedictine missionaries, who since 1858 had their headquarters at St. Benedict's College, Atchison, Kan. Among those missionaries, a prominent figure was Father Thomas Bartl, O. S. B. Mounted on his pony, on whose back he must have lived a good portion of his long and useful life, Father Thomas made extensive trips in the cause of religion, through Kansas, Nebraska and Missouri. White Cloud was one of his stopping places. The earliest records we have been able to find at St. Benedict's College, show, that Father Thomas was at White Cloud in 1862, on the 8th of November, of which year he baptized Hugh, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Patrick M. Kearney, and also poured the saving waters upon the three sons of Mr. and Mrs. Fontanus Kelly.

In those days there was, of course, no Catholic Church edifice in White Cloud, so that services were held in private houses. For a long time the Dunlevy house, then the most commodious Catholic house in the town, was the rendezvous of the little community. It served for all Catholic services up to the time that the present building was purchased and converted into a church. This deal was made possible by the generosity of a kind benefactor, in 1891. The building had been a school house. Father Matthew Bradley, O. S. B., was then in charge of White Cloud and made the deal. That same year he was replaced by Father Placadus McKeever, O. S. B., who immediately set about renovating and furnishing the building. It was ready for service in June of that year, and the solemn dedication was performed June 14th by Father Peter Kassens, O. S. B., then in the zenith of his priestly career and the most noted preacher in this section of the country. The church was placed under the patronage of St. Joseph.

Father Placadus (or rather, Father Mack, as he was universally known), remained in charge, until he was taken down with what proved to be his last sickness, in 1896. He died Sept. 22nd of that year. From that time to the present the history of the White Cloud parish has been merely a record of the changing of pastors and the fluctuating of its rather floating membership. The pastors from 1896 to the present time are as follows: Father Stanislaus Altmann, O. S. B., two terms, 1896-1900, and 1904-1905; Father Benno Feser, O. S. B., 1900-1903; Father Joseph Sittenauer, 1903-1904; Father Martin Veth, O. S. B., 1905-1907; Father Alphonse Filian, O. S. B., the present pastor, who took charge of the parish in November, 1907.

Peter E. Lear

In the early days of Doniphan County there were many hardships. The men who took part in the early history of the county and surmounted all of the terrific obstacles, helped to lay the foundation for the splendid citizenship which they have since acquired. Doniphan County, now in the forefront of the state's vanguard of progress, is a monument to them. There is no man in this vicinity, however, who had a less promising boyhood than Peter E. Lear, the enterprising and popular Lear, the enterprising and popular restaurateur and grocer of White Cloud.

Mr. Lear has the unique distinction of being born in a dugout. His parents, Mr. and Mrs. P. N. Lear, were on a small tract of land in Jewell County, Kan., and it was in this section that young Peter E. first saw the light of day on Oct. 9, 1878. In the winter of 1880, when young Lear was only a boy, his father and mother started back to their old home at Pickin, Ill. They obtained a covered wagon and a team, and, driving what stock they had before them, the family started bravely out over the prairies.

When near White Cloud, young Peter's grandmother, Mrs. Catherine Spicer, who had made her home with the family for several years, became seriously ill. This necessitated a stop and the services of a physician. For several days she hovered between life and death, but finally became better, and the family started out again. It was in November when they were finally able to go on, but the river had become so high it was impossible to cross and consequently the elder Mr. Lear had no alternative other than to remain in Doniphan County.

When old enough, Peter E. Lear went to the public schools of the county, and obtained such education as they afforded, and it was not much. His parents needed his help and so at an age when most boys in these times are beginning to plan for their years in high school, young Lear was forced to get out into the world and hoe his own row. He was not daunted, however, and faced the struggle for existence bravely, working at odd jobs in the vicinity for whatever he could get, and giving the most of his earnings to his mother and father.

His present prosperous business was started on a capital of $50 borrowed from a friend. It was difficult at first to get patronage, but by his good management, cheerfulness and practice of always giving quality along with quantity, he has built up one of the largest and best cash stores in Doniphan County. Mr. Lear has earned the respect of the community by his determination to overcome all obstacles. He has today the only cash store in White Cloud and it is liberally patronized by the citizens who recognize in its proprietor a good citizen and an able and efficient merchant.

John H. Lynds

Well-Known White Cloud Pioneer Has an Interesting Historical and Successful Career—Came to Doniphan County in 1857 and Is One of the Oldest Living Residents of the Town—Was a Steamboat Hand in the Early Days of the War and Saw Service on a Federal Gunboat.

There are many residents of Doniphan County living at the present time, whose history dates back to the stirring pioneer days, but it is doubtful if any can equal in thrilling excitement and hair-breadth escapes from death the unusually interesting career of John H. Lynds. Now White Cloud is a comparatively modern town, with sidewalks, street lights, plate glass fronts and automobiles, but in the days when Mr. Lynds first lived there, the most common sight was the ox team and linch-pin wagon and the native Indian, whose glory was short-lived after the arrival of white settlers, despite the desperate attempts of the red men to drive back civilization from their hunting grounds. There was no town then; the rolling prairies boasted no house of shingles and lath; the few white settlers had hastily constructed cabins of logs hewn on the spot, but of wigwams and tepees there were scores. These Indian lodges were not scattered hither and thither, but always several in a bunch, constituting a village, and always near fresh water, either a running stream or spring, thus establishing themselves safe in case of attack from hostile tribes. They did not fear attacks from white settlers unprovoked; it was only when they at first committed depredations that they were made to feel the wrath of their pale-faced brethren.

Locating in White Cloud with his parents in 1857, John H. was endowed with all the observing powers of an eleven-year-old boy. He has a vivid recollection of events in the ensuing years, and his mind scintillates with thrilling occurrences of those primitive days. The Kansas territory was a wild portion of Uncle Sam's domain, and many of the stories of lawless acts committed by the various bands of robbers and law-breakers, and the wonderful tales of the hunts they had in those days, are vouched for by Mr. Lynds. It was in May, 1857, that the family reached White Cloud and, although the country was wild and unsettled, there soon began to be the smattering of a town, built up along the river; that is, it was a town for those days. The forest had been cleared back a distance, and the householders began to think of industries and more determined civilization.

After living five years, almost to a day, in White Cloud, young John decided he would have a change of scenery and environment, so, in 1862, he started out to see the world on his own account. The first stop was at Atchison, where he worked for a time in the Commercial House, and later transferred his labors to the Massasoit House, operated at the time by Thomas Murphy. As he performed his various duties, he would sometimes overhear parts of a conversation detailing the picturesque life of a sailor, and there would come to his mind the saucy vessels that plied up and down the river between St. Joseph and Omaha, past his old home.

The work was all new to him, so he did not start out as a full-fledged seaman, but he soon overcame the mysteries of engineering, and so adept did he become that on a trip down South he was offered and accepted a position with Uncle Sam. He was assigned gunboat service, where he remained until the close of the Civil War. He performed excellent work, but, strange to say, Mr. Lynds was never in such danger during military service as he was destined to be on several occasions later during civil life.

Coming back to St. Louis after hostilities had been declared off, the young man decided the best way to master marine engineering and machinery would be to work for awhile in a machine plant, so he secured a position with the Fulton Foundry Works, then the largest plant of its kind in the Mound City. It was while in the employ of this corporation that he learned the machine and blacksmith trade, which he realized was a necessary adjunct to the trade of engineering.

After becoming a master mechanic in those two trades, Mr. Lynds again took to steam boating, and held a responsible position on the St. Louis and New Orleans packet, Stonewall, when that steamer burned to the water's edge on the night of October 28, 1868. It was a terrible experience, and one that will always stand out vividly to Mr. Lynds. The awful glare of the flames, the dark, lapping waters below awaiting their prey, the strained faces of those who were brave, and the cries of those who could not restrain their terror, made a night long to be remembered. Nearly all on board were lost. The crew and passengers numbered 260 souls, and Mr. Lynds was among the few who escaped with their lives. As the flames crept closer and closer where he stood on the burning desk, he leaped into the chilly waters and, grasping an old wheelbarrow which the firemen had used in passing coal, he propelled himself to the shore. Needless to say, the experience left its mark, and the youthful sailor was in a precarious condition for days, but his strong constitution asserted itself, and he gradually regained his health and strength.

On the first day of August, 1870, Mr. Lynds was married to Mrs. Emily Price in St. Louis, and the honeymoon was spent on the journey to White Cloud, where his mother lived. Not many brides can tell of a honeymoon spent on a river barge, but it was considered something of a luxury then, although Mrs. Lynds must have trembled every time the boat did, when she recalled her husband's late experience. She prevailed on him to keep away from the river and its treachery in the future, so he agreed, as is becoming a young bridegroom, and engaged in the livery business with his stepfather, J. C. Pierce, which lasted for just about a year. The livery business was good, as not many farmers owned light buggies, and it was the custom for lovesick youths to hire a spick and span top buggy on Sundays or perhaps Wednesday evenings, and take their lady loves for a little airing. The buggy then was as much of a luxury as an automobile now, and the ownership of such a vehicle immediately established a farmer a member of the "four hundred," if indeed, there was such a distinction in the days of our fathers.

In the spring of 1871 the river began to sing lovingly to Mr. Lynds as it wound itself lazily along the shores of his home town, and the waterbug got into his system so strong that he sold his interest in the livery business and bought an interest in a ferry boat in conjunction with C. W. Noyes of St. Joseph and J. W. Moore. Mr. Noyes later became prominently identified in wholesale circles in St. Joseph, being the junior member of the firm of Noyes-Norman Shoe Company. He died recently, and left a bequest to the city in his will, providing for the establishment of a hospital for the poor. Later this navigator bought out both of the other shareholders in the boat, and operated the service on his own account.

Notwithstanding the mishaps that befell him, river life evidently had a strong fascination for the subject of this sketch, as he operated the ferry continuously from that time for the amazing period of forty-one years. He owned at different times the ferry-boats, White Cloud, Roy Lynds (which he had built in Louisville, Kentucky), the Minona which was replaced by the Harry Lynds, a boat built at White Cloud, using the machinery with which the Minona was equipped. The ferry was operated until about three years ago, when the Harry Lynds inadvertently struck a snag, which resulted in her sinking to the bottom of the treacherous Missouri. Since that time there has been no permanent or regular ferry in White Cloud. A ferry boat was an expensive investment in the early days. While Mr. Lynds had a regular schedule for trips, still it is of record that on many occasions simply to be obliging he made an extra trip, or waited a stated length of time for a patron of his service. The people of White Cloud did not realize what an advantage the ferry was until they were deprived of its service by the sinking of the Harry Lynds. Between St. Joseph, Missouri, and Rulo, Nebraska, there is no bridge spanning the river, and the boat was absolutely the only means of conveyance for persons wishing to go from Kansas to Missouri, or from Nebraska to Missouri, without the expense of a long railroad trip to the nearest bridge.

While Mr. Lynds was busy with the ferry line, he did not confine himself to that particular business. In 1878 he bought the steamer Dells, and operated that boat in connection with the railroad between White Cloud and Brownville, Nebraska. The Dells fared well on a number of successful trips, but on October 28, 1878, just ten years after the disaster to the Stonewall, the steamer was caught in a heavy snowstorm and went to the bottom, after striking a snag forty miles above White Cloud, near Beriday, Nebraska. Mr. Lynds was the pilot, and he had a terrible time swimming ashore. Even after he had conquered the battling waves and reached the shore, he would then have dropped back into the river had not willing hands rendered quick assistance. Two men who were on the boat were drowned. On reading the story of that world disaster, the fate of the Titanic, Mr. Lynds could well imagine the emotions of those men and women to whom death seemed imminent, as he had on two occasions been very near death in a watery grave.

After the loss of the Dells, this doughty old pilot concluded to quit steamboating. His financial loss was enormous, as the steamer was loaded with wheat, and the cargo was a total loss, without a penny of insurance. The water had been a fickle friend, so while he still operated the ferry, his decision not to invest any more capital in steamboats was final and irrevocable, and his reasons were surely sufficient.

When this worthy business man first began shipping grain, over forty years ago, the loading was done with an old-style scoop shovel. Compare with that laborious and tedious method the modern way of loading by cups run on a belt from the boot of the elevator. The former way was manual labor, the new way is machine work and automatic, loading ten cars in the time formerly required for one. In 1883 he formed a partnership with Howard Vanderslice, now of Kansas City, in the wood and timber business, and later in the grain business, and the latter firm has been continuously in business ever since. The grain business prospered and grew to such proportions that it was necessary for Mr. Vanderslice to move to Kansas City and open a grain commission business. This business has expanded to such an extent that it is now ranked in the financial journals as one of the leading firms operating on the Kansas City Board of Trade. To buy and sell grain through the medium of a board of trade, and on the open market, requires shrewd judgment, and evidently this equipment is possessed in abundance by both members of the firm, as prosperity and wealth have come to them as a result of their deals.

Mr. Lynds and Mr. Vanderslice also engaged in the ice manufacturing business, and in 1896 built a plant in Kansas City, with a capacity of thirty-five tons a day. They have added constantly to the ice business. They bought several other plants and now operate seven ice factories, with a capacity of twelve hundred tons a day, beside a number of cold storage establishments. These cold storage houses are indeed a boon to the people of a country known far and wide as the producer of fine fruits and berries, and these two men were foresighted enough to anticipate the need and profit thereby.

In 1913 the two partners reorganized their ice business and several new stockholders were taken in. The business was capitalized at $1,000,000. On January 1, 1915, the capital stock of the commission firm was increased to $100,000, which fact will give a fair indication of the great expanse of the business. These figures merely indicate that while Mr. Lynds is honored as a desirable citizen and upright man, he has advanced also in a pecuniary way.

For several years Mr. Lynds was engaged as contractor on grading and river work by the Burlington Railroad. He built the Grand Island spur from Stouts to Highland, and the work is so substantial that it will take years of wind and weather before repairs will be needed. He did not leave White Cloud, but appointed a boss to oversee the work, and the Burlington knew that if John Lynds accepted the contract he would see to it that competent labor was employed and honest work performed, so good was his reputation. He has been offered contracts which he had to turn down on account of the job being too far from home. He always remunerated his employes well for their work, and in turn he received service that was a tribute to his integrity and honesty with his fellow man.

For a number of years, John H. endeavored to dispose of his grain business, in which he took such a keen interest. Lately a deal was consummated whereby he sold out his interests along this line, including all of his elevators and the flour mill at White Cloud.

In 1894 the subject of this sketch lost his first wife, by whom he had four sons: John H., Jr., the eldest, who is connected with the ice company in Kansas City, and the other three, William L., Oliver S. and Roy E., are in California. All in business for themselves. It was a great bereavement to lose his helpmate when a great part of his troubles were over, but he was thankful that the children were no longer babies, and had the care of a mother past the tender ages of childhood. The boys all reflect their father's business acumen, and will doubtless succeed in whatever line they assume.

In 1906, after remaining true to the memory of the dead for a dozen years, Mr. Lynds took to himself a second companion in the person of Mrs. Lucinda Thorp of White Cloud, and the next year he moved to Kansas City temporarily. Mrs. Lucinda Thorp was well known and a highly respected widow of White Cloud, and everyone was glad to see the union of two such worthy people. She had one daughter, Marian V., who was later adopted by Mr. Lynds. Mr. Lynds retains citizenship in White Cloud, where he votes at all elections, and takes pride in the fact that he never cast a vote anywhere else. Doniphan County is good enough for John H. Lynds.

Emil L. Marker

Formerly Editor of the White Cloud Globe—Came to Doniphan County from Indiana—In Furniture and Undertaking Business Since 1910.

One qualification which is indispensable in an undertaker is to be a true Christian. He should also be a living example in the community of all that tends to the betterment of this world. In Emil L. Marker, who has been a White Cloud undertaker for five years, such a man is exemplified. He has the power to be pleasant and tactful under any circumstances, and he exercises it always. It is his duty to perform necessary things for many bereaved families, to be sympathetic and to constantly meet with situations of a nature much more delicate than those found in ordinary business. This young man, who is adapted to his business, meets all these requirements and conducts a majority of the funerals in White Cloud in a manner which convinces one that he is well fitted for the calling.

Ryan & Marker's Furniture Store and Masonic Hall in White Cloud.

Mr. Marker was born in Evansville, Indiana, November 18, 1872, and was educated in the public schools in Indiana. May 16, 1894, he was married to Miss Mary Eleanor Ryan, who was born in Fairfield, Illinois, March 11, 1873, at the home of her parents in White Cloud, the Rev. Mr. E. Combie Smith officiating. Reverend Smith is now pastor of the Maple Avenue Methodist Church of St. Louis, but at the time of their marriage was pastor of the White Cloud Methodist Church. Mrs. Marker was a favorite with everyone, and one of the most popular girls in White Cloud. She is one of the women who presides over her home with that air of dignity and gentleness, so much admired by women who do not possess such qualities. Mr. and Mrs. Marker have one son, Charles Ryan, who was born May 1, 1895, in Evansville, Indiana. The good qualities of the parents are inherited by their son, and he is among the "elite" in White Cloud. He graduated in the White Cloud high school May, 1913.

The subject of this sketch at one time had an inclination for the newspaper game, and in the summer of 1898 bought the White Cloud Globe from the Newland boys, his first issue being June 9. Prior to this time he had no knowledge of the printer's trade, and he has experienced all the trials and tribulations of the country editor, and especially one who has had to learn the trade from the beginning. He knows what it is to pick up a pied form and to coax the gasoline engine to make just a few more turns when the latter threatened to balk just as the last hundred copies of the paper are being printed. He has enjoyed the delights of washing type with lye, and has experienced the thrills of happenings when the paper sticks on the rollers when the roller composition was as hard as the heart of an indignant subscriber, and a customer was waiting for the horse sale bills. He has spun an army press and has pulled a Washington hand press, and is familiar with every phase of newspaper work.

As a country editor he has been through the various vicissitudes, for the days of the country editor "are long and full of trouble." Thus Mr. Marker can tell you how delightful it is to set up legal notices in the tiny "six point," and to juggle the irregular sized "nine point." Probably he has pacified many an angry mother who threatened to "just stop her paper," because the devil spelled her daughter's name "Mabelle" instead of "Maybelle."

However, Mr. Marker smoothed over all these little griefs, which annoy an editor like mosquitoes sting a man floundering in a swamp, and made many friends in his neighborhood. His paper was newsy, and was well edited. He was even-tempered and never threw the shooting stick at a man who wouldn't pay for a bill of sale because a period was turned upside down. He was successful, but finally decided to go into the furniture and undertaking business with his father-in-law, Mack Ryan. They engaged in this business March 15, 1910. However, Mr. Marker did not give up his paper immediately, but continued to run it until August 11, 1910, when he sold out to Miss Anna Mallows, the present editor.

Mr. Marker is endowed with a great business ability and could make a success of any vocation he chose to take up. In everything he displays the same even temper and courtesy that made him popular as an editor. These gifts, together with his efficiency, make him one of the leading citizens of White Cloud. He is an active member of the Masonic lodge, and, notwithstanding the fact that he is a busy man, he is nearly always on hand at the meetings of the lodge.

McINTIRE RYAN

Prominent White Cloud Undertaker and Merchant Is a Self-Made Man.

There is no better example in all of Doniphan County of a self-made man than McIntire Ryan, the popular and well-to-do undertaker and furniture dealer of White Cloud. He had few opportunities when a boy and yet has emerged from the maelstrom of life's struggle with a plenty of this world's goods and the respect and admiration of his fellow townsmen, not only in his home but throughout the entire country.

Mr. Ryan was born in Richland County, Ill., Oct. 22, 1851, and when almost an infant his father died, leaving his mother a widow. He was compelled at an early age, when most young boys were receiving their common school education and planning for college, to set out for himself and make his living. When fifteen years old he resolved to become a blacksmith, and after serving an apprenticeship of three years in his native county, he started out into the world.

On May 20, 1872, he was married in Fairfield, Ill., to Miss Martha A. Fitzgerald, and the two came to White Cloud in April, 1878. Mr. Ryan entered the employ of Payne and Harris, blacksmiths, and later he formed a partnership with B. Payne, which continued until the latter's death, after which he continued alone. In February of 1910 Mr. Ryan's health became bad and he suffered a general breakdown of his muscular system, forcing him to retire. A month later, however, he formed a partnership with his son-in-law, E. L. Marker, and the two are engaged in the furniture and undertaking business.

Although he is to be found at the store every day, Mr. Ryan is taking life easy. He makes his home with Mrs. Mary E. Marker, his daughter, and is thoroughly contented. On May 17, 1904, Mr. Ryan suffered a sad blow through the death of his wife, who was well and favorably known in the county. Mr. Ryan is active in all matters pertaining to White Cloud. He has been an Odd Fellow for thirty-six years and a Mason for thirty-three years, being a thirty-second degree member of Caswell Consistory of Scottish Rite Masons at Kansas City, Kan. Also he is a charter member of the White Cloud Chapter, No. 233, Order of Eastern Star.

MRS. MARY E. H. DAVIS

White Cloud's Popular Milliner and Dress Maker Is a Pioneer Woman of the West—Crossed the Oregon Trail to Washington in the Early Days With Her Husband, Who Was a Noted Hunter—Kept a Hotel in the Blue Mountains Five Years.

Mrs. Mary E. H. Davis, popular as a milliner and dressmaker in White Cloud, is one of the pioneer women of the West, who has seen more experiences than most women ever dreamed of. Mrs. Davis is the widow of the late Charles Orren Davis, noted as a hunter of wild animals and also as a taxidermist.

Mrs. Davis, who was Miss Mary Haggard, is a native of New York, and was born December 15, 1843, near the town of Carthage in that state, growing to womanhood and receiving her education there. Her marriage to Charles Orren Davis was on January 7, 1861. Mr. Davis was born at Collins, Vermont, August 2, 1829, and was educated at Montpelier.

The times were ripe for adventure when these two were married and set out upon life's broad highway. The great wild, untamed West was calling to the Green Mountain boys and to the hardy daughters of the Knickerbocker state. Mr. and Mrs. Davis set out for the West and in 1863 made the long journey over the old Oregon trail, crossing the broad stretch of wild prairie country, then through the mountains, and on to Walla Walla, in the now state of Washington.

From there Mr. and Mrs. Davis went to the Blue Mountains in Oregon and conducted the Summit Hotel for five years. It was in the days before the Indians disappeared from the mountains and plains and when travel was perilous, but with brave hearts and steady heads and hands they passed through it all with safety and thoroughly enjoyed their pioneering.

During his residence in the Blue Mountains Mr. Davis' boyhood training in his native Green Mountains reasserted itself. He became a noted hunter and trapper, making a record for marksmanship and skillful hunting that any man could be proud of. His record of big game killed was 55 bear, 37 elk and 15 mountain lions.

After their five years' experience in the hotel business Mr. and Mrs. Davis pulled up stakes and came back east as far as Doniphan County. They located in White Cloud in 1869, where after a residence of forty-four years, Mr. Davis died, the date being June 19, 1913.

For many years Mr. Davis gave much attention to mounting birds and animals and was considered an expert taxidermist. He left a large and very valuable collection.

Mrs. Mary E. H. Davis.

Mrs. Davis has been engaged in the millinery and dress making business for many years, having entered the business soon after she and her husband came to live in White Cloud. She is a thorough business woman and has merited a liberal patronage from the people of the town and surrounding country. She owns her neat home in White Cloud and expects to spend her remaining years in the town. Mrs. Davis enjoys the high esteem of the people. She is honored both as one of the pioneers and as a truly good and noble Kansas woman.

Highland Station, Now Sparks

Highland Station, now Sparks, is located on Section 21, Town 2, Range 20, in Iowa Township, a station on the Burlington & Missouri Railroad; was laid off by a town company in the winter of 1869-70; the original site consisted of 40 acres.

The Methodist Episcopal Church of White Cloud

Has Experienced Many Vicissitudes—Is One of the Leading Churches of the Town—The Pastor, Rev. W. A. Saville, Is on the Alert at All Times.

(By Rev. W. A. Saville, D.D., Ph. D.)

As to writing a history of this church, I find many things in the way of giving any accurate account of its origin and history to the present. On former occasions I have found the same trouble destroying or carelessly losing documents and papers of various kinds. I have been able to gather from persons living here a few facts who can go back to the beginning of this church in White Cloud.

I will endeavor to give the facts as gathered, but dates and persons may be somewhat mixed, and not perfectly reliable.

This church was organized here in 1857, by Rev. A. L. Douney, who reported thirty members, in a frame building, where the Catholic Church now stands. In 1859 the place of meeting was changed and until the erection of a church building, services were held on the second floor of the building now occupied by Mr. Cash, near the depot. The second preacher was Rev. C. Graham, who served two years. The Rev. Mr. Green was the third preacher to serve the church. The Rev. Mr. R. L. D. Price served as fourth minister until 1862. Rev. B. F. Bowman served later.

In 1863 the members decided to erect the present edifice. This was not completed until 1868. Rev. D. P. Mitchell, then presiding elder, dedicated the church, and Rev. C. J. Lovejoy was pastor. The foundation was laid by O. C. Whitney, and the carpenter work was done by R. S. Wakefield and a Mr. Harris.

In 1877 the members bought of Wm. Farrell, his residence on the corner next to the church. This was used as a parsonage until 1904, when the old buildings were removed and the present parsonage was built. Hub Wakefied was the contractor and builder. This place and Highland, four years from the beginning of our work here, constituted a charge.

As to the pastors who have served this church, I am unable to give the names of all nor the year of their pastorate until 1874, when I joined the Kansas conference, and from then until 1883, I have kept the annual minutes, and so can give names and with some degree of accuracy. Rev. O. B. Gardner before 1864. In 1869 Rev. D. B. Campbell was appointed pastor, having been transferred from the Pittsburg conference. He preached here two years. In 1871 Reverend Hodge was pastor and in 1872 Rev. Wm. Smith served the church for two years. In 1874 B. F. Parlett was appointed pastor. White Cloud was made a separate charge in 1875, and L. C. Biggs was appointed. In 1876 this place and Highland were again united and the Atchison district was formed, which took in White Cloud and Biggs was returned to this charge, Highland and White Cloud. In 1877 L. V. Morton was appointed. In 1878 there was another division and this place was set off to itself and Morton was returned. In 1879 Leander Lafferty took charge. During 1880, 1881 and 1882 C. Minear was pastor.

At this conference the Northwest Kansas Conference was organized, and as my appointment was in that conference, I was no longer a member of the Kansas conference and so have no minutes to refer to. I am unable to give you names of the pastors; but few dates. Reverends Campbell, Combie Smith, Richard Gano, 1901; Knake, McCurdy, two years and later returned for one year. C. S. Freark, 1885-1887, John Tresize in 1888-1889, J. T. Shackelford had charge of the work part of a year; Corkell three years clerk. In 1890-91 the church was without a pastor. Levi Hedden, March, 1909, and reappointed 1910, but resigned in November, from then until March, 1912, the church was without a pastor, when the writer, a superannuated member of the Genessee conference (N. Y.) was secured as a supply.

As to any history of these pastors I can only give a limited account.

Rev. O. B. Gardner was killed by guerrillas, Oct. 19, 1864, while chaplain of the 13th Kansas infantry.

D. B. Campbell died at his home, Robinson, Kansas, July 27, 1888. Wm. Smith died on board a ship returning to this country. B. F. Parlett is a superannuated member now living at Waterloo, Okla. L. C. Biggs died May 10, 1904. Chas. Minear died Sept. 14, 1909. Combie Smith is now a member of the St. Louis conference stationed in Kansas City. C. S. Freark is a superannuated member living at Topeka. Geo. D. Knadi died at Robinson

White Cloud Christian Church.

April 14, 1892. Levi Hedden transferred to the Nebraska conference.

Out of the large number of pastors, White Cloud has had six who have died, two have been transferred to other conferences, three still members of the Kansas conference, but are not in active work.

As to the present pastor, I commenced my ministry with the Kansas conference in 1874, after graduating at Drew Theological Seminary in 1875. I was sent to Robinson, Brown County. The 19th of January, 1876, I married Christiana M. Campbell, daughter of Rev. D. B. Campbell, who was a former pastor here.

In 1882, I was sent to Solomon City, which put me in the Northwest Kansas conference. Was presiding elder of the Elsworth district. In October, 1897, was transferred to the Holston (Tennessee) conference; October, 1902, transferred to the Genessee (N. Y.) conference.

Owing to failing health I asked to be superannuated which was granted October, 1907. We removed to Virginia, trusting the climate would be of benefit to us both. Finally we decided to come back to the state where we had spent so many years in the active work of the ministry and to be near Mrs. Saville's relations. January, 1912, we came to St. Joseph.

In 1912 Doctor Stavely desired me to become pastor here, as conditions were such that it could not be filled from the conference. I consented to do so for one year, and so far it has lengthened into three.

On May 8, 1866, the society obtained a charter according to the laws of the state, elected trustees and set themselves to work to raise funds to build a church edifice. After working all day and beginning to feel discouraged, the pastor succeeded in getting J. H. Utt to head the subscription paper with $300. At his liberality the town took on a new impetus and in a few hours $1,500 was raised, and the day's work closed with promises of $2,700. The ladies organized a sewing society to assist in raising funds, and worked diligently until the structure was completed. It is a brick building, 38x62 feet, and the cost was $9,000. The basement is stone and the audience room is brick. From various causes, the contractor failed to enclose the building, and with only one gable up, the church stood during the winter and on April 24, 1867, withstood the shock of an earthquake which was felt throughout the Missouri valley. That year the church was enclosed and services held in it. The Rev. Mr. P. M. Buck of the North Indian conference, was the first minister to preach in the church. The Rev. Mr. C. J. Lovejoy was pastor in 1868, and by his untiring efforts the church was completed and furnished in the fall of that year, and dedicated to the worship of Almighty God, by the Rev. Mr. A. B. Leonard, presiding elder of the Leavenworth district.

I wish I could give a more accurate history of the church, but I have not the facts at hand.

WHITE CLOUD CHRISTIAN CHURCH

Historical House of Religious Worship Has Encountered Many Vicissitudes Since the First Church Building Was Erected in 1868—Original Members Scattered and Church Was Abandoned for Lack of a Congregation— Is Now a Strong Christian Body With a Membership of 106 and an Enrolled Sunday School Class of About 170—Rev. Mr. Reeves the Pastor, a Consistent Worker.

The Christian Church of White Cloud may truly be said to have had its ups and downs since it was first organized in 1868. In all of the forty-six years since the first little congregation got together there were about twenty-three years of that time that no services at all were held in the church building.

The fact that the Christian Church of White Cloud failed to thrive and prosper in the many years of its existence is not due to a lack of zeal on the part of the people professing that faith. When the church was organized the community was small and struggling. Many of the early members moved to other parts of the country and there were not sufficient left to maintain a minister.

The Christian Church of White Cloud has an interesting history that may be read with interest by the younger element who have not, and cannot have, any adequate conception of the difficulties that had to be encountered by their grandsires in trying to maintain a house of worship in the early days.

It is a significant coincidence that the congregation of the Christian Church of White Cloud attends services in the same building that was erected in 1868, notwithstanding the fact that between times the building was utilized as a skating rink, a hay barn and a place of worship for the colored brethren occasionally. The building as erected in 1868 was a substantial brick structure, and it served the needs of business, amusement and worship alike.

When the members of the Christian faith in White Cloud and vicinity first discussed the necessity of having a place for church services, there were not many in that section of Doniphan County. The first services were held in the Beeler school house out in the country and the old school house in town, which has later been transformed into a Catholic church.

Finally the members decided they were numerically strong enough to have a building of their own, and plans were made for erecting one. The first trouble which developed was the selection of a site, many of the Christian folks who resided out in the country contending that the most suitable location for the new church would be out near the Beeler school house.

Eventually it was decided to build the church on the edge of town, thus getting the church as near to the country members as possible, while at the same time not overlooking the convenience of the members in White Cloud. R. S. Wakefield did all the carpenter work on the building and John Hook made the brick. The total cost was about $2,000. The chief promoters of the building were William Beeler, Elias Penny, John Hook and David March.

Previous to the erection of the church there was a lively debate held in the old school house between two Christian Church ministers and a Universalist. The old members still living remember the event and can recall many of the striking incidents of the occasion. The Christian Church ministers were Reverend Mr. Parker and Reverend Mr. Lawson, and their Universalist opponent was an old religious fire-eater named Reverend Mr. Huston. The debate caused genuine frontier excitement, but it was concluded without any unpleasant features being added.

Mrs. Susan March, of White Cloud, is the only living member of the organization which established the first church. She is still a member in good standing of the present church body. All the others who were instrumental in having the church built are now dead, or have completely disappeared from this section of the country.

For the first few years after the Christian Church was built, the members employed a pastor or two, but the support was not sufficient to keep a minister there permanently. The old church organization broke up before very long and for twenty-three years there was no service in the building, except when the colored people were given permission to use it. Even with the black brethren, religious sentiment got down to a low ebb, and the church building was sub-let for use as a skating rink, and for several years J. S. Springer used it for a feed house and hay barn.

But the Christian Church was bound to come to life again, and it was very promisingly revived in July, 1891, when the Rev. W. W. Blalock was engaged to hold an evangelistic service in the old building. The fruits of this meeting were a reorganization of the church with about seventy members, and from that time to the present, regular services have been held.

The charter members of the reorganized congregation still living in White Cloud are Mrs. Susan March, Mrs. Anna March, William March, Mrs. Ella Penny, and Miss Anna Mallows, and Mrs. Henry Hook.

Country charter members include Mrs. Jessie Fillmore and Mrs. Sarah Nuzum. Other charter members still living are Mrs. Lyda Massey, Iowa Point, Mrs. N. P. Springer and Mrs. Maud Brown of Kansas City, Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Utt, and Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Peek, now in California.

Mr. and Mrs. Osgood and Son, George McKinlay

Among the younger business men of Doniphan County, there are none any better known than is Geo. H. Osgood, the popular cashier of the State Bank of A. Poulet at White Cloud.

Mr. Osgood is one of Doniphan County's native sons and is a true Kansan; speaks the Kansas language and says that he has never been able to find the words "can't" and "defeat" in the Kansas language.

He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Osgood, both early settlers of White Cloud. He was reared in White Cloud, where he attended the White Cloud public school until his second year in high school, when his father died, making it necessary for him to quit school and help supply the family table and home.

Mr. and Mrs. George H. Osgood, and Master George McKinlay.

For a few years he clerked in stores in White Cloud and also worked one summer on the farm. In 1903 he accepted an offer of the position of bookkeeper in the bank of A. Poulet, at that time a private bank owned by Alexis Poulet, the pioneer banker of Doniphan County. After three months he was informed that he could stay "on the job," and that he would then draw $15 per month as a salary.

On July 1, 1903, the bank was incorporated under the name of the State Bank of A. Poulet, and Mr. Osgood was elected assistant cashier with a salary of $30 per month. From that day on, Mr. Osgood has been "on the job," and he has enjoyed watching the bank grow from a $35,000 to a $150,000 business, and today is one of the heaviest stockholders, on the board of directors and the cashier of the bank, beside owning one of the nicest eighty acres of land in northeastern Kansas, and his home in White Cloud.

Like all other sound-minded men, Mr. Osgood knew that man was not meant to travel alone in this world, and in November, 1913, he was married to Miss Edna L. McKinlay of Wichita, Kansas, who had been the principal of the White Cloud high school for the preceding two years.

On December 10, 1914, George McKinlay arrived, and has been scattering sunshine around the Osgood home ever since.

NELLIE AGNES KENT

Popular Assistant Postmistress at White Cloud Is Native of Doniphan County.

To be entrusted with the responsibilities of a bustling postoffice is no small job and one that requires an immense amount of patience and attention to detail. There are many matters which come up daily for quick action, and while they might seem trivial to the uninitiated, they are of vital importance to the United States government. A person to make a successful postoffice clerk must be clear headed, quick and painstaking. Such is Miss Nellie Agnes Kent, assistant postmistress at White Cloud.

Miss Nellie Agnes Kent.

This young woman who has made such a success, is a native of Doniphan County, and has all of the qualities that are inherent in dear old Doniphan's sons and daughters. Her parents are Mr. and Mrs. John Spencer Finley Kent, one of the best and most respected families within the confines of the county lines. Mr. Kent was born in Missouri on Dec. 25, Christmas Day, 1869, and Mrs. Kent, who was Miss Nora Ellen Simpson, was born in Ohio, Dec. 8, 1874.

The subject of this sketch first saw the light of day on Aug. 30, 1890, at White Cloud, where she has since resided. All of Nellie's early education was received in the graded schools of her home town. She was ambitious as a young girl, and before graduating from the primary grades, made up her mind to complete a high school course.

All through her four years' course she applied herself earnestly and devoted a large part of her time to reading the best books that could be obtained. She was an exceptional student and no amount of work seemed to cause her the least trouble.

As a result of this close application she was graduated from the White Cloud High School on May 10, 1907, with the highest honors. At that time nearly every young woman who came forth into the world from the four years' course, prepared for teaching. It was the most agreeable work, in many ways, that could be found, and it always was renumerative. Then, while teaching, the young women were close to home, where they could come for a visit over Saturday and Sunday. The young lady in question, however, was different from the others. She was original and decided upon a business career. So after various occupations and much further study in addition to her high school course, she entered the employ of the United States government on Oct. 21, 1912, serving under James P. Kelley, the present postmaster.

The routine of the postoffice was new to her, but she was determined to master it, and she has surely succeeded. Today there is no more efficient clerk in the state, and Mr. Kelley has been exceptionally fortunate. He can at any time leave her in charge while other matters are demanding his personal attention, and feel positive that the important business of Uncle Samuel will be carried on as efficiently as if he were present. Miss Kent is not only courteous and painstaking, but she gives to her work the thought and care which must be expended if that work is to be a standard of ability. She knows the names of every man, woman and child, not only in White Cloud, but on the rural routes as well, and there is never any delay in the sorting and delivery of mail after it reaches White Cloud.

Nellie Agnes has one brother, Charles Thomas Kent, who was born Oct. 17, 1895, in Richardson County, Neb., near White Cloud. Her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Kent, are still "young people" in the present sense of the word, and their daughter is a frequent visitor at their home. She is a young woman who bids fair to attain greater heights than those to which she has climbed. In her life's work she can be certain that she has the respect and esteem and the well wishes of all in the community who know her—they are legion.

MISS CICELY LEAR

A Popular White Cloud Young Woman, a High School Graduate, Who Possesses Good Business Ability and Is Qualified for Any Calling She May Choose—Sister of Peter Lear, Well-Known Restaurateur.

White Cloud is the home of Miss Cicely Lear, a popular Doniphan County girl who possesses business ability to a remarkable degree, in addition to many accomplishments and womanly graces that endear her to the people of the town.

Miss Lear is one of the daughters of the late P. M. Lear, and Mrs. Sarah Lear, now of White Cloud. She was born in that town June 12, 1896, and was educated in the schools of the town, and was an apt student in all her studies and a popular favorite with her teachers and classmates. Graduating from the grade schools she entered the White Cloud high school, where she proved to be proficient in her studies and won good grades. Her vivacity and her winning ways made her popular with all and she was in demand at the social functions of the high school. She was graduated from that school in 1914, under Prof. Claude G. Landrum.

Of such bright young women as Cicely Lear, White Cloud and Doniphan County people have good reason to be proud. Coming from an industrious and ambitious family of high standing in the community, and possessing intelligence, social charms and business capacity, she can be said to be a worthy representative of our Twentieth Century civilization.

Miss Lear is endowed with plenty of pluck to back up her ambitions. She is one of those rare young women who are versatile enough and who possess enough business ability to make a success at school teaching, or in any calling she may choose. She at all times presents a good appearance and impresses one as being a girl of strong personality and unusual brightness. She enjoys the respect and esteem of the community. She is a valued assistant in the business of her brother, Peter Lear, the well known restaurateur and butcher, contributing largely of her excellent services to his success.

Miss Cicely Lear has seven sisters and four brothers. The sisters are: Mrs. C. H. Luphold of White Cloud, Mrs. Firth Dodd of White Cloud, Mrs.

Miss Cicely Lear.

W. E. Wolfey of Hiawatha, and Mrs. Patrick Kirwan of Purcell; Maude (Mrs. Ed. Bell), Kate (Mrs. W. M. Strunk of Robinson). Her brothers are Peter E. Lear, the well known restaurant man and butcher of White Cloud, Charles F. Lear, who assists in the restaurant, Newton Lear, and William Lear, who is in Clarkston, Washington.

WATER MELONS RAISED NEAR TROY

Simpson Boys Shipped Car Load in September, 1914—In Former Days Many Acres Devoted to Melons, But Berries Have Proved to Be Much More Profitable.

While the raising of berries in many localities has proven more profitable than the marketing of melons, and has in many cases supplanted the melon in the neighborhood of Troy, yet several men are still raising water melons for the market. Among the largest growers of melons in Doniphan County are Bert and Fred Simpson, who live on a farm nine miles north of Troy, in Iowa township. They were the only ones last year to market any quantity of melons and in September sent a carload out of town. This was the first carload of melons to be shipped out of Doniphan County. Their melons are of fine flavor and are equal to any that ever caused a coon's eye to bulge and his mouth to water.

However, several other men have made considerable profit in melon raising. These men each produce the fruit on a different kind of soil than any of the others. Abe Sutton, who has a farm five miles north of Troy, raises his melons on the bottom land of Muscotte creek. David O. Graves, who lives five miles southeast of Troy, raises his melons on rolling ground, and his father the late Isaac Graves, devoted several acres to melons and sold them in St. Joseph, Hiawatha and other towns contiguous to Troy.

Bert Wheademe, who lives six miles northwest of Troy, raises his melons among the hills and is usually the first one to market melons.

Thus Troy need not go far from home to get the fruit so palatable in the summer time. Doniphan County water melons also are of as fine flavor as any from the South.

Edward S. Davis opened an office in the Reporter building in Troy about Aug. 25, 1888, for the purpose of buying and selling land.

The Once Famous Eagle Springs

A Quarter of a Century Ago the Rugged, Picturesque Region of Iowa Township Round About Lookout Mountain Was a Popular Summer Resort to Which Thousands of People Went for Recreation and to Drink the Health-Giving Waters of Eagle Springs—Great Gatherings of People There on Sundays.

Something of the History of the Place That Is Now Only a Memory, But Which, Under the Management of an Enterprising Company, Might Be Made a Noted Health Resort—The Waters Chemically Examined Show Fine Medicinal Properties—The Property Was Owned by Prior Plank.

Flowing out of the rocky ledges near the base of the picturesque Lookout mountain in Iowa township, about one mile back from the rugged bluff that skirts the Missouri river, are the Eagle Springs, famous a quarter of a century ago as a popular health resort, with fine hotels and other conveniences that are now gone to decay.

Eagle Springs have a history that goes far back into the years before the foot of white men trod the soil that is now Doniphan County. Tradition had it that the Medicine men of the savage tribes of more than two hundred years ago discovered the healing properties of these waters and performed many miraculous cures among the Indians. There was one Old Baldy.

While Nat C. Bailey was sheriff in 1885, "Old Baldy" was captured at Eagle Springs and placed in the court yard.

spring which the Indians held as sacred, believing it to have been the fountain of perpetual youth. Others of the springs contained in the waters that gurgled out of them such medicinal properties as would cure the various ailments with which the Indians were afflicted.

However truthful these legendary stories may be, it is certain that these springs are health-giving and some day an enterprising company will be formed and around them will be erected a health result that will become famous the world over and a bonanza for their owners.

Along in the 1880's, or rather in 1880 and 1882, these springs were owned by Prior Plank. He had discovered that they were medicinal and he employed expert chemists to examine the waters scientifically. The result of the analysis justified his belief in the springs.

Mr. Plank proceeded at once to put the place in order for a health resort. He caused to be erected two large hotels and provided many other conveniences for the comfort of the thousands who would come there for treatment by drinking the waters and by taking medicinal baths.

They were named Eagle Springs, the name being suggested on account of the numerous eagles that were seen circling the Lookout mountain. The name, too, corresponds with the surroundings. Lookout mountain is the highest point in Doniphan County and from its summit one gets a view of the country for fifty to one hundred miles. From that point one can see over into Missouri, Iowa, Nebraska, as well as over a good portion of our own state of Kansas. Oregon, Forest City, Nodaway and Forbes are to be seen plainly. It is a beautiful view, beside which the famous scenery along the Hudson river in New York state becomes commonplace. A more ideal place for a health resort could not be found anywhere within a thousand miles.

Pryor Plank had the right idea. He advertised the Eagle Springs extensively in the newspapers. One day he and Peter Weidemeier captured a great eagle and took it to Nat C. Bailey, sheriff of Doniphan County. It was placed in a large cage in the court house yard where it was kept alive for years. The eagle helped advertise the Eagle Springs among the people of Doniphan County. Then there is a big mound about twenty feet from the main spring that was supposed to have been made by the mound builders of pre-historic times. It wasn't long until Pryor Plank had the people interested in Eagle Springs.

Then the crowds came, thousands of people. On Sundays they came from all the country round, as far as thirty miles distant, in vehicles of every make and kind. The Burlington & Missouri River railroad, which ran not far from the Eagle Springs, established a station and ran excursions from all points within fifty miles, and the Sunday excursion trains were loaded down with passengers. The excursionists drank of the waters, gathered Indian arrow heads for souvenirs and generally had a good time climbing Lookout mountain and getting the fine view of the Missouri river winding its way along the rugged bluffs and the beautiful farming country situated in the corners of these four states.

Eagle Springs was the kind of a resort the people most desired, possessing all the romance of historic interest, a wealth of natural beauty, pure, cool air and the medicinal waters. Yet Eagle Springs as a financial proposition was another thing. Pryor Plank hadn't the money needed to carry out his great enterprise, according to his ideas, and the patronage of the place, even though they came by thousands, did not help much toward the development of the springs. Thus the great health resort project came to grief. The two hotels were closed and the visitors dropped off until but few came there.

Pryor Plank had come to Doniphan County in 1854, and had purchased the land, which had been pre-empted by his brother, William. It is described on the records as the north half of the northeast quarter of Section 16, Township 2, Range 20, the date of its entry by William Plank being April 12, 1857.

The owner of the Eagle Springs and the promoter of this enterprise was a brilliant scholar and was well liked by the people who knew him. He was at all times affable and obliging. He was the community's walking encyclopedia, for he could tell you anything you desired to know. He kept a diary up to the time of his death, which occurred in Highland in 1913, in which he faithfully and accurately recorded about everything of interest in the line of human events.

The Eagle Springs enterprise was never revived, although frequent movements in that direction were started, though it afterward became popular for a short while on account of a big religious gathering there. It was in the autumn of 1895 that an evangelist known as the Rev. Mr. Wilcox of Chicago, came to Eagle Springs and started a big tent meeting. The Rev. Mr. Wilcox was a soul sleeper Baptist, but his meetings were more in the nature of union services for the people of all denominations.

The tent meetings attracted much attention, being attended by large numbers of people, who were attracted to the place as a fine location for a camp meeting. While the meetings were under way a movement was started to erect a building to be used as a union church. The movement progressed to the point where a committee was appointed by the Rev. Mr. Wilcox. On the committee was Pryor Plank, owner of the ground, who was generous enough to offer a free site for the church. Other members were Edward Thornton, James Campbell, and John Alfrey.

The union church building plan was launched on a Sunday when there was a great basket picnic and religious gathering at Eagle Springs. It was announced that not much money would be needed, as the building would be erected from logs cut on the ground and squared, the men interested in the building to contribute their labor in this work. The amount of money raised at the collection was only about $11.00.

It was also the purpose of the promoters of the old fashioned log building to use it for a day school if necessary. In the course of the planning, however, there were objections offered to the establishing of a union church and finally the whole project fell through.

The failure of the union church and school project, like the failure of the Eagle Springs health resort enterprise, should not be construed as meaning that there was a lack of merit to them, for a more ideal spot for a summer resort, a health resort or a place for a great religious camp meeting could not be found anywhere within a radius of a thousand miles.

The Eagle Springs property is now owned by Judge J. P. Angle, and while movements to revive these pioneer enterprises have been talked of time and again without anything being done, it is the common belief of our people that some day a great institution will be located there. Why not a great health resort where everybody may go, with a fine sanitarium for invalids; for with the known medical properties in the waters of Eagle Springs, they far surpass many of the noted places and are the equal of those at Excelsior Springs, or of the famous Hot Springs of both Virginia and Arkansas. Also why not make it the seat of a great religious summer camp, a shrine to which the people may make annual pilgrimages and from which may flow a great spiritual activity that will have its influence toward the consummation of that mighty movement to bring the world to the feet of Christ.

Tobias Larson

Editor of the Highland Vidette

Tobias Larson editor of the Highland Vidette, was born in Norway and came to this country when a small boy, where he has resided ever since. He was reared on a farm in Doniphan County and spent the most of his time there until he started out in life for himself. He attended the country school during his boyhood days, and enjoyed the outdoor life to the fullest extent. He brought with him many of the characteristics of the Norwegian people, which have been a guide to him throughout his entire career.

When he became a young man he decided to further his education. He attended Highland College, where he was graduated, being known as a good student during his college days and was closely devoted to the work at hand. He taught school two years, one year being spent at Cedar Creek in District Number 29 and the other year at Arnold District Number 31, both located in Iowa township.

He was married to Miss Elsie Kitzmiller, the daughter of Mr .and Mrs. Frank Kitzmiller, who were well known and respected residents of Doniphan County. To them have been born two bright children, Lavinia and Warren Stanley.

First Masonic Lodge in Kansas

Seven Pioneers of Doniphan County Met Under Dispensation From Grand Lodge of Missouri and Organized Smithfield Lodge No. 1, Under Oak Tree Near Where Mrs. Henry Gummig and August Haupt Reside in Burr Oak Township—Brothers on Horseback Rode the Surrounding Territory to Prevent Outsiders From Witnessing the Ritualistic Work.

The history and romance of Free Masonry in the present State of Kansas is full of thrilling interest, and dates back to November 30, 1854, when the first lodge was instituted in the open air under an oak tree on the site of the old town of Smithton.

The surroundings and conditions were far from ideal to insure the observance of privacy and it was found necessary for three armed brothers to ride horseback through the surrounding country in order to obviate the possibility of eavesdropping or the intrusion of undesirable witnesses on the ritualistic work.

A. K. Wilson of Topeka, Secretary Gra nd Lodge.

John W. McChesney of Kansas City, is the only living person who witnessd any of the proceedings of that memorable day in the history of Kansas Free Masonry. He was fifteen years old at the time and was herding cattle in the timber and prairie surrounding the old townsite of Smithfield when ordered to move his stock away from the South Ridge by Daniel Vanderslice, who approached on horseback with a sword in his hand.

Mr. McChesney has a very vivid recollection of the event and can easily recall to this day that there were two other men on horseback riding about with drawn swords. The fact that he was ordered from the scene so aroused the curiosity of the lad that when he ascertained what was going on he decided then and there to join the fraternity when he got old enough to be admitted, which he did. McMcChesney is well known to most of the residents of Doniphan County and throughout Kansas as a reliable and upright man and his account of the institution of the first lodge is regarded as authentic as any written history of the occasion. He had moved to Smithfield with his father, Andrew McChesney, and the other members of the family when a lad, and had plenty of opportunity to impress his youthful mind with all the events which took place in the little community since the early spring of 1854. For over forty years Mr. McChesney has been the Western representative of the Red Wing Stoneware Company of Red Wing, Minn., with his headquarters in Kansas City.

The petition to the Masonic Grand Lodge of Missouri for a dispensation was signed by nine members of the fraternity residing in the territory of Kansas who were constituted by the Grand Lodge into a regular Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons to be opened in the town of Smithfield and to be known as Smithfield Lodge. The signatures to the petition included those of Harvey Forman, John Whitehead, William P. Richardson, Joseph Crippin, J. W. Smith, E. H. Reinhart, Daniel Vanderslice, James H. Merrill and G. R. Wilson. All of those men were early settlers in the territory and had been members of the order in their former homes. When they decided to institute a lodge in the territory, the petition for a dispensation was presented to the nearest grand body having jurisdiction in all such matters.

The authority to institute the lodge was issued at St. Louis by Alexander O'Sullivan, grand secretary of the Grand Lodge of Missouri, on October 6, 1854. The dispensation named Worshipful Brother John W. Smith, as master of the lodge; Brother E. H. Reinhart, Senior Warden, and Brother D. D. Vanderslice, Junior Warden, for opening Smithfield Lodge and governing the same in the several degrees of entered apprentice, fellowcraft and master mason. The grand secretary transmitted special instructions to Worshipful Master John W. Smith regarding the manner in which the affairs of the lodge should be conducted and reports submitted to the Grand Lodge at the annual communication of that body. The dispensation and instructions were ordered issued by Napoleon B. Giddings, district deputy grand master of the Fifth Masonic District, which was the state of Missouri. The following year a charter was received from the Grand Lodge, and was numbered 140 in the Missouri list of lodges.

The pioneers of Masonry in Kansas were successfully guided by Right Worshipful John W. Smith during his residence in Smithfield, the name of which place was soon afterward changed to Smithton, but even this fact did not help out matters for the future of the town, which in a little time was only a memory in Burr Oak bottoms. The name of the lodge was subsequently changed to Smithton and, although it is now located in Highland, it is officially known by that name to the present day.

While the brothers who instituted the lodge lived up to all the ancient precedents of Masonry in meeting on the top of the highest hill in that vicinity and starting the great lights of Masonry under an oak tree, they did so as much from necessity as from choice. There was no building available for conducting the ritual, such as the members of the fraternity have in modern times, and thus the members present made a virtue of necessity and lived up to the traditions of the order by holding the first communication under the oak on the top of the highest hill.

While there were only seven members of the order at the first meeting to petition for a dispensation, namely Brothers Forman, Whitehead, Richardson, Crippin, Smith, Reinhart and Vanderslice, the names of James H. Merrill and G. R. Wilson were also included among the list attached to the dispensation. This meeting was held in the dugout owned by Brother J. W. Smith, on the site of his town of Smithfield, the name of which he later changed. He had been building a log store house there at the time and made his residence under an overhanging rock which formed a kind of cave and with a little excavation was converted into a veritable dugout. The log house that Smith was engaged in building was later used as a general store run by Jim Bonnefield and his son, Jim, Jr.

In the many years that have elapsed since the institution of the Masonic Lodge at old Smithton, there has been much discussion regarding the place where the earlier meetings were held. One fact that has been unquestionably established is that there were several communications held in the open air. One of the living witnesses to having seen the Masons gather for their meetings in a house built by John W. Smith, is Mrs. Susan McChesney Holt, of Greenleaf, Kansas. Mrs. Holt is a sister of John W. McChesney and she was a slip of a girl at the time the lodge was instituted on the hilltop. She also remembers very well seeing the horsemen ride around with drawn swords to scare away any intruders at subsequent meetings.

Mrs. McChesney Holt has a distinct recollection that after the first few meetings many of the members of the lodge would assemble at Mr. Smith's store, and there did not seem to be any doubt but that they assembled for the purpose of holding a communication. This store building was located on the site of the old Gummig residence, which is still occupied by Mrs. Gummig. The hill where the first meeting of the Masonic Lodge was held is nearby this house, and the oak tree is still there.

There was never any known reason why John W. Smith changed the name of his projected town from Smithfield to Smithton, but it is known to have been done shortly after the dispensation of the lodge was issued. Mr. Smith had hopes of establishing a good town on the site and some people thought that he was impelled to change the name so as to avoid a possible hoodoo, but there was no beneficent effect, as the place became defunct in a short time. Smith, who was a strong abolitionist, had numerous arguments with pro-slavery fellows and in a mix-up with a gang of them one night had an eye knocked out. He had two little girls and, not wishing to rear them in such a troubled and distraught country, he packed up and went East, and that ended the town.

The most authentic written record of the establishment of the Masonic Lodge at Smithton is probably that found in the handwriting of Daniel Vanderslice, who was the junior warden of the lodge at the first communication. This account was evidently prepared with care by Mr. Vanderslice, and it was found among his personal correspondence and papers which were turned over to the grand secretary of the Grand Lodge of Kansas, A. K. Wilson, to be used in preparing a history of pioneer Masonry in Kansas.

The records state that the lodge continued to hold meetings on the hill until John W. Smith had built a log house, or warehouse, as it is called in the minutes of the lodge, and after receiving their charter in June, 1855, the members met at the residence of John H. Whitehead, secretary of the lodge, about ten miles from Smithton, in a corn crib. A village known as Whitehead was located there at the time, but the name was afterward changed to Bellmont. The change was reported to be necessitated because of the large increase in members and the consequent overcrowding of the Smith place at Smithton. The fact that Brother Smith had contemplated putting up a large building for lodge purposes was known to the members at the time, and the change to Whitehead was intended to be only temporary. But the town of Smithton was getting on the ragged edge, and this fact, coupled with Mr. Smith's radical anti-slavery views, caused the projected building to be abandoned, and eventually the town itself.

John W. Smith, First Deputy Grand Master, 1856.

On June 13, 1856, the headquarters of the lodge were changed to the town of Iola, about eight miles northwest of Troy, where Sam Herring resides at present, where the meetings were held in a storeroom owned by Maj. Daniel Vanderslice. There is a school house now on the site of that town. The meetings were held at Iola until November 8, 1856, when the location of the lodge was again changed to the Nemaha Indian agency, where the Brothers met at the residence of T. J. Vanderslice. It is a fact of record that on the nights when the communications were held the family of Mr. Vanderslice were obliged to go to the house of Daniel Vanderslice, near by, until after the close of the lodge.

The lodge continued to meet at the Nemaha agency until June 5, 1857, when the location was again changed to Iowa Point, on the Missouri River, six miles below White Cloud, and now a town of fifty inhabitants. It was an exceedingly prosperous little town those days, and did considerable business as a trading point, many boats making a landing there daily. On account of the rambling career of the lodge and the difficulty in finding a suitable permanent location, the name had up to this time not been inserted in the charter. But when the members decided to build a lodge room at Iowa Point, there was no further need of keeping the name blank, so it was inserted as Smithton No. 1.

Soon after permanently locating in Iowa Point, the members began to realize that the growth of the lodge was somewhat handicapped, owing to its limited jurisdiction and the certain decay of the town. They, however, remained at the Point until January 20, 1872, when the lodge was transferred to the town of Highland by dispensation from the Grand Lodge of Kansas. The lodge is still located at Highland, and has a flourishing membership of substantial citizens.

Notwithstanding its strenuous and varied career, Smithton Lodge has an exalted place in the history of Masonry. A copy of the open air proceedings of the first meeting has been furnished to Kilwinning Lodge of Scotland, the oldest lodge in the world with a written record. Smithton is the oldest lodge in the state of Kansas, and to it many of the lodges in nearby territory owe their existence, as it was the parent body of the fraternity in the state. The lodge was one of the three that organized the first Grand Lodge of Kansas and contributed two of the grand officers to that distinguished body, namely, J. W. Smith, deputy grand master, and Daniel Vanderslice, grand junior warden.

Smithton Lodge now owns a handsome lodge room in Highland and the meetings are exceptionally well attended. The membership includes many of the leading men of the town and surrounding country, who manifest keen interest in the precepts of Masonry. The semi-centennial of the lodge was celebrated with a grand banquet and ritualistic work on October 5, 1906, when the third degree was conferred by Hiawatha Lodge No. 35. The present officers of the lodge are Arch E. Bruner, worshipful master; Winfield S. Killen, senior warden; Jake Smith, junior warden; John A. Jones, treasurer, and Allen J. Thomas, secretary.

In times long gone by, there were various reasons given for the many changes of location of Smithton Lodge, and it is not improbable that political conditions of those times may have been the direct cause of some of the moves made in an effort to find a permanent home for the lodge.

While the disturbed conditions of the times did not tend to bring men close together in bonds of friendship still it is a gratifying fact that all the old members of Smithton Lodge practiced the true spirit of fraternity in all their transactions in the lodge room.

The question of slavery was paramount during the earlier years of the lodge, and while many of the members were brought into antagonism politically, their opinions were not instrumental in retarding the Masonic propaganda. All during the troubled times the meetings of Smithton Lodge were wonderfully well attended, considering the many sacrifices of time that had to be made and the hardships of distance that had to be endured by the ever faithful brethren.

JOHN F. STRICKER

Educated at State Agricultural College and Campbell University—Vice-President of Farmers' State Bank—Scientific Farmer

Farmers nowadays do not scoff at the idea of educating a man to farm as they did several years ago. A vigorous exponent of the up-to-date system is John F. Stricker, who attended Manhattan Agricultural College for two years. So energetic and eager was he that he remained all summer at the college, working on the college farm thereby partly earning his tuition and gleaning many a valuable pointer which he has since put to use. He is also a graduate of the commercial department of Campbell College at Holton.

After finishing his education, Mr. Stricker clerked for seven years in Holton and two years in Severance, then moved onto his farm. He has been successful, not only in farming, but also in raising thorough-bred stock for sale. His Shorthorn cattle and Poland China hogs are the best in Doniphan County. He is well known in financial circles as a director and the vice-president of the Farmers' State Bank in Highland. Aside from his business interests, he spends his time looking after his farm. He is a good citizen, public spirited, and a good booster for Doniphan County.

His family consists of an ideal wife and five sons and daughters. Mr. Stricker is a native of Illinois, but came to Kansas in 1880, so he is practically a dyed-in-the-wool Jayhawker. He owns a substantial residence in Highland, where he may be found with his estimable family when not looking after business affairs. The Strickers are members of the Christian Church, where they manifest a great interest in both church and Sunday school work.

Mr. Stricker was one of the first students to register at Campbell University in Holton, Kan., when Prof. J. H. Miller opened the school in 1884. He was the first student to graduate and holds diploma number one. The names of his sons and daughters are Loren W., Warren, Grace, John F., Jr., and Julia.

The following history of the Sac family of Indians was extracted from American Ethnology Bulletin 30.

(By Mark E. Zimmerman.)

Sac (Osa-kiwug, "people of the outlet," or possibly, "people of the yellow earth, in contradistinction from Muskwakiwuk, red earth people," a name of the Foxes). One of a number of Algonquin tribes whose earliest known habitat was embraced within the eastern peninsula of Michigan. Father Allouez, the first person to describe the Sac, wrote in 1667, that they were more savage than all the other tribes he had met; that they were a populous tribe, although they had no fixed dwelling place, being wanderers and vagabonds in the forests. He was told that if they or the Foxes found a person in an isolated place, they would kill him, especially if he were a Frenchman, for they could not endure the sight of the whiskers of the European.

Two years later, Allouez reported them more barbarous than usual, having no ingenuity, not knowing even how "to make a bark dish or a ladle," using shells instead.

In 1721 the Sacs were still resident at Greenbay, Wis. A Sac band, which later became known as Missouri River Sacs, had been for some time in the habit of wintering near the port of St. Louis on the Missouri. One winter, about 1804, the head men of this band were drawn into negotiations with government officials at the post, by which these tribes were to relinquish all claim to territory in Wisconsin, Illinois and Missouri. Other agreements were entered into with the three divisions of these people before the treaty of 1804 was finally carried out.

Out of all this, in connection with the general unrest of the tribes of this region, arose the so-called Black Hawk war in 1832.

In 1837 the Sacs and Foxes made the last of their various cessions of Iowa lands, and were given in exchange a tract across the Missouri in Kansas.

Here they remained practically as one people for about twenty years. But internal dissensions, due largely to Keokuk, were causing them to grow apart. A few Foxes had never gone to Kansas, but had remained in Iowa; some had returned before the main exodus of 1859.

In 1867 the Sac ceded their lands in Kansas and in exchange were given a tract in Indian Territory.

Treaties of May 18, 1854, and March 5, 1861; acts of June 10, 1872, and Aug. 15, 1876, 2,843.97 acres in Kansas and 4,194.33 acres in Nebraska were allotted to 84 Indians. And under act of June 21, 1906, 960.91 acres were allotted to 37 Indians, leaving 24.03 acres unallotted.

The above land and Indians are in Brown County, Kan., and Richardson County, Nebraska.

It is evident from the above history of the Sac and Foxes that they did not make the earth lodges and stone graves in Doniphan County, Kansas.

ADDITION TO THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH BUILDING AT HIGHLAND

(By Rev. Floyd A. Bash.)

For three years the Christian Sunday School in Highland has been overcrowding its quarters. There were 355 in attendance on the rally day this fall and more room was imperative.

In the August meeting of the church board the pastor moved that a committee on plans be appointed. This was done. The church sent Reverend Bash to the National Church Efficiency Congress, at Hammond, Ind., and there he met Mr. Honeywell, church architect. A sketch of the present building was given Mr. Honeywell, and he drew plans for an addition that were accepted by both the board and church, and on September 25 the church gave the board authority to proceed with the building, if funds could be secured. The soliciting committee was E. D. Saunders, T. P. Jessee, and Geo. Coldouer. They were assisted in the canvas by J. F. Bottiger, W. H. Noble, Norman Lucas, W. F. Bauer and F. A. Bash. Pledges for $3,600 were secured in three days. A building committee consisting of W. H. Noble, J. W. Bowers and Floyd A. Bash was appointed, with instructions to build at once.

E. D. Saunders was selected as master carpenter, and a good-sized force was put to work. J. W. Bowers was asked to throw the first shovelful of dirt. The work was started at 9 a. m., Monday, Oct. 11. Business and professional men and farmers united in the work of putting in the foundation walls and great progress was made. With only 4 to 6 carpenters on the job to help Mr. Saunders guide the rough laborers, the roof was completed in just four weeks from the day the foundation was begun. The new part is 67 feet long and 41 wide, to the outside. This gives modern Sunday school rooms, and is so built that practically all of the lower floor can be thrown into one large auditorium and no one will be over 60 feet from the speaker. This will give a total seating capacity of 550, making it one of the largest auditoriums of the county. The new addition has an upstairs room 54 feet long and about 24 wide, making ideal room for all social purposes. This will also be used as the home of the secondary department of the Sunday school. A kitchen is a feature of the upper room. The building will be modern in every respect, with plumbing, steam heat, electric lights and comfortable pews.

The architect's estimate of the cost was $5,000, which, of course, did not include heating or lighting, or furnishing.

It is of interest to know that this one church supports three missionaries in foreign lands, aside from its many interests at home.

The First National Bank

A Strong and Well Conducted Financial Institution That Has Been a Mighty Influence in the Progress and Evolution of Highland and Vicinity—Member of the Federal Reserve.

R. H. Martin, President; George S. Hovey, Vice-President; G. J. Ratcliffe, Cashier; A. M. Minier, Assistant Cashier.

Ten years of rapid promotion in the ranks of financial institutions is the record of the First National Bank of Highland. It was organized and opened for business here in 1904, as the Citizens State Bank, with George S. Hovey, president, and G. J. Ratcliffe, cashier. In 1908, the bank was nationalized, and the change in officers occurred as above indicated.

All banking business is based primarily on confidence—confidence in a bank is based on facts and on the personality of the banking officials. This bank's statements, issued at regular intervals, indicate a management both cautious and careful, as well as generous in the matter of extending accommodations to its patrons. It is always willing to loan money on good security and at most favorable rates. All deposits are insured in the Bankers' Deposit Guaranty and Surety Company of Topeka, Kansas. A policy of safety and service has won the confidence and hence the deposits of the prosperous farmers, stockmen and merchants.

In return for these, it offers:

To the farmer and stockman, financial assistance in producing and marketing their products.

To the merchant and business man, assistance in discounting bills, financial ratings, collection service, etc.

To the capitalist, secure investments in mortgages and chattels, in amounts large or small.

To the wage earner, to cash your checks, encourage you to accumulate, and to loan you money if so entitled.

To everyone, a safe and secure depository, and every service and courtesy consistent with sound, conservative banking.

The officers and directors of this bank are all men who have made successes of their various endeavors in life.

The president, R. H. Martin, is a thorough business man and prominent merchant in Highland.

The cashier, G. J. Ratcliffe, deserves great credit for the excellent showing of the bank. He has been identified with banking business since 1888, and with this institution since its organization. So well known and liked is he that flowery words of praise and commendation are useless, except to express in a concise way the people's appreciation of his services.

The First National Bank is housed in the finest business structure in the little city, just across the campus of the Highland University. The interior is very handsome, being patterned after the manner of metropolitan banks; it has, no doubt, the finest equipment and facilities of any bank in Doniphan County. The directors are W. R. Gilmore, R. H. Martin, B. D. Allen, B. B. Morris, W. H. Forbes, G. J. Ratcliffe.

THE UNITED BRETHREN CHURCH

This Modern House of Worship Is Supplying the Needs of a Very Rich and Prosperous Community and Is Used By Both the United Brethren and the Union Evangelical Congregations—A Big Community Sunday School.

The United Brethren Church stands in the southeast corner of the quarter section of land on which J. H. Acker resides, in Iowa Township, one mile east of the west line of the county and three miles north of Leona. It is also five miles southwest of Highland. It is more than a one-denominational church, however, for it has become a community house of worship, in which the good people of the richest settlement of Doniphan County and northeastern Kansas partake of the spiritual blessings which flow from its sanctuary. In a community such as this, where there are few families of one religious faith, a few of another, and another, it is difficult to maintain a church of any one denomination. In this particular community, however, the problem has been happily solved.

The church was built in the summer of 1894 by the generous people who desired to have the gospel preached in their midst. The dedication was on October 12, 1894, on the four hundred and second anniversary of the landing of Christopher Columbus on American soil. It was a proud day for the community and all of the people turned out to celebrate the event, for the building of a church in their neighborhood was regarded by them as of greater importance than the building of a railroad. It brought the advantages of Christian worship and Christian civilization right to their homes.

This community church is put to the largest uses in order that its influence may touch the lives of all of the people. Under the present admirable arrangement, the United Brethren and the United Evangelical denominations hold services on alternate Sundays. The services, however, are open to all of the people, and all share in the benefits of havingt wo very excellent ministers to preach the Gospel. The Rev. C. W. Lucas is pastor for the United Brethren and the Rev. H. T. Wright is pastor for the United Evangelical. Both are able ministers, profound in their teachings, broad in their sympathies, and are popular with the people who worship in the church.

The pride of every family of every denomination in that community is in the Sunday school. It is an ideal community Sunday school in which there is an average attendance of more than ninety pupils, with graded classes and teachers who take especial pains to give their pupils excellent instruction in the lessons of the Scriptures. It has its Bible classes for adults, and classes for younger pupils down to the primary department and cradle roll. It is admirably superintended and officered, and is in fact the institution of the locality in which all claim a part.

The community in which this church is located is the richest in Doniphan County. In truth, there are few rural sections of the United States in which prosperity to a greater degree is to be found. The lands, the most fertile to be found, are valued at $200 and $250 an acre. The farmers are prosperous to a remarkable degree, and most of them are wealthy. Their greatest pride, however, is in this religious institution and their splendid school, which contribute more to the spiritual, intellectual and moral welfare than anything that wealth could buy.

A. E. THOMPSON, D. V. S., HIGHLAND, KANSAS

While claims are made for advancement in the professions of law, medicine and dental surgery, it must not be overlooked that veterinary science is far in advance of what it was just a few years ago, and that men who today practice as veternarians are much more skillful than those of a generation past.

One of the most successful veterinarians in this part of the state is Dr. A. E. Thompson of Highland, Kansas. Doctor Thompson is a graduate of the Kansas City Veterinary College, graduating in 1910. Since then he has had several years' experience in government service as a government inspector and is at the present commissioned by the state live stock sanitary commission to do tuberculin testing.

In his practice Doctor Thompson utilize the most modern and humane appliances as well as modern methods of handling sick and disabled animals. He is well posted in all branches pertaining to his profession and has built up a clientele that come to him from all parts of Doniphan, as well as adjacent counties.

He treats successfully all kinds of diseases peculiar to domesticated animals, as well as making a feature of animal dental surgery.

Doctor Thompson is well and favoraly known throughout this entire region and has hosts of friends.

He is both progressive and aggressive, and is always found prominently identfied with those who are leaders in the upbuilding of town and community. The marked success he enjoys is well merited.

Service and experience in U. S. service government inspector; commissioned by state live stock sanitary commission to do tuberculin testing.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE

Its Growth in a Little Town.

The rapid spread of the Christian Science faith during the last ten or twelve years has no better exemplification than in the energetic little band of followers of the erudite Mrs. Mary Baker Eddy in White Cloud, Kansas. Generally in towns and villages of this size it is difficult enough to maintain and support one of the older and better established denominations. White Cloud, however, has proved the exception to the rule and for the last six years has not only supported this little band of the faithful, but has succeeded, through the efforts of the members, in erecting a small edifice.

To the energy of Mrs. Hattie Dodd and her band belongs the credit for this accomplishment. They have not as yet obtained enough members to entitle them to the dignity of the title of "church," but, along with many other small organizations in similar villages, are known as the Christian Science Society in accordance with the established dictates of the mother church in Boston, Massachusetts. An organization is compelled to have at least sixteen members before a church can be established.

The White Cloud society was organized March 21, 1909, and the members were Mrs. Dodd, Mrs. Elizabeth Burkhalter, Mrs. Katherine Sullivan, Mrs. Mary Hines, Oliver Garlock and Mrs. Nellie Garlock. Mrs. Katherine Sullivan and Mr. and Mrs. O. Garlock since that time have changed their residence. The Scientists have no regular pastor, but from among their number select a chief reader, and Mrs. Dodd for the last year or more has filled the position acceptably.

Church of the United Brethren, Situated in Southwest Corner Iowa Township.

John Durler was born in Portage, Ohio, March 5, 1847, and came to Doniphan County when twenty-six years old. He enlisted at Stryker, Ohio, January 26, 1862, with Company C, Thirty-Eighth volunteer infantry, and was mustered out at Louisville, Kentucky, July 15, 1865. He has a wife living, and one daughter, now Mrs. Elsie Muns.

Gustavus Adolphus Hoffman

The Professor of History and Modern Languages in Campbell College and Pastor of the Holton Baptist Church, Once a Troy Pastor, Has Given Many Years of His Active Life to the Educational, Moral and Spiritual Uplift.

Endowed with many of those qualities of heart and mind that made Gustavus Adolphus, the great hero of the Thirty Years War of European history, Gustavus Adolphus Hoffman of Holton, formerly of Troy, has been for many years an active force in Kansas for the educational, moral and spiritual uplift. He is now professor of history and modern languages in Campbell College at Holton and also pastor of the Baptist church of that city. Though in the prime of life, and with years of useful service ahead of him, it may be said that he has contributed enough to our Twentieth Century civilization to commend him to the acceptance of immortality as among our grandest citizens.

Gustavus A.'s parents were natives of Lippe Detwold, Germany, who came to America while they were children, and it was in Hope, Osage County, Missouri, the subject of this sketch was born, May 26, 1864. He grew up in that German community and up to the time he was twelve years old he had not heard nor spoken an English word. He went through the public schools of Missouri, completing his common school education at the age of sixteen. Then, in the year 1879, he entered the University of Missouri, where his determination to win, his wonderful pluck and his faculty of grasping the fundamentals of education, won for him a splendid collegiate education, equipping him sufficiently for a start on his career as a teacher.

His first public school was at Bay, Missouri, in the school year 1880-1881. The next school year, 1881-1882, he taught in his native town of Hope, and well may we imagine how proud he was to be of service to his home community in teaching the boys and girls, and indeed how proud were they of him. After that he taught in the schools at other Missouri towns, his third school being at Mt. Sterling, 1882-1883, his fourth school at Fredericksburg, 1883-1884, his fifth school at Alma, from 1884 to 1887.

Desiring to equip himself for higher educational work he attended Central Wesleyan College in the collegiate year 1887-1888. In the fall of 1888 he again entered the University of Missouri for the year, studied also in the fall of 1889, and then graduated from the normal department of the university. The education thus gained in pedagogy advanced Gustavus Adolphus Hoffman in the ranks. His next position was that of principal of the high school at Blackburn, Missouri, which he held two years.

Another and greater honor came to this educator in September, 1894, when he accepted the professorship of English in the Springfield, Missouri, Normal School. He served in that position two years. In September, 1896 he accepted the professorship of history and modern languages in Campbell College at Holton, Kansas. In the meantime he had taken the degree of A. B., at the Springfield, Missouri, Normal School. For seven years Professor Hoffman taught at Campbell College, taking at different times the different departments of history, modern languages or pedagogy.

In the month of February, 1898, the subject of this sketch was licensed to preach by the Baptist church at Holton, he having a desire to serve the Master by teaching from the Great Book. His first sermon was preached on Feb. 26, 1899, at the Holton Baptist church. He was ordained to the ministry on June 26, 1900, in that same Holton Baptist church. From 1900 to 1902 he was pastor of the Corning Baptist church. It should be stated, however, that during his pastorate of these churches he continued his educational work in Campbell College.

This noted educator became principal of Hiawatha Academy at Hiawatha, Kansas, in 1903, and served that institution until 1910. While at the academy he served as pastor of the Wathena Baptist church from October, 1905, to May, 1907. He became pastor of the Troy Baptist church in September, 1907, and served as such until May, 1908. Then he became supply pastor of the Three Groves German Baptist church, serving from March, 1908 to May, 1910, when he resigned the principalship of Hiawatha Academy and accepted the professorship of French and German in Central College at Pella, Iowa. He held that position one year and resigned to become principal of the Cedar Valley Seminary at Osage, Iowa. This institution he served both as principal and professor of modern language until September, 1914, when he again was called to service in Campbell College, his former field of labor. The Holton Baptist church also called him back to the pastorate. In these positions, namely, the pastor of the Holton Baptist church and professor of history and modern languages in Campbell College, he is still serving; and we might say, he has so endeared himself to that institution, its faculty and its student body, that we predict he will continue his work there, and his influence for the public good for years to come. Meanwhile, as should have been mentioned before, he has earned the degree M. A.

Professor Hoffman was married to Miss Matilda Belle Hoffman of Glenville, Nebraska, a daughter of the Rev. and Mrs. Andrew Hoffman. The wedding took place at the home of the bride's parents, July 12, 1893, the ceremony being performed by the Rev. Mr. George Burgdorff of the German Baptist church at Hastings, Nebraska. His wife is an accomplished lady and has endeared herself to the people of Holton whom she comes in contact with.

Campbell College

HOLTON, KANSAS

Clean, Cultural, Christian

Many of the young people of Doniphan County are thinking seriously about going away to school. "Where?" is the question. Why not settle it by saying, "Campbell." But why Campbell? BECAUSE

1. It is a school for the people. 2. It is inexpensive. 3. It prepares for life's work. 4. It makes good. 5. It does things. 6. It is a school with a future.

CAMPBELL Prepares for CIVIL SERVICE POSITIONS, for TEACHING, for PROFESSIONAL STUDY, for BUSINESS, for LIFE.

Its College Departments grant degrees in Pedogogy, Music, Science, Art, Oratory

Location and Surroundings

Campbell College is located in Holton, the beautiful county seat town of Jackson County, Kansas. We are in the rich agricultural section of Northeastern Kansas, being only fifty miles from Leavenworth, sixty miles from St. Joseph, eighty miles from Kansas City and thirty miles from Topeka.

Holton is an ideal location for a college, having a population of three thousand, three lines of railroad, good business houses, splendid churches and citizens who believe in keeping the morals of the town wholesome and pure.

The College is within the corporation limits, being only four blocks removed from the north side of the public square. The College building is situated on an eminence in the center of as beautiful a ten acre campus as nature ever made for a college building. The campus is generously dotted with fine native shade trees. The athletic field is located on the north side of the campus.

DR. WILLIAM C. T. ADAMS

A Prominent Educator—Has Succeeded Admirably in Educational Work at Campbell College—One Whose Spiritual Influence Is Felt Among the Students.

A man better equipped for his duties as president of Campbell College could not have been elected than Wm. C. T. Adams, LL. D. Professor Adams' educational training has been not only comprehensive and of the very best, but has been in a great measure of his own attainment. While he studied at the various schools and institutions of learning from the text-books, he spent his evenings and odd times in the pursuit of other knowledge, so that today he is one of the most fluent speakers or conversationists in the state of Kansas. Professor Adams' charm and personality are doubtless the result of his familiarity with the leading topics of the day.

Reverend Adams was born in Springville, Vernon County, Wisconsin, July 6, 1869. His boyhood and school days were spent in Wisconsin, and it was from that state he selected his bride, Miss Elva Jane Aikins, of Readstown, Wisconsin. They were married October 15, 1897, and have one child, Beatrice Belle Adams, who was born November 10, 1900.

The daughter is a very bright little girl, and without doubt she will receive an education that will equal if not surpass that of her cultured mother and father. Mrs. Adams holds the degrees of B. O. and A. B., and is a fit and suitable companion for a man of letters. She takes a great interest in her husband's career and has always been a source of much encouragement to him.

Doctor Adams, since going to Holton, has succeeded in placing Campbell College on a level with the best colleges, and in having her recognized in educational circles as second to none for an institution of its nature.

He is so well liked by the patrons and pupils of the school as well, that there has been perfect concord during his tenure of office, which may be one reason for the improvement in the school.

Among the different places of learning which Doctor Adams has attended might be mentioned the graded school, at Rockton, Wisconsin, where he went as a boy; Viroqua, Wisconsin, High School; the Platteville State Normal School, where he completed a full four-year scientific German course. He also obtained degrees as follows: Fenton Normal School, B. Ed.; Taylor University, A. B. in 1900 and A. M. 1901; Teacher's College and University of Minnesota, A. M., 1904, and M. S. in 1905; Taylor & Central University, Ph. D., and Highland College 1910, LL. D. Any one of the above distinctions would be considered an honor to the average pedagogue.

Doctor Adams' experience in school and college work extends over a period of twenty-five years. He taught in Bellevue College four years, Upper Iowa University one year, was president of Highland College from 1909 to 1913. He has been president of Campbell College at Holton, Kansas, for the past two years.

Doctor Adams is an ordained Presbyterian minister. He belongs to the following fraternal organizations: Masons (Royal Arch), Knights Templars (Scottish Rite), Shriner (Ancient Toltec Rite), Eastern Star, Knights of Pythias, Odd Fellows, Red Men, Woodmen, Knights and Ladies of Security, National Geographic Society, National Red Cross Society and Missouri Valley Pedagogy Club.

Henry Allen, Editor Wichita Daily Beacon, wrote:

Buy a Home of Your Own

Own your home. If not, why not? Yes; we know the cost of living's high, and the way jobs run, it's hard for many a fellow to stay anchored long. But why not make a try at it? Nothing ventured, nothing had. In any city in the land a carefully bought home is a good business investment. It's as certain as death and taxation that land values will rise as the population grows. We guess that most as much money has been made in catching this rise as has ever been made in direct industry. At all events, the odds are with you, if you buy prudently. This is looking at the subject from the money side only. An important side, especially to a man who's poor and has to make every penny count. But not the all-important side. Owning your home makes a different man of you. It's like wife's first baby—it fulfills nature. No fellow gets quite the same full sense of manhood out of a home some other fellow owns that he gets out of a home all his own. In your own home—a house with ground around it—you will feel free to do things and to grow things. You expand; a creative sense develops; also a neighborly sense, a feeling of being akin to the other folk all around. That warm, fine, neighborly feeling, on top of the hunch to grow things and to do things, is what we need most of all. It is what chiefly keeps us from going to the devil.

(By The Rev. Mr. A. B. Irwin.)

The Iowa Mission is a thing of the past. Hopes, prayers, and labors were sacrificed upon it, but it had an end. A half dozen Christians literally spent their lives in an endeavor to make a permanent institution of the mission, and while the good accomplished will always be history in Doniphan County, nevertheless it fell short of its original purpose. All the human efforts, zeal, patience, faith, heart aches, anxious cares and joyful service that were put into it will probably never be known by us. But while it has vanished from among the institutions that are seen by men, has its work perished? Is it to be numbered among the visionary schemes of men which come to naught and which require only time to show up their emptiness? But what thoughtful person has not come to realize that the most real things in the world are the invisible? Influences, thoughts, ideas are the mighty forces of life, but who ever saw an idea? If the purpose of that mission, as held in the minds of the founders and promoters of it, was not realized in any degree whatever, still the development of such a character as Rev. S. M. Irvin—a man of the rarest courage, faith and fidelity—was worth, to the succeeding generation, all that the mission cost. But the mission did not fail in accomplishing, in part at least, the purpose for which it was founded. Can we say with truth that the present comparatively civilized condition of the great majority of the surviving members of the Iowa and Sac tribes is not due directly to the influence of the old mission? Facts show that it is true. And not a few Indians, young and old, learned the way of life in that old mission and now walk in companionship with their old teacher in the Kingdom of our Father. To rescue that old story from oblivion, and to keep green in our memories the lessons from the "annals of a quiet neighborhood," let these pages be devoted.

The American Indians, as they were mistakenly called by Columbus and the people of his time, are an interesting people. They are interesting because every intelligent person desires to know, if it be possible, the history of his country from the very beginning. They are interesting too, because of their own peculiarities, their ideas, their tribal relations, their manners and customs. They are interesting, further, because of the uncertainty attaching to their origin. Whence came they? Were they indeed aborigines? Did they have a different origin from ourselves? Were their ancestors created on this continent, and they advancing, at the time of the white man's arrival, only so far as some scientists are pleased to called "the stone age?" Or were they degenerate Asiatics? Those tribes on our Northwest coast show unmistakable evidence of being Asiatic origin. The civilization of early Central America, Mexico, and Peru, is now generally believed to be akin to that which, at an early day, flourished on the southern and eastern shores of the Mediterranean sea. I am informed that Father Irvin, of the mission we are considering, believed the tribal Indians were the rescendants of the ten lost tribes of Israel.

Christian people, from their earliest acquaintance with the red man, felt constrained to give him a knowledge of the Gospel which is "the power of God unto Salvation to every one that believeth." In this effort to preach the Gospel to every creature, missions were established among many of the tribes. The Presbyterian Western Foreign Missionary Society had done considerable for the Indian and, being anxious to do something for the Iowas and Sacs, established a mission among them, which was transferred to the Presbyterian Foreign Board in 1847. These Indians lived at that time in that part of Missouri which was afterward called the Platte Purchase, including the counties of Platte, Buchanan, Holt, Andrew and Nodaway. This was added to Missouri in 1837. A young man, twenty-five years of age, Samuel M. Irvin, offered himself for the work. Mr. Irvin, of Scotch-Irish ancestry, speaks of his early home as an "obscure home in western Pennsylvania." Having completed the academy course, but unable to finish the college course at Meadville, Pa., owing to failing health, he was informed that he would have but a few years to live. Thereupon with the courage of a hero and a devotion akin to that of the Master himself, he resolved that those few years should be spent where he could do the most good and sought this Indian mission field, when lo! God gave him not only what he desired—usefulness—but also length of days, enabling him to round out an honored life of seventy-five years. Mr. Irvin came to the mission with his bride, on his wedding trip, by the Ohio and Missouri rivers. When he arrived on the mission field, about nine miles beyond St. Joseph, afterward called Sparta, he says the first sight he had of the Indians was a man, then the squaws, going after whiskey. In that year, 1837, by a treaty made with the government, the Iowas were to leave their lands in Missouri for land on the Great Nemaha, Kansas. Much opposition to this was at first manifested by the Indians, which was finally overcome, and about the middle of April, 1837, accompanied by their young missionary, they crossed the river at St. Joseph, then called Robidoux Trading Post, and consisting of a few huts, and settled at the mouth of Wolf creek. The country west of the Missouri river was called Indian territory, sometimes Missouri territory, then Nebraska territory. When the Kansas-Nebraska act was passed, May 30, in 1854, Nebraska extended to the summit of the Rocky Mountains and to the Yellowstone. Soon a village was constructed of forty-one bark houses. The first mission house, consisting of two rooms, was built of logs and when Mr. Irvin went to the old mission and brought back his wife, the logs of the doorway had not been cut out as yet, so Mrs. Irvin was obliged to enter her new home crawling on hands and knees. But she was of such stuff that she thought nothing of it. Rev. William Hamilton, a graduate of Washington College and of the Western Seminary, joined Mr. Irvin, Dec. 29, 1837, bringing his wife with him. He described this first missionary house, separated from the village by a creek, in these words: "We then lived in a log house, two rooms; I lived with Mr. Irvin till my goods came, when he moved into the other end. These rooms were of round logs one story in height, hewed or 'scratched,' as they call it, on the inside and chunked or 'chinked' with mud on the outside, and puncheon floor below, and clapboards laid on joist for a floor overhead, and clapboard roof, held down to its place by logs or weight-poles on top—no nails. The fire-place was stone, with large blocks outside to keep them in place, the chimney of sticks and mud on the outside. The cost was about seventy-five dollars."

The Iowas, numbering 830 souls, were "in a wild, warlike and wretched condition." They depended on the chase for sustenance. Their tents or huts, of bark or skin stretched over poles, in a few seasons were useless and a new location was sought, their skin tents being taken along. They thus were originally a migratory people. They had no domestic animals except ponies and dogs. Their ponies, of the Mexican breed, were left to care for themselves in the winter. Their utensils for outdoor work were the "squaw axe" and a heavy garden hoe, both of which were obtained from traders, their original axe and hoe being of stone. The kitchen furniture consisted of an iron camp kettle obtained from traders, and a few wooden bowls, and ladles. Their bedding consisted of mats of flags or rushes, and skins of buffalo, elk and bear, and a few blankets from traders. The most substantial and elegant dress of the men was buffalo and deer skins, the latter for leggins and moccasins, and the former for robes. The women obtained from the traders some clothes and blankets. War was the chief occupation of the men. The war-dance, the scalp, the moccasin dance was almost constantly to be witnessed, in preparation for war or because of a war-party returned. The women had considerable of the war spirit and joined in the dances. The most honored would carry a shrub or branch from which would hang mutilated parts of bodies of enemies such as scalps, fingers, toes, hands and feet. Mr. Irvin narrates the incident of an old squaw, four score years of age, upon hearing of her grandson's becoming a brave, mounted a pony, and rode at full speed through the village, her gray hair flying in the wind, and shouting, "Did I ever think I should live to see such a happy day?" Some of the names of individual Indians were, Newmonya, No-Heart, White Cloud, Pumpkin, White Crow, Wachamonga, Wamkoochee, Montoyenga, Totomonga, the first four being names of chiefs. White Cloud, one of the principal chiefs, had three wives. Plurality of wives was not uncommon, though not practiced by all. Girls received spots of honor or distinction by appearing before the assembled tribe and having powder picked into their skin. They believed in the Great Spirit and in immortality. Wampasha, an Iowa Indian, expounded their views on the future as follows: The Big Village (Heaven) is situated near to the great water, toward the sunrise, and not far from the heads of the Mississippi. None go there until after they die. A smart person can travel the journey in three or four days; if, however, his heart was not right at death, his journey will be prolonged and attended with difficulties and stormy weather till he reached the land of rest. Infants, dying, are carried by messengers sent for them. The old or infirm are carried on horses; "they have horses plenty and fine grass for them to live upon." Infirmities will be all healed in that village, the blind will receive new eyes; "they have plenty of good eyes, ears, etc., there." Good people will never die again, but the bad may die three or four times, and then turn into some bird and fly about. The dead were loudly lamented by the living, and were not buried, but placed on an elevated platform to protect them from the wild beasts. They learned, in time, to bury as the whites, Mr. Irvin and Mr. Hamilton making the first coffin for them for a woman, April 17, 1841.

In the year 1838, the government, according to treaty, built for them five double log houses, equal to ten good log houses, with floors, windows and stone chimneys. Also broke and fenced 200 acres of land into 10 acre lots with good rails. Some of the houses were occupied for a time, but soon the lumber and rails were burned at campfires, the windows, floors and doors were traded off for whiskey and useless things, and in a short time nothing was left, nor could the fields be designated. Under treaty, one hundred milch cows and one hundred stock hogs were delivered and a large quantity of farm utensils. The animals were devoured as food and the utensils were traded for whiskey and useless things. A water-mill, built by the government at a cost of $2,800, was burned to ashes. Opposition to the mission was now aroused and kept up by Indian agents and traders, telling them that the missionaries wanted their lands or would teach their children for a time and then sell them down the river for slaves.

At times the lives of the missionaries were in danger. The Indians, driven on by the white traders, held a council and determined on revenge. The missionaries lives were brought under review, but it was decided "that they were not to die." The daughter of one of these chiefs, Mary Childs, by name, was afterward educated at the mission, became a Christian and a teacher among her people on the reservation; and she gave to the honored missionary the title, "Father Irvin."

Whiskey shops and profanity were introduced by the agents or traders, and cards were also sold as the "White Man's Bible;" drunkenness prevailed, brother sometimes fell before brother, father before son. The Indian tongue has no profane words. They never speak lightly of the Great Spirit. Under these adverse influences, the tribe was reduced from 830 to 300, when a change took place and a reaction set in. Civilization and Christianity now had their effect. But before tracing this effect and the happy results, we must take a view of the mission school and its work.

Each of the missionaries had soon a house of his own, which cost much labor and time in cutting and preparing the timber. Their houses were a little distance from the Indian village, a creek intervening. Mr. Irvin said that though his was a cabin and some would call his family poor, they were comfortable and considered themselves well off. They obtained their mail and provisions at Liberty, Mo., about seventy-five miles distant, which they reached by going to Leavenworth and crossing the river at that place. Occasionally a steamer would stop at Iowa Point with provisions. Mr. Irvin's father and mother joined them in the spring of 1841. His father, as farmer for the Indians for a while, contracted to plow for them and give them instructions in tilling the soil.

Mr. and Mrs. Irvin had four children, Eliot, Mary Jane, Julia and Edwin; the last two are all of the family now living.

Mr. Irvin was obliged, at times, to act as doctor as well as teacher. He often administered medicine to the Indians and performed simple surgical operations such as bleeding his patients and sewing up wounds incurred in Indian brawls. Religious services were held on Sabbath for both whites and Indians, for the scattered settlers at the home of one of the missionaries; for the Indians in some houses in the village, where the services of an interpreter was always needed. An Indian girl named Nancy, in Mr. Irvin's home, from Platte County, Missouri, acted as interpreter most of the time. Afterward Mr. Irvin himself acted as interpreter for the government agent. Attendance at religious meetings, and interest varied according to the condition the Indians happened to be in at the time. Very little fruit appeared from these efforts for several years.

For about eight years there was no school building, but Mr. Irvin went each day, now to the Iowa, then to the Sac village, and gathered what pupils he could, sometimes as many as twenty, in a private house, teaching them a few lessons. This was tedious work and progress by the children was slow. This unsatisfactory state of things convinced the missionaries and the foreign board of the necessity of a mission school building, which they at length erected. But before this occurred, several important events took place which deserved mention.

The Indian wars ended with 1841. The Iowas had warred with the Sioux, the Omahas, and Pawnees, but permanent peace had now been secured through the aid of the government agent and the missionaries. The first emigration train of whites, with twenty-five wagons, passed through what is Doniphan County, for Oregon, on the Pacific, in 1842. In the next year, two important events for the mission occurred, the receiving of a printing press from New York, and the organization of a church. This press was probably the first sent west of the Missouri river. During that year, 1843, two elementary books were printed on the press, in English and Indian. The Presbyterian Church, organized that year (October 21, and called the "Iowa Church") consisted of eight members, and was, in 1869, near the close of the mission, transferred to Highland, and continues as the First Presbyterian Church of Highland. This little church, then in the log house, was the mother of Presbyterianism in Kansas. In 1844 the second train of emigrants, of twenty-five families, crossed the plains for Oregon. Also, there occurred then the first real convert to Christianity, from the Indians, and a revival among the whites. In 1842 the Platte Presbytery, then in session in Lexington, Mo., urged Mr. Irvin to prepare himself for licensure to preach the Gospel. Rev. Hamilton had done the preaching up to this time but Mr. Irvin had often expounded the Scriptures with great acceptance, and upon the advice of Presbytery he pursued, by himself, the required studies, and was duly licensed and ordained. It is proper to say that the diary of Mr Irvin, at this time, shows him to be a man who daily sat in judgment of his own heart and conduct, and who cultivated, in a marked degree, the grace of humanity and the reference of everything concerning himself to the will and the glory of God.

In 1846, nine years after the building of the log house mission, a new, fine, substantial brick was completed about two miles from the first. The Board of Foreign Missions at this time owned 600 acres of land, one-half being in timber. The larger tract containing 320 acres, where the new mission was built, was divided between prairie and timber. In time 160 acres of this was fenced, 120 of it brought under cultivation, the remaining 40 acres being used for garden and pasture. The building was a noble structure with cut stone foundation and thick brick walls. Its dimensions were 107 feet long, 37 feet wide, three stories high, with 32 rooms including a chapel on the second floor and dining hall on the lower floor, each being 34x30 feet. The first story was of hewn stone, the upper stories of brick with good pine shingle roof and belfry in center, whose top was fifty-two feet from the ground. The doors, sash, blinds and pine finishing lumber were shipped from Pittsburg, Pa. The institution was partly an industrial school, the boys being taught outdoor, useful employments, particularly farming; the girls learning indoor employments, such as sewing and cooking. There were school hours and a course of study. The branches taught were reading, writing, spelling, grammar, arithmetic, geography, philosophy, declamation and New Testament.

There was daily worship in the chapel, a Wednesday night prayer-meeting, preaching on Sabbath at 11 a. m; Sunday school at 3 p. m., and lecture or prayer-meeting in the evening. The missionaries received at that time a salary of $400 each. The school opened in 1846 with Miss Hibby as teacher, with four or five pupils. Rev. Hamilton next took charge of the school, whose attendance increased to forty scholars. He taught every day at first, then on alternate weeks with Mr. Irvin. Mr. Hamilton says in a letter written in 1891, "I remember I often thought part of my preparation for the Sabbath was Saturday evening washing the boys and getting them clean for Sabbath. I taught them both in English and Iowa, the books in Iowa being prepared by myself and the type set by Mr. Irvin, and we together struck off the sheets and folded them and I bound them. I then taught the children to read them. I often thought if all authors had first to study a language, then write a book and print it, and then teach children to read it, there would not be as many trash-books published as there are. We prepared and printed an elementary book of 101 pages, a translation of the children's catechism, a grammar of 150 pages, and a hymn-book of fifty hymns in Iowa. I printed about sixteen pages of Matthew's Gospel." At a later date, after he had left this mission for the Omahas, he says he "revised the translation of Matthew's Gospel and portions of the Old Testament, and also of the New Testament, hoping to get it printed for the benefit of the Indians, but the board thought it would not pay to print it and it was not done."

Rev. Hamilton labored here till June, 1853, over fifteen years, when, at the request of Hon. Walter Lowrie of the Foreign Board, he went to the Otoe and Omaha mission. The last two or three years he did not teach. Upon his departure the mission was in the sole charge of Mr. Irvin. The pupils at any one time have numbered as many as forty-six, whether more at any one period it is difficult now to determine. In its early history they were almost entirely from the Iowas, though some were from the Sacs and Knickapoos. During its history there were pupils also from the Pawnees, Blackfeet, and Sioux. In 1854, chiefs of the Iowas and Sacs made a treaty with the government relinquishing their right to lands in what is now Doniphan County, Kansas, and soon removed to their reservation at the mouth of the Nemaha, Nebraska.

The mission school passed through a variety of experiences. In 1850 smallpox broke out, claiming eleven victims, but only one death. The Indians removing from the immediate vicinity, there was an increased difficulty in getting pupils to come from the reservation and to remain in school when there. This difficulty grew worse from year to year and it became evident that school work must go sooner or later to the reservation, which it ultimately did under government control. But with the excellent mission equipment on hand and the good that had been done, the missionaries could scarcely reconcile themselves to the thought of giving up the school. Consequently Mr. Irvin conceived the project of converting the old mission into an Indian Orphan Asylum, a home for the orphans from the various tribes of the West.

The board sanctioned this scheme; it was also favored by the government. It was carried on for a short time as an orphan home, some children coming from as far as the Rocky Mountains, four coming from near Pike's Peak. But this plan did not unfold, as was fondly hoped, and the work of the old mission drew to its close in the year 1863. Father Irvin was with it at the end as at the beginning. It is difficult to obtain a complete list of the names of all the workers who have been connected with the Iowa Mission, but the following is the best that can be made out with the data at hand: Rev. S. M. Irvin, 1837-63; Mrs. Eliza H. Irvin, 1837-63; Rev. Wm. Hamilton, 1837-63; Mrs. J. A. Hamilton, 1837-63; Mr. Aurey Ballard and wife, 1837. Since printing the first part of this article I have learned that Rev. Ballard and wife came as missionaries to these people before Mr. Irvin, but soon after his arrival they were transferred to the Chippewas; Mr. Francis Irvin and wife, 1841, made their home with their son Samuel M., for a number of years. He was farmer to the Indians for a time. Miss Higby, teacher, 1846; Miss S. A. Waterman, teacher, 1850-53; Miss M. A. Fulerton, matron, 1855; Miss Maggie Patterson, now Mrs. Wm. Bayless, teacher and matron, 1859-61; Miss Turner, teacher; Miss Diamint, teacher; Miss Steelman, teacher; Mrs. R. McCreary, matron; Mrs. Donaldson, matron. She was Mrs. Irvin's sister and afterward married Mr. Williams; Rev. and Mrs. G. S. Rice, 1858-60. Mr. Rice taught and preached alternately with Mr. Irvin and was pastor of the church when it was transferred to Highland in 1860. Rev. A. S. Thorn took charge of the school for a short time in 1860, Mr. Irvin giving up the work for three years owing to Mrs. Irvin's failing health. Mr. James Williams followed Mr. Thorn, marrying Mrs. Donaldson. Mr. Robertson succeeded Mr. Williams in 1862. The next year finds Mr. Irvin back again in charge, but only to wind up the affairs of the mission he loved so well, and where he had spent so many self-denying years of his life.

What did the Indian school accomplish?

It accomplished first much for its pupils. Besides the instruction for better ways of living, its spiritual results were very marked. Father Irvin tells of many of the pupils giving the clearest evidence of being Christians and leading lives of faith. Thirteen at different times united with the church. One girl, Nancy Henderson, eighteen years of age, died triumphant, exclaiming, "O, then I will see Moses and the Lamb." An Indian who had been a "bad boy" at school was afterward converted and died in peace. Another girl about the same age as the one just mentioned, Father Irvin says, "was the most consistent Christian I ever knew." This was Sophie Rubetti, a Sac girl, whose story was printed in tract form in Glasgow, Scotland. Who has ever read more beautiful or more touching words than these, "I am done with the world, I am ready to go. I want to drink of the water of life, O, I want a large draught that I thirst not again. I hear delightful music; listen, I think you can hear it. Could I raise my hands I would clasp them together for the beautiful prospect before me. Jesus is coming! They are coming! Raise me up!" Ah, the mission was not a failure that can produce such a character as that! But the mission had its effect, in time, upon the whole tribe. After the terrible wasting away of the people through the power of whiskey, mentioned before, the people came to their senses; better counsels prevailed; they gradually changed their old ways of living, first erecting log houses, and then frame. They gathered about them stock of all kinds. The women now became clad in the English dresses and the men became industrious. Many of their houses they put up themselves, and broke out new farms, becoming anxious to live like the whites. Such was the substance of the commissioner's report in 1862. In the spring of 1862 they met and passed a law that no whiskey should come upon the reserve till other fields were fenced and crops planted. Twelve of the Iowas enlisted in the U. S. Army during the Civil War. The commissioner says in the above mentioned report, "In general the Indians of the agency are progressing rapidly, much of which is due to the influence of the mission which was established upon the Iowa land some twenty years since." The mission has passed into history, but its fruit remains. Let its history not be forgotten!

Note 1.—The village of the Sacs was about one-half a mile to the east of the present Highland Station; that of the Iowas about one and a half miles northwest, not far from the Missouri river.

Note 2.—The log houses of the missionaries were about two miles west from the Iowa lodge. The new brick mission building was erected near the missionaries' houses.

WARD-JONES LUMBER COMPANY

Dealers in Coal and Building Material—C. E. Ward and J. A. Jones.

Dealers in such necessities as coal and builders' materials can hope for great and permanent success only when they are equipped to do business on a large scale. This is one of the secrets of the success of Ward-Jones Lumber Company of Highland.

This splendidly equipped plant maintains at all times large quantities of rough and finished lumber, thus enabling it to make prompt deliveries, large or small, which is of much value to a contractor, and greatly appreciated. In addition to a complete stock of all kinds of lumber, Ward & Jones carry a full line of lime, cement, brick, tile, sashes and doors, slate, wood and composition shingles; in fact, almost any building accessory. The yard is conveniently located on the main business street and at the terminal of the Grand Island Railroad.

In addition to the lumber business, this concern is an extensive dealer in coal. Their bins are now well stocked with hard and semi-bituminous coal of an excellent grade.

Mr. C. E. Ward, senior member of the firm, and manager of that plant, needs no introduction to the people of this vicinity, having been reared in and near Highland, and numbers his friends and customers by the score. He is a business man to his fingertips, and has a wide experience in the lumber business. Much of the splendid success of the company is due to his personal popularity and native ability. The other partner, Mr. J. A. Jones, is better known in educational circles in this part of Kansas, and at present is superintendent of the city schools.

Postoffice History

True Progress of Doniphan County Best Gauged By Enormous Increase in Use of U. S. Mails.

It has been truly said that the postoffice is the center of community interests in rural districts. From time immemorial, since the establishment of the stage post in the Elizabethean period of England, down through the inauguration of the first United States mail routes to the present day of the lightning express mail trains, the point where the people of a country gathered to receive this mail has been a center of activity.

Here were gathered the sages and wiseacres of their period. Here the "big" men of the town would strut like pouter pigeons and air their opinions. Here were settled once and for all, the weighty questions that staggered the minds of Washington, Jefferson, Clay, Adams, Calhoun, Webster, Lincoln, Grant, Garfield, Jackson, Cleveland, McKinley, Roosevelt, Taft and Wilson. And it is not amiss to say that here these questions will continue to be settled, at least to the satisfaction of those participating in the debate. Perhaps A. B. Frost, the eminent American artist, has done more to perpetuate this characteristic American trait than any other one man. His drawings of the country postoffice have had about them a mellowness and fine breadth of power that has done much to throw a mystic charm about them.

There is history in these postoffices. Many a political issue has centered about the appointment of a postmaster. To this day they are the bone of contention in hundreds of communities, and only last winter caused a bitter but only temporary split between President Wilson and many of his most influential party leaders. Who is there in Doniphan County who does not remember the general store postoffice? Generally, and particularly in the early days, the postmastership went to the most prosperous merchant in the town or village who had some connection, however small, with the party leaders in his state. Qualifications for the office were not essential then, nor are they considered even now in many instances. However, it is easy to sit back, close the eyes and draw a mental picture of the old establishments.

Generally there was a head of cheese placed beside the cracker barrel from which the village loungers helped themselves liberally and frequently. Then there was the stove—one of the old-fashioned kind, six feet high—with its rim extending out from the body near the base. Upon this necessary adjunct to the heater many feet were placed. And the sawdust box for the chewers; who does not remember that? "Ole Eph"—or it may have been Henry, or John, or Tobe, in your community—Old "Eph" was some spitter. He could hit the receptacle at nine feet ten times out of ten. Recall what scorn there was for the newcomer to these inner circles of erudition? It took "larnin'" to get the floor in the village postoffice.

And what arguments. The tariff? Piffle. Old "Uncle Jed" settled that little question in forty minutes one wintry night. Dingley, Cleveland, Root, Underwood, Roosevelt, Taft, Champ Clark, Bryan and other notable men never did quite arrange the matter satisfactorily, but "Uncle Jed" did. The regulation of railroad rates? Ho, ho! What a simple matter to be sure. Experts have stumbled quite frequently over this somewhat complex situation, but Judge Daniel Webster Calhoun Van Dusenburg, leading legal light of the village, dismissed it with a few simple words and explained it all so clearly to his rapt hearers that they wondered why Judge Daniel wasn't president of the United States instead of the man occupying the chair. But Judge Daniel for some reason never got there. About the best he did was to go to Bodbank once and argue an appeal on a $4 damage suit.

And the ladies. What a story some of those old mail boxes and general delivery windows would tell if only they were endowed with the power of speech for just a day. How many maidens have watched their lovers go forth to battle with the world for success and how many of these same maidens have gone daily to the country store and postoffice and there with trembling lips, ask for their mail? And how their faces lighted up with the joy of living and the faith that springs eternal in the breast of youth when there was a letter? How many sweethearts, wives and mothers during the terrible civil war pressed their hot, eager faces to the window and tremulously inquired for a letter from the loved ones at the front.

But there was another and a more cheerful side. Who does not recall the village gossip that was exchanged in front of the "gen'l d'livery"? Here Mrs. Samantha Quisenberry, who married old George Quisenberry, up near Ike Bottombough's place—you know Old Ike—here Mrs. Quisenberry came and recited in eager tones to Sister Susan Cobb, all of the details of the quiltin' party down at Jones'. Mrs. Jones didn't aim to set out no victuals, only apples; and oh, yes, Sister Rachael Higginbotham just bought a new "alpacky." Went clear to Pikeville for it. Yes, Cousin Louisa (they didn't call it Louise in those days)—yes, Louisa's married now. Jim isn't a bad man, but rather shiftless.

It is easy to recall these days. Naturally, the establishment of the rural free delivery has done much to wipe out these picturesque and characteristic postoffices, but they still exist by the thousands, and Doniphan County is rich in postoffice history. In the early days, here, just as much as anywhere, were settled the vital questions that puzzled the nation's leading lights. In Doniphan County as well as other counties, there was an Uncle Jed and Old Eph and Sister Cobb and Mrs. Quisenberry. It is doubtful if today there is any public institution in the county so rich and so romantic as the postoffices. There is romance, politics, hate and love in their history.

Probably there are not one hundred men in all of Doniphan County today who can tell where the first postoffice was established, and give the year. It is almost certain that there are not more than ten of the older citizens who can give the list in the order of which they were established. The first office was—very appropriately—in Doniphan, and opened its doors for the receiving and distributing of mail on March 3, 1855. The first postmaster was John W. Forman, and he was the proprietor, or rather part proprietor, of the country store at that place. Doniphan then was one of the most thriving villages in eastern Kansas. It was about the only place of any importance in the county and from that point, the residents of Troy, Iowa Point and other districts, had to go to get their mail or else have it sent to St. Joseph.

The complete list of the postmasters at Doniphan, from the establishment of the office in 1855, down to the present day, is hereby given, with the date of their appointment: John W. Forman, March 3, 1855; A. R. Forman, Aug. 26, 1857; E. H. Williams, Sept. 21, 1858; Adam Brenner, May 14, 1859; J. F. King, Aug. 15, 1859; George Rees, Nov. 19, 1859; Nicholas Werner, May 25, 1861; G. A. Benjamin, June 26, 1862; Nicholas Werner, Jan. 25, 1864; Maria Werner, Oct. 7, 1864; C. R. Kuchs, July 18, 1870; H. M. Sale, March 20, 1871; C. R. Kuchs, Nov. 16, 1875; C. D. Brenner, Aug. 26, 1885; E. S. Brewer, May 10, 1888; Charles R. Kuchs, April 9, 1889; E. S. Brewer, Sept. 6, 1894; Anton Braun, Sept. 17, 1897; Lottie M. Koch, June 19, 1909, and Wiliam M. Cooper, June 2, 1914.

The office at White Cloud was the second in the county and was established July 11, 1855. James P. Kelley, the present postmaster has almost reached the county record for continuous service, having been appointed April 2, 1897, and still in harness. The first postmaster was J. W. Modie, July 11, 1855; C. F. Jennings, Jan. 8, 1857; H. F. Macy, Feb. 3, 1859; C. W. Noyes, July 8, 1864; Josephus Utt, June 27, 1870; W. H. Forncrook, June 26, 1871; Howard Vanderslice, Aug. 24, 1885; Phillip Kelley, May 2, 1889; George Nuzum, Sept. 2, 1893, and then Mr. Kelley, the present incumbent.

Only one man has a longer term as postmaster than Mr. Kelley, and that was Nicholas Harrington of Palermo. This office wos the third to be established in the county, and has a unique record, as the town is now extinct. The first postmaster was Frank M. Mahan, appointed when the office was established on Dec. 9, 1855. There followed A. S. Vogdes, Aug. 19, 1857; Severt Swendson, Oct. 22, 1860; Charles Miller, May 11, 1861; Nicholas Harrington, Sept. 6, 1876 to Dec. 15, 1904, when the office was discontinued.

The fourth office to be established was at the Nemaha Agency, on Jan. 12, 1856. On Sept. 2, 1857, the name was changed to Highland, and the first postmaster was Richard Leach, who received his appointment Jan. 12, 1856. Two other men served while the office was still called Nemaha. They were J. W. Burchfield, Feb. 10, 1857, and S. M. Irvin, Sept. 2, 1857, when the name was changed. The other postmasters and their date of appoitment follow: C. N. DeVine, July 2, 1858; Thomas Stevenson, Aug. 20, 1858; A. J. Winier, March 15, 1860; S. C. Shields, Dec. 10, 1863; Elizabeth Diament, Aug. 10, 1869; Mary L. Diament, July 11, 1873; Ella E. Herrick, March 24, 1875; James A. Kennedy, April 29, 1880; O. S. Long, Dec. 4, 1882; J. S. Beeler, April 7, 1884; Z. L. Gilmore, June 12, 1893; Norman Case, July 29, 1897; Tobias Larson, Aug. 3. 1901; H. S. Hogue, May 25, 1904. Upon the death of the latter a few years ago, Arch Bruner was appointed.

The fifth office in the county was at Iowa Point and the first postmaster was Xerses Kees Stout, appointed Feb. 12, 1856. The other officials were:

A scene at the old Noah Rittenhouse farm in Wolf River Township, seven mil es west of Troy, on public sale day in the spring of 1915.

John W. Reed, Aug. 5, 1858; Alfred Taylor, Nov. 5, 1858; P. B. McCoy, Sept. 3, 1862; B. B. Leach, Oct. 2, 1863; J. R. Plowman, Jan. 28, 1868; O. S. Ball, March 31, 1871; J. L. Noble, March 22, 1881; C. L. Evans, Oct. 30, 1885; L. S. Flick, Sept. 22, 1887; B. F. Hasness, Nov. 25, 1889; Fred Massey, Oct. 21, 1899; on April 15, 1914, the office was discontinued, but was re-established Sept. 21 of the same year. Fred Massey was re-named on Sept. 21 of that year and is the present incumbent.

The sixth office was at Walnut Grove, and was opened July 5, 1856, with Grandison R. Wilson as the first postmaster. The others were Hugh Robertson, Jan. 17, 1859; John Cummins, Dec. 19, 1859; Grandison R. Wilson, Jan. 19, 1861; William Barber, Sept. 18, 1862; William Barber, Sept. 12, 1865, and William J. Bayne, Sept. 31, 1865. The office was discontinued May 18, 1870.

The next office was at Wathena, and the first postmaster was Thompson Kemper, who took charge when it was established on Aug. 2, 1856. The others were A. B. Sweet, July 12, 1859; Lyman Nash, March 7, 1860; J. T. Braidy, Feb. 3, 1862; J. R. Bowman, Feb. 21, 1863; Edward Downard, April 20, 1863; Augustus Miller, Feb. 16, 1865; A. H. Fuelling, Dec. 29, 1879; William W. Carter, Oct. 18, 1880; B. N. Forbes, Sept. 15, 1885; J. A. Stewart, March 23, 1889; Michael Foley, March 30, 1893; George Manville, April 15, 1897, and W. R. Martin, the present incumbent, appointed June 16, 1914.

The eighth office was at Rogersville, and had only a brief existence. Rogersville was two miles north of Troy and the postoffice was in an old log house which has burned down. It was near the house now owned by Mrs. Clara Belle Loross, and stood on the east side of the creek. The settlement was named after E. V. B. Rogers, one of the first merchants in Doniphan County, and the office was established Jan. 22, 1857, and discontinued Oct. 7, 1859. Mr. Rogers was its first, last and only postmaster.

The ninth office was established at the now defunct town of Charlestown, and had a checkered career. It was opened for business March 14, 1857, with Michael Byrd as the postmaster. The village was on the east side of the creek from John Kotsch's home, six miles northeast of Troy. It was known as Charlestown. The second postmaster was James M. Miller, the father of Mrs. I. B. Clary, who lives at Troy Junction; Mrs. Conas Goatcher and David, William, James, Lem and Jarrett Miller. Michael Byrd was re-appointed Dec. 17, 1859, and on July 3, 1860, the office was discontinued. On Oct. 16, 1866, it was re-established as Charleston and was known as such until Nov. 1, 1867, when it was again discontinued. During this period, Jacob Bozarth, grandfather of Mrs. L. H. Gibson, was the postmaster. From 1867 until 1901, the office was not in use, but it was re-established for a second time on June 10 of that year and was named Bozarth in honor of the last postmaster. Lewis H. Gibson was appointed to handle the mails, and he served until Oct. 14, 1903, when the inauguration of rural routes out of Troy, rendered it useless and it passed out of existence, forever.

The next and tenth office, was in Troy, and was established in Troy on March 16, 1857. Nelson Rogers was the first postmaster, and he also has the distinction of having built the first house in this city. It stood on the site where Christopher Jenkinson lives. The second postmaster was Albert Heed, who was one of Doniphan County's pioneer merchants and who took charge of the local office Jan. 28, 1858. He was followed by Cyrus Leland, father of Cyrus Leland, Jr. J. B. Brady was the next, taking office on April 21, 1860. He afterward engaged in the furniture and carpet business in St. Joseph, and the firm there still bears his name, the J. B. Brady Furniture and Carpet Company.

Isaac Powers took the office on June 23, 1860, and was followed by George Wheeler on March 16, 1863. The next was Antoine Brentano, late husband of Mrs. Barney Alfers, who lives near Bendena, father of Barney Brentano, who lives across the road from St. Benedict's Church. Mr. Brentano was appointed Feb. 4, 1867, and was followed by Daniel Bursk, who now lives in Riverside, Calif., on Aug. 3, 1868. On Sept. 18, 1871, Cyrus Leland, Jr., the politician, was appointed, and was succeeded by George W. Townsend on Sept. 9, 1885. The latter was the father of Mrs. Ida Willis, Mrs. William Chapple, William and Milton Townsend. C. E. Brown took the office April 22, 1889, and lives in Troy at present. He was followed by E. B. Dolly, who came from Missouri, and taught school one term at Oakland before his appointment, and his son-in-law, A. L. Wyankoop, lives in Highland, where Mr. Dolly makes his home. John B. Kennedy, manager of the Troy Fruit-Growers' Association, was the next, being appointed on May 17, 1897, and serving until March 28, 1914, when George H. Burkhalter, the present incumbent, took over the reins.

The eleventh office was established at Elwood on June 10, 1857, and William Saeger was the first postmaster. The others were James P. Brace, Jan. 4, 1858; William M. Alsworth, July 2, 1858; S. D. Smith, Aug. 4, 1859; J. W. Robinson, Feb. 20, 1860; James Noyes, Sept. 18, 1861; Andrew Disque, July 17, 1865; Allen Porter, Aug. 11, 1873; Andrew Disque, April 8, 1878; Rudolph Lucignani, Oct. 25, 1888; Sabina Roberts, Oct. 1, 1889; Eliza Craythorne, Oct. 28, 1897; S. H. Hegarty, Aug. 8, 1903; P. S. Hickman, May 1, 1905, and S. H. Hegarty, April 11, 1911. The latter is the present postmaster.

The twelfth office was opened at LaFayette on July 9, 1857, and the first postmaster was Henry C. Lott. Fred Lyman, Jan. 24, 1862, followed, and then came Isaac Powers, July 15, 1864; M. D. L. Senor, April 11, 1865; William L. Reed, Oct. 9, 1868; John B. Bradley, March 28, 1870. The latter served until Jan. 13, 1871, when the office was discontinued.

The next office to be established was at Geary on July 22, 1857, and the first postmaster was J. L. Roundy. The others were John Alger, Jr., Dec. 27, 1860; William R. Murray, Dec. 28, 1863; Jonathan Rigby, June 10, 1864; J. P. Smith, May 14, 1866; Mary A. Roundy, Dec. 21, 1866; Minetta E. Flickinger, Feb. 11, 1903; S. G. Roundy, April 16, 1904; Minetta E. Flickinger, Dec. 27, 1904, until Oct. 14, 1905, when the office was discontinued.

The Whitehead office was the fourteenth in the county and was opened May 30, 1859, with T. M. O'Brien as postmaster. Joseph Badger was appointed July 6, 1860; A. M. Church, July 5, 1861; A. S. Marvin, Jan. 14, 1864, and A. J. Haskel, July 6, 1864. He served until April 10, 1866, when the office was closed.

The Normanville office which was established March 21, 1862, had quite as checkered an existence as did the office at Charleston. William Normile was the postmaster from the opening until Jan. 30, 1864, when the name was changed to Ridge Farm and James Underwood took the office. He served until Sept. 12, 1865, when the name was again changed to Wolf River, and William J. Gray became the incumbent. Its life was short, however, for on Oct. 3, 1866, the government caused it to be discontinued, and it passed into history.

Severance came next in succession, being thrown open Dec. 29, 1869, with the following postmasters: Alexander Gunn, Dec. 29, 1869; A. S. Campbell, Dec. 4, 1871; A. L. Springer, Dec. 2, 1875; A. S. Campbell, April 16, 1877; A. L. Springer, May 10, 1877; N. A. Springer, Oct. 22, 1878; Edward Heeney, Sept. 1, 1885; James A. Campbell, May 2, 1889; C. F. McCormick, Dec. 17, 1892; William Ward, April 19, 1897; George H. Rob, Feb. 2, 1905; Charles E. Hargis, March 23, 1912, and Thomas J. Lyons, Dec. 2, 1914.

The seventeenth office was established at Fanning on Dec. 14, 1870, and William Gurwell was the first postmaster, his son, William A. Gurwell, succeeding him on March 24, 1903. The others are F. G. Hedrick, Sept. 11, 1903; C. L. Conard, April 11, 1906, and F. G. Hedrick, June 6, 1907. The office at Fanning today is in a prosperous and flourishing condition, and it is hoped that it will grow remarkably each year.

The next office was opened at East Norway on Jan. 9, 1871. Silas W. Bennett was the first postmaster, and the others were Tyra Nelson, Sept. 25, 1874; Thomas E. Hardy, April 22, 1886; on this date because there was a Norway in Republic County, the name was changed to Moray, and has since remained. The first postmaster under the changed name was O. C. Hardy, Dec. 17, 1894; Hiriam Harris, April 20, 1901; John T. Clark, Feb. 3, 1903; C. L. Conard, Dec. 15, 1910, and James M. Powell, April 14, 1913.

The office was discontinued for a few months, but was re-established in the spring of 1915.

The Highland Station postoffice was established Jan. 31, 1871, and on Oct. 5, 1908, it is said, Cyrus Leland requested Congressman Daniel R. Anthony to ask the fourth assistant postmaster general to change the name to Sparks, which was done, in honor of John Sparks, a pioneer and well-known citizen. The first postmaster was James A. Kennedy, named Jan. 31, 1871, and the others were: B. F. Herring, Feb. 10, 1873; Aaron Herring, Jan. 29, 1880; John J. Bradley, Jan. 10, 1887; E. A. Monroe, March 30, 1889; J. H. Foster, Jan. 13, 1893; Neal N. Gallagher, April 20, 1897; Charles V. Shirley, the first to serve under the name of Sparks, Oct. 5, 1908; J. W. Bonham, Jan. 31, 1910, and Miss Lillie Searles, Nov. 21, 1912.

New Presbyterian Church at Highland.

Brenner was the next office to be opened, on Aug. 31, 1871. The postmasters have been, John H. Lancaster, first postmaster; Sophia M. McDonald, June 12, 1876; M. G. Blood, May 6, 1878; J. F. Cook, May 4, 1881; Eugene Hinckley, Nov. 17, 1882; A. S. Bowden, Feb. 6, 1888; A. W. McKeand, July 17, 1888; Louis LaBrath, Oct. 25, 1888; William A. Stanton, Dec. 18, 1888; Bettie Howarth, July 26, 1894; L. A. Howarth, July 26, 1897; George Weatherhogg, June 7, 1902; Harrison Colley, Jr., Feb. 16, 1910; Henry F. Hess, Nov. 12, 1910; Mary E. McNamee, June 27, 1912, and Lela McNamee, Feb. 18, 1914.

William A. Stewart's Threshing Machine and Outfit.

The Leona office was established May 13, 1873, and the first postmaster was David Kercher who now lives at 1534 Pine street, Philadelphia, Pa. The others were Robert C. Mailler, Oct. 1, 1873; J. B. Brooks, Feb. 12, 1879; John A. Myres, Aug. 14, 1879; Enos B. Gatchell, Dec. 19, 1881; George Scofield, Sept. 9, 1885; Cyrus E. Hoover, Aug. 9, 1889; Hattie M. Lewis, Aug. 17, 1893; C. L. Weidensaul, July 16, 1897; B. F. Heaston, June 10, 1904; C. R. Troy, Feb. 6, 1905, and Flavel A. Bodwell, Sept. 7, 1912.

Denton is another office that has had frequent changes of name. It was opened as Darwin, and Robert P. Shulsky was the first postmaster, being appointed on June 14, 1882. He was followed by William Kirby on Aug. 19, 1887. On March 13, 1888, Postmaster Kirby received notice that the name had been changed to Dentonville, and Mr. Kirby continued to serve until April 3, 1889, when Seward McConnell was appointed. The others were James J. Kirby, June 5, 1893; William M. Gillen, Jr., April 17, 1894; J. C. Fields, July 27, 1897; E. E. Black, March 31, 1899; Kyle Murray, April 22, 1902; Charles Murray, Oct. 6, 1903. On Feb. 17, 1905, the name was changed to Denton, and Mr. Murray continued in office until March 2, 1906, when he was succeeded by Alexander Coates. Clarence R. Isaacs, the present incumbent, was appointed Jan. 30, 1915.

The Purcell office was established May 16, 1887, and the first postmaster was Benjamin F. Clem. He was appointed May 16, 1887. The others were William H. Gillespie, May 9, 1889; John Pauly, Sept. 19, 1893; George P. Gallagher, Nov. 8, 1897; Charles L. Baughman, Sept. 17, 1900; Malechi T. Purcell, April 10, 1901, and Nannie B. Zimmerman, Dec. 18, 1905.

Mr. B. F. Clem was the first postmaster at Purcell and is in Oklahoma in the hotel business. William H. Gillespie, the second, has gone to parts unknown, and John Pauly, the third postmaster, is in Sedwick County, Kan., the owner of several farms and a real estate dealer. George P. Gallagher, the fifth postmaster, died in Horton, Kan., about eight years ago, and Charles L. Baughman, the fifth, is now in Horton, Kan., running a hotel. M. T. Purcell, the sixth, is a farmer and interested in the mercantile business at Purcell. Mrs. Nannie B. Zimmerman is postmistress and Elmo Zimmerman, the assistant is a railroad employe, being a telegraph operator and station agent.

The twenty-fourth office was opened at Bendena on Jan. 19, 1888, and V. E. Ladwig was the first postmaster. The others were John Alberts, March 2, 1889; L. W. Campbell, August 1, 1891; J. B. Severin, May 21, 1892; J. C. Fields, of Denton, on account of irregularities in Washington, D. C., received a commission for the Bendena office, June 16, 1897, and it took until Feb. 28, 1898 to straighten out matters at Washington. He was not postmaster at Bendena, but the records will always show that he had a postmaster's commission from June 16, 1897 to Feb. 10, 1898. John W. Fulton, Feb. 10, 1898; Howard Schwab, Feb. 7, 1902; H. L. Vanverth, Dec. 14, 1904; Howard Schwab, Feb. 16, 1912, and Louis P. Johnson, Nov. 20, 1914.

The Orr postoffice had a very brief existence. It was established Dec. 1, 1893, with Luke Clem as postmaster, and went out of continuance Dec. 4, 1897. The office at Lee had a similar experience. It was created on Oct. 7, 1895, and L. R. Crapp was named postmaster. On May 6, 1897, at the suggestion of Cyrus Leland, Jr., the name was changed to Gabriel, in honor of a prominent family in that neighborhood—Joseph and William Gabriel—and George W. Surles was appointed. He was followed by George H. Schuler, appointed on Dec. 5, 1900. Charles F. King succeeded him on May 28, 1901, and served until Feb. 15, 1904, when the office was discontinued.

Blair was the last office to be established in Doniphan County, and was opened Jan. 18, 1908. Charles F. Baggett was the first postmaster, and served until January 30, 1910, when he was succeeded by Jesse D. Euler, who is the present incumbent.

Early History of Doniphan County

Frank A. Root, a Retired Newspaper Man and Pioneer of Doniphan County, Relates Many Interesting Facts—Came From St. Louis on the Steamboat Omaha—Took Stage Coach From Troy to Highland—Printed the "Highlander" on an Old Washington Hand Press in 1858.

(Contributed by Frank A. Root.)

In the latter part of November, 1858, I was on my second trip from Pennsylvania to Kansas, my destination being Highland, Doniphan County. I was a passenger on the Missouri river steam packet "Omaha," from St. Louis to Doniphan. Nearly all the travel to Kansas by public conveyance in the early territorial days was by steamboat. The Missouri Pacific railroad was building westward up the valley, but the end of track on this central pioneer road was about 250 miles away.

I walked down to the steamboat landing immediately after reaching St. Louis, and there learned that a boat was going up the Missouri river to eastern Kansas points that afternoon. I told the clerk that I wanted to stay a day or two in the city before going out on the trip. He privately informed me that it was all right, but cautioned me to say nothing about it, as the boat in fact would not get away until evening the next day. I secured passage at once, getting a stateroom and living in princely style for thirty-six hours before the boat steamed away from St. Louis. I was quite fortunate in getting passage on the "Omaha," it being the last boat of the season destined for Kansas. I paid $15.00 for passage to Doniphan and had only a half-dime left.

It was about the middle of November and the steamer had been out only a few days until there was a sudden cold snap. The weather quickly changed to freezing, hence there was considerable floating ice, which made the voyage quite tedious. Frequently the boat was delayed, sometimes for hours on account of sand-bars." The steamer had a fair cargo of freight and about seventy-five passengers. With so much ice there was great anxiety among many of the passengers, who imagined the boat might have a hard time making the voyage at that late season, and possibly that the river might freeze over, in which case the steamer would be stuck fast until spring. Not only among the passengers was there much anxiety, but the captain, mate, and clerk felt a little uneasy and regarded such a trip on the eve of winter as a hazardous undertaking. They realized that the obstacles to be surmounted might prove disastrous and that the boat could not reach St. Joseph, its destination.

In making this, my last trip up the Missouri river I was on that steamer nine days. When the journey was about half completed, there was a sudden and terrible "shaking up" among the passengers. The boat was "snagged" at an isolated place, with not a building in sight, and had to stop nearly a day. The big hole made in the bow was temporarily patched, the water was pumped out of the hold and finally the boat, with steam up, backed out and was again plowing its way up the muddy, treacherous stream. We passed the important towns of Jefferson City, Brunswick, Boonville, Glasgow, Lexington, Kansas City, Leavenworth, Weston and Atchison.

I landed from the steamer at Doniphan about 4:30 p. m., with that solitary half-dime in my pocket. Hon. Asaph Low was the first man I met and talked with after walking off the boat. He kept the hotel and was agent for the company operating a stage line from Doniphan to Highland. I explained that it had taken every cent except a half-dime I exhibited to him to get there by boat, and that I was on my way to Highland to take the foremanship of a newspaper soon to be started in that infant town. He secured passage for me to Highland and his kindness I never forgot. We both reached Kansas the same month and year, April, 1857, his arrival being twenty days ahead of mine. Later we became intimately acquainted when both were in Atchison, he being for some time register of the U. S. land office in that city, but still keeping his hotel and residing in Doniphan.

It was intensely dark when the stage reached the new county seat town of Troy, the indications were that a storm was coming up. Under the circumstances, the driver said to me that if it would make no difference with me he would prefer not to start out that night, but make the balance of the journey to Highland the following forenoon. I reminded him of the amount of money I had left and that if I could "stand off" the Troy landlord for my supper, lodging and breakfast, I would gladly stay there all night. After consulting with the genial hotel keeper I made the necessary arrangements and "ran my face" for the amount of his bill until later when I was financially fixed so that I could liquidate.

It was a hard night that first one I spent in Doniphan County at the hotel in Troy. There was a shower and the wind blew so lively it seemed like a young hurricane. For hours during that long, lonesome night, with the howling zephyrs sweeping about the premises, shaking the building and rattling the windows, made sleeping with me impossible. Getting up early in the morning I started out to take a survey of the town and surroundings, where I spent my first night at the capital of Doniphan County. The hotel was a story and a half frame structure about 18x32 feet. A few rods distant was another frame building perhaps a little larger than the hotel; this was Doniphan County's new court house; the two houses being all there was on the townsite of Troy when I reached the place.

The stage ride across the rolling prairies from Troy to Highland was not a pleasant one. For a short distance there was some mud and here and there a number of ugly ravines and several chuck holes which jounced the vehicle, making the journey anything but comfortable. The stage drew up in front of the two-story brick hotel about 11 a. m. Highland at this time was little more than a hamlet, but it could be seen an hour before it was reached. The townsite is an ideal location and from it one has a fine view of the surrounding country. Situated on high ground, naturally the place had been correctly named. The two-story university building—the brick walls of which were under roof—showed off nicely for several miles out on the stage road. The pioneers that had cast their lot on the lovely prairie and founded the little town at such an early day, had buoyant hearts and doubtless felt that the foundation had been laid for an educational, social, musical and religious center. The Presbyterian university is the oldest educational institution in Kansas, the foundation walls of which were laid nearly three years before the state emerged from its territorial existence.

The residences on the townsite when I went there could be counted on the fingers of the two hands. Besides the university and the hotel there was a general store in which the postoffice was kept. A carpenter shop, blacksmith shop and a boarding house comprised the three business places. Inside of three months several other branches of business were opened. Iowa Point, four or five miles away on the Missouri river, was quite a business point, and had four good stores. One of these houses was established in 1855, and carried an advertisement in The Highlander, claiming to be the oldest and largest house in northeastern Kansas.

As soon as the second story of the building to be used as the printing office was completed, the "Washington" hand-lever press and the type and various fixtures to be utilized in issuing the forthcoming paper, were put in place, then began the work of putting in type the copy for the first issue. Herrick, Faulkner & Seaver was the name of the firm to be placed at the head of the editorial page, T. P. Herrick, a graduate from Amherst, Mass., being editor. J. E. Faulkner and B. A. Seaver were the publishers. Herrick and Seaver were both attorneys and Faulkner was a surveyor and civil engineer. The name of the new paper had not been chosen, all the interested ones having proposed different names. Being unable to agree on a name, as a compromise I suggested one, and it was unanimously chosen.

On Jan. 1, 1859, about the middle of the afternoon, The Weekly Highlander was born. It was a four page paper with six columns to the page. The town being little more than a hamlet, the advertising patronage was meagre, while the subscription list was still more so. There were only six small cards representing Highland's business, these being a general store, blacksmith shop, carpenter shop, stone mason and plasterer, a bricklayer and plasterer, and three professional cards. The largest "ad" was four inches, carried by the blacksmith, Aaron Baldwin, Jr., while the general store, kept by J. H. Wildey, had the next largest, a three-inch "ad." That first issue carried four "ads" from Iowa Point, these representing the pioneer general store of R. & B. B. Leach and the Word House, kept by Wm. Word, and two physicians—J. H. Leigh and Jos. L. Shields—each carried a small card. Two merchants at St. Joseph carried an "ad." J. Flaherty a quarter column of his big store, and Thos. Connelly a four-inch "ad" of his clothing house. Albert Heed, an attorney at Troy, had a card in the first issue. The first list of letters advertised in this issue contained the names of thirty-nine persons, some of them having from two to five letters awaiting them. Thos. Stevenson was the postmaster, A. J. Minear his deputy. The paper lasted only a few weeks when, for want of sufficient support, it met the inevitable.

There is a little history connected with this early newspaper plant. It was used in 1855 to print a temperance paper at Mansfield, Pa., called The Balance. This journal was issued several months, but finally had to succumb, the editor, on closing his career, admitting that he had been "weighed in the balance and found wanting." On the ruins of this outfit leading citizens of Mansfield started a new paper and gave it the name of Mansfield Express, but like its predecessor its life was brief, the Express running only a few months. After the Civil War broke out the press and type on which The Highlander was issued, were subsequently taken across the river into northwestern Missouri, and finally the type metal was cast into bullets and used by Confederates in shooting Union men.

Highland, as early as 1858, had two church organizations—Presbyterian and Methodist. Religious services were held regularly at the Presbyterian church, located east of town near the Iowa Indian mission. Rev. Mr. James Campbell was pastor of the Presbyterian and Rev. Mr. C. Graham at the head of the Methodist church.

Several citizens of Mansfield, Pa., having decided to go to Kansas, went to Highland in the summer of 1858, and for a time settled there. Among

STRAWBERRY PLANTS

Of the best quality are the kind we grow. We had twenty acres to fruit the past season, of all the leading varieties, and we find that the Son's Prolific is the best yielder of any good shipping variety, and we state that it is the best shipper of the whole lot. With all the extremely wet weather we had, it suffered the least of any. We have also tested it the last four dry seasons, and it stood these extreme seasons fine, yielding better than most varieties, at least double the amount of the Aroma. We planted exclusively of this variety this season for fruiting purposes.

Senator Dunlap is a great berry for the farmer's garden and for nearby markets, but it is absolutely worthless for shipping purposes.

We have growing on our grounds now about seventy-five varieties, including several acres of the famous everbearing strawberries, of which the Progressive is the best of the lot. This berry is very firm, of good size and appearance and extra good quality. It is a good shipping berry and a good yielder. We believe this berry will revolutionize strawberry growing. At this writing, June 22d, our field of Progressive is in full bloom, setting another crop of berries.

We also grow all other kinds of small fruit plants, including Blackberries, Raspberries, Dewberries, Rhubarb and Asparagus, etc.

Our catalogue is different from any you ever read. Our new catalogue will be ready to mail next January. It will pay you to have a copy. Address those who cast their lot in the new territorial town were Rev. Mr. H. N. Seaver and family, Rev. Mr. C. Graham and family, Aaron Baldwin, Jr., and family, Aaron M. Pitts, John E. Faulkner, and Geo. R. Bailey. I had lived in Mansfield, working as a printer for several months, and on my second arrival in Kansas, for a few months in 1858-59, was a citizen of Doniphan County. I cannot recall the names of all the people then residing in Highland. Besides those already mentioned, there was J. P. Johnson, Chas. N. Devine and family, Ebenezer Snyder and family, Rev. Mr. James Campbell and family, Gen. John Bayless and family, Sylvester Bonesteel and family, Mr. Hubbard and his son E. M. and families, Mr. Spinning and family, Scott Noel and family, J. S. Farrington and family, Geo. E. Bird, Benj. Carbutt, Thos. F. Rymer and a few others.

The little town had a splendid class of people, there being several boys and girls, and during the winter of 1858-59 socials and festivals were frequent. One night several wagonloads of people went out to the mission to a social where Rev. Mr. Irvin and wife had been located since 1837, engaged in missionary work among the Indians. Here a goodly portion of the night was spent with that estimable family. The social was given in honor of Rev. and Mrs. Irvin's son, Elliott, who had recently returned from Pittsburg, Pa., with a beautiful young wife. Vocal and instrumental music, games, charades and other interesting plays comprised much of the exercises. Supper was served and it was a meal that seemed equal to most of the elegant spreads gotten up at first-class hotels. It seemed that the long table fairly groaned with the weight of roast turkey, prairie chicken, quail, hot biscuit, mince pie, choice cake and numerous etceteras, with the most delicious coffee and the best butter and cream. It is doubtful if such a choice meal had ever before been prepared in Doniphan County.

At another time that winter a half dozen couples of young people got into a big sleigh improvised for the occasion, and went across to Iowa Point, where there was a dance at the Word House, followed by an oyster supper. Tripping the "light fantastic toe" was kept up for hours after midnight, all enjoying themselves nicely.

Early in the spring of 1859 I had been watching some prairie fires at night, several miles away to the west and northwest. It was a glorious sight to behold the bright flames, whipped by the wind, which lighted up the sky over a large scope of country. I had not seen a prairie fire for nearly two years and this was the first I had ever seen at night. It was a dark night and naturally I watched it with much interest. In a day or two afterwards there was a big prairie fire, about the middle of the forenoon, only a short distance to the west of Highland. It was raging furiously and every minute was coming nearer the town. Many of the inhabitants became frightened. There was a general turnout by the entire town to prepare for fighting the onrushing flames. Tubs and pails were carried out filled with water, strips of carpet and old clothes were spread down on the grass and saturated; all the mops and brooms in town were brought out and soaked; for quite a distance the high grass was mowed and carried to a place of safety, all being prepared to meet the fire. Practically every man, woman and child took part in helping to avert what seemed a disaster. Their efforts were victorious, hence much of the town was saved that otherwise might have been wiped out.

My second visit to Highland in the staging days was in the summer of 1859, but at that time I went by private conveyance with an Atchison friend out to Sabetha, where, on Feb. 12, 1858, I had squatted on a quarter section of land about two miles from the latter place, then a town of two small frame houses. There were about fifteen houses on the Hiawatha townsite at the time, all frame except a brick hotel.

My third and last visit to Highland was over forty-nine years later, when I was carried into the greatly changed town on the first passenger train that steamed into the little city. It seemed that the whole population and surrounding country for miles had gathered for the Highland railroad celebration over the completion and opening of the road they had so long been hoping and waiting for. Practically all of the people turned out, the masses coming for a distance of twenty-five to forty miles. It was a holiday for all and thousands had gathered to enjoy the demonstration. It was a real pleasure to me to go over the early townsite with which I was so familiar in the later fifties, and pick out many of the early landmarks that were still standing. Instead of the place I first knew which had not to exceed twenty buildings, it now had blossomed into a thriving city of nearly 1,000 inhabitants and was a live, but quiet and prosperous point, an ideal home place.

I visited the old university building while in Highland, May 5, 1908, and found that it had been considerably enlarged since I saw it practically a half century before. I strolled around to what was the pioneer brick hotel, where I boarded several weeks in the winter of 1858-59. This building had been remodeled and was now occupied by a bank.

Nothing would have pleased me better on my last visit than to have met some of the boys I knew so well fifty odd years before. I found only one—Geo. E. Bird—who was from my old birthplace, Binghamton, N. Y. Bird was a violinist and never failed to entertain assemblages sawing cat-gut in the early days of Highland. He resided in Severance, but, like myself, had gone to Highland that day to take in the early town and enjoy the railroad celebration.

I must tell a rather grave joke at the expense of my early friend, J. P. Johnson, who seldom failed, when trying to interest strangers, to speak of the healthy climate of Kansas, especially in and about Highland. I was present one day when he was showing a wealthy visitor over the townsite. "This is to be the principal street," he said. "At right angle here is Maine (giving name) street. Over yonder, (pointing in the direction), four acres have been reserved for a cemetery; it is not enough; we'll soon have it filled." This kind of talk evidently was not pleasing to the visitor, and he left town without investing.

EVANGELICAL PARSONAGE AT SPARKS

The Handsome Residence of the Pastor was Built During the Year 1915 at a Cost of $2,200—Members of Congregation Turned Out and Helped With the Excavation—A substantial and Well-Built Home.

The need of a parsonage in which their pastor and his family should reside was recognized by the members of the Evangelical Church at Sparks early in the year 1915, and they set about to formulate plans for raising the money and erecting one that would be a credit to their church and their beloved pastor, as well as to the town.

About March 1, 1915, a building committee took the matter of erecting the building in hand, the committee being named by the members, and proceeded at once to prepare for the building. The committee was composed of Josh B. Dutton, Frank M. Troxell, Dillie C. Miller, Dr. Hubert C. Herring, Eugene J. Herring, Mike C. Bale, Clyde Ritchie and Perry Dawson. The pastor, the Rev. Albert Eugene Butler, and also the presiding elder, worked in conjunction with the committee.

Two lots had been purchased of Cyrus Leland, Jr., south of the Miller store as a site for the parsonage, and the deed made on February 25th, 1915, to the trustees of the church, Josh B. Dutton, Frank M. Troxell, Dillie C. Miller, Dr. Hubert C. Herring and Eugene J. Herring.

First Bank of Doniphan County, Built by J. P. Johnson, 1857, in Highland.

The day that excavation for the cellar and foundation began was an important one for the members of the church. The men of the church turned out to help, and right well did they throw dirt. The honor of throwing the first spade full fell to Orin C. Evearts. It was an ideal day, such a day as the members of the church could have desired for such a noble work. Among those who turned out and gave their services to the excavation were Josh B. Dutton, Frank M. Troxell, Clyde Ritchie, Max Herring, Bruce Herring, Norman Hayes, Bill Collins, Frank Evearts, Eugene J. Herring, the Rev. A. E. Butler, Perry Dawson and Lloyd Dawson. Every man on the job exerted himself that day and with surprising rapidity the dirt was excavated. Farmers passing along the road stopped their teams and cheered the men. The basement and foundation excavations were soon completed.

Then came the work of erecting the parsonage. The man who was given charge of the work, as the boss of the job, was Jess Horr of Troy. The brick, lumber and cement was purchased from

The building was to be thirty feet by forty-six feet in area covered, with six rooms and bath and a basement under the entire house. The materials with which the walls were erected were tile brick with rough cement finish. The inside finishing of woodwork was of natural yellow pine. The work on the building continued until its completion, which was July 24, 1915.

The day after its completion, July 26, 1915, the Rev. Mr. A. E. Butler, the pastor, moved into the parsonage and has since resided there, considering it about as snug a home as one would expect to find in any country town or rural neighborhood.

That also was a day of rejoicing for many of the faithful members of the Evangelical Church. They had provided a comfortable home for the pastor and his family, one that they were proud of, and certainly they had the right to be proud. The parsonage is one of the newest and neatest buildings in the city and it stands as a fitting testimonial of the loyalty of the members of the Evangelical Church to their church and their pastor.

THE EVANGELICAL CHURCH

The Rev. Mr. Butler, Pastor of the Above Church, Tells Some Interesting Facts Relative to Its Organization—Parsonage Built By Jesse Horr, an Adept at the Business.

(By Rev. A. E. Butler.)

The origin of the Evangelical Church at Sparks, has been unique indeed. About the first of January, 1914, a Macedonian call from Sparks, via St. Joseph, Holton and Severance, came to the present pastor, A. E. Butler. As soon as convenient a trip was made to Sparks and arrangements were made for a preaching service on the evening of January 15, 1914, in the old Union Church, at which time the writer preached his first sermon in Sparks to a good sized and attentive audience. After the service, many expressed a desire, since there has been no preaching there for some time, that the writer continue preaching, which was impossible, except during week evenings. He was assured that any time would do, and arrangements were made for each Wednesday evening, and carried out for awhile, when a two and a half weeks' revival was begun, resulting in two conversions and deep religious feeling among others. At the close of this meeting many requests by people of various denominations were made that a permanent work and regular preaching be established. At a meeting called for one week later, the writer stated that he had come to Sparks with no intention of organizing a church, and if in the opinion of the Sparks people there were other denominations that could better do the work, he would tell his hearers good by and wish them God speed. But after assurance of moral, numerical and financial support, a society of twelve members was organized. At the conference session, held in March, 1914, at Newton, Kansas, the writer was again stationed at Bellevue and he arranged for regular preaching at Sparks every two weeks, and thus it continued in co-operation with the Union Sunday school, both at Sparks and District No. 6, until about July 1, 1914, when a large tent was raised on the vacant property to the rear of the old Dr. A. Herring drug store in Sparks, and on July 5, Evangelist E. W. Pettigord of Kansas City, Mo., assisted by others, began a three weeks religious campaign. While at first the attendance was small, there was much curiosity and speculation and no little doubt as to the outcome of the effort. It soon became evident that God was behind the movement and was digging deep into the consciences of men and women. By the expiration of the three weeks, the tent with a seating capacity of some 350, was inadequate to hold the nightly crowds, and many had found a new life in Jesus Christ.

A beautiful baptismal service was held at Eagle Springs, Monday afternoon, following the close of the meeting at which time thirty-four persons who had been converted during the meeting were baptized. These, with the others who were converted the following week, making a total of about fifty-five, joined the church. Since that time, through other meetings which have been held, the work has been strengthened by other conversions and thus the work goes on, we believe, under God's direction and power.

While we believe in the Evangelical Church, we never have said it was the only church. Our only purpose at Sparks is to preach the gospel, live the gospel, and if possible, lead men to Christ. We make no distinction or reservation in our services. Welcoming one and all, old and young, and thus we will strive by God's help to do you good.

Wesley A. Robinson

The Leading Grocer—Turns Stock Every Sixty Days—All of His Eatables Come Under the Pure Food Act—Good Things to Eat His Specialty—Pays Highest Prices for Country Produce—Making a Good Record for Himself as a Business Man.

Wesley A. Robinson, the popular grocer at Sparks, is one of the young men of Doniphan County who are making good in the retail business. He was born near Eagle Springs, in Iowa Township, and is a son of Martin and Laura Robinson, the date of his birth being April 16, 1883. He received his education mostly in the school in Willow Springs district, and worked on his father's farm until, in the fall of 1904—October 10 was the date—he started a barber shop in Sparks and, having learned the trade himself, did a good business for eleven years. He sold his shop March 3, 1915, to Ebbie Logan Jenkins, who is now conducting the shop.

This young man's business qualifications led him to enter the grocery business in Sparks after disposing of his barber shop, and he now is numbered among the prosperous merchants of Sparks, and one wholly worthy of the patronage of the people, as well as their esteem. He has made a success of that business by his agreeable manner and his methods of doing business, adhering always to his fixed rule of treating his patrons with respect and giving them a square deal in every transaction. He is a young man who not only makes friends, but retains them. His store is not as extensive as some of the stores throughout Doniphan County, but he is always to be found doing his level best to supply his trade with the best groceries obtainable and at honest prices.

Mr. Robinson married Miss Grace D. Searles January 20, 1910. She is a daughter of Andrew and Adda Searles of near Sparks, and was born June 20, 1891, on the farm of her father. She attended the Sparks school and after finishing there, she attended the county normal school one term, at Troy. Mrs. Robinson is a woman of fine mind, of pleasant ways, and withal she is a good business woman. Like Mr. Robinson, she is ambitious, and whatever counts for the success of her husband's business calls for her best endeavor. Thus the Robinsons, Wesley and Grace, are numbered as among the young married people of this neighborhood whose influence and whose industry are to be counted upon at any time for that which helps to build up the community.

John Noble

One of the prosperous citizens in Doniphan County who has reared an estimable family, is John Noble of Highland, who was born November 7, 1857, in Buchanan County, Mo., and came to this county April 1, 1863, where he has lived ever since. He was married in Doniphan County to Emma A. Sinclair, November 6, 1881. To this union have been born Merna, Fred and William. Miss Merna is one of the prominent teachers of Doniphan County.

Gen. William P. Richardson

One of the prominent pioneers of Doniphan County was William P. Richardson, who was Indian agent for the Kickapoos for several years, from 1838, until some time in the '40's. He was an intimate friend of the Rev. Samuel M. Irvin. After serving as Indian agent, he settled in Burr Oak Township and then was elected to the territorial council on March 30, 1855. Later he was appointed major-general of the territorial militia, and had charge of the border ruffain trouble during the siege and sacking of Lawrence by Quantrell. At one time he conducted a sawmill at White Head, afterward known as Bellemont. Was Indian agent in 1841, when the old grist mill which stood on the Abe Sutton farm, five miles north of Troy, was burned.

EBBIE LOGAN JENKINS

Proprietor of the Barber Shop in Sparks and a Substantial Citizen of That Place, Is a Native of Doniphan County.

Born on a farm near Highland, in Iowa Township, Sept. 7, 1890, Ebbie Logan Jenkins, the well-known proprietor of the barber shop at Sparks, has spent the twenty-five years of his life in Doniphan County and is entitled to recognition as good citizen and a real thorough-bred Kansan.

The parents of Mr. Jenkins, Mr. and Mrs. James Logan Jenkins, were among the substantial people of Iowa Township and among the well-known dwellers on the farms of that part of the county. In the district schools of Iowa Township, Eobie Logan Jenkins received his education, and among the industrious farmer folks he grew to manhood. His life up to a little over a year ago, was spent on the farm of his father. He was a hard worker and a good farmer, usually holding up his full share of the burdens and making himself generally useful.

On March 2, 1915, Mr. Jenkins married Miss Flossie May Sparks, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Jefferson Sparks and a grand-daughter of John Green Sparks, for whom the village of Sparks was named, and whose death occurred April 3, 1911. Mrs. Jenkins also is a native of Doniphan County and was born near Sparks Nov. 1, 1896.

He bought the barber shop he now owns from Wes Robinson and from the start has been successful. He is a young man who makes friends and is popular with the men of the town and surrounding country, the old men as well as the young men, evidence of which is shown by the patronage he receives from them in his business as the village barber. His aim always is to do good satisfactory work, so that once a man patronizes his shop he becomes a regular patron.

Mr. Jenkins deserves credit for his splendid citizenship as well as for his determined fight for success. He is interested in the affairs of the town and surrounding territory and is a valuable man.

Mr. and Mrs. Jenkins are among the deservedly popular young married couples of the Sparks community and have a host of well-wishing friends. They are our home people and as such are respected by everybody.

Sparks Business Firms

Sparks has a nice aggregation of business houses, and the proprietors are all efficient in ther individual lines, and do a great deal to promote the prosperity of the little town. Each storekeeper, restaurant man, school teacher, or whatever his trade is, strives to give to the public the very best goods that money can buy and the very best service he is capable of. This idea of giving to the public all that they pay for and a little bit more, might be said to be the motto of the following list of tradespeople and professional people of Sparks:

Pleasant V. Miller, cashier of Sparks State Bank, is a young man who is in a responsible position, and is thoroughly capable of holding it. The patrons of the bank repose great confidence in Mr. Miller's ability, and he has never failed them.

D. G. Miller is the station agent, and a better man never stamped nor punched a ticket on the Burlington Railroad. He is always obliging and pleasant, despite his strenuous duties.

Miss Besse Taylor, principal of the schools, is a young lady of high culture and excellent education, and eminently qualified to perform the duties of principal.

Miss Anna Hansen, primary teacher, was born and reared in Doniphan Coupnty, and is well fitted for the place she fills.

Dr. Hubert G. Herring is also a Doniphan County product, and is well known, not only in Sparks, but in the surrounding country. The residents trust Dr. Herring in all cases of sickness.

George W. Miller, who runs a general store, is an old-timer and carries a complete line of general merchandise. Hs has a good trade, and is doing well.

Frank M. Troxell runs a general store. Mr. Troxell needs no introduction, as he has lived in Doniphan County for many years, and worked for Cy Leland at one time. He used to be around the station a great deal, and has a wide acquaintance.

Conard Johnson, the manager of the Troxell store, is a good salesman, and well qualified for his position.

Erwin R. Newton runs a restaurant and everything good to eat may be procured here at prices that are fair. Mr. Newton was born in Doniphan County, and has a host of friends in his home town and vicinity.

James S. Lehew plies the blacksmith trade, as does also David Guy, and they are both as good men as ever swung a sledge or pounded an anvil. Their shops are popular places for the farmers to sit and swap news while horses are being shod.

Wesley A. Robinson conducts the grocery store, and everybody is boosting him in this new venture. He has a nice, fresh stock of goods, and all comply with the pure-food laws of the state. Mr. Robinson was formerly a barber, in which trade he was engaged for more than ten years. Wesley made a good barber, but he had more ability than is required for that vocation, so he embarked as a business man and, no doubt, will make a success of it.

Orrin Evarts is the drayman, and he does an extensive business. Everyone trusts Mr. Evarts, and he does practically all the hauling for the merchants and those who do not have vehicles of their own.

Michael C. Bale is a contractor, and he has erected many a house in and around Sparks. When he is passing along the road he can point in almost any direction and say, "There is the house that Mike built." His work is an advertisement for him, as he has no dissatisfied customers.

Ebbie L. Jenkins is the tonsorial artist for the town, and he is an adept in his line. He knows how to give a good, clean shave without taking off the hide.

Eugene J. Herring, the manager of Dunkle Grain Co., has spent his life thus far in Doniphan County, and his excellent ability and manners prove it.

Sparks postoffice, Sparks, Kansas.

Claude E. Randall, the rural letter carrier, has made a good record. The mail is always delivered on time, rain, shine or snowstorm. Raymond Randall, his substitute, is a good man for the place.

Mrs. Emeline Crane is the village dressmaker, and from the handsome gowns which some of the Sparks fair sex wear, we would judge she is right on the job when it comes to frills and furbelows.

Miss Lillian Searles is the postmistress, and has proven a fine selection for the place. She is the daughter of Andrew Searles, a well-known and highly respected citizen of Doniphan County. The people of Sparks are so well pleased with the service given by Miss Lizzie Gallagher as postmistress that they all urged the appointment of another young lady, and Miss Lillian has not been a disappointment in any sense of the word. She understands her business and performs her duties in an upright and conscientious way.

The following is a list of the residents of Sparks and those living within a radius of one-half mile of the town:

John M. Burton, Mrs. Bertha Burton, Doris Burton, Mayetta Burton, Ray Burton, Mrs. John Bonham, Arthur B. Bonham, Michael C. Bale, Mrs. Myrtle Bale, Mrs. Millie Brownlee, Chas. P. Baskins, Mrs. Della Baskins, Levi N. ## MISS LILLIE SEARLES

The Efficient and Accommodating Postmistress of Sparks.

The appointment of women to government offices is not so rare a thing in this day and age, yet in many cases there are features that make them of unusual interest. We have women state senators, women deputy marshals, women deputy clerks, but very few women serving as the head of a postoffice. Sparks, however, has one woman official and she is more than proving to the world the contention of suffrage leaders that the weaker sex is as capable of holding government offices as the stronger.

Miss Lillie Searles was appointed postmistress at Sparks by President William Howard Taft on Nov. 21, 1912. It was one of the last postoffice appointments the then outgoing executive made. Miss Searles was well qualified for the position and had a large number of friends who were working day and night for her success. She brought no pressure to bear upon anyone in obtaining the appointment, but rather relied upon her own merits and her friends did the rest. They rallied to the cause and brought into play all of the tactics they honestly could. There was, however, no opposition to her because of her ability.

Miss Searles is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Searles, and was born on Aug. 12, 1887, on a farm near Sparks. She was educated in the public schools of that town and through her kindly manner, sunny disposition and willingness to help everyone she could, made many friends, not only in Sparks, but all over the entire community as well. These friends were her greatest asset when the move was made to obtain her appointment. Miss Searles has made an ideal postmistress. She is cheerful, accommodating and never fails to assist everyone who calls upon her for help. In addition she has brought efficiency to the handling of the mails. There are no great mistakes and there is no confusion. Andrew Searles, her father, owns the farm on which is held the Sparks picnic each year.

The following is a list of those present at the last day of the Willow Springs schiol in May, 1915, whinc was taught by Miss Kitna V. Smith, now Mrs. Earl J. Dutton. Reading from left to right, top row: Sam Walters, Mrs. Griffis, Mrs. Williams, Mrs. Taylor, Mrs. Frakes, Kitner V. # Josh B. Dutton

One of the Most Successful Farmers in the County, and the Owner of Five Hundred Acres of Fine Land—Now Retired and Occupying His Beautiful Residence in the Town of Sparks—A Public Spirited Citizen.

Doniphan County is distinctively a community of good farms and of good farmers. Taking the county in its entirey there is not another county in Kansas or in either Missouri or Nebraska that will match up with it in the quality of soil and ideal conditions for farming. Also taking the farmers of Doniphan County as a body there are more good farmers among them than will be found in any other community or county in the three states. There is something of a harmonious relation between good soil and a good farmer. Good soil promotes industry, intelligence and thrift—and such a combination makes for wealth and prosperity.

This sketch, therefore, is to deal with the facts concerning the life of a good farmer and the owner of a good farm, for everybody who knows him will agree that Josh B. Dutton is one of the best farmers in Doniphan County and that his great farm of five hundred acres of land near the town of Sparks is one of the best farms in the state, worth $75,000 in money.

Josh B. Dutton was born in Pulaska County, Kentucky, on June 9, 1859, though his remarkable career was made in Kansas and in Doniphan County. His father was Andrew Dutton and his mother was Mary Dutton. They were plain farmer folks but of the kind that count for intelligence and thrift and all things else that are worth while in this life. The father was a man of tremendous force and of practical ideas about farming and stock raising, and a good judge of farm land. The Blue Grass State, Kentucky, offered no such inducements to young men in farming as were offered by Kansas at the close of the Civil War. The father, hearing the stories told about the young state of Kansas and its soil of wonderful fertility, gathered together his belongings and with his family moved to Kansas, settling on a fine piece of land near Iowa Point on March 20, 1865, when Josh B. Dutton was but a boy of six years.

Well can we imagine what a wonderful journey it was from Kentucky to Kansas in the old prairie schooner to the youthful Josh, and what were his thoughts and feelings when he first beheld the beautiful land that was to be his home through the rest of his life. The Missouri River flowing by with the great white steamboats glistening in the sunshine of early spring; the picturesque verdure-clad hills skirting the river, and back of the hills the rolling prairie reaching out far to the west; and over all a sky that seemed brighter and bluer than the sky the boy had seen about the old home in Kentucky where he was born.

Residence of Josh B. Dutton, in Sparks

The Civil War had ended and thousands of settlers were pouring into the new state to take up homesteads. It was a grand sight, one never to be forgotten, to see the long lines of prairie schooners slowly moving out into Kansas, many of them drawn by oxen yoked to a linch pin wagon. They were coming from the older states east of the Mississippi River, these men and woman pioneers, filled with high hopes and aspirations. Among them were a large sprinkling of people of foreign birth or origin, who had landed on the Atlantic Coast and made their way westward in search of good lands upon which to establish homes. A large proportion of the pioneers in Doniphan County, it was observed, were of the industrious and hardy Germans, some from France and a few from Norway and Sweden. They had learned farming or followed farming in their native countries and were the kind who make farming pay. They were good people to settle among, these people with advanced ideas about soil culture which were unknown to many of the emigrants from the eastern states.

There was something of cosmopolitanism in the mingling of these people among whom the parents of Josh B. Dutton settled. They were the forerunners of a high order of civilization which has made the state of Kansas famous the world over for advanced ideas in farming as well as in education and citizenship. All of which explains how it happens that our county of Doniphan has become noted for its numerous highly improved farms and wealthy farmers.

Farm Residence of Josh B. Dutton, situated in Iowa Township; now occupied by his son, Earle J. Dutton.

As a boy growing up to manhood the subject of this sketch did about what other farmer's boys did. He got as good a schooling as the opportunities afforded, and he also got a good many ideas from his own experience and observations. The modern school houses and educational facilities of today were only a dream when this youth came to Kansas. His father was a good farmer, but the boy was ambitious to be a better farmer than his father. He worked early and late on the farm and there was no shirking of his tasks. He realized thus early in life that success could only come to him as a farmer through intelligent and close application to the business at hand. Whatever he undertook to do he did well. If it was plowing or planting, or gathering in the crops, or caring for live stock, he did the very best he knew; and if it was to study his lessons, why, he generally showed up in his class as well or better prepared than any of the other pupils; and when it came to play young Josh B. Dutton was as full of life and jollity and as good at any of the games as any of his playmates. His was a well balanced life, enough work, enough study, enough play and enough sleep. There was no frittering away of his time in droning or idleness.

Arriving at manhood Josh did what a sensible young farmer should have done. He took unto himself a wife. She was Miss Alice Ball of Iowa Point, a daughter of Amos and Margaret Ball, who were among the prosperous farmer folks of that part of the county. The marriage was performed at the home of the bride's parents on September 4, 1881, and it was an event of the neighborhood, the young couple receiving the congratulations and the good wishes of everybody for miles around Iowa Point.

The marriage, however, was the crowning event of these two lives, for it meant the founding of an ideal home and the starting out on life's journey with high hopes, a determination to win success, and best of all to live rightly and rear their children for true manhood and womanhood. They became members of the Evangelical Lutheran Church and active workers in that church, whose true Christian influence for years has been felt in the community. While adhering to that particular religious faith, however, Mr. and Mrs. Dutton have lent encouragement to other denominations, an instance of which is shown in Mr. Dutton's gift toward the erection of the new Christian Church in Sparks, which was appreciated by the worthy pastor and his people.

Farming on his own account Josh B. Dutton employed the same methods and system he had followed and which he had learned by experience on his father's farm, and taking advantage of every good new idea that meant advancement. He was progressive in all things, as he has been all through his life. Whatever thing that was of value to him in his farming business he seized upon.

The Josh B. Dutton farm near Sparks now embraces five hundred acres of fine rich soil in a high state of improvement. It is one of the most beautiful and picturesque farms in Kansas, its broad fields of gently sloping hills so characteristic of our Kansas, and admired by all who pass that way.

The improvements on the farm are in keeping with the progressiveness of its owner. Beginning back in the 1880s with the making of such improvements as were needed Mr. Dutton has added to them year by year until it can be said that it is one of the best improved farms in that locality. His barns and granaries, his sheds for hay, his buildings for housing his implements and farm machinery, are all kept in fair order. The fences are kept up and the fields and pastures have the appearance of being cared for with a system which only such a progressive farmer can employ.

Much attention has been given to live stock by Mr. Dutton in the years of his farming activity. He raises good cattle and good hogs on the theory that it costs no more to grow fine bred stock than it costs to grow scrubby stock. He has been an extensive feeder of sheep and has made a success of that branch of farming, often carrying several hundred head of sheep on the farm at one time. He buys them at the stock yards in St. Joseph and Kansas City and brings them to his Doniphan County farm to put fat on them and put them in fine condition for the market, and the buyers of sheep for the fancy mutton trade are eager to take all of the sheep offered by him. With all his live stock it is quality that counts in added profits to this successful business farmer of Doniphan County.

The same system that Josh Dutton employs in the care of his farm and in the growing of his crops and live stock is carried out to a degree of consistency in the marketing of all his products and in the buying of machinery and supplies. He is constantly in touch with the market situation and whatever he sells brings the best market price. He permits nothing that is of value as food to go to waste. If he has more feed on hand than he has live stock to consume it he buys more stock to put the surplus feed into. It is business to do that way. There's good money in building up cattle, hogs and sheep that bring $8 or $9 a hundred pounds, especially when you raise the feed that goes into the animals.

Mr. and Mrs. Dutton have two sons and one daughter. Irvin F., the oldest, was born April 17, 1882. Earl J., born January 18, 1888; and Edna A., born September 8, 1903. All were born on the farm near Sparks. The children have been reared under the parental roof with the loving care of their fond parents, each partaking of those sterling qualities that in their father and mother have made for them a name as among our noblest and best examples of Christian citizenship.

Earl J. Dutton, the younger of the two sons, was married June 3, 1915, to Miss Kitna V. Smith, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Smith of Washington Township, near Blair. She is a young woman of fine culture and was one of the most popular school teachers in the county. The wedding was a happy event in the social circles of the community and the bride and groom were showered with the blessings and good wishes of hundreds of their friends, including many of the former pupils of the bride.

The two sons of Mr. and Mrs. Josh B. Dutton possess many of the business traits of their father and both are becoming recognized as successful and prosperous farmers. They love the soil and they love the home farm. Their attitude toward the farm suggests the appropriateness of the poet's lines:

"Happy he whom neither wealth nor fortune,
Nor the march of the encroaching city
Drives an exile from his ancestral home."

There is something splendid about a young man whose ambition is to follow in the footsteps of his father, and who, hearkening not to the allurements of the city, is content to cultivate the soil that it may bring forth an abundance of the things necessary to sustain life. The boys have received their education in our public schools, than which there are no better in the state, and are well equipped for life.

The daughter, Edna, who at this writing is twelve years old, is a charming girl, a bright pupil in school, popular with all who know her. She is a true daughter of her mother, and we may safely predict for her a life of usefulness and Christian service such as has endeared the mother to the people of this community as among the noblest of women.

Only recently Josh B. Dutton, having made a success at farming far beyond the dreams of his boyhood days, and feeling that the farm which he had brought up from its wild state to its present highly improved condition would be safe in the hands of his two sons, decided to retire and enjoy the rest which he had earned through years of patient labor. Most farmers of his age, wealth and social position, would have gone off to live in the city, but not so with Mr. and Mrs. Josh B. Dutton. They desired to keep within hailing distance of the farm which had been their home during the years of their married life, and among their children and the people they had known so well and with whom they delighted to mingle, so they established home in the little town of Sparks.

Feeding sheep on Josh Dutton's farm in Iowa Township.

In rebuilding their home in Sparks they brought many of the modern conveniences of the city to them, making it one of the most attractive country town residences in Iowa Township. In architecture and workmanship it accords with the high character of its proud owners. It is an ideal home in which an ideal couple, now in the prime of their lives, really live.

To say that Mr. and Mrs. Dutton and their sons and daughters are an honor to the community is only telling half of the truth. Mr. Dutton brings to the little town of Sparks an experience in life, together with a progressive public spirit that makes him a good addition to the citizenship of the town and one who will be worth something for the good of the place. He has all through life encouraged the schools and churches, substantial public improvements and good roads. His influence for all of these things will count in his new home.

For the Duttons we shall say in concluding this sketch that they are filling their rightful place as leaders in the religious, social and business life of the Sparks community, and all are wishing for them long and happy lives made glorious by their splendid service and Christian citizenship.

The Union Church at Sparks

Erected in 1881, It Has Been Used By Several Denominations and Is the Mother of Several Churches—The Money for the Building Raised By a Committee of Young Women—History of the Church and the Churches that Grew Out of It —The New Christian Church the Last.

(Contributed by Mr. and Mrs. John Alfry.)

The Christian people of Highland Station (now Sparks, Kansas), feeling the need of a place of worship, united in the erection of the little church which has been known since then, 1881, as the Union church. It was not a very pretentious church, but it served the purpose, and it was a good move for the remnant of the several denominations entering into its erection. It was in fact a Union church, for while one denomination or another had charge at different times, the services usually were attended by representatives of several denominations. Then as a denomination would become strong enough by the addition of members from new people coming in, that denomination would go off and erect a church building of its own. Thus the Union church became a mother of churches, and a blessing to the community.

The funds for the erection of the Union church building were raised in 1881 by a committee on building fund composed of five young women, and to them is largely due the success of the early day venture. These young women were popular members of the community, each deeply religious and enthusiastic for the cause. They were: Miss Mettie Herring, now Cowger; Miss Mary Clintman, now Cundiff; Miss Emma Browning, now Holton; Miss Minnie Shirley, now Blake; and Miss Flora Shirley.

In this Union church there was a mingling of Christian fellowship of members of several denominations: Christian, Methodist Epsicopal, Baptist, Dunkard, Adventist, Latter Day Saints. They got along nicely and the meetings were enjoyable and profitable. Up to 1900 the Christian denomination used the church more than any other denomination.

The Bapists were first to leave the Union church. Having increased in numbers they built a church of their own in the autumn of 1896. It was located east of the late Dr. Herring's place, but later was moved to higher ground just west of the Herring residence.

After 1900 there were no regular services in the Union church until Aug. 3, 1913, when the Union Sunday school was reorganized. Later the Rev. Mr. Butler of the Bellview Evangelical church, held a meeting which resulted in the organization of an Evangelical church, that denomination using the Union church about one-half of the time. Also during the last year the Adventists and Latter Day Saints each held special meetings there of a few weeks duration.

The Christian denomination, early in the present year, was reorganized by Floyd Basch of Highland with fifteen members. An effort had been put forth for the bringing in of new members to this organization in a series of meetings conducted by the Rev. Mr. A. J. Pirtle of Severance, through the Doniphan County Christian organization. These meetings lasting two weeks, resulted in 136 new members coming into the church, and making it a substantial organization and one able to maintain an independent existence.

This led the Christian denomination to take steps toward the erection of a building of their own, and a building campaign was at once inaugurated by the Rev. Mr. Pirtle, which proved to be so successful that within a short time sufficient funds were raised or pledged to insure the erection of a building.

The cornerstone of the new Christian church was laid Sunday, April 25, 1915, and the building was dedicated Sunday, June 13, 1915. It is a substantial building, neat and attractive and a credit to the Sparks community and the Christian denomination.

The old Union church will continue as a Union church and in the years to come the people hope to see other churches for different denominations spring from it—for its mission seems to be to foster and encourage the building of new churches.

M. S. Peck

One of the successful stockmen of these parts is M. S. Peck, a native of Pennsylvania. He is, in truth, a shepherd of the hills, as his hobby is raising sheep for market, although he has the usual run of cattle and hogs out on his fine farm, one and one-half miles northeast of Highland. In the last few years, Mr. Peck has realized a handsome profit through his quick and accurate handling of the commission business.

Residence of M. S. Peck, built by Mark F. Weidensaul of Highland.

Mr. Peck first came to Doniphan County in 1880, but the wanderlust was in his blood, and we hear of him as next in Illinois, then in Michigan, and, in 1889, back again in Doniphan County, Kansas. He first rented land, which yielded him dollars and cents to the extent that he purchased the same tract of land, and from year to year added to it, which now constitutes his valuable 280-acre farm. He retired from active farm life in the spring of 1914, and moved to Highland, and now puts in his time overseeing the farm, and buying and selling stock.

Philander C. Geer

Philander C. Geer, born September 1, 1834, in Champaign County, Ohio. He enlisted in 134th Ohio regiment, Company D, in 1865, and was mustered out at Columbus, Ohio, May 12, 1865. Came to Kansas in September, 1865, and settled in Doniphan County at Highland. He had three daughters: (Jennie) Mrs. Sam Chambers, (Fannie) Mrs. Herman Brudern, and (Nettie) Mrs. Dr. R. Breeding, and one son, William Lenn Geer. Mr. Geer resided in Highland until his death, October 17, 1914, where he purchased a home forty-nine years ago. The subject of this sketch was the oldest blacksmith in northeast Kansas.

James E. McAlister

James E. McAlister was born in Bond County, Illinois, October 5, 1842. Enlisted July 3, 1861, in Company H, Thirty-Fifth Regiment, Illinois volunteers, at Vandalia, Illinois. Mustered out at Springfield, Illinois, April 9, 1865. Was married to Miss Josephine C. Luster, in 1880. Six children: Ida May, Flossie, Thurley Weed, Floyd Luster, Robert Bruce, Harold. Wife is living.

Fanning

Fanning is located on Section 34, Town 2, Range 20, in Iowa Township, a station on the Burlington & Missouri Railroad; was laid off in the spring of 1870, by Messrs. Reed and Bradley; the original townsite consisted of about 10 acres.

On Nov. 26, 1857, navigation had closed on the Missouri river for the winter at White Cloud, St. Joseph and all points bordering on Doniphan County

A Doniphan County Tragedy

Terrible Deed of Sam Brown, Who Killed His Child, His Father-in-Law, Robert Jenkins, Shot His Wife and Then Killed Himself—Bloody Crime Was Evidently Premeditated—Domestic Trouble Supposed to Have Been the Cause.

While there have been many crimes of a sickening character committed in Doniphan County since the early days, the most revolting of all was perpetrated last summer, when Sam Brown killed his eight-months-old child, his father-in-law, Robert Jenkins, an old soldier, who served in Company D, Thirteenth Kansas Volunteer Infantry, dangerously wounded his wife, and then killed himself.

The terrible deed was committed about 6 o'clock on the evening of June 24, 1914, on the east side of the old Gallagher place, two miles northwest of Fanning, and news of the crime threw the entire county into a state of the most intense excitement.

The night of the crime the residents of Doniphan were enjoying the lovely summer weather, and the shock of such a bloody deed aroused the people to a pitch of frenzy such as they had never known before. The residents of Doniphan had been singularly free from having a criminal stain on their native country for many years, and this awful tragedy almost made them wild.

Sam Brown, more familiarly known as "Long Brown," on account of his great height—he was six feet, six—had been a farm hand at numerous places around Doniphan County for several years, and had married the daughter of Robert Jenkins, a highly respected old soldier, who owned a small farm not far from the scene of the tragedy.

Nobody seems to know the exact cause which prompted the shooting, but many of the people who knew Brown intimately, took the most charitable view of his act by openly stating that the man must have been crazy, but if he was, he showed the cunning of a mad man, all right, in surreptitiously coming to the county and hiding in wait for his victims as they returned from town.

Brown had been living in Missouri for some time previous to the murders, but he returned to Doniphan County some time about the 24th of June. It is not known whether he came back that day or not, but the supposition is that some friend of his kept him posted on the movements of his wife and Mr. Jenkins.

Anyway, he waited in hiding for them when they were returning from Troy and, without a word of warning, began shooting. Mr. Jenkins took his daughter and the baby into Troy early that day in his wagon, and as they were approaching Gallagher's place, Brown crept from cover and started to blaze away.

The baby was killed instantly in the mother's arms, and Mrs. Brown was shot in the face. Mr. Jenkins ran about 100 yards toward Gallagher's house and, as he was falling, he called to Rev. Sam Twombly, saying that Brown had shot him. Then he expired.

When he had completed his bloody work, Brown walked about a hundred yards into the brush, where he shot and killed himself. The neighbors ran to the scene, and when it was found that Mrs. Brown had not been killed, everything possible was done for the suffering woman.

Joe Griffin was sheriff of Doniphan County at the time, and he and Boyd Ellis were soon on the way to the spot where the tragedy was enacted, accompanied by Bob Wilson, who later succeeded Mr. Griffin as sheriff of the county. Dr. A. E. Cordonier, county coroner, took charge of the bodies of Mr. Jenkins, the baby and Sam Brown. Mrs. Brown was hurried to Sparks, Kansas, where she was treated by Dr. A. Herring. She had been dangerously wounded, but eventually recovered.

The bodies of Mr. Jenkins and the child were buried side by side in the cemetery near the Jenkins place. The body of Sam Brown was buried in the potter's field section of Mt. Olivet Cemetery. Undertaker L. T. Hargus buried Brown, and Undertaker S. A. Conaway conducted the funeral of Robert Jenkins and the baby.

When the body of Sam Brown was found in the brush, Coroner Cordonier found a note requesting the people to bury him beside his wife and child. It is not known when the note was written, but many people were of the opinion that Brown scribbled it after he had seen the result of his bloody work, and believed that he had made a complete job and succeeded in killing both wife, child and father-in-law.

Mr. Jenkins was one of the pioneer settlers of Doniphan County. He was an old soldier with a good Civil War record. While he was not considered wealthy, he was highly respected and was both a good neighbor and an upright citizen. The tragedy caused a pall of gloom to spread over that part of the county where Mr. Jenkins and his daughter were so very well known, and the killing of the baby was a distressingly sad affair.

Cedar Creek school house, District No. 29. Formerly Called Chapson. Miss Carrie Dillon, teacher. Members of school board, Guy Nelson, O. E. Lucas and J. F. Mosier. School house constructed 1898.

The fact that Brown had been away from the county for some time has caused many people to wonder how he knew of the whereabouts of Mr. Jenkins and his daughter and child on that fatal day. Brown had not been seen to come back to the county and many of the residents to this day are of the opinion that some friend of Brown's must have furnished the information that his father-in-law had driven into Troy with the woman and child.

ALBERT EUGENE BUTLER

The Popular Pastor of the Evangelical Church at Sparks, is a Native of Kansas, a Former Educator Who Gave Up Teaching to Enter the Ministry, in Which He Is Now Engaged — Four Years as a Newspaper Employe in Kansas City.

The Rev. Albert Eugene Butler, pastor of the Evangelical Church at Sparks, has won his way to the hearts of the people of his congregation and his community by his pleasant manners, his broad sympathy and his clear and logical discourses. The Rev. Mr. Butler is a Kansan, which explains the why and wherefore of his ability and his popularity. He was born near Yates Center, January 4, 1881, his parents then residing on a farm in Woodson County. His education was obtained in the country schools of Woodson County but he finished his schooling in a three year course in the Burlington, Kansas, high school. As a student he applied himself to his studies with a determination to get the best out of them. He had little inclination to engage in farming, preferring to achieve success in the field of education, with the ultimate aim of becoming a minister of the Gospel. His parents encouraged him in his noble effort and were proud of his success.

After leaving the high school with his diploma of graduation this ambitious young man took the examination and was granted a teacher's certificate. He then taught for three years in schools in Woodson County, making a good record and one which won him a large circle of admiring friends.

On October 6, 1903, Albert Eugene Butler married Miss Hattie Weide of Yates Center, a young woman of many accomplishments who proved to be a model wife and helpmate. He taught school the winter after their marriage. Then they moved to Kansas City where for four years he was in the employ of the Kansas City Star. During his residence in Kansas City his wife died, April 6, 1909, leaving two children, Thelma, who is now seven years of age, and Lillian, now nine years of age.

After the death of Mrs. Butler this young man decided to prepare himself for the ministry, as he had planned to do at the time he gave up school teaching. He went to Naperville, Illinois, and spent two years in the Evangelical Theological Seminary, graduating June 12, 1911. He preached his first sermon at Eola, Illinois, on May 15, 1910, before he graduated.

Leaving the Theological Seminary a minister of the Gospel the subject of this sketch returned to Yates Center where, on June 18, 1911, he married Miss Eda L. Weide, a cousin of his first wife. Four days after their marriage, on June 22, 1911, the young minister entered on his ministerial work on the Hiawatha circuit, which included Sparks, now designated as Sparks Mission. He resided one mile east of the Evangelical Church in Wolf River Township until July 26, 1915, when he and Mrs. Butler and the children moved to the handsome new parsonage in Sparks that was erected by the members of the church. To Mr. and Mrs. Butler one child has been born, Milton Eugene, now two years of age. Mrs. Butler is a woman of intelligence and refinement and is popular among the people of the Sparks neighborhood. She is a valuable worker in the church and a splendid help to her husband in his pastoral work, giving him encouragement in his every effort.

The Rev. Albert Eugene Butler is one of the ministers for whom is freely predicted a career of Christian usefulness and honor, for should you come to know him you would be impressed with the fact that he is both capable and worthy of the highest position in the service of the church with which he has aligned himself.

WILLIAM H. SHAIFFER

One of the Old Soldiers of Doniphan County.

William H. Shaiffer is an old soldier. He was born in Hamilton, Butler County, Ohio, and came to Kansas, March 4, 1855. He enlisted November 23, 1861, at White Cloud, Kan., in Troup 1 of the 7th Kansas Cavalry. He was discharged June 2, 1865, at the Marine Hospital in St. Louis. On Feb. 7, 1856, Mr. Shaiffer was married to Miss Mary Ann Derr and to this union nine children were born. They are, Charles, born Dec. 20, 1861; Benjamin, born Feb. 15, 1867; George, born Nov. 24, 1871; Jacob, born Feb. 9, 1874; William, born Aug. 2, 1887; Mrs. Lizzie Keller, born Dec. 19, 1856; Mrs. Rebecca Herring, born Aug. 5, 1859; Mrs. Martha Curtis, born Oct. 16, 1868, and Mrs. Catherine Sisk, born June 23, 1864. Mr. Shaiffer resides at the present time at Highland in Doniphan County.

B. H. Smith

B. H. Smith was born in Germany along the Rhine, June 21, 1834, twelve miles from where the immortal Luther preached. He emigrated to America, and landed in Doniphan County in 1866. He took part in the Civil War by enlisting at Indianapolis, Indiana, and was mustered out at the same place. Mr. Smith did not have access to papers stating his company and regiment, and at the time could not recollect them. J. P. and Jake Smith of Highland are his sons. His wife also is living. Mr. Smith owns 100 acres of farm lands near Highland, and is well fixed.

Amos Davis

Amos Davis of Highland, a colored veteran of the war, was born in Randolph County, Missouri, in July, 1845, and came to Doniphan County in 1857. He was a member of Company C, Eighty-Third United States colored infantry, having enlisted at Leavenworth, Kansas, July 30, 1863. Mustered out at Cawlin, Arkansas, in 1866. The Davis family consists of the two old folks and one daughter and three sons.

Enlisted in Company K, Forty-Third Missouri, at St. Joseph, Mo., 1861, Mustered out at Benton barracks, St. Louis, Mo., June 30, 1865. Married to Sarah Jane Kinney, February 15, 1867. Seven children: Emma Frances, John Franklin, James Sashul, William, Walter, Pearl, Ben, Lula. Wife dead.

Fielding Huss and Miss Emily Dooley, both of Doniphan County, were married on the 2s1t day of February, 1867, at the residence of the bride's father, Rev. Mr. F. E. Sneluon officiating.

Charles L. Faust

From the Farm Near the Old Red School House in Pleasant Grove District of Doniphan County to City Counselor of St. Joseph Has Been the Achievement of This Young Man.

No county in our grand Sunflower commonwealth has a more glorious record for turning out men—real men—than has Doniphan County. Convincing proof of this is found by reading the sketches of young men who, having been reared and educated in our midst, have gone forth and have won great success in many fields of endeavor. Evidently, we should say, there is something in the soil, or the environment—maybe it is in the little old red school house—that produces true men from Doniphan County boys and fills them with an ambition to achieve great things.

Richard J. Gatling, the inventor of the Gatling gun, was one of the prominent men in Doniphan County during the pioneer days. The late celebrated C. W. Noyes, millionaire and philanthropist of St. Joseph, was a boy of Doniphan County and later a county official. Fred Gates, John D. Rockefeller's charity man, grew to manhood here, and was educated in Highland College.

A better illustration of the truth of the foregoing cannot be found than in a study of the career of the young man of whom we are writing, Charles L. Faust, whose steady strides from the old red school house in the Pleasant Grove district of Doniphan County to the important position of city counselor of St. Joseph, Missouri, is a record worth considering by any of our young men. His parents are Wilson S. Faust, mayor of Highland, and Ellen M. Faust, of good old Ohio stock. Their son, Charles, was born April 24, 1879, near Bellefontaine, Ohio, and he was a little more than one year old when brought by his parents on a journey from Ohio to Kansas. They bought a farm three miles southwest of Highland, in Iowa Township, where the young jurist grew to manhood.

These parents showed fine discrimination in their choice of location. Kansas was the state to come to to rear boys, and Doniphan County was the ideal locality, in the judgment of Mr. and Mrs. Faust, the father and mother. The subject of this sketch went to the old red school house with the other children of the community. He remembers as some of his teachers, Miss Mern Dixon, Miss Hattie Scott and Charles I. Vinsonhaler. From the little country school in which he spent many happy days, the boy went to Highland University for a course of six years, which was followed by two terms of country school teaching, 1898-1900, in the Winona district school, three miles west of Highland, which is all that is left of that defunct town.

Early in life it had been this young man's ambition to become a lawyer, and he realized that to be a successful attorney meant thorough preparation. His education thus far had been of the best, and his teaching experience had been worth much to him in helping him to grasp life's problems and leading him to assume responsibility, always incidental to advancement. He then entered the law school of the University of Kansas at Lawrence. There he buckled down to hard work and in June, 1903, he came out with his diploma and one of the most promising young graduates ever turned out by that maker of good lawyers, Uncle Jimmy Green. While he attended the university law school in Lawrence, the fact was apparent that he was a good mixer and soon endeared himself to classmates, who elected him president of the graduating class. During his course at Lawrence, and his vacations, he spent all his spare time in the office of Judge John Q. A. Norton, the leading lawyer of the Douglas County bar. Sometimes it is a long way from graduation to a successful law practice, and this young man encountered all the usual vicissitudes of the law student who starts out to build up a practice.

His education had fitted him for practice as a lawyer and nothing was permitted to stand in his path to that practice. He followed his first inclination by going to St. Joseph, Missouri, and setting up an office, where he applied himself to the business with diligence and patience, that had characterized his work in school and on the farm through his boyhood to manhood. It wasn't long until his fellow members of the Bar Association began to take notice of the young man from across the river in Kansas. He became popular as a lawyer and public spirited citizen, and was always interested in politics. His clients came to him and entrusted him with their legal affairs. His work in court in any case undertaken, showed a thoroughness of preparation that was half the battle in winning a lawsuit. His success as a practicing lawyer was practically assured from the start, and it is a fact worthy of emulation that Charles L. Faust never for one moment lost confidence in himself and his ability to win.

When, in the spring of 1915, an appointment was to be made to the responsible position of city counselor, the man chosen from the bar of Buchanan County for the position was Charles L. Faust. The appointment was made April 21, 1915, and since then the mayor and municipal bodies of that city have had the beenfit of the splendid services of this young man of ability as a lawyer and counselor. All Doniphan County rejoices with the people of St. Joseph in the success of Charles L. Faust.

During the week of the first issue of the Chief in the early part of June, 1857, occurred the sale of the Iowa trust lands at Iowa Point. It was necessary for settlers to get title to their land to give their residence. One person gave as his residence, Richardson County, Nebraska, another gave Platte County, Missouri, another gave Iowa Point County, Kansas.

This picture shows Kelly Bros.' store of White Cloud. To the inhabitants of White Cloud the gentlemen will need no introduction, as their general merchandise store is the stopping place for everyone who visits that business section. The two brothers, James P. and George B. Kelly, went into this business in a very earnest and conscientious way, and their efforts have been well rewarded. They have enjoyed a good trade from the first, and it has gradually enlarged until their present quarters are scarcely sufficient for their needs. Kelly Bros. have several five, ten and twenty-acre tracts of fruit land to dispose of on terms to suit the purchaser.

Each settler proving up had to have one witness as to his time of settling and improvements. It was necessary for each house to have a roof on it. Two young men had taken up adjoining claims and put up sod houses. One of them had a roof on his house and the other had none. The settler with a roof went one day to prove up and while he was gone, the other took the roof and put it on his house and went the next day and proved up on it. In this way both settlers got their claims by means of the same roof.

The receipts for the sale of the Iowa trust lands amounted to $185,000.00, and was deposited by Receiver Woodson in the St. Louis Sub-Treasury.

First Issue of Chief

On June 4, 1857, Sol Miller issued the first number of the present Kansas Chief, at White Cloud. The paper was a seven column folio printed on a Washington hand press. Mr. Miller had been publishing a paper at Germantown, Ohio, for four years previous to the launching of the Chief, and came to Kansas March 28, 1857, on an inspection tour of the territory for the purpose of choosing a location for the paper. The first number contained an interesting continued story on the first page, the second page contained the editorial writing and local news and the third and fourth pages contained the political news and miscellany and clippings from other papers, together with the advertisements. Mr. Miller died

There are twelve live towns in Doniphan County, to say nothing of the paper towns, ad libitum to wit: White Cloud at the northeast extremity of the county, has a population of 400. Iowa Point, five miles below, has a population of 500. Lafayette, a little further down, has a population of 259. Charleston, further down the river, has 200. Elwood, immediately opposite St. Joe, Mo., has a population of 1,500. Palermo, seven miles below, has 400 inhabitants. Geary City, further down the river, has a population of 300. Doniphan City, in the southeast extremity of the county, has a population of 800. Highland, four miles back of Iowa Point, the seat of the Presbyterian College, has a population of 256. Columbus, back of Charleston, has 300; Wathena, four miles west of Elwood, has 200 inhabitants, and Troy, eight miles west of Wathena, has 100 inhabitants, and is the county seat.—The Elwood Press, January, 1859.

The vote of the county is 100 Free State and 500 Pro-Slavery. There are five papers in the county: The White Cloud Chief, Free Sate; Iowa Point Inquirer, Pro-Slavery; Troy Democrat, Democrat and Pro-Slavery; Palermo Leader, Free State; Kansas Weekly Press, published at Elwood, Republican.—Elwood Free Press.

Osteopathy

It Is Forty-Two Years Since Practice Was Discovered—Dr. O. G. Weed and Dr. Howard Douglay Are Able Exponents.

It is orty-two years now since Dr. A. T. Still, the noted physician and surgeon, announced that he had discovered a method for the cure of diseases without drugs. Like every other innovation which has been placed before the world, his statements were taken with jeers and jibes by his profession, and he did not meet with an enthusiastic reception from the people in general; but he did meet positive hostility from the recognized physicians who had previously been his associates. But now osteopathy is an assured success and Dr. O. G. Weed, of the Corby-Forsee Building in St. Joseph, and who is one of the leading practitioners, declares that it was one of the most wonderful discoveries in the annals of time.

This young doctor was born at New Hampton, Missouri, November 12, 1881, graduated 1905—practiced successfully at Chanute for six years. In 1911 went to Los Angeles, California, and took post graduate course, graduating from the College of Osteopathy at Los Angeles that year. Later he went to Denver and took a three months' special course of fitting eye glasses.

Dr. Weed also devoted one year to the study of medicine in Kansas City and would have graduated the next year but preferred to devote his life to osteopathic treatment. He has been located in room 402, Corby-Forsee building, for four years, where it is a pleasure to him to have his friends call.

Doctor Still had a real struggle. His best and most intimate friends, and even his relatives, tried to dissuade him from pursuing further the practice and research work of his great discovery. While the obstacles he overcame were gigantic, and not the least of these were the sneers of some of his friends who told him he was crazy, it did not discourage this great man, but further study only convinced him more and more that he was not crazy, but far from it.

He felt that the time had arrived to make a test of what he considered the best practice, and the success that followed in the cure of all kinds of diseases was so marvelous that he was unable to give time to all of his patients. His officers were crowded night and day with those who came for help, and it was soon apparent that others should be instructed. Therefore, from the desire to help humanity grew the American School of Osteopathy which Doctor Weed, the eminent practitioner says, is one of the finest in the country.

Doctor Still's first class numbered approximately a dozen pupils and from this small representative body has grown the osteopathic profession of today, now numbered in the thousands. In the comparative few years elapsing, what wonders this great physician has wrought. His school has become one of the largest and best equipped institutions in the United States, with an enrollment of more than 1,200 students and there are about fifteen other large and flourishing schools and colleges established by the alumni, and their educational standards are fully equal to those of any of the old school medical institutions of the country. The osteopaths include surgery, when it is necessary, but exclude internal medication. The same result is obtained by manipulation, and the cause of the disease is removed by this treatment and not by rubbing and massage, as most people imagine.

According to Doctor Douglay and Doctor Weed, to attempt to explain how the results are obtained, would be as difficult as to elucidate how the different drugs affect different parts of the human system. The point of variation between medical and osteopathic methods of healing is the kind of nerve stimulation the affected part should have. Shall it be through drugs or by or osteopathic methods? Although vigorously opposed, osteopathy has gradually forced recognition, until today it is not only practiced in all states and territories, but is accredited by the national government.

Among the successful practitioners, in addition to Dr. Howard Douglay, is Dr. O. G. Weed, of St. Joseph, Corby-Forsee Building, whose work extends throughout Buchanan and adjoining counties. He is a graduate of the S. S. Still College of Osteopathy at Des Moines, Iowa, and after completing his course in 1909 he was married to Miss Essie May Funk, at Albany, Missouri, August 24, 1904, who was born at New Hampton, Missouri, September 10, 1882, and began his career. He went to St. Joseph in September of 1910 and his present success is not only a tribute to his ability, but the discoverer of the profession.

Doctor Still was a gallant soldier and served in the Union army during the rebellion. It was erroneously reported how, at one great battle, the famous osteopathist charged on the enemy with uplifted saber and urged his men on to victory. He was a major in the army, and upon his return, heard the tale. It was an exaggeration that most men, so glorified, would not hav taken the pains to deny, but Doctor Still did not want that kind of glory, so he branded it as a product of the imagination, pure and simple. Such was the character of the man who founded the first school of osteopathy.

DR. HOWARD A. DOUGLAY

That a boyhood hobby oftentimes determines the profession which the man is to pursue through life is illustrated in the case of Dr. Howard A. Douglay, well-known young osteopathic physician of Highland.

Doctor Douglay was born at Bluffton, Indiana, December 23, 1888, and was educated in the public schools of that place and in Winona College, Winona Lake, Indiana, later going to Dr. Still's great school of osteopathy at Kirksville, Missouri, where he graduated in the class of 1913.

As a byo Howard Douglay had a hobby. His hobby was for the preservation of the body in as perfect condition as is possible, which may be considered a very good hobby in this rush-aday and workaday world, where so few of our people, in their mad desire to make money, ever give a thought to physical care of the body.

In school, therefore, Howard Douglay's studies included anatomy and physiology—he was better in those studies than in any others—so he knew a great deal when he went to the school at Kirksville, for osteopathy was second nature to this ambitious young man. It is no wonder, then, that he went through that school and came out with flying colors.

The practice of osteopathy has become so well established that nothing needs be said here by way of recommending it. It is sufficient to say that Doctor Douglay, who located at Highland June 20, 1915, received his professional training in the great school that, more than any other in America, has caused osteopathy to be recognized everywhere as the advanced scientific treatment for the body, and as such we cordially welcome this young man to our community and wish him a splendid practice.

Doctor Douglay was united in marriage to Miss Martha Brashear, who was born in Hannibal, Missouri, December 28, 1888. After graduating in the high school of her native city, she, having a desire to further educate herself, attended the State University at Columbia, Missouri, where she was considered one of the best and most influential students of the school.

Mrs. Jemimah Shirley

Miss Jemimah Zimmerla was born in Allegheny County, Maryland, January 25, 1838. John Shirley was born on May 30, 1827, near Baltimore, Maryland, but was reared in Bedford County, Pa. They were married Sept. 9, 1856, in Maryland, and moved to Kansas on Feb. 22, 1862. Six children were born to them: Emily Shirley, now Mrs. J. Rittenhouse; Sheldon Shirley (deceased), Elmira Shirley, now Mrs. John Ward, Charles V. Shirley (deceased), Minnie Shirley, afterward Mrs. Geo. Blake, now deceased, and Flora Shirley, now Mrs. H. Q. Willis.

Mr. Shirley died Sept. 15, 1869, but Mrs. Shirley has kept and lived upon the home place, a farm near Sparks, in Iowa Township, since they purchased it, over fifty-three years ago.

HIGHLAND, KANSAS

Professor John A. Jones

The Superintendent of the Highland High School Earned His Way to an Education By Playing Professional Baseball—Still a Follower of the National Pastime, Although He Is Devoting His Energies to Educational Work and Business.

Prof. John A. Jones, now superintendent of the high school at Highland, is one of the best known educators in Doniphan County, and has had twenty years of experience as an educator. He is also known as an athlete, and it was due to his skill as a professional baseball player that he was able to obtain an education for himself.

The old Hoosier state, which gave us James Whitcomb Riley, Lew Wallace and a host of bright men and women of the literary world, was the birthplace of this young educator, for it was on October 29, 1874, in Johnson County, Indiana, he first saw the light of day. His parents moved to Kansas in 1884, locating in Elk County, where our Highland educator remained until 1894, when he came to Doniphan County.

As a boy, growing up in Elk County, Professor Jones' ambition was to be a public educator, but to achieve that ambition meant that he first must have an education as a sure foundation for his life work. He went through the schools of Elk County and learned all he could. To equip himself, however, required a college education, and that meant an outlay of money he did not have. He was an expert baseball player, however, and that solved the problem of how to get an education that would fit him for teaching. His services were in demand by professional baseball teams, and he spent his summers playing the game at a salary out of which each season he paid his expenses in school. He completed his education at Highland University.

His first term of school was taught in Elk County. When he first came to Doniphan County he taught one year at the school in the Martin district in Iowa Township, afterward four terms at the school in Pleasant Grove in Iowa Township, and for the last sixteen years he has been connected with the Highland schools.

Through practically all of the years of his teaching he has continued to put in a good part of the summer and early fall seasons playing baseball. He is a believer in athletics as one of the essential things toward the proper development of an all-round man.

As an educator Professor Jones is an unqualified success, a fact which is clearly demonstrated here in Highland by his retention, year after year, on the teaching staff, and his elevation to the responsible position at the head of the high school.

Professor Jones is a constant reader—he is never seen loafing on the streets—and always keeps himself informed on current topics as well as on the most advanced ideas of educational work.

Professor Jones was married to Miss Minnie O. Overlander on September 2, 1903, at her home in Highland, the Rev. A. B. Irwin officiating. Her parents are Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Overlander, who are well and favorably known as among the substantial people in the Highland neighborhood. Her father, George Washington Overlander, was born in Illinois Dec. 16, 1838, and her mother, Sarah Elizabeth Caswell, was born February 6, 1842, in Illinois. The daughter, now Mrs. Jones, was born on the farm April 4, 1879, and was reared and educated in that community, becoming one of its most accomplished young women.

Five children have been born to Professor and Mrs. Jones: Mary Elizabeth, April 1, 1908; Helen Virginia, August 23, 1909; Sarah Louise, October 4, 1911; Minnie Mildred, February 3, 1913; John Adams, Jr., January 30, 1915.

The children are in school, except the two youngest, and all are to be given a good education at Highland, that they become the splendid, well-educated citizens their proud parents would have them be.

Professor and Mrs. Jones are both Christian workers, he a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and she a member of the Presbyterian Church. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity. Beside his educational position Professor Jones is interested in business as a member of the Ward-Jones Lumber Company of Highland.

JAMES R. THOMAS

A Kentuckian, Born Within Sight of the Lincoln Farm, Where Our Martyred President First Saw the Light of Day, Who Has Achieved Success as a Kansas Farmer After Spending Twenty-Three Years of His Life in the Service of a Manufacturing Concern.

James R. Thomas, whose fine farm is one and one-half miles south of Highland, in Iowa township, deserves special mention in this publication, as a man who, after spending his young manhood in the city as sales manager for a large manufacturing concern, comes to Doniphan County after passing the meridian of life, and makes good as a farmer. Mr. Thomas' example is worthy of emulation by many of the men who are now growing old in the service of large corporations in the cities, for this is an age when youth and vigor count, and sooner or later the older men in the service of these corporations must step aside. Let such, therefore, read the story of Mr. Thomas and of his success and, if possible, procure for themselves a few acres of good land where they may spend their declining years in peace and plenty.

The Thomas farm in LaRue County, Kentucky, whereon James R. Thomas was born, June 7, 1851, is within one and one-half miles of the old farm on which Abraham Lincoln was born. It is a beautiful and romantic region of the old Blue Grass State and is rich in its historic interest, because of its scenes of early childhood of the immortal Lincoln.

It was there the subject of our sketch received his early education and listened to the stories told and retold of Lincoln's boyhood, of his early struggles to gain an education, of his great triumphs in politics, of his ascendency to the presidency of the United States and of the awful tragedy that came as a climax to his grand career.

Having reached and crossed the line that separates young manhood from boyhood, James Thomas decided to quit the farm and go to the city. He was a hard working boy, and he had learned how to farm, but the life of a young man on the farm in those days did not appeal to him. He obtained employment in a manufacturing plant and soon rose to the position of sales manager. It was a fine position and one in which he made good from the start, but after twenty-three years of service as sales manager Mr. Thomas wisely decided to give up the position and go on a farm.

In the meantime Mr. Thomas was married October 18, 1887, to Miss Fannie V. Miller, an accomplished young woman of New Haven, in Nelson County, Kentucky, and three children had come to bless the union: Lena L., born June 26, 1889; Robert H., November 24, 1891, and Susan V., born February 26, 1894.

With his wife and these three children Mr. Thomas came to Kansas in September, 1897, settled down on the farm on which he now resides, one and one-half miles south of Highland. The boyhood experiences of Mr. Thomas on the old Kentucky farm came back to him clearly and vividly. He profited by them to the extent of knowing something about farming and soon he had things well in hand and was making satisfactory progress.

Mr. Thomas' experience as a sales manager also stood him well in hand. By applying some of the same rules of business that had won him success in his work for the manufacturing corporation, he not only was able to realize better returns from the products of his farm, but was greatly assisted in its management. If a mistake was made, it was never repeated.

Mr. Thomas' live stock ventures proved successful from the start. His cattle and hogs netted him good money, and he kept good breeding stock from which to grow more stock. He gave careful attention to every detail of the live stock business and earned the reputation among his neighbors as being a prudent grower of cattle and hogs, as well as poultry.

As a result of his eighteen years' farming operations in Doniphan County, Mr. Thomas, now at the age of sixty-four, and still hale and hearty, can point with pride to the fact that he has been successful far beyond his fondest expectations. He now has 320 acres of fine farm land in Doniphan County, all in high state of improvement and in itself worth a goodly fortune. Beside this big farm he owns 960 acres of fine prairie in Gove County, Kansas, in the great wheat belt of the northwestern part of the state.

The three children of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas are among our best and most highly esteemed people, and are a blessing to their fond parents. Lena L., the elder of the daughters, is now the wife of K. K. Wyatt, and resides at Erie, Pennsylvania, while Susan V., the younger, is the wife of Roy B. Martin of Highland. Robert H., the son, is pursuing a business career and is now the assistant cashier of the Farmers' State Bank of Highland. He is a young man of fine character, and pleasing appearance, and is popular with the patrons of the bank and the people of the entire community in which he was reared.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas are enjoying in the fullest and most complete sense the fruits of their labors—and it has been a labor of love, though with enough clouds mixed up with the sunshine to give a real spice to their lives. They are honored as members of the society of the neighborhood, and the latch string, as in the old Kentucky home, is on the outside of the door of their delightful home in Kansas.

Buildings Erected By M. F. Weidensaul.

Mr. M. F. Weidensaul, of Highland, is known as one of the leading and most reliable contractors in Doniphan County.

The above cuts show some of the structures built by Mr. Weidensaul. They are substantial in every respect, and reflect Mr. Weidensaul's ability and good taste as a contractor and builder.

During the years that Mr. Weidensaul has been engaged in the business he has erected a number of fine buildings. He is always in the market for work and will furnish estimates on short notice. No job is too big or difficult for him to handle, and the work is warranted to give satisfaction.

Doniphan County's Extensive Dealer in Mules, His Accomplished Wife and Their Magnificent $20,000 Modern Home in Highland, Which Was a Gift From John R. Hale, Father of Mrs. Allen and the Wealthiest Man in Doniphan County—Sketches of the Careers of Mr. Allen and Mr. Hale.

In the prosperous little town of Highland in Doniphan County the visitor is apt to be struck with surprise and admiration on beholding at the end of the main street and just outside of the corporate limits, a magnificent two story modern home built of concrete and stone and standing well back in a beautiful yard. This is the home of Benjamin Daniel Allen and his wife, Maud M. Allen, both natives of Doniphan County and numbered among the people as one of the most popular as well as wealthiest couple in Northeastern Kansas. Mr. Allen is an extensive dealer in mules, also cattle, hogs and sheep, and is the owner of a farm of 514 acres just west of Highland and almost adjoining the town. Mrs. Allen is a daughter of Mr. Mr. and Mrs. John R. Hale, conceded to be the wealthiest family in the county. The house, or rather mansion it should be called, as it is the most expensive in the county, was a present to Mr. and Mrs. Allen from Mr. Hale. The circumstances under which the gift was made and the house was built were something like these:

Early in 1915 Mr. Hale decided to make his son-in-law and his daughter a present, and no better gift could he think of than a thoroughly modern home. He made his wish known, with the result that Benjamin Daniel Allen got busy at once. He employed an architect to prepare the plans and specifications, and then he proceeded to have it built according to those plans and specifications. Behold the result, a modern home that was built at a cost of $20,000, and such a home as one could not expect to see in any other rural community of Kansas. It is two stories with a basement, built of concrete and stone, as above stated, and contains seven rooms, a large pantry, a bath room upstairs and toilet and lavatory downstairs, and with eleven closets. It is handsomely finished throughout with hard wood and is equipped with every convenience, furnace, hot and cold water service, electric lighting, a vacuum cleaning system, with pipes extending through all the house, in fact everything that one would expect to find in a modern city home of its character and cost. Mark Widensaul, of Highland, was the building contractor, and he says it is the best house he ever built.

Magnificent as is this home, however, its occupants are well worthy of it as dwellers therein, for in all Doniphan County there are none more deservedly popular or so universally respected as Mr. and Mrs. Allen, both of whom were born in the community, and have spent nearly all of their lives here.

Benjamin Daniel Allen's parents were Sereno D. Allen, a native of Massachusetts, and Phemmie Williams-Allen, a native of Pennsylvania. They came West and located in Iowa Township near Bellvue school house, where the subect of this sketch was born August 13, 1879. When the boy was five years of age his parents took him to San Diego, California, where he received his education.

Arriving at the age of twenty-one, and after sixteen years absence, the subject of this sketch returned to Doniphan County as the place of his birth and the one he loved best. He worked for Ben D. Williams as foreman on the Williams farm, also buying and selling mules for Williams until finally he quit and went into business for himself, buying and selling mules, also cattle, hogs and sheep, but mules most extensively, keeping them on his big farm west of the town of Highland.

Benjamin married Miss Maud M. Hale April 23, 1907, her parents being the wealthiest people in the county. She was born on her father's farm in Wolf River Township December 23, 1879, was educated in the Laverentz district school and then graduated from the Bethany (Episcopal) Girls School in Topeka. She is among the accomplished young women of the Highland community and worthy to preside over the beautiful homes in which she and her husband reside. To Mr. and Mrs. Allen one child was born, but to their great sorrow it died in infancy.

Mr. Allen has been remarkably successful in his business and has won his way from a foreman to one of the most extensive handlers of live stock in Doniphan County, which has brought his a handsome reward in prosperity and plenty. He is a pleasant man in his business dealings and has the friendship of those who know him best. His successful climb, however, has been no more remarkable than has been that of his father-in-law, a sketch of whose life and activities is here appended.

John R. Hale

Mr. Hale is a native of the good old Buckeye State, having been born in Sandusky, March 20, 1841. His parents were plain farmer folks back in Ohio, and the boy as he grew up had plenty to do, as farmer boys in those days had little leisure. All of the education he received was in the country schools of his native place, the terms being governed as to their length by the weather, though usually confined to the winter months. But the meager facilities for acquiring an education did not deter John R. Hale in his ambition to make a successful farmer. The spring, summer and early fall seasons were no picnics for the Ohio farmers' boys, and the subject of this sketch was no exception. He was up before daylight and off to his work with a brave and cheery heart and will, and after it became dark again, and he could no longer work, he sat down to his well-earned supper and ate by the light of a tallow candle.

It was just that kind of experience that developed strong men out of industrious boys—and Ohio has had a large share in the making of men great and strong. Young John R. Hale was a boy holding down a man's job He often delights in telling a story of a farm hand who was awakened from his heavy sleep about two o'clock in the morning by his employer and told to get up and get out and cut the corn. Whereupon the farm hand, mumbling in his sleep, asked the farmer what the corn had done to him to make him crawl up on it in the dark and cut it down. The incident illustrates what the farm hand was up against in Ohio in those early years, and Mr. Hale was a farm hand and knows.

Mr. Hale was twenty-three years old when the Civil War came on. He enlisted July 23, 1863, in Battery M, First Regiment Ohio Heavy Artillery, and went to the front. There was a scarcity of infrantrymen with the brigade to which he was attached and frequently he was used in that arm of the service. He served twenty-five months in the army and was mustered out at Knoxville, Tennessee, July 28, 1865, receiving his final discharge at Dennison, Ohio, August 2, of that year.

Four years were spent by Mr. Hale in Ohio after the close of the war, but the West was calling him. The stories about Kansas appealed to him. He had saved a little money, and the early spring of 1870 found him on his way. He reached Doniphan County late in the month of March of that year and then and there he decided he had reached the land of milk and honey.

The first year of Mr. Hale's residence in Kansas he was employed as a hired hand. The next year he decided to try farming on his own "hook." He invested his savings in a quarter section of land in Brown County, paying eight dollars an acre for it. This farm he operated with success for a time but finally sold it and bought a farm in Doniphan County. The same Brown County land has since been sold for twenty-four thousand dollars. Mr. Hale has no regrets. He was satisfied with the good price he received for it and the opportunity it gave him to invest his money in Doniphan County land.

Mr. Hale's home place is situated three miles north of Severance and is one of the best spots in the county. The farm buildings are substantial and the entire place has the appearance of having received careful management. The land cannot be surpassed for fertility and the live stock are as good as any to be found on Doniphan County farms.

Mr. Hale owns twenty-three hundred and seventy acres in Doniphan County, four hundred acres in Jackson County, Missouri, near Lees Summit, one hundred and sixty acres in Summer County, Kansas, three hundred and twenty acres in Brown County and one hundred and sixty acres in Meade County, Kansas. All of his Kansas farms are wonderfully productive. Mr. Hale devotes his attention to the home place, however, having rented all of his other holdings and practically retired. He is so situated financially as to afford to take things easy and enjoy the fruits of his industry and good management.

December 22, 1874, Mr. Hale was married to Sarah J. Benfer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Elias Benfer, at their residence near Highland. Miss Benfer was born in Union County, Pennsylvania, and came to Doniphan County with her parents in 1869. The Benfers were regarded as among our best citizens and farmers.

Two children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Hale. John G. Hale, the son, died when he was two years old, and the daughter, Maud M., is the wife of Benjamin Daniel Allen and presides over the most commodious modern residence in Northwestern Kansas.

Is a Native of Doniphan County and Leading Citizen of Iowa Point

Iowa point is known far and wide as a "one man town." While it is a thriving and prosperous village and has the distinction of being one of the oldest settlements in Doniphan County, there has been one citizen more than any other who has played an important part in its development. That man is Fred Massey. Doubtless the majority of readers of this sketch guessed who was meant from the beginning, for the subject is as well known in northeastern Kansas as any resident of the county.

Fred Massey has succeeded far beyond the fondest expectations of his friends, for the simple reason that he has had the energy and ability to work and also has had the foresight to realize that in order to reap a big reward from business ventures, something big must be put in. He has given to his general merchandise store at Iowa Point, all of his attention and time and the result today is that he has one of the most modern and best stocked places of business in any small Kansas town.

In addition to his being a most brilliant young merchant, Mr. Massey is also a public spirited citizen. He is a member of various fraternal organizations and an active church worker. There has never been a movement started for the betterment of his community or any project that would boost Iowa Point that he has not been behind. No matter how much time it was necessary to give or how much effort, it was only necessary to call and Mr. Massey has always responded, willingly and vigorously.

Fred Massey is a product of Doniphan County from beginning to end. He was born in Iowa Point, Jan. 23, 1873, of a well to do and highly respected family. He attended the common schools until seventeen or eighteen years old and then decided that he would go to work. He was ambitious and there were not as many opportunities for education as now.

Mr. Massey's leaning had always been toward the mercantile business and accordingly he started out as a clerk for D. D. Perkins. The latter, at the time, was running the largest general merchandise store in Iowa Point. One year after entering the employ of Mr. Perkins as a clerk, Mr. Massey purchased the entire store and stock and launched out for himself. That was fifteen years ago, and he has been in the mercantile business ever since.

After leaving school Fred Massey secured employment with B. D. Williams, who was then in the grain business at Highland. For a year he remained in that position and during that time obtained his first keen insight into business transactions which has stood him in good stead and redounded to his advantage in the many subsequent years.

Mr. Massey has progressive ideas along business lines and he never fails to supply the wants of his customers, no matter what their desires may be. His store is up to date in every respect and all the patrons of the establishment appreciate his efforts to deliver the goods, irrespective of how the fashions may change from time to time.

Fred Massey's new residence, nestling in a picturesque place.

On November 18, 1900, Mr. Massey was married to Miss Lyda E. Mallows, a popular young lady resident of Iowa Township. Previous to her marriage Mrs. Massey was one of the noted educators of Doniphan County. As a school teacher she had no superior and her popularity was universal. She had been a student at the Campbell University at Holton, Kansas, and during her stay there was an immense favorite with all the other students and the faculty.

Mrs. Massey gained great prominence during her pedagogic days as a literary genius and was regarded by the teaching fraternity of Doniphan County and the state as a poetess with an established future. Her faculty for writing in verse the deliberations of the teachers' association and normal institutes, earned for Mrs. Massey a nation-wide reputation, and much as her associates in educational work regretted to see her abandon her chosen profession, they felt great delight in seeing her married to a good and worthy husband.

The home life of the Masseys is extremely ideal. They have two fine boys, Fred D., Jr., born Nov. 12, 1902, and George V., born October 9, 1908. The young Masseys are exceedingly bright, which is scarcely to be marveled at when the sterling qualities of the parents are taken into consideration.

Notwithstanding his manifold business cares, Mr. Massey finds time to take a hand in public affairs. He served as school director for a number of terms and only quit when other duties demanded his attention. For the past fifteen years Fred Massey has been postmaster of Iowa Point, having been appointed to that position by the late President McKinley on Oct. 21, 1899.

Mr. Massey is a courteous and honest gentleman and one with whom it is a pleasure to do business. He is one of the many fine types of upright, fearless and progressive Doniphan County citizens.

Editor of White Cloud Globe Taught School for Ten Years—Only Lady in County Publishing a Paper.

The young lady whose name appears at the head of the editorial column of the White Cloud Globe as editor and owner is a native of Kansas, born in Iowa township on a farm about three miles south of White Cloud. Miss Mallows' parents were Samuel Mallows, a native of England who came to Doniphan County in 1860, and Sarah H. Mallows, who was born in Boonville, Missouri. As a little girl Miss Mallows attended the school in District 31, and later completed her education in Campbell College at Holton.

Dr. Aaron Herring.

This versatile lady began teaching school after receiving her diploma from Campbell College, and for ten years she was successful in her work in the country schools of the county and in the White Cloud schools. In 1910, August 10, Miss Mallows decided to try newspaper work and purchased the White Cloud Globe from Emil L. Marker and entered on her new work with enthusiasm. She has made the paper not merely a chronicler of the news of her town and community, but has wielded an influence for the betterment of social conditions and an ever present help to the community, to which she is loyal. She has made a success of her newspaper venture, having her office and printing outfit paid for besides owning a residence in White Cloud.

Miss Mallows is an active member of the Christian church of her town and is a liberal contributor to benevolent societies. She has three sisters: Mrs. Fred Massey, of Iowa Point; Mrs. A. D. Conley, of Falls City, Nebraska; and Mrs. M. E. Zimmerman, of near White Cloud, who resides on the old home place.

Miss Mallows is one of the popular women of White Cloud and all of the town and country round are her loyal and well-wishing friends.

Howard Stanley Dox

Among the prominent educators of Doniphan County is Dr. Howard Stanley Dox, who was born at Ransomville, N. Y., and was a son of Rev. and Mrs. Rutger Dox. Rev. Rutger Dox is at present pastor of Tioga Baptist Church at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

The subject of this sketch graduated from Central High School, Philadelphia. He was educated in music there under some of Philadelphia's best teachers. Has been organist and choirmaster of prominent churches in Philadelphia, Kalamazoo, Michigan, and Knoxville, Tennessee. He is a postgraduate of Highland College, and has been director of music and teacher of various scholastic subjects in Highland College since October, 1910. Was married in St. Joseph, Missouri, Aug. 28, 1911, to Miss Lucille E. Esperandieu of Knoxville, Tennessee.

Mrs. Dox was educated in Knoxville and holds a normal piano diploma from Highland College. Doctor Dox is a fellow of the American Guild of Organists, a Kansas state accredited music teacher, and a student in linguistic, scientific and philosophical subjects.

He has been very successful as a music teacher in the classic town of Highland, having the confidence of his pupils, their parents, and the community in general.

Ruel S. Wakefield

Ruel S. Wakefield, who died in White Cloud, was born in Newport, Sullivan County, N. H., December 30, 1828, and came to Doniphan County, May 11, 1857. He engaged in contracting and building and continued all through his life. The subject of this sketch was married January 9, 1855, at Galena, Illinois, to Miss Frances Henrietta Ramsten. One son, Charles H., and one daughter, Ebbie N. Owned his own residence in White Cloud until the date of his death where he resided so many years.

There are none of Mr. Wakefield's children living. The grandchildren's names are as follows: Fay M., Lois M., Kenneth I., Lola E. and Mildred M.

Miss Anna Mallows.

Dr. Aaron Herring

Perhaps no practicing physician of Doniphan County enjoyed more of life outside his profession than did Dr. Aaron Herring, who was born at Natchez, Mississippi, a son of B. F. and Mary Herring, and came to Doniphan County with his parents in 1868. He attended school at Highland University and afterward took a medical course at the Ensworth Medical College of St. Joseph, Missouri. For thirty years he was part of the life of Highland Station, now Sparks, practicing the medical profession, living as farmer and citizen. He took a great interest in county history and was a frequent contributor to the press. His avocation through life demanded that he go through cold and heat for the healing of the debilitated, and he called on rich and poor alike. He never let money count when his services were needed. He died suddenly of apoplexy in 1914, leaving a fine family, relatives and friends unnumbered to revere his memory.

Warren Kitzmiller

Nowhere in Kansas is there a more competant young man in a country newspaper office than Warren Kitzmiller, who is in the employe of the Highland Vidette. He is courteous, obliging, a practical printer, and a good business man. Was married to Miss Caroline Read, of White Cloud, November 26, 1914. They have one child to bless their home, Mendel, born December 30, 1915.

His father, Frank Kitzmiller, served in Company B, 13th Kansas Volunteer Infantry. Was one of the pioneers of Doniphan County and a splendid type of American citizenship.

She is teaching her second year in the Sparks school and giving universal satisfaction. Alice L. Taylor is also a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Taylor, and is a true product of Doniphan County, having been born on a farm near White Cloud. She is popular with the people, who know her best.

Sitting—Miss Lillie Searles, the genial postmistress at Sparks, whose biography appears elsewhere in this issue.

Harvey Lafe Hopper

A Thoroughly Energetic, Progressive and Successful Young Farmer, Whose Sterling Worth and Integrity Have Won Him an Important Position in the Community.

Harvey Lafe Hopper, thirty-one years old, and his beautiful and charming wife and lovely little daughter, Mildred Louise, live on a farm near White Cloud. Mr. Hopper is one of the youngest successful farmers of Doniphan County and bids fair, before he reaches three score and ten years of life, to outstrip all his rivals in the race for success. He is only in what might be called the first flush of manhood; however, he has won the respect, confidence and esteem, not only of his neighbors, but of all citizens with whom he has come in contact.

Harvey Lafe Hopper was born Sept. 16, 1884, near Forest City in Holt County, Missouri. His parents were Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Hopper, the latter before her marriage being Miss Eva Crews, daugnter of one of the wealthiest and largest farmers in Iowa. He received his early education in the Holt County schools, and then went to the Grand Island Business College at Grand Island, Nebraska.

When a boy it had been his ambition to enter the marts of trade. He had seen country life and decided that the best future for him was in the cities. While at Grand Island he applied himself diligently to his studies, but as he looked the field over more carefully each day he became more and more convinced that opportunities in business were not so good as he at first thought; and that perhaps after all the best future was on the farm. This idea became a fixed belief shortly before he completed his course and he, therefore, decided to abandon his original plan.

When twenty-one years old he settled in White Cloud and went to work for Frank Cale near Hiawatha. His parents lived near White Cloud and he had their friendly counsel and advice in his early struggles. The longer he worked the more he became certain that farming was the most profitable and pleasant of all professions. He decided to some day have a place of his own and expects to buy one in the future.

On Jan. 3, 1909, there occurred an event which undoubtedly had a great bearing on Mr. Hopper's future. He was united in matrimony to Miss Anna May Yates, the daughter of an old and highly respected Doniphan County family. The wedding took place at her home near White Cloud, and was largely attended by relatives and friends. Immediately following a brief wedding journey the young couple went to the farm which Mr. Hopper now occupies, about three miles southwest of White Cloud. To this union has been born one child, a daughter, on Nov. 30, 1910. She was named Mildred Louise, and is the pride and joy of their household and the entire community in which the Hoppers live. At her grandparents' home near Hiawatha the little tot is a frequent visitor and is their especial pet and favorite.

Mr. Hopper's home is the gathering place for many of the neighbors, where many happy hours are spent. This young man has made a scientific business of farming and is an enthusiastic student of all things pertaining to agriculture, and especially does he encourage and follow the excellent reports and advice which come from the Kansas State Agricultural College. He was one of the earliest workers for a county expert. The best and most modern machinery is used on his place and to this fact and the faith and intelligence he has brought to his work is due no doubt his financial success.

As is the case with hundreds of other farmers in prosperous Doniphan County, not all of his time is devoted to his property. He is a God-fearing young man and is always behind any movement which seeks to make the ideal country life. Mr. Hopper was appointed deputy assessor, Feb. 26, 1915, and rendered uniformly fair and honorable service for the people by his assessment of the property in White Cloud and in the north half of Iowa township. We predict for Mr. Hopper a long, mellow life, especially precious because of the honors conferred on him.

White Cloud in 1857

A write-up of the town of White Cloud in November, 1857, gives the following facts:

White Cloud, situated in Doniphan County, Kansas, on the west bank of the Missouri River, about two miles below the Nebraska line, fifty miles by river from St. Joseph and six hundred and fifteen miles from St. Louis, was named after Ma-hush-kah, or White Cloud, a celebrated chief of the Iowa tribe of Indians, who died a few years previous, near the mission in Doniphan County.

The lands upon which the town was situated, extending west some fifteen miles, were held in trust for the Iowas and were sold in June, 1857. The land belonging to this townsite contained nearly 1,300 acres, the portion not built up being covered with timber. White Cloud had one of the best landings and wharfs on the river. About a mile to the west the prairie began, stretching away as far as the eye could reach. This prairie was the admiration of all who beheld it. The productiveness of the soil was unexcelled. The town was situated six miles farther west than any other river town in Kansas. There were good roads to the towns in Brown County and the Nemaha settlement.

The first claim was made there in the summer of 1856, but as the Iowa trust lands were not open for settlement, the agent ordered all settlers off. The lands were offered for settlement in the fall of 1856, and the town project, which had been abandoned earlier in the year, was renewed, but as there was great uncertainty as to how the lands would be sold, no efforts were made to push the town ahead until after the land sales in June, 1857, when a title was obtained to the site. The first sale of lots took place July 4, 1857, and from that time great efforts were made to build up the town.

The principal members of the city company were Dr. H. W. Peter, James Foster, Esq., J. H. Utt, of Oregon, Missouri; E. Spaulding and C. Dorland, S. F. Nuckolls, of Nebraska City; Hon. James Craig, member of congress elect; Major J. E. Barrow, Lykens & Boyd, of St. Joseph; Gen. Doniphan, of Leavenworth; W. J. Gatling, Esq., of Fort Desmoines, Iowa; Dr. R. J. Gatling, of Indianapolis, Indiana; Franklin L. Parker, of Ann Arbor, Michigan; Senator Digler, of Pennsylvania; David and Ozias Bailey, of Illinois; John W. A. McGarvey, of Hopkinsville, Kentucky; J. H. Burns, of Wheeling, Virginia, and several others. The officers of the Company were: president, James Foster, Esq.; secretary, William J. Gatling, Esq.; treasurer, Dr. H. W. Peter. The members of the company were all men of character and energy.

The firm of Edward & Winter, job printers and publishers of the Occasional, at Fort Scott, dissolved about April 27, 1872. Mr. Winter continued the publication of the Occasional, which was a small paper, but considered one of the spiciest in Kansas.

Colonel Herrick died on Sept. 10, 1866, at Highland, of cholera. Colonel Herrick was in the service during the war, starting out as major of the 7th Kansas cavalry and was with that regiment through all its campaigns. He was mustered out, with the regiment, as colonel.

State Capitol Cornerstone

The cornerstone of the state capitol at Topeka, was laid on Wednesday, October 17, 1866. The ceremonies were conducted by the Masonic fraternity. The grand lodge of Masons for Kansas met in Topeka on the 16th day of October and the members participated in the proceedings. A tin box about 16x20 inches was deposited in the cornerstone. It contained the constitution and laws of the state of Kansas, a copy of each newspaper and periodical published in the state.

The United States Census Department at Washington issued a bulletin in September, 1914, dealing with the ownership of Doniphan County homes. At that time there were 3,268 homes in Doniphan County. Of this number, 1,686 were farm homes; 520 of the farm homes were owned by their occupants and were free of mortgaged incumbrance. The mortgaged farm homes numbered 519. Renters occupied 636 farm homes in the county. Out of the total of 3,268 homes in the county, 1,582 were urban homes. There were 851 urban home owners in the county. Of this number 138 were mortgaged; 685 of the urban owned homes were free. There were 661 rented urban homes in the county.

On Saturday, April 11, 1885, Robin- was given in Highland in honor of Rev. Mr. Wm. Bishop. A good time was had generally, the party leaving behind them lots of greenbacks and many other good things. Greenbacks in those days were indispensable for the preachers. Yes, in fact, they are today, but are not usuall ytermed "greenbacks."

On Feb. 22, 1867, a donation party was given in honor of Rev. Mr. Wm. Bishop. A good time was had generally, the party leaving behind them lots of greenbacks and many other good things. Greenbacks in those days were indispensable for the preachers. Yes, in fact, they are today, but are not usually termed "greenbacks."

Gen. Robert Anderson, the hero of Fort Sumter, died at Nice, France, on Thursday, Oct. 26, 1871, in the sixty-seventh year of his age. After the close of the Civil War he lived in New York City until 1869, when he went to Europe to recover his health.

The bridge across the Kaw river, at Manhattan, was completed Aug. 25, 1866. The structure rested on three abutments, making two spans of 125 feet each. With the approaches on either bank, the bridge was about 400 feet long.

A. J. Allison, probate judge of Doniphan County, resigned his office June 30, 1858, and Governor Denver with becoming celerity appointed Lyman Nash to fill the vacancy.

If you want to locate among as good a people as there is on earth—a kindly, hospitable, moral, God-fearing people—come to Doniphan County, where health and prosperity reign.

Colonel Moonlight was appointed as U. S. revenue collector for the district of Kansas in place of Edward Carroll, one of Johnson's appointees who was rejected by the senate, in March, 1867.

The new chapel of the Westminster Presbyterian Congregational church in St. Joseph was dedicated to divine worship Sunday, Oct. 7, 1866. The sermon was delivered by the Rev. Dr. Parsons.

The license law requiring parties who desired to be married to secure a license, was passed in the legislature in February, 1867. Prior to that the marriage license was not necessary.

On Wednesday, July 8, 1891, Katie, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Murdock McLean, aged twenty-six years, died at the home of her parents in White Cloud.

On Dec. 20, 1871, at the residence of the bride's parents, Mr. Theron A. Croft was married to Mrs. Catherine Neibling, Rev. Mr. Alex S. McConnell officiating. The couple were both of Doniphan County.

Mrs. Leora Collins

The Widow of the Late William I. Collins, the Mother of Thirteen Children, Is Now Living in White Cloud and is Active in Religious Work—A Thorough Business Woman Aiding Husband in Farm Success.

Mrs. Leora Collins, the widow of the late William Collins, whose death occurred June 20, 1911, has taken up her residence in White Cloud, leaving the farm on which she and her husband lived for many years, in the care of her son, John Leslie. As a widow, Mrs. Collins had no ties to bind her to farm life, and she had the pleasure of knowing that John Leslie was well trained and fully capable of making the best of the farm. Mrs. Collins is highly esteemed by the people of White Cloud and vicinity, for since the founding of the community back in Civil War times, it has been her home.

She is a daughter of Isaac Newton Filmore and Elizabeth Filmore, who were among the early settlers of Doniphan County. The Filmores were living at Oregon, Mo., when the daughter, Leora, was born, on June 30, 1850, and she was a merry girl of eleven when, on September 12, 1861, the parents brought her to Doniphan County. The border troubles, which had made Kansas as a territory a seething maelstrom of conflict, had practically been quieted and settled, by the passage of the bill which made Kansas a free state; but while these difficulties had been eliminated when the laughing little Leora looked upon Kansas, the culmination of the arguments between slave holders and anti's had resulted in the Civil War, and the little stranger saw countless men and finally the mere boys ride away to fight on the side which gave them conviction. At length, when practically all the able-bodied men and boys had answered the call to arms, the women began to realize what war meant, and they as well as girls growing to womanhood, were long to remember the scenes and trials of that period. The impressions which Leora received as a child still cling to her as a dignified woman, and she often recalls to her children and grandchildren the stirring days when she was young.

The long and bloody civil conflicts which had filled the people with horror, was over at last and the men were coming back, or at least the pitiful few who had survived. One of the boys to return in a tattered blue uniform was William Isaac Collins, who had served his country in Company D, Fourteenth Kansas cavalry volunteers. He had enrolled on the 20th day of July, 1863, and received his honorable discharge on the 25th day of June, 1865, at Fort Gibson, Cherokee Nation. It was a brave soldier and a gallant young man who led to the altar the blushing Leora Filmore. He had helped to win many a battle while in the service, but the winning of the hand of his young bride undoubtedly meant the crowning victory to him.

Mr. and Mrs. Collins went to live on a farm near White Cloud, and the home they established and in which they were to spend many years, was one of those grand Kansas homes from which have flowed the blessings of patriotism and of high ideals of citizenship, such as have made Kansas a leader among the states of the nation for advanced ideas of civilization and of right and justice. They consecrated their lives to the Kansas soil and to patriotic and Christian service.

William Isaac Collins and his wife identified themselves early in their married life with every movement that tended for the welfare of the community near White Cloud, and for nearly fifty years their friends and neighbors had occasion to call their name blessed. To them were born thirteen children, who were reared up to become noble men and women and to lead useful and honorable lives. The children, in order of birth, were as follows: Luna, born October 3, 1868, now Mrs. Edward C. Smith; John Leslie, born Nov. 4, 1869, now living on the old farm; Oliver Virgil, born February 10, 1872; Mary Ann, born March 28, 1874, now Mrs. Alva B. Bailiff of Los Angeles, Cal.; Roscoe, born November 8, 1876, now living with his mother; Edith, born December 11, 1878, now Mrs. Fred Archer Stanley of Blue Rapids, Kansas; Roy W., born December 16, 1879; Frederick Merlin, born April 9, 1883, now residing at Fortesque, Mo.; Ella, born July 14, 1885, now Mrs. Edgar Bryan of Fortesque, Mo.; Eva, born January 21, 1890, now Mrs. Harry Rosenberger of Brown County, Kansas; Evelyn, born Sept. 14, 1887, and died July 8, 1910; Glen, born September 13, 1892; Maurine, born December 6, 1894, now Mrs. Charles O. Lear of White Cloud, who was married October 28, 1915. Mrs. Lear is an accomplished musician.

The children of Mr. and Mrs. Collins were given a good common school education in Doniphan County. The boys helped their father on the farm and were useful in the many ways that strong arms and willing hearts can be on a large farm. As they grew to manhood, the lessons of thrift and energy which they had learned in youth helped to give them pluck and independence, and it was not long before they were branching out on farms of their own or participating in other activities. The girls were dutiful daughters who assisted their mother in the household and were popular in the community. All the daughters married honorable men and went to preside over homes of their own. The death of Eva, wife of Harry Rosenberger of Brown County, was the first break in this large family circle, and it brought grief to the parents and the young husband.

DR. JOSEPH H. McGAUHEY

An Influential and Prominent Citizen of Doniphan County, He Is One of White Cloud's Versatile Business Men—Mayor, President of Board of Education, and State Bank of A. Poulet.

When a man lives in a community twenty-seven years, and is engaged in a profession, such as a physician, people come to know his good points—or bad ones, and they come to a full realization of his merits. He is interested in the welfare of the people from a point of view which makes his personal suggestion of immediate value. The health of the citizens, as well as that of the community at large, is largely in his keeping, and what is more vital to each one of us is that of health.

Such a man, in the summer of 1888, came to White Cloud to make his fortune. He was not much more than a boy in years, and had acquired his degree so recently that the ink was hardly dry on the diploma that he had received from the Missouri Medical College at St. Louis, Missouri. He had little or no money, but an abundance of nerve, grit and ability, and into this glorious county he brought that valuable stock of resources. Since then he has been elected mayor of White Cloud several times. Beside he has been signally honored in other respects. As president of the board of education he has made an enviable record, and in civic life his fame has spread far beyond the confines of White Cloud.

The man in question is Dr. Joseph H. McGauhey, mayor of White Cloud. Outside of this he finds time to attend to his large and lucrative practice.

Joseph H. McGauhey was born in Agency, Missouri, a little village, on March 28, 1861, just eighteen days before the firing upon Fort Sumter. His early education was obtained in the public schools of his native state. While the facilities for education at that time in the Western states were not of the best, he made the most of these meager advantages. Early in life he realized the benefits to be obtained from a good education, and especially from an education with the foundation stones securely laid. He soon formed the desire to be a physician and this thought actuated him all through his early school life. He was not able, however, to realize this ambition at once, but found some stepping stones were necessary to bridge the way.

Upon leaving school in 1880 he taught for several years, making an unqualified success of this venture, as he has of everything else since. Destiny, however, had not intended him for a pedagogue. The old ambition to become a physician had followed him from the days of his young student life to that of teaching. So during the long hours that he taught the "three r's" and administered to the wants of those who were a little above these courses of learning, he saved his money and entered the medical college.

In the medical college he worked faithfully during his matriculation. The habits of industry which he had inculcated into his system when he was still a very young man, stood him in good stead at this critical time. By frugality and forethought he was able to continue his work in the medical college during the entire course. In the late spring of 1888 he was graduated with honors and came to White Cloud that summer. Hanging out his sign, he did not remain content, but proceeded to mix with the new people and make himself acquainted.

Only through honesty of purpose, and a vision of success to guide one to the coveted goal, can a person in a strange community hope to win success. He had been in the town only a short time when he was elected mayor, a fine tribute to his faculty for making friends.

Since these early days honors have been heaped high and often upon him. They were not bestowed because of any "pull," for he had none, but from his own "push" and energy, which were soon manifest upon numerous occasions. He found pleasure in working for the upbuilding of the community in which he had chosen to cast his lot. The community and the people appreciated this spirit of self sacrifice, and gave him the honor that was due.

He is now serving his third consecutive term as mayor, and under his administrations the city of White Cloud has forged rapidly to the front. When the movement was started a few years ago for a municipal electric lighting plant, it was Mayor McGauhey and a half dozen others who threw their shoulder to the wheel and gave the project impetus enough to carry it through. And this lighting plant is now one of the civic prides of White Cloud.

He was one of the principal factors behind the movement for the erection o fthe magnificent new high school at White Cloud, and it is doubtful if this structure would have been erected had it not been for the interest manifested in educational work by several enthusiastic citizens such as the subject of this sketch.

Doctor McGauhey is a land owner and farmer as well as a physician. Here he finds recreation as well as a pleasant diversion from his professional and business interests in the city. He has 320 acre of fine, fertile land, seven miles west of White Cloud, and is much interested in fruit culture and anything that goes to make a bigger and better community.

This patron of culture, of learning, of agriculture and of business and professional life, has found time to be a director of the state bank for more than ten years. After the retirement of A. Poulet as president, Doctor McGauhey succeeded to that position. Beside his business interests, the subject of this sketch gives of his time also to fraternal matters, being specially interested in the Masonic order, and is a regular attendant at all meetings.

Notwithstanding all his other duties he regards his special mission in life as being that of a physician and has endeared himself to the hearts of the people of the community in which he lives by the prompt professional services rendered therein.

A. S. BREWSTER

He Was County Attorney for Two Successful Terms, and After Two Years' Time Had Elapsed, Was Again Elected.

One of the ablest attorneys in Doniphan County in the days gone by, was A. S. Brewster. He was one of the leading citizens and reared a large family, all of whom have been a credit to him and to the community. He was a man who possessed all of the qualities to make a successful lawyer and his knowledge of the profession was profound. Mr. Brewster was first elected county attorney in 1889.

He succeeded himself and then left the field. For two years another man served and then the demand was so insistent for his return that he consented to allow his name to be used for a third time, and was elected by a big majority.

His family consists of Arthur W., now an attorney in Kansas City, Missouri; S. M., attorney-general of Kansas; R. R., now of Kansas City, Missouri; Harry, now employed in the custom house at Kansas City, and Mrs. I. B. Morgan, whose husband is principal of the continuation schools at Kansas City, Kansas, and Madge.

He was a man who had every qualification for the high position he occupied. He was one of the best lawyers the county has ever had, and as county attorney established a record which has not been surpassed. Mrs. Brewster is an admirable lady, and one who takes great pride in her family. Her husband's death was Dec. 23, 1906, at his son's home in Kansas City.

Edward Faust

Enterprising Hardware, Implement and Furniture Dealer and Undertaker of Highland Has Maintained His Large Trade and Prestige for Thirteen Years and Has Seen More Than a Dozen Competitors Come and Go—Has Spent Almost Entire Business Life Here.

Edward Faust, familiarly known as Ed Faust, in Highland, in which he has been engaged in the hardware, implement and furniture business for thirteen years and more, is deserving of special mention in this publication. The secret of his success through all these years, while competitors have come and gone, is to be found in the character and personality of the merchant—his honesty, integrity and his high sense of honor.

Mr. Faust was born in Bellefontaine, Ohio, June 18, 1877, and came to Doniphan County with his parents, Wilson S. and Ellen M. Faust, when he was only three years old. These parents, sturdy farmer folks, located in Iowa Township, near the south line, three miles from the west line of the county.

The subject of this sketch attended school as a boy at the Pleasant Grove school house in Iowa Township, until he finished its courses. Among the teachers he recalls are Charles Vinsonhaler, Miss Mem Dixon, and Miss Hattie Scott. From the old red school house Mr. Faust went to Highland College, where he completed his education in 1899.

He had a special talent for the mercantile business and was ambitious to be at the head of a big retail establishment in Highland. This ambition was gratified, for shortly after completing his education he started in the hardware, implement and furniture trade in Highland.

On April 6, 1904, Mr. Faust married Miss Virginia Bingham. A daughter, Margaret Louise, was born to them August 2, 1905. Mrs. Faust died September 30, 1912. Mr. Faust was remarried on July 30, 1914, his second wife being Miss Edna V. Armstrong, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Armstrong. They have a substantial home in Highland and are active in the social affairs of the old town, both being delightful entertainers and popular with the people. Mr. Faust is interested in good government and in the general welfare of his people, and is a live merchant and a splendid citizen.

Aside from the above, Mr. Faust is an undertaker and has conducted most of the funerals in the vicinity of Highland since he has been engaged in that line of business.

Any article kept in a general hardware store, furniture store or implement house may be purchased at his store. Articles called for, not kept in stock, are ordered by phone or telegraph.

WHITE CLOUD LODGE, NO. 78, A. F. & A. M.

Organized Nearly Forty-Seven Years Ago, By Eight Master Masons, This Lodge Has Made Its Influence Felt Through All These Years for the Promotion of the Highest Good of Society and in an Exemplification of Those Grand Principles Which Are the Foundation of Freemasonry—History of the Lodge Since the Beginning of the Year 1869.

Some time in the early part of the year 1869, eight Master Masons, who had come to the White Cloud neighborhood to make their homes, got together and resolved to plant freemasonry in their promising little town and country roundabout. Following that happy meeting of pioneer citizens an application was made to the Most Worshipful Grand Master of the State of Kansas for authority to organize a lodge of Masons. In glad response to that request, a dispensation was granted May 6, 1869, to J. V. Hollebaugh and others, authorizing the organization under the name of White Cloud Lodge.

The White Cloud public and high school building.

The lodge held its meetings in the brick building at the corner of Main and Levee streets, occupying the third floor, with Brother J. V. Hollebaugh as its Worshipful Master under dispensation. During that summer of 1869 thirteen names were added to the roll of members, which made it a lodge of respectable proportions for those times, and including the most enthusiastic bunch of Masons to be found anywhere. A move was at once started to obtain a charter for the lodge, which was issued by order of the Most Worshipful Grand Lodge of the State of Kansas on October 21, 1869, the name and number being White Cloud Lodge, No. 78, A. F. & A. M. The Grand Lodge apponted Brother R. M. Williams as Worshipful Master, and empowered Brother M. B. Bowers to officiate as Senior Warden, and Brother J. W. Harpster to act as Junior Warden.

This was the start of the White Cloud Lodge, which for nearly forty-seven years has flourished and is today considered the best Masonic lodge in the county. The lodge continued to meet in its hall at Main and Levee streets until the expiration of its lease in 1876. The old hall was then abandoned and for the next eight years the lodge, maintaining its organization, met at various places. In the year 1884 the members grew tired of this sort of peripatetic existence of their lodge and, being men of brave heart and firm of purpose, they set about to have a home for their lodge. In March, 1884, they purchased the second story of the Sloane & Mauck store building, furnished it throughout and settled down in as comfortable a lodge home as could have been desired. Here the White Cloud Lodge, No. 78, held its stated meetings for many years, and to its altar the brothers came as to a common reservoir, where a thousand streamlets of affection flow, mutually to share the fellowship of their kind, or perhaps to perform some noble work, or to tell of the virtues and good deeds of a departed brother.

On the 19th day of December, in the year 1895, this, the first home of White Cloud Lodge, No. 78, was destroyed by fire. The building was wrecked and ruined, the furniture, paraphernalia and, worst of all, the records of the lodge, were entirely consumed—not a scrap of a record left. Homeless once more, however, the old spirit that would not down reasserted itself. Phoenix like, from the ashes of that havoc arose a newer and a better home for the lodge, and one owned entirely by the lodge. There, through the years that have followed, the brothers—now numbering seventy-seven—have continued to meet, conscious of their right to sit in communion with their brothers behind closed doors, or to swing them wide open at their pleasure, permitting the beautiful and brilliant rays from the star in the East to pour in upon them, to brighten and beautify their home and to bring to the occasion attractions that only the stars can bring.

Reviewing the history of this splendid organization one is impressed with the high character of the men who were its founders, and those who occupied the various official stations. The members named in the charter of the lodge, and whose names were signed to the original document destroyed in the fire of December 19, 1895, were: Martin B. Bower, Charles Burckhalter, John W. Harpster, J. V. Hollebaugh, Douglas M. Noble, J. S. Springer, A. N. Taylor, C. F. Van Buskirk, Russell M. Williams. Of these the only one surviving is Charles Burckhalter, who resides at Lincoln, Nebraska. The old charter which they signed has gone, but a duplicate was obtained from the Grand Lodge December 23, 1895, four days after the fire.

The Worshipful Master under the dispensation from the Grand Lodge in 1869, was J. V. Hollebaugh. After the charter was granted and the lodge was organized, Russell M. Williams was the first Worshipful Master. He served in 1869, 1870, 1871, 1872 and 1875. Other Worshipful Masters since were as follows: Luke S. Orton, 1873, 1874, 1878, 1881; Philip Kelley, 1876; Thomas J. Orton, 1877; Casper Wistar Shreve, 1879; ————————, 1880; John W. Harpster, 1882, 1883, 1885, 1889, 1890, 1891, 1900, 1901; Peter L. Palmer, 1884; R. S. Wakefield, 1886; Alexis Poulet, 1887; McIntyre Ryan, 1888, 1905, 1906; Charles H. Wakefield, 1892, 1893, 1894, 1895, 1896, 1897, 1898, 1899; J. H. McGauhey, 1902, 1903, 1907, 1908; Edward Clinton Birchfield, 1904, 1905, 1910, 1911; Oliver Virgil Collins, 1912, 1913; Claud G. Landrum, 1914, 1915.

Looking back over the history of this splendid organization of Masons, the citizens of White Cloud, irrespective of race, sect, creed or belief, cannot fail to be impressed with the fact that White Cloud Lodge, No. 78, A. F. & A. M., has been one of the great institutions of the community. Its members have been ever present and ready to exert their best influence for those things which make for high ideals of citizenship, as they have been ever ready to respond to the cry of distress. Masonry's teachings have been exemplified by living Masons. Masonry, while secret in its methods, has nothing in it that cannot stand the scrutiny of the most critical examination. It works out its own destiny in its own way, asking from the outside world nothing but the charity which it extends to every race, sect or creed. Amidst the petty turmoils, the selfish purposes, the mean littleness of men, it stands for that which is best for human kind.

It is a fact not generally known that the first civil government Kansas ever had was set up by a little band of Masons, and William Walker, a Wyandotte Indian, and one of the most brilliant and cultured men Kansas ever knew, was the head of that government. He had brought from Ohio in 1843 a code of laws and a form of government which was in operation several years before the Kansas-Nebraska Act was passed, and he was made provisional governor of the territory after the passage of the act, while the administration at Washington was organizing the territory of Kansas. The principles of justice and right and brotherly love, brought here by those Indians and their Methodist missionary, John Milton Chevington, that were engrafted into the government of Kansas and into the Masonry of Kansas, for it was in the house of one of these, Matthey R. Walker, a brother of Governor William Walker, in old Wyandotte, that the second communication of a Masonic lodge in what is now Kansas was held in 1854. Mrs. Walker, whose Indian name was Mendias, was one of the organizers of the first chapter of the Eastern Star in Kansas, in 1856, Mendias Chapter, No. 1, being named for her.

Samuel Brosius, Harvey T. Bradley, Edward C. Birchfield, Lavirus A. Bell, Milo Ball, Norris C. Birchfield, Gilbert Bowen, John W. Campbell, Oliver V. Collins, Asa E. Campbell, John L. # Wolf River Township

WOLF RIVER TOWNSHIP

One of the Original Units Which Comprise Doniphan County, Formerly Included in Its Confines the Present Territory of Union Township—Now Forms Part of the Western Boundary of the County, With Union Forming the Southwest Corner and Iowa the Northwest Corner Along the Brown County Line—Has Four Good and Lively Towns.

The township of Wolf River is one of the banner spots of Doniphan County, and its citizens are not slow to so proclaim the fact. It is one of the original townships in the county, having formerly included in its bailiwick the present township of Union.

Wolf River has four thriving business towns, and its established farming settlements are as prosperous as can be found in the state of Kansas. The St. Joseph and Grand Island railroad runs directly through the township and the Rock Island road touches the southern end by its connection with Bendena.

The farming industry of the township is exceedingly good. The land is of the most productive character, the soil being fertile and the crops usually the finest in this section of the country. The residents are intelligent and progressive and cultivate their farms on the most approved scientific principles.

Wolf River Township was settled by the early pioneers, some of whom are still living, and many of their descendants are among the most industrious residents of the township. Some of the first people to settle in Wolf River were A. Q. Rice, J. C. Clark, John Cummings, George W. Dittemore, Charles Milliman, Nathan Springer, C. C. Clouch, John Praw1, John Wood, George W. Bromley and Hugh Robertson.

It has never been definitely decided who was the first child born in Wolf River Township, but the general belief of the old timers was that Lon Springer, son of Nathan Springer, had the honor of seeing the light of day before any other child born in the township. Years ago Lon moved to Argonia, Sumner County, Kansas, where he was doing well.

William J. Ritenour, who worked as a journeyman blacksmith in the early days of Iowa Point, when John White ran the place, later settled in Wolf River Township, and became a prosperous farmer. He never forgot the art of horseshoeing and even when he became a full-fledged agriculturist he could nail a set of shoes on either his own or his neighbors' horses.

The four towns of Wolf River Township are Leona, Severance, Bendena and Moray. The St. Joseph & Grand Island Railroad runs from Moray to Leona, going directly west through the township. Severance has a population of 600, Leona 300, Bendena 100, and Moray about seventy-five.

The geographical location of Wolf River Township is ideal for agricultural pursuits. The Wolf River, from which the township takes its name, runs through the township and supplies an abundance of water along its course. The people of the township are industrious and contented and they have the happy faculty of enjoying life as only Doniphan County people can.

This township received its name from the river of that name which flows through its confines. The river received its name from a celebrated Indian chief of the Sac tribe, who, previous to the opening of the country for settlement, owned a large tract of land in this neighborhood.

This township is one of the original five townships into which the county was divided, and was organized on the first day of September, 1855, and its boundaries fixed as follows: On the north bounded by Wayne Township; on the east by the second range line, running north and south between Ranges 20 and 21, through Doniphan; on the south by Wayne Township, and on the west by the county line. A. Q. Rice and Mr. Gillmore were appointed justices of the peace, and William Lewis constable.

The first election in this township was held at the house of Milton Ute, at what was then known as the Sac Village, on the first Monday in October, 1855.

On September 16, 1856, the county board caused one and one-half miles to be taken from the eastern boundary of this township and attached to Washington Township.

On June 21, 1859, a change was made, and the boundary was fixed as follows: Commencing at the northwest corner of Section 6, Town 3, Range 19, thence east to the northeast corner of Section 3, Town 3, Range 20, thence south to the southeast corner of Section 10, Town 4, Range 20, thence west four miles, thence south four miles to the county line, thence west to the southwest corner of the county, thence north to place of beginning.

On June 10, 1878, all that part of Wolf River Township then lying in the Congressional Town 4, Range 19, was re-organized into what is now known as Union Township, and the boundary of Wolf River Township was changed accordingly.

The surface of Wolf River Township is principally rolling, high prairie land, lying in gentle swells, excepting that part through which the Wolf River flows, where it becomes more broken and bluffy. Wolf River is the principal stream, not only in the township, but in the county; flows from the west nearly due east for about five miles, then making an abrupt detour to the northeast; leaves the township on Section 4, Town 3, Range 20. The stream is fed by numerous tributaries, which serve to drain a large area of the township.

It has been impossible to ascertain who was the first actual settler in the township, but during the winter of 1854, P. Hooper, A. Q. Rice and Messrs. Brown and Deacon settled on the Wolf River, above where Severance now stands, put up log cabins, and were the first to enter claims in the township.

During the next year, the following persons came in and took up claims: S. Lambert, N. Springer, C. C. Clouch, C. Millman, N. Bennett. J. Springer, J. Praul, C. Dittesmore, G. Dittesmore, E. Shockey, M. Utt and many others.

The first marriage ceremony taking place in the township was that of John Cummings and Caroline Hooper, a daughter of one of the first settlers. There being no minister in the neighborhood at that time (spring of 1855), the ceremony was performed by Squire Rice, one of the justices of the peace in the township.

Probably the first birth was Perry, a son of George Dittemore, some time in 1855.

It is said that the first death occurring in the township was that of J. Waggoner, in the summer of 1855.

It is believed that the first religious services were held in the spring of 1855, by Reverend Shaw of the Methodist persuasion, in an Indian village of the Iowa and Sac tribes. The village was located about three miles from the present townsite of Severance, on the Wolf River. The services were held in an Indian wigwam, used by the Indians as a council chamber.

In the summer of 1857 J. Utt taught the first subscription school in the Indian wigwam.

In April, 1861, a coroner's inquest was held at "Hooper's Ford," over the body of Peter Hooper.

A postoffice was established at Walnut Grove, July 5, 1856. Previous to this time, the settlers obtained their mail at Iowa Point.

In 1862, the postoffice at Walnut Grove was removed to Bain's Bridge, a point four miles below the present townsite of Severance, on the Wolf River, where it was continued until May 8, 1870, when it was discontinued.

In 1861 Doctor Archer located in the township, being the first to represent the medical fraternity.

A saw and grist mill was built in 1857 or 1858 by a Mr. Bartlett, at what was then called the Wolf River Falls, situated about three miles northwest of the present townsite of Severance. In the spring freshet of 1862, the dam was destroyed, and the enterprise was abandoned. Principal products of the township are corn, wheat and other small grains. Fruit culture is also extensively carried on.

Leona

Leona is located on Section 17, Town 3, Range 19, in Wolf River Township, a station on the St. Joseph & Grand Island Railroad. Laid off by a stock company, June 15, 1873.

Ryan's Station was located on Section 19, Town 3, Range 20, in Wolf River Township, a station on the St. Joseph & Grand Island R. R. Was laid off by Joel Ryan, in November, 1869.

In 1869 George Brenner planted the first five acres of the celebrated Belleview vineyard.

James P. Harper

Past Eighty Years of Age, Retains All of His Faculties and Is in Good Health.

Mr. James P. Harper was born in Hendricks County, Indiana, February 2, 1834. Indiana is a nice state, as states go, but the family was progressive, and when James was but a small child, they moved to Andrew County, Mo., which was one step in the right direction. We are glad to know that they were wide awake to ouportunity's knock, and moved to Doniphan County shortly afterward. Here James was educated in the common schools, and grew to manhood here. For a number of years, he worked at home, helping with the farm work, and in fact doing the ordinary chores of a farmer's son. Although we have no exact record, we should judge he must have purchased a farm along in his late twenties, as he worked at farming altogether up to October 28, 1861. The mention of such dates as 1860, 1861, etc., brings to mind always the bitter struggle which divided our nation, and Mr. Harper heeded the call of duty and enlisted on the date above mentioned in Company I, Seventh Kansas cavalry. His term of service extended only a little over a year, being discharged December 11, 1862, on account of disability.

April 4, 1864, he was married to Miss Barbara J. Cowger of Burr Oak Township, who died April 25, 1880. To this union were born eight children, as follows: Thomas M., James G., Rufus G., John W., Chester L., Mary S., Minnie M., Inez J. On August 24, 1884, Mr. Harper took to himself a second companion in the person of Mrs. Polly Morgan of DeKalb County, Mo., by whom he had five children: Raymond P., Ernest M., Annie M., Stella A. and Hazel D.

Mr. Harper engaged in the lumber business for seven years in Leona, Kansas, but now lives a retired life. He has 160 acres of farm land one-half mile northwest of Leona.

James P. Harper. (Died September 7, 1915, since this article was set in type.)

An anti-horse thief association is an organization composed of law-abiding people, the most respectable of the country, who have banded themselves together for mutual protection, "to aid in upholding civil laws, to insure the safety of our property against loss by thieves, robbers, murderers, vagrants, tramps, incendiaries and all violators of the law and to secure to us and our families the enjoyment of life and the pursuit of happiness in the possession of our honest reward of labor with equal and just rights to all."

Such is the Leona Lodge of the Anti-Horse Thief Association, which was organized Aug. 28, 1903, and its effectiveness is shown in the fact that there have been scarcely any reports of thefts made in the last ten years. In some instances there were losses, but they were comparatively small. The Leona lodge is truly made up of the best men in the community. It is not like the old-time vigilance committees or regulators. It employs no illegal, nor white-cap methods, in carrying out its work. It opposes mob violence and will expel any member that takes part in a mob. Previous to 1903 there were a large number of robberies in the vicinity of Leona, and the residents of that neighborhood decided that something must be done. The result was the present efficient organization. The lodge is affiliated with the national association formed in Clark County.

The active members of the Leona lodge are: James Anderson, Severt Anderson, E. L. M. Benfer, George Dock, A. O. Delaney, M. H. Devine, John Delzeit, G. H. Devine, George Ebeling, Jr., L. O. Erickson, Edward Erickson, Jr., Henry Ebeling, Ole Gulickson, Adam Gentzler, Richard Gerdes, John Heaston, P. O. Hjetland, J. D. Hazen, Ray Harper, Lon Hazen, R. G. Harper, T. M. Harper, A. # Earl L. M. Benfer

Prosperous Doniphan County Farmer Resides With His Wife and Eleven Children in the Same House That He Was Born In Forty-two Years Ago—Breeder and Shipper of Registered Cattle and Horses and Duroc-Jersey Hogs—Place Is Three Miles North of Leona—Farms One-Quarter Section.

Earl L. M. Benfer is one of the few prosperous farmers in Doniphan County who has lived on the same farm, and in the same house that he was born in up to the present day.

It has been generally the case that where families remained on the same place since first settling there, that a new house is usually erected in order to have more accommodations available for the rising generation.

Such a situation has never confronted Mr. Benfer for the very rational reason that when the house where he was born was being built, the work was done with an intelligent provision for future requirements. His father, Hugh H., who built the house, and who still owns the farm, certainly exercised good judgment and forethought when he constructed the old home. While the elder Benfer is enjoying himself at Weiser, Idaho, his son, Earl, with the assistance of a good wife and twelve children, is looking after one of the best farms in Doniphan County.

Hugh H. Benfer is one of the most obliging men who ever resided in the Bellevue neighborhood, and his friends were loathe to lose him as a neighbor.

Consequently the Benfer farm house is all that could be desired in the way of a substantial home, equipped with all modern necessities. It is comfortable and commodious and both exterior and interior bear all the indications of having been properly attended all those years.

The Benfer farm is located three miles north of Leona in Wolf River Township, and is a most delightful spot for an industrious farmer's residence. There is an abundance of pure water and the soil is both fertile and salubrious.

Mr. Benfer is the son of one of the early settlers in Doniphan County and the farm where he was born, on March 11, 1873, shows every appearance of having been intelligently cultivated and managed in a thoroughly business-like manner. Everything is in apple-pie order all over the place.

Residence of Earl L. M. Benfer

Unlike many other native sons of Doniphan County, whose education was obtained solely in the common schools, Mr. Benfer had the advantage of attending colleges after he had left the public schools. That fact in itself should give a comprehensive understanding of the elegant conditions which exist on his farm.

Earl L. M. Benfer was still but a mere boy when he graduated from the public schools and he then went to Highland University for a year and a half. After leaving the University he decided to equip himself with a complete business education, so he took a full course at the old Electric Business College, at St. Joseph, Missouri.

At the age of twenty-three Mr. Benfer was married to Miss Julie E. Furman, November 11, 1896. Miss Furman was also a native of Doniphan County and her people are well known and highly respected.

Since the marriage of Mr. Benfer and Miss Furman twelve children have come to bless the union, and they are all living and comprise one of the happiest families in the entire county. There are seven girls, Vera, Irene, Alma, Doris, Bessie, Christina, and Lenora Louise, born Aug. 21, 1915, and five boys, Merrill, Vernon, Raymond, Arthur and Lawrence.

The Benfer farm contains 160 acres, well fenced and improved in every respect. The outbuildings are as good as can be found in the county and every arrangement for housing of the livestock has been made to provide for the most modern system of sanitation.

Mr. Benfer is a great lover of fine stock, of all degrees and varieties. He is an extensive breeder and shipper of Duroc-Jersey hogs and the output from his pens commands the highest figures on the market.

One of the finest features of the Benfer stock is the number of splendid registered Jersey cattle that are bred and fed on the place. These beasts cannot be surpassed for class or condition in the country. They are sleek and attractive at all seasons of the year and have the stamp of high quality and style from hoof to horn.

The Percheron horses bred on the Benfer place take rank with any animals of that class produced in the country. There is a great demand from both local and outside horsemen for the output of Mr. Benfer's Percheron stud annually, and he has little difficulty in obtaining the best prices, either at private sale or on the horse marts of the large cities.

Mrs. Benfer is a great lover of high-grade fowls, as much so as her husband is for livestock. Her specialty is in single comb white Leghorns, and white Holland turkeys. Her pens are invariably well filled with these varieties and, while being a source of pleasure to the owner, they also represent an important item of profit.

The Benfer home is a most delightful one, and the houseful of children add an additional charm to the place. Mrs. Benfer is a most devoted mother, splendid housewife and an ideal helpmeet of her husband.

Earl L. M. Benfer and family, except Lenora Louise, who was born August 21, 1915.

A White Cloud Buffalo Hunt

Old Timers, Kit Williams, Enoch Spaulding and Levi Utt, Organized an Exciting Chase at White Cloud in August, 1860, and Headed for the Plains Beyond the Confines of Civilization.

Many of the early settlers of Doniphan County varied the monotony of pioneer times by indulging in an occasional chase after the elusive buffalo. The animals were plentiful along parts of the plains in certain seasons of the year and the sport was both exciting and profitable. The meat of the animals was excellent for food and the skins commanded good prices on the market.

It was no simple matter to get within hailing distance of the animals those days, as they seemed to have human instinct in regarding mankind as their natural enemy. Expert skill and dexterity was frequently required to slay the buffalo, as they were fleet footed to a degree and extremely warlike when wounded or cornered. It was no uncommon thing for a wounded animal to turn upon its pursuers and give battle to the last breath.

Consequently the swiftest horses were requisitioned for the chase and the men most familiar with the habits and movement of the animals were always to be found leading the hunt. Late in August, 1860, a number of residents of Doniphan County gathered at White Cloud and organized for a lively buffalo hunt out over the plains. The "plains" in those days meant the country in Kansas and Nebraska along the Little Blue, which was then far beyond the confines of civilization.

Some of the experienced hunters had figured out that during that particular season of the year the buffalo would be feeding along the banks of the Blue River, where the animals knew there was plenty of water to be found. The party consisted of ten men, namely: Enoch Spaulding, Sam Macquilken, Kit Williams, Levi Utt, Edward Craig, Elijah Allen, Edward Allen, Marion Beeler, G. Beeler and William Dill.

It is not known whether any buffalo were killed or not, as all the principals to the expedition have passed away, but many of those who participated, gleefully narrated an episode with old man Dill as being one of the noted features of the hunt. Mr. Dill was a good natured old pioneer and while trailing the wary buffalo, the boys played many pranks which incensed him to the point that he declared he would stay with the party no longer, but would hunt up a band of Indians supposed to be in that region, and live with them forever.

To their chagrin the old gent started off and the members of the expedition concluded that when his tantrum had subsided he would join the party before night. When he failed to show up as darkness approached, the boys became uneasy, fearing that he had either been scalped by the Indians or killed by some wild beasts. They formed searching parties, but of no avail, and they gave him up for lost.

Finally after three days had elapsed and the party were preparing supper in camp, a rather wobbly object was discovered far in the distance, slowly approaching. At first the hunters thought the figure was that of an Indian, but as it came nearer they recognized it to be old man Dill. He was almost starved, for failing to find the Indians, he got lost and had he not found the camp that night it was believed that he would have perished. Upon returning to White Cloud there was a lot more joking at the old man's expense, but when a lady quizzed him as to the brand of liquor he drank in his wanderings he took it as a personal reflection on his habits of sobriety and vowed to never go on a buffalo hunt again. The only old time buffalo hunters left now are Judge M. S. Mauck, John Lynds, W. H. Forncrook and Mr. Wakefield.

W. F. HARLOW

A Gospel Mission Worker of the Far West, Former Resident of Doniphan County—Now Resides in San Diego, California.

Years ago, there dwelt in Doniphan County a young man who was gifted with the unusual ability of impressing his hearers with anything he might have to say. This man was W. F. Harlow, and he first put his talent to use by teaching school in District 60. The school house stood on what is now Mose Cox's land, and was destroyed by fire December 27, 1894. He taught one successful term, and his polish and personality made him a welcome guest anywhere he chose to go.

The exact date of Mr. Harlow's departure from Doniphan County is not known, but, at any rate, it is known that for a few years he taught school throughout Iowa, Missouri and Kansas, and not long after was married to Miss Ella Stover, a school teacher of his home place, Adams County, Iowa. He then engaged in the general merchandise business for awhile, but on account of the death of his wife, and his own failing health he sold out and went to California. The present Mrs. Harlow was also a school teacher of Iowa, and a devout Christian lady. The Harlows devote their lives to gospel mission work, and are of that host of meek and lowly workers who disseminate the spirit of Christ among the fallen men and women of the slums. There is one son of his early marriage, K. S. Harlow, a rancher of Imperial Valley, California, and a little grandson, William Roy Harlow, of whom grandpa is very proud. At present, the Harlows reside at San Diego, California, and Mr. Harlow will doubtless be glad to welcome old pupils who visit his city.

Salem Evangelical Church

Situated on North Line of Wolf River Township, One Mile East of County Line—A Place of Worship for the Rural Citizens—Rev. A. E. Butler, Pastor—Residents of Bellvue Neighborhood Assisted in Its Construction, Regardless of Church Affiliation—Dedicated July 17, 1886.

The spirit of the good old days when the settlers in the Middle States would turn out and cut down the timber, shape the logs and build a "meetin' house," or a school house, as the needs of their community might require, was revived in a certain sense in certain communities in Doniphan County in the last half of the preceding century.

The need of a house of worship and of a school house have always been recognized by the pioneers who came to till the soil and to establish homes, and no sacrifices were ever too great for these pioneers if they brought these Christianizing and civilizing influences.

In Doniphan County they were not exactly "log-rollings," as in the early-day settlements in the states east of the Mississippi River, but when there was a church or a school house to be built, the farmers all turned out and took a hand in the work.

Salem Evangelical Church, situated in Wolf River Township

A great many of our people recall the instance of the building of the Salem Evangelical Church in Wolf River Township one mile from the west line of Doniphan County, three miles north of Leona, and five miles southwest of Highland. It was in the spring of 1886 when the building of the church was started on what is now the farm of E. L. M. Benfer, by a committee composed of William Heifner, Jack Benfer, W. C. Bingham and John McCauley. The men of the entire community, regardless of denominational affiliations, assisted in the hauling of lumber and material for the church, and also took a hand in its erection, while the women, always loyal to the cause of Christianity, prepared dinners for the men and helped to make the building of the church a season of genuine pleasure. These good people realized what the little church would mean to their community and especially to the young people and the children growing up.

Then, on July 17 of that eventful year, 1886, came the great day—the dedication of the church they had builded with their own hands, in many instances with sacrifices, for the community was young, and the prosperity which we now behold in that section was only dawning. The people for many miles around turned out to the meeting and listened to a great sermon, which was the beginning of the launching of this great religious enterprise.

For nearly thirty years the little church has been a beacon light to the people of that community or settlement, as first it was called, pointing the way to righteousness and to Christian living on this earth and to the life beyond. The Rev. A. E. Butler is the present pastor of this church, now residing in Sparks, in the new parsonage which was completed there a few weeks ago. This minister holds services every Sunday in the Union Church in Sparks, and also in the Salem Evangelical Church. The services in Salem Church are well attended by the people, and have proven a blessing to the people in supplying their spiritual needs. The Sunday school, now having about sixty in attendance each Sunday, also has had a wholesome influence on the lives of the young people who have been born and reared in the neighborhood.

Thus it is with great pride these far-seeking farmers of thirty years ago point to the little Salem Evangelical Church as one of the grandest institutions—and not one regrets the sacrifices it cost to build it.

W. D. ROSS, KANSAS EDUCATOR

Superintendent of Kansas Schools Born in Log Cabin in Pennsylvania, 1870—Came to Kansas in 1879—Graduated from Kansas University, 1893.

When a man is in charge of the teachers and has direction of the public education of a state which takes high rank in educational lines, and fills that place efficiently, he is a most exceptional man, both in scholarship and practical understanding of human nature. Kansas holds a high rank among the states in education, even as its residents are high in the average of intelligence and are keenly interested in schools and higher institutions of learning. In Kansas for a boy or girl to stay out of school is considered almost a disgrace to his or her family, and nearly every Kansas girl, at some time or other, has taught school or could have done so had she so desired. The man who is so well qualified to foster this ever growing spirit of education in Kansas is W. R. Ross.

W. D. Ross.

Superintendent Ross is of Scotch ancestry, the family having settled in America in the seventeenth century. The Kansas educator was born in a log cabin, then the family home, in Washington County, Pennsylvania, August 9, 1870. The patent to the homestead, issued to Mr. Ross's great great grandfather, was signed by George Washington, first President of the United States.

Mr. Ross, then a boy of nine, came to Kansas in 1879 with his parents, who settled on a farm in Jefferson County, twenty-five miles west of Leavenworth. He was graduated from the University of Kansas at Lawrence in 1893, accomplishing the unusual feat of gaining his Bachelor of Arts and Master of Arts degrees at the same time. He did outside work to earn his way through school.

Afterward this noted educator served sixteen years in various positions, as high school instructor, city and county superintendent, and four years as member of the state reading circle board. In 1908 Governor E. W. Hoch appointed him a member of the State Educational Commission to propose educational legislation, and in 1909, when the legislature enacted the Normal Training and Industrial Training High School Law, Mr. Ross was selected by E. T. Fairchild, then Kansas State Superintendent of Public Instruction, to take charge of the inauguration, development and administration of the normal and industrial training system, under the provisions of that law.

Mr. Ross was elected State Superintendent of Public Instruction in November, 1912, re-elected in November, 1914, and has filled this office to the satisfaction of all concerned. In addition he is the official censor of motion picture films exhibited in Kansas, assisted by Carry E. Simpson and the Reverend Mr. Festus Foster. Superintendent Ross and his assistants bar any film which may exert a bad influence on the patrons of the picture shows.

Mrs. Ross was Miss Eleanor Marshall Gephart, born near Valley Falls, Dec. 11, 1876. Mr. Ross and Miss Gephart were married Sept. 4, 1901. Mrs. Ross is an exceptionally bright woman and is well liked. They are parents of two daughters, Marion Ross, born Sept. 19, 1903, and Constance Eleanor Ross, born Feb. 9, 1909. The girls are lovable children and promise to reflect much credit on their parents.

John Hunter, Farmer

Being the Story of a Native of Scotland Who for More Than Forty Years Applied Himself Intelligently to Agriculture in Doniphan County, and Now, at Eighty-Two, Is Comfortably Fixed and Taking Things Easy.

What the Scottish People and Hunter in Particular, Have Done for the Development of Our State and County.

Many of the men and women who have helped in the development of our glorious Sunflower state, and who have been numbered among its most loyal, upright and progressive citizens, were of foreign birth. To these Kansas owes a debt of gratitude that can not be expressed in mere empty words, for the part they have taken in advancing her to the proud position in the front rank of the states in agriculture, industrial activity, commercial and financial supremacy, as well as in education, culture, society and government. And not the least part of this credit is due people who came from Scotland, of whom John Hunter of Wolf River township, Doniphan County, is a worthy representative.

During the long and sanguinary struggle along the border to determine whether Kansas was to be admitted to the sisterhood of states, slave or free, hundreds of men of foreign birth were among those who came this way. They had cast off the yoke of oppression in the European countries and, being attracted by the magnitude of the issue involved, pushed their way out here into the thickest of the fight. It was a good time to test the valor and patriotism of our newly-acquired American citizens, but there was little opportunity to determine their real worth in the peaceful avocations. The Civil War ended, however, and things took a sudden turn. These foreign born citizens threw down their arms and, attracted by the wonderful fertility of the soil, the salubrious climate and the scenic beauty, turned their attention to agriculture in Kansas. Then in the years immediately following the close of the Civil War, thousands of foreigners, having heard from the pioneer immigrants who came before, about Kansas, crossed the Atlantic and came trooping out this way.

These immigrants were Scotch, Irish, German, Austrian, French, Swedish, Norwegian, Belgian, Hungarian and Russian, with something of a sprinkling of representatives of the other nations. These, with their varying characteristics, soon constituted one of the staunchest elements of our citizenship and our agricultural and industrial strength. They helped to cut up the prairies into farms, to pave the way for our present civilization, and through all the years that have followed they and their descendants have patriotically stood by the flag and for high order of citizenship and government.

While much might be written about the immigrants from other nations and their achievements in Kansas in helping in the development and upbuilding of the state, too much praise cannot be given those natives of Scotland for the part they have played in the making of this grand commonwealth, occupying the geographical center of the United States. The people who came from Scotland were, first of all, of the industrious class; there were no drones among them. As a rule they were well educated, intelligent, shrewd and sincerely religious. They came to America to escape persecutions, as did the early German immigrants, and the Russians who put Kansas on the map as a hard wheat state. The Scottish-born element of our citizenship was a liberty loving people, with high moral standards of government. They have won honorable success in their every undertaking. As ministers of the Gospel we find them in almost every community in Kansas. They are in the learned professions—professors in colleges and universities, teachers, editors, writers, lawyers, physicians and surgeons. We find Scottish-born people engaged in business and in the arts and industries in Kansas. And here also we find American citizens of Scottish birth engaged in the noble avocation of farming and stock raising, and ninety-nine out of every one hundred have scored success in capital letters.

But to return to our good friend and fellow citizen, John Hunter, of Wolf River township, Doniphan County, who is a representative of the high type of natives of Scotland engaged in agriculture. He was born Aug. 23, 1833, in the territorial division of northeast Scotland bordering on the sea, that was known as Aberdeenshire, famous for its thorough and practical farmers as well as for its fine pure blood livestock. He was a son of George Hunter. He possibly could trace his ancestry and find the old family identified with Scotland's struggles back to the time where recorded history lapses into tradition; but John Hunter is thoroughly American, laying no claim to title of any kind other than as an American citizen and resident of Kansas.

John Hunter's boyhood days spent in Aberdeenshire were like the boyhood days of other youths, a little play, some rigid schooling and a lot of hard work, with stern home discipline. It was the sort of rearing that fitted boys for sturdy, useful manhood. At the age of twenty, John Hunter was fairly well educated and was well equipped to make his own way in the world. He was filled with the spirit of adventure and he possessed an ambition that would not balk at anything. He was a typical Scottish youth, possessing the characteristics of the people of the land of the hills and the heather.

Residence of John Hunter

The year 1857 was an eventful year for our young John Hunter. He had reached the age of twenty-two and was keen to start out on a career for himself. The eyes of the Old World then were focused toward the New World, which was luring thousands from their native lands. Across the Atlantic they were hearing stories about Kansas with her wealth of sunshine and her rich rolling prairies open to settlers. John Hunter joined the throng, determined to make his start in life in the New World.

He landed on the Eastern coast and on his way Westward stopped in the state of Michigan, which was offering plenty of inducements for young men who were not afraid of work to locate there and build homes. For thirteen years John Hunter lingered in that state, engaged in various occupations. Finally, in the year 1870, he no longer could permit the call to the soil of Kansas to pass unheeded.

It was in the spring of the year 1870, that John Hunter landed at the Missouri river and crossed over into the promised land. It was a thrilling adventure for him to reach the beautiful land which but a few years before had been the bone of contention over which the forces of freedom and those of slavery fought and which plunged the nation into a seething sea of turmoil and strife. But it was an adventure he never once found cause to regret.

Along the river and to the west for a distance of many miles the homestead lands were taken up by settlers who had gone before. He might have gone farther out into the interior of the state and taken a homestead claim, but he found just what he wanted in Doniphan County—he was a good judge of soil—and he would go no farther. So he paid fifteen dollars an acre for the quarter section of 160 acres of unimproved land which, had he gone there a few years before, he could have taken up as homestead land from the government at a maximum cost of a dollar an acre.

The farm then purchased was in Wolf River township, one mile east and one-half mile north of the present village of Leona, on the St. Joseph & Grand Island railroad. The land he found suited to his needs for a first-class general farm and for stock raising. He at once began to improve it according to his notions as to what was needed. He builded his house and barns with an idea of convenience and utility, cut the land up into fields and pastures, and grew the crops that would yield the best returns for the effort. He stocked his farm with good livestock. Then he began to specialize by raising fine horses for which there was a demand at St. Joseph, Kansas City and Chicago. This called for more land and in the course of time he purchased another 160 acres, giving him a total of 320 acres of the choicest land in this locality.

John Hunter was successful from the start. By patient labor, close application to the details of management and intelligent methods of farming, he was always forging ahead. There was the year of the grasshoppers, and once in a while a year when the returns would fall short of the average, but in all seasons good and bad, he had something to sell. Whether it was wheat, corn, oats, he got a good price. His cattle, hogs and his fancy horses were always in demand; he knew what they were worth and generally got it. He conducted his farm as a business institution, keeping accurate tab on everything and at the end of each year striking a balance in his accounts to enable him to find just where he was "at."

If one were to ask him, John Hunter would tell you that the farming business pays in Kansas, though it is the man who farms intelligently, who has a sound business system, who takes care of his farm and does not let it run down, who looks after all of the little odds and ends, and who applies himself diligently to his job that comes out ahead and lays up a bank account. The lazy, shiftless farmer who permits his farm to run down, does not get any farther than the one who markets his wheat and corn and lets hundreds of dollars worth of other products that would sell for cash, go to waste. It's a shame, he says, that thousands of dollars worth of farm products annually are allowed to go to waste or to rot in the fields and orchards simply because the farmers consider them of too small importance to gather and take to market. Anything you grow that you don't need for your own use should be sold, for the money thus obtained very often swings the year's balance to the right side of the ledger.

It may also be recorded that John Hunter considers Kansas good enough for any man who desires to farm in the right way. A look at his farm, with its neat and substantial improvements, tells you that. There is no better farming land than that of northeastern Kansas, in his estimation. It will grow abundant crops of everything that can be grown in this latitude. That is why farm lands in this section are worth more than in some of the older states. It used to be, and not a great while ago, that Kansas land that would yield three times as much as two hundred dollar land east of the Missouri river, was selling for $50 an acre. Since then there has been something of an evening up of farm values. With our improved transportation facilities no other section of the country has anything on us when it comes to marketing our products. Hence increased land values in Kansas.

John Hunter

Referring to land values in Kansas, however, reminds us that John Hunter made no mistake when he settled in Kansas. The land for which he paid $15 an acre in 1870, now is worth $200 an acre, thirteen and one-third times more than the original purchase price. And he has 320 acres of it—and any farmer will tell you John Hunter's land is worth all of $200 an acre.

Aside from being regarded by the people of this community and by hundreds of others who know him as one of the foremost general farmers and growers of livestock, John Hunter also enjoys the distinction of being looked upon as one of our most progressive, wide-awake and public-spirited citizens. During all of his forty-five years' residence in the county he has been unceasing in his advocacy of improved farming methods, improved farms and soil efficiency. He has advocated the building of good roads as a means of bettering the farmers' facilities for hauling their products to market, or to the shipping station, as well as for the comfort and convenience of everybody else who use our public highways. He believes that every dollar intelligently expended on road improvements will be returned with interest in the increased value of land contiguous to the roads improved. Having no children of his own, he believes in other people's children having good schools. He has proved himself a loyal citizen by his interest in state, county and township affairs, standing always for those measures and things which in his honest judgment are best for the common good, believing as he does that the farmer folk whose labor goes into the production of the necessaries of life are themselves entitled to the best they can get out of life.

John Hunter is one of those genial souls who enjoy the friendship and association of his fellows. He is a reader of good literature and through the newspapers he keeps himself well informed on current events. He is a delightful conversationalist and, possessing to a marked degree the genuine humor of the Scottish people, the visitor to his farm home finds him a most agreeable and entertaining host.

Now comes the announcement that John Hunter, successful farmer and raiser of fine horses, having celebrated his eighty-second birthday on August 23d of this year, and having acquired a goodly fortune off his gold mine farm, intends to spend his declining years in ease. This is the information that comes to the writer of this article. But John Hunter quitting farming sounds like a joke. Whoever heard of a Kansas farmer retiring at eighty-two to spend his declining years in ease?

Joke or no joke there is behind this bare announcement a story of human achievement that knocks out the hifa-lutin' theories of those highbrow, know-it-alls who insist that farming is a low down, despicable business with nothing but drudgery and in the end pauperism as a reward of faithful service. Perhaps it would have been so had John Hunter remained in his native land. He might have been eking out a hand-to-mouth existence without a ghost of a show of saving up a competency for old age or to break into the gentry class. But it's different in Wolf River township, Doniphan County, Kansas. John Hunter, owner of a $64,000 farm that is a veritable gold mine and a fat bank account, could afford to take it easy at eighty-two, for his is the reward of forty-five years of farming activity, not drudgery, but joyful service and real living. As for title, John Hunter believes that no grander title can be conferred on any man than that of American citizen—and with the privilege of living in Kansas, with "Highland, Kansas, R. F. D." as his mail address.

And so we may envy John Hunter as he sits on the front porch of his pretty farm home, filled with effervescing joy, his mind alert, his Scottish wit keen, as one who has lived sanely and well, taking things easy in his declining years.

Leo Duehn, Farmer and Stockman

Prosperous Farmer of Wolf River Township—Born in Doniphan County January 19, 1869.—Parents Came from Prussia in 1864 and Located in This County—Specializes in Short Horn Cattle—Farms 300 Acres.

Leo Duehn, a son of Doniphan County pioneers and one of the most prosperous farmers in Wolf River township, lives in one of the nicest residences in the township, two and one-half miles southwest of Leona. He is a good farmer and stock raiser and specializes in Shorthorn cattle. This young man inherits the thrift and business ability of his German parents, Carl and Ernestine Duehn, who were reared in Prussia. That nation has sent many of its best people to America, where they have become the most substantial of citizens. The Duehns were these kind of people.

In the early 60's the family heard great things of America. In the evenings as the men of the village (Dorf) smoked their long stemmed pipes and drank steins of beer as the "haus fraus" talked together, America was sure to be mentioned as a "sehr gut land." The information about the land of promise was likely meagre, but the prospects held out were alluring. The Duehns at length left the fatherland, and after a long voyage, landed in America. They started out almost immediately for Kansas and arrived in Doniphan County in 1864.

The Duehns located on a farm within one mile of the present Leo Duehn place. Here their son Leo was born amid a winter snow storm, Jan. 19, 1869. On his father's farm the little German boy grew up and attended the country schools of his time. He applied himself to what books he had, feeling strange no doubt among the "kinder" whose parents had been born in America and who spoke the American language so fluently. Likely it was sometimes difficult for him to think in one language—in words which he heard at home—and to express himself in the words of another speech which his teacher and playmates used. Their ways and viewpoint were quite different, and doubtless he wondered why his innate ideas were so different from theirs, not knowing that environment can not change altogether the traits inherited from generations of ancestors who spent their lives on a foreign soil.

Nevertheless, whether he realized it or not, it was those traits and habits which cropped out in young Duehn that not only set him a little apart from his schoolmates, but also gave him a tendency in paths that have made him much more prosperous than many. "Das geld" is something the Germans do not give for things that are not useful to them. In fact it is a common saying that a German family can live on what an American family will waste.

Mr. Duehn, early in life, showed inclinations toward economy, and the pennies and nickels he earned did not find their way to the candy store man as quickly as many of those of his comrades. Nevertheless he enjoyed the simple pleasures of country life, went swimming with his playmates and was probably guilty of tying several hundred knots in his comrades' shirts in the course of his boyhood.

As the subject of this sketch became a young man, the inherited and developed traits of his ancestors began to give him those qualities which have made him so successful. Gradually he began to acquire land, and after the vicissitudes of drought were over, he was in possession of more than the average share of Kansas soil.

Incidentally the home-founding instincts of the Teuton race began to assert themselves. Among the popular and most sensible girls of the neighborhood was Miss Nellie Laverentz. This young lady and Mr. Duehn formed a friendship which ripened into a deeper affection. They were married in December, 1898. Mrs. Duehn is a true mother and model housekeeper. She is well fitted to have charge of the fine residence in which the Duehns live. She is kind, energetic and held in high esteem by her neighbors. Mrs. Duehn is intensely interested in her husband's investments and has afforded much of the inspiration for his successful undertakings.

leading citizens of his community. He is both prosperous and progressive and takes equal pride in his fine home and the barns and houses in which his cattle and machinery are kept. His Shorthorn cattle are of the best thoroughbred stock and he sees to the details of the care of the stock as well as to the various operations required to farm the 300 acres of fertile land.

Mr. and Mrs. Duehn are parents of three children: Vernon L., born Nov. 5, 1900; Letha, born Nov. 12, 1905; Leah, who was born on the day that is sometimes called the nation's birthday, July 4, in the year 1907. The children promise to reflect credit on their parents.

Edward N. Erickson

Of the Hardy Norwegian Stock and Born in Missouri, This Man Has Achieved a Good Measure of Success as a General Farmer and Grower of Live Stock in the State of Kansas.

Among the men of Doniphan County who are honored by their fellow men, because of their true worth as useful citizens, assuredly must be mentioned our friend Edward N. Erickson, whose farm is two miles north and one mile west of Leona. A natural born farmer, and spending all the years of his life on a farm, Mr. Erickson is a splendid example of a man who had achieved success by the exercise of intelligence along with his farming. The old idea that brains and intelligent business management were not essential to farming, has been exploded. Men who win success in any pursuit or business or profession must have an intimate knowledge of the things they are undertaking to do. To obtain from the soil all that it is capable of producing the farmer of today uses his head as well as his hands. Blind ignorance may sometimes blunder into success, but in the end such a farmer won't get very far. It is the farmer like Mr. Erickson, who sets a high standard of efficiency and dignifies farming as a learned profession, that is looked up to in any community.

Mr. Erickson comes from the hardy and thrifty Norwegian stock and rightfully he has inherited many of those qualities that have distinguished the people of the Northland of Europe as among the most industrious and most productive workers of the Old World. His parents were Ole and Anna Erickson, who were among the early settlers of Buchanan County, Missouri. It was on their farm not far from the then frontier city of St. Joseph, that Edward N. Erickson was born on Jan. 5, 1854. The family left Missouri in 1860, when Edward was four years old and crossing the Missouri river located on a farm in Brown County, Kansas. Here they found ideal conditions for farming and for eighteen years they cultivated the rich soil and raised livestock with success.

To the growing boy, Edward, there was something fascinating in the tilling of the soil, the handling of the various crops and in the breeding and rearing of farm animals. He took an interest in everything about the place and there never was in his breast an ambition to fly to the city and a seven and one-half dollar a week clerkship in a store. The independent happy life of a farmer appealed to him. He attended school and learned all he could, helping about the farm as soon as he was old enough—thus spending practically all of his life on the farm.

In the year 1878, when Edward was twenty-four, he came to Doniphan County and established himself on the farm on which he has resided for thirty-seven years. It was not much of a move, being just across the road which marks the division line between Brown and Doniphan counties, but it made him a citizen of our county and of whom we of Doniphan have had reason to be proud.

The young farmer, with the enthusiasm of his kind, set to work improving the place. He had a pride in his farm and he wanted to make it the best farm in the community, and it was with great joy that he witnessed its transformation from virgin prairie to a high state of cultivation, with clean, well-kept fields and meadows and pastures. He built a neat home and erected farm buildings of a substantial character and suited to his needs.

Then, on June 16, 1881, he took unto himself a life partner in the person of Miss Julia A. Nelson of Buchanan County, Mo. Her parents, Lewis and Guerena Nelson, were also natives of Norway and early settlers of Buchanan County. Mrs. Erickson proved indeed a good partner and helpmeet. A lover of home and family, well educated and reared in a good home, she was fitted for the wife of an intelligent and thrifty farmer; and, let us here assert without fear of contradiction, much of the success that has come to her husband is due to her splendid encouragement, her calm counsel, her cheerful, untiring devotion and her unflagging energy in their Doniphan County farm home.

Meanwhile there was no lagging of improvements on the farm, and through all of the years that have followed, Edward N. Erickson has not stood still, nor has he been content with doing fairly well. His desire always has been to excel, to do his very best. Through experience and observation and patient study he has learned much, until it can be said there is very little about farming and stock raising he does not know; yet he is not the kind of a farmer who insists that he knows it all. If any other farmer has anything better in the way of methods of work or of soil culture, Edward N. Erickson is interested. And he is just as ready to help others by giving them the benefit of his own experiences which have year in and year out brought him substantial returns until now he is numbered among the prosperous farmers of Kansas.

Mr. Erickson is a man of strong convictions and one who believes the highest duty of man here on earth is to do the very best that is possible for him to do. He is the kind of self-confident man who when he says he will do a thing can be counted on to go ahead and do that particular thing—who bends his energy to work and almost always accomplishes it. Some misguided people are apt to say it is his luck, and all that sort of thing, when in fact his luck or success, whatever you may be pleased to call it, has been brought about by his own persevering efforts and by his confidence in himself and his ability to do whatever he sets out to do.

Edward N. Erickson may properly be called a general farmer, not a one-crop farmer. He believes in several crops, in the rotation of crops and the scientific upkeep of the soil. He raises cattle, hogs, sometimes sheep, and poultry. His orchard and truck patch yield an abundance for the family use and a good deal to sell. And there is always a market for his products. This is the kind of farming that pays dividends in northeastern Kansas. At least that is his way of expressing it, and he knows whereof he speaks.

"If I were asked to advise a friend," he said recently, "I would say buy a farm, not too large in acres, but of good soil, and grow a variety of crops, employing modern methods of cultivation and cultivating well. I would buy a few good cows, some good hogs, and a flock of good hens. With such a beginning, and with patient care and intelligent business management, any level-headed man who is not afraid of work will do well. Don't begin on too large a scale unless you are an expert farm manager, or you can afford to take chances. Great oaks from little acorns grow, and great success from farming comes from beginning on a small scale and enlarging one's operations by degrees as he learns the game and his ability is increased. As for choice of location, well, the soil of Kansas is as good as any."

Edward Erickson

Mr. Erickson is a man of sterling character and strong mentality whose life has been governed by high principles of integrity and honor, so that he is held in the unqualified esteem of those with whom he has come in contact. Though a man of strong parts who would succeed in any avocation he might adopt, he has been constant in his allegiance to farming and stock raising. His holdings at this time include the home farm in Doniphan County of 150 acres and 200 acres in Brown County, all valuable farm lands. Now, at the age of sixty-one, he is independent and prosperous.

He is public-spirited and is keenly interested in the affairs of his community as well as those of the state and nation. He has during his entire residence in the state, been a persistent advocate of clean and efficient government in all departments of the public service and his vote has always been recorded in favor of men who in his judgment were best capable of filling the public offices.

Mrs. Erickson and Miss Anna A. are lovers of flowers and to their credit it can be said that their lawn is a beautiful one and the casual observer passing by usually remarks, "Oh, those lovely flowers on Quiet Hill Farm."

Mr. and Mrs. Erickson are parents of four interesting children. The eldest, Loslie O., was born April 10, 1882; Anna A., the only daughter, was born July 31, 1884; Edward N., Jr., June 19, 1887 Osborn A., Aug. 11, 1891.

Charles J. Foster, of Severance, Has the Record of Being Able to Sell More Real Estate Than Any Other Crier in the State of Kansas—Learned the Business Under the Veteran, Jack W. Pry.

Started When Almost a Boy and Has Had Twenty-Five Years' Experience Up to the Present—Conducted Real Estate, Loan and Investment Business for Past Fifteen Years.

The business world of the United States has long since realized that a man must be an artist in his line to be a successful auctioneer.

In recent years, however, competition in all branches of business has become so keen that more than artistic skill is required to get the money.

There were many live wires produced in the Nineteenth Century, but it remained for this good, young Twentieth, to develop the real sizzlers, who can deliver the punch.

Auctioneering in the old days was generally regarded as a side line, followed by men who availed themselves of exigencies created for their services by the pressing needs of other people.

In this progressive age men who specialize in conducting public sales are in demand everywhere and at almost every time and season. The forced sales of former years are a thing of the past. Now it is the proper caper for a farmer or storekeeper to engage the services of an auctioneer in order to obtain the best prices possible for his surplus stock.

Developments in recent years show that better results are obtained by holding public sales than by disposing of the marketable commodities by private business arrangement between all parties to the transaction.

Consequently the services of a thorough auctioneer are always in great demand. He does not have to go out and hustle for business. It comes to him naturally when his reputation for ability, integrity and accuracy is known to the general public.

The state of Kansas has produced some master mechanics in the business of calling sales, and Doniphan County was a fertile field in this respect. It has given to the world some of the ablest auctioneers, both past and present, who have ever cried their wares from a sales block.

Among the brilliant stars of the profession in Doniphan County, it is more that fitting to include the name of Charles J. Foster of Severance. Mr. Foster is not only an artist at the business, but he is gifted with all the requisites which combine to place him in the front rank of his calling.

Cold-blooded business methods have no place in the career of a successful auctioneer, and that is the chief reason why Mr. Foster has popular estimation centralized on himself. He is tactful, witty and judicious, with a true appreciation of his responsibilities. His professional acumen is remarkable and his ability is unexcelled.

Charles J. Foster is a native son of Doniphan County, and he is proud of it. Naturally he believes it is the best place on earth, and nobody blames him for his sentiment. Local pride is a good thing for any citizen, but it takes second place when the pride of birthplace is under discussion. Mr. Foster is unequivocally well endowed with both.

Born on his father's farm a half mile south of Severance, on October 18, 1873, Charles J. Foster had an opportunity in his youthful days to learn all about land and live stock. He lived the life of the usual farmer's son, attending the common schools and rustling around home while he was resting from his school duties.

Early in life, Mr. Foster showed an aptitude for values on the public market which was recognized by Jack W. Pry, the oldest auctioneer in the state of Kansas. Mr. Pry, realizing the lad's natural instinct and latent abilities, took him in hand and taught him the sales business to the most minute detail. Young Foster had been taken all over the state and to other states, and his preceptor gave him all the advantages of his own personal knowledge and the practical experience which is gained by taking part in sales.

Mr. Foster was yet little more than a lad when he had so won the confidence and admiration of Jack Pry that he had no hesitation in putting him into the business right. So when the sale for the Oldham estate, north of Effingham, Atchison County, was announced, Charles J. Foster was on the block for the first time. It was his maiden sale, and he surely made good, as he has done ever since.

With his reputation firmly established Mr. Foster had little difficulty in securing plenty of business, and during the twenty-five years that he has called sales he has had very great success. At present he is conceded to be the most extensive caller of real estate sales in the state.

Fifteen years ago Mr. Foster branched out in the real estate, loan and investment business in his home town of Severance, and the venture has proved both profitable and congenial. His knowledge of land values and his perspicuity in all matters of business has brought him clients from every walk in life.

Charles Foster received more actual cash commissions from the sale of real estate during 1914 than all other Doniphan County real estate agents put together. His training on the farm and subsequent knowledge of the fine points of his business make him the recipient of the confidence of all whom he meets, and the most intricate deal does not puzzle him in the least. He has made such an exhaustive study of his work and has had so much experience, that large business affairs are simply a matter of routine with the subject of this sketch.

WELL-KNOWN STOCK BUYER AND GRAIN MERCHANT

Doniphan County is known throughout the West especially for two products, namely, fruit (including berries) and stock. A well-known promoter of this last named industry is Rufus G. Harper of Leona, Kansas, who buys and sells stock with great shrewdness and success. He is considered among stockmen one of the best in the business, and well may he be, as he has followed that line of business for the past twenty-three years in Leona. They say no one has ever been smart enough to get the best of Rufus G. in a trade, and as to him getting the best of it, well—it isn't his fault if you're not educated as well as he. He can tell the weight of the hog by the way it wags its tail.

Five years ago Mr. Harper entered into the grain business, of which he is evidently making a success, as he is always buying and selling, and does not go out of the county for his trade. He is always eager to buy either grain or stock, and he turns the goods rapidly, owing to his wide acquaintance and genial personality.

Mr. Harper was born in Doniphan County on a farm one and one-half miles north of Leona, January 3, 1868. He received a common school education here, and further than that he is a self-made man, having learned by experience, the hardest teacher of all. He was married to Miss Theodosia Edwards, also of Doniphan County, June 30, 1903. Their home is in Leona and they have no children.

Bendena Protective Association

The Bendena Protective Association is one of the liveliest of its kind in Doniphan County. It has been exceedingly fortunate in having behind it Joseph Howard, the foremost anti-horse-thief exponent in eastern Kansas. Mr. Howard, perhaps, has done more to discourage live stock stealing than any other one man in the county. He has been tireless in his efforts to put a stop to such practices, and has captured many of the thieves himself. The Bendena Association was formed April 10, 1910, when there was an epidemic of horse and cattle thefts. J. P. Severin is president; J. W. Howard, vice-president; A. O. Johnson, secretary, and P. A. Kirwan, treasurer. The following are members: John Gallagher, William Webb, Jr., John Devereaux, P. A. Kirwan, James Gray, Mike Joyce, John Cooper, John O'Shea, George Cooper, Lou Collins, John Joyce, Leslie Franklin, George Ricklefs, Grover Franklin, John Godfrey, Allen Miller, Elbert Ladwig, George Jones, James Morley, Jack Joyce, Patrick Mahan, Julius Kuhnert, Joseph Klaus, James Black, William Albers, Edward Baker, George Schwartz, H. L. Vanverth, C. C. Tilburg, James Aylward, John Albers, Dr. Clutz, Charles Myers, G. A. Ricklefs, Theodore Selub, D. C. Hardy, Edward Joyce and Orley Monroe.

A Well Known Farmer of Wolf River Township and Native of Kentucky, Whose Parents Were Among the Early Emigrants From Switzerland to America—His Wife a Native of Kentucky—Contented on Their Doniphan County Farm.

To own a farm of one hundred and sixty acres of rich Doniphan County land is a privilege vouchsafed only to a limited number of families. Likewise to produce from the soil of such a farm such bountiful crops of life-sustaining cereals, vegetables, fruits and food animals, is also a privilege such as may be enjoyed by those who are fortunate enough to be possessed of Doniphan County lands. Wherefore the fortunate Doniphan County farmer is blessed as few people in this or any other nation are blessed.

Such is the observation of C. L. Marcell, owner of a fine farm of one hundred and sixty acres in Wolf River Township of our county, who has resided there for fifty-seven years and has reared a large family of children. Mr. Marcell is a native of Kentucky and he lived in that state long enough to know something about conditions and opportunities there. Moreover his parents were Swiss, came to America to find homes in the land of the free, and they were wise and far-seeing enough to choose Doniphan County as the best place on earth in which to live, rear children, till the soil and prosper.

Residence of C. L. Marcell in Wolf River Township.

C. L. Marcell comes of a hardly people noted for their longevity. His father, Charles M., was born in Switzerland, December 15, 1813, and his mother, Elizabeth Utley Marcell, was also born in Switzerland, the date being August 18, 1812. They were married December 13, 1827, and came to America in search of homes and for some years resided in Jassemine County, in the heart of the Blue Grass country of Kentucky. There the subject of this sketch was born on January 13, 1847. The family remained in Kentucky until April 8, 1857, when they came to Doniphan County and settled on a claim in Wolf River Township. They had reached the land of plenty, though at the time of their coming the whole country was embroiled in the troubles that later culminated in the Civil War. Charles M. Marcell, father of C. L., died March 3, 1885, in his seventy-second year, and Elizabeth Utley Marcell, the mother, died January 9, 1893, in her eighty-second year.

As a boy C. L. Marcell received a little education in the schools of his native county in Kentucky, and coming to Kansas at the age of ten years, he obtained a little more education here. He was a hard working farmer boy and contributed much to the work of cultivating the home farm. He took to farming naturally and he loved the work, as also he loved the free, independent and happy life on the farm.

On February 25, 1866, the subject of this sketch married Mattie J. Burchfield, who was born February 18, 1850, in Franklin County, Kentucky. Her father was James Burchfield and her mother was Elizabeth Ross Burchfield, residents for many years of Kentucky. She was educated in Franklin County, Kentucky. This union was blessed with twelve sons and daughters, whose names and date of birth are as follows:

Minnie, born November 22, 1866. Married to Lewis Tilden Skinner, January 31, 1889. Born to them one daughter, Velna May, December 24, 1890. On August 14, 1915, she was married to Elmer C. Rittenhouse, who was born December 16, 1889.

Ida May, born January 23, 1869. Married to J. J. Mulkey, October 7, 1890, at Hiawatha, Kansas, the Rev. James McGuire officiating. To them have been born four sons and daughters as follows: Gladys, August 13, 1891; Grace, March 25, 1893; Jewel J., September 27, 1904; Philip, August 26, 1912. Mr. Mulkey was born at Allendale, Mercer county, Missouri, February 5, 1859. He has been an engineer on the Rock Island for twenty-eight years.

Etta Isador, born June 19, 1871. Married to William Archer Smith, January 26, 1898, by the Rev. L. S. Tarvin, near Hiawatha. This union has been blessed with five children: William Lewis, born in Highland, November 19, 1898; Clara Marie, born at Highland, August 22, 1900; Mattie Josephine, born near Highland, January 17, 1904; Etta Irene, at Chanute, January 3, 1908; Mary Louise, Joplin, Mo., June 9, 1914. All seven children are living excepting Mattie Josephine, who died March 17, 1914. Mr. Smith was born May 12, 1875, near Severance, and they now reside in Joplin, Missouri.

Ollie, born November 5, 1873, and died April 21, 1874.

James Everett, born May 6, 1875; married June 17, 1896, to Mary Helen Dillon. To this union were born Zelinda Florence, April 1, 1898; Helen Eloise, born September 28, 1899; James Everett, Jr., September 5, 1901.

Lewis Lee, born July 7th, 1878, was married to Virginia Overlander, August 16, 1889. They have one daughter, Genevieve Elizabeth, born Aug. 22, 1900. Lee engaged in the oil business, at Chanute, Kansas, and has amassed a fortune. Was educated at Highland and Campbell University at Holton, where he was considered one of the brilliant students. He was popular with his classmates and manifested a keen interest in his work.

Maude Pearl, born April 24, 1881, and died March 3, 1885.

Elsie Anna, born October 4, 1884. Married to J. Lyndon Thornton, who was born at Green, January 14, 1886, on April 17, 1907, the officiating clergyman being Rev. Hugh Lomax, Pastor of the Christian Church in Highland. This home has been blessed with two daughters, Marseyne Elizabeth, born January 25, 1908, at Fairbury, Nebraska, and Phyllis Fae, October 26, 1909.

Timothy Justin, born February 25, 1887. Married April 15, 1913, to Jessie Louise Myers. They have one daughter, Geraldine Elizabeth, born January 9, 1914.

Elonso Prentis, born April 6, 1888. Married January 17, 1911, to Nellie M. Vigus. They have one daughter, Alberta Louise, born October 15, 1912, and one son, Donald, born June 5, 1914.

Mattie B., born October 9, 1890, who is one of the prominent school teachers of Doniphan County. She is teaching her second term in the Severance schools and is giving universal satisfaction.

Charles Luther, born January 12, 1893. Married December 18, 1912, to Mona Erle Vigus. To this union have been born one daughter, Darline, May 28, 1913, and one son, Kenneth Luther, October 4, 1915.

These sons and daughters, born on the Doniphan County farm, four miles southeast of Highland, were reared by their parents there, and have grown up to be intelligent and industrious men and women.

The farm which is owned by this Kentuckian is one of the best quarter sections in the country southeast of Highland. By patient labor and persistent effort it has been brought to a fine state of improvement. His long experience and his knowledge of agriculture, combined with his industry, has enabled Mr. Marcell to grow some truly remarkable crops of grain and fruits on the farm, and these have brought him handsome returns. He has the reputation of being one of the best farmers in his section of the county, besides being a tireless worker. His life indeed has been a busy one, and he received loyal assistance from his children while they were growing to man and womanhood on the farm. Mr. Marcell stands well with the people of the community and is accounted a good citizen and one who is to be depended upon to do his full share for the well being of the community. He has spent fifty-nine of his nearly sixty-nine years in Doniphan County and he has no desire to leave it. He will spend his remaining years in Kansas.

B. F. Harpster

Among the pioneer bankers of Doniphan County was B. F. Harpster, now a resident of St. Joseph, Missouri. He was born in 1845, November 9th, in Columbus, Ohio, and was married to Miss Emily J. Brown, of that town, June 11, 1874. Came to Doniphan County in 1872 and established the Bank of Severance in 1875, selling same to John Morley in 1896. He moved to the City of St. Joseph in 1908. He has one son, C. W. Harpster, and they are engaged in the real estate business and reside at 124 S. 24 Street

Christian Church, Leona. Russell Lewis and his Shetland pony.

Leona Church

Standing in the west part of Leona, fronting to the east is the Christian Church which was erected in 1890. The Church was organized February 10th, by Rev. Nelson A. Stull, who died at Highland, December 10, 1915. For several years the Church was presided over by the late N. A. Stull, and since that time they have held occasional services.

Jack Pry

Was born in Virginia July 5, 1835, and died at his home in Severance, Kansas, April 9th, 1910. Mr. Pry came to Doniphan County in the early 50's and saw Doniphan County develop from its wild, untamed state to that of one of the best farm counties in the state of Kansas. He was an auctioneer of ability and cried one-half of the sales in Doniphan County for more than forty years. He was endowed with the ability to judge the value of stock which made him a valuable auctioneer.

Charles B. Corbet

Charles B. Corbet is one of the prominent school teachers in Doniphan County. Was born January 20, 1891, on farm, six miles north of Severance in Wolf River Township. Graduated from red school house and in 1912 from Highland University. Has life certificate to teach in Kansas. Was married to Miss Nebling, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Nebling, of Iowa Township.

Howard Taylor

Who is now fourteen years of age and who resides in Iowa Township near White Cloud, received a premium last year of $25 from the State Agricultural College, for raising 92 bushels of corn on one acre of land. He produced the corn at a cost of 5 cents per bushel.

David M. Goacher

Born, October 29, 1850. Came to Doniphan County in 1859. Was married to Miss Sarah Ann Speak. They have five daughters and one son, Viola, now Mrs. J. W. Thomas; Rebecca, now Mrs. H. L. Stocking; Rosa A., now Mrs. Burt Patterson; Mary Letha, now Mrs. Joe Neider; Clara, now Mrs. C. E. King, and the son, John David. The subject of this sketch resides in Iowa Township and owns a forty acre farm.

Miss Margaret Ruddy

Popular Teacher, Native of Doniphan County—Was Student at Emporia in the State Normal School.

One of Doniphan County's most efficient and best loved school teachers is Miss Margaret Ruddy, who lives six and one-half miles northwest of Troy in the beautiful Ruddy farm home. Reared in this delightful rural section of Doniphan County, Miss Ruddy has grown to womanhood surrounded with the best environments for the full development of her artistic nature. During the last year she instructed the pupils in the Moray district school, but her labors ended there in May of 1915, and in September she assumed the responsibilities of teacher in the Willow Springs district northwest of Sparks in Iowa township.

Miss Ruddy never has to hunt for a school. They come to her unsolicited, which is a compliment to her ability and aggressiveness in following her chosen line of work. She is certain to make for herself a high place in the esteem of the scholars, the school board and the citizens who come in contact with her and the patrons of the district.

This promising young woman is a native of Doniphan County. She is the daughter of Mrs. Anna Ruddy, and was born and reared on the farm where she now resides. She has contributed largely to making it the delightful country place that is a center of social activities in the neighborhood. Here on winter evenings often are gathered the young people and in the summer the pleasant little outings are long remembered by all who are privileged to participate. It is near the Number 4 school, where she received her early education, which has been carried forward in the higher institutions of the state. Her father was the late Michael Ruddy, a former prominent resident and farmer of this county. After completing her studies at Number 4 school the subject of this sketch, who had made up her mind to become a teacher, entered the state normal school at Emporia. She has been working at her chosen profession for about eight years.

Combining a love of her vocation with a thorough and efficient training, Miss Ruddy has all the qualities to make her the unqualified success that she has proven to be. She has the womanly virtues which secure for her the respect and admiration of the patrons whom she served. The school boards are grateful to her for coming to them with her application, and they consider themselves fortunate indeed, when they obtain her services for the winter. She has the faculty of gaining the confidence of her pupils and thus one-half of her battles are won from the start. She is able to retain this hold upon them, which grows with increasing force as the school term runs on into the winter and finishes in the spring. The older pupils respect her, while the younger ones find comfort and solace for their petty troubles. To all of them she is a faithful instructor and guide in every respect. She is patient when patience is a virtue and stern when those measures are necessary. She has been in great demand among the school directors in the different districts in Doniphan County, and thus far has experienced little difficulty in securing a school.

The subject of this sketch has been happy in the relationship of her family ties. With one sister and five brothers, her associations have always been of the most pleasant kind, the family group being one of the most delightful in Doniphan County. Reared in the outdoors, with the blessing of good health and a cheerful disposition, she garnered the best into her life Her sister is Miss Mary Elizabeth, and her five brothers are William, Frank J., James G., Hugh L., and Michael, Jr., all of whom live at home with their mother. Mrs. Ruddy, her mother, is a woman of pleasing personality, and has endeared herself to her family as well as to all who know her. Through the long years of her residence in Kansas she has been solicitous of the welfare of her children, bringing them up with that care which only a true mother can give.

GEORGE McCAULEY

Progressive Farmer Is Large Land Owner in Doniphan and Brown Counties.

Doniphan County is noted for its progressive farmers, but there are none in the community better equipped to handle large farm properties than George McCauley, of Bellevue, north of Leona. He has twelve hundred acres of the best land in Brown and Doniphan counties, all of which he has in a fine state of cultivation. Mr. McCauley is one of the early residents of this section, having been for thirty-five years at his present place. He is widely known not only in Doniphan but in Brown County, as well, and has the esteem and trust of all those who claim his acquaintance.

Mr. McCauley is a native Ohioan. He was born Jan. 7, 1857. His early education was obtained in the public schools of his state and upon completion of his studies he went with his people on their farm. The opportunities there, however, were not what he sought and early in the year of 1880 he came to Doniphan County and purchased the farm on which he now lives. Mr. and Mrs. McCauley were married June 1, 1880, and have two daughters living: Katie E., born September 14, 1893, now Mrs. John G. Ukena; Mary E., born August 22, 1896. Ellen May, the first daughter, died February 1, 1886, when only three years of age. Mrs. McCauley was born April 14, 1858, in Columbia County, Pennsylvania, her parents being one of the oldest families in the state and extensive property owners.

In addition to general farming, which he does on a large scale, Mr. McCauley is intensely interested in cattle raising. He has some of the best in this section of the country and has made an unqualified success of his work. He has erected a magnificent home on the farm and it is the meeting place of the neighbors far and wide. Mrs. McCauley is a lady of the deepest sympathy and understanding and the two are immensely popular among the acquaintances and associates. Mr. McCauley is always to be found assisting in any movement that is for the betterment of the community in which he lives. His success is largely attributable to hard work and serious attention to the business at hand. He is one of Doniphan County's best citizens.

DENNIS J. WARD

Cashier of the Bank of Severance, Was Born in That Town—Likes All the Folks So Well That He Went to School There, Married a Girl Born There, Engaged in Business There and Owns Property in Severance—Likes to Raise Pedigreed Chickens.

Dennis J. Ward, cashier of the Bank of Severance, is truly a son of Doniphan County, and his place of nativity is Severance.

There are few instances where so much local pride may be observed in any individual as can be found sticking out all over Dennis J.

Mr. Ward was not only born in Severance and educated there, but he went into business in the town and married a young lady who was born and reared in Severance.

It was on January 5, 1875, that Dennis J. Ward first saw the light of the universe in his parents' home in Severance. Like other lads of his age he attended the public school and acquired all education that could be imparted to his intelligent mind from the teachers.

On leaving school he secured a position with the Bank of Severance, and is now cashier of that institution. He developed a keen inclination for financial matters from his first entry into the bank, which has become more pronounced with advancing years.

On November 12, 1907, Mr. Ward was married to Miss Agnes Corcoran, who was then one of the prominent educators in Doniphan County schools. Both Dennis and his bride have lived in Severance all their lives.

Although a young man, Mr. Ward has been frugal and he now owns his own home and likewise two other houses which he rents. He is a lover of fine poultry and during spare moments devotes a little time to raising White Rock chickens.

East Norway

East Norway is located on Section 28, Town 3, Range 20, in Wolf River Township, a station on the St. Joseph & G. I. Railroad, laid off by a town company in the spring of 1869. Town consisted of eighteen acres. There has always been a store there, and in the last few years a grain elevator has been built and men residing there own it and a co-operative store with Clyde Conrad as manager. The following is a list of the stockholders:

Thomas J. Dawe, O. D. Nelson, O. L. Steanson, Andy Hoverson, Clarence Turkelson, Roy Jenkins, Oscar Nelson.

I. O. of G. T.

Severence Lodge No. 218 was duly instituted Dec. 11, 1871, by Deputy G. W. C. T. J. M. Toner. The following officers were elected and installed to serve the term ending Feb. 1, 1872: W. W. Bell, W. C. T.; Mrs. A. Campbell, W. V. T.; J. A. Campbell, W. S.; J. C. McGee, W. F. S.; Nannie Nesbit, W. T.; S. F. Nesbit, W. C.; S. F. Wright, W. M.; J. Segyne, W. O. G.; Josephene Segyne, W. I. G.; Julia Clonch, W. D. M.

SEVERANCE ODD FELLOWS HALL

Independent Order of Odd Fellows Hall, in Severance.

The accompanying cut shows the exterior of the lodge rooms of the Severance Odd Fellows Fraternity.

The hall is a spacious one and is large enough to accommodate a large number of members very comfortably. The furnishings of the lodge room are expensive and there is an abundant supply of regalia for all occasions.

Judging by the picture, this headquarters for Odd Fellowship makes a fine meeting place and would do credit to a town of 10,000 population.

The Odd Fellows Lodge of Severance is an exceptionally strong body. The members are composed of the best element among the population of the vicinity and they all take a keen interest in the welfare of the Lodge.

The Town of Leona

Founded in 1873 by David Kercher, Who Originated the Plan for a Town on the Present Site—First Residence Built of Lumber Hauled by Team From Norton's Saw Mill in White Cloud—First Newspaper Started in 1883 by Delno E. Kercher, Now a Leading Physician in Philadelphia.

The town of Leona, now one of the thriving places in Wolf River Township, was conceived in the brain of David Kercher, one of the early settlers in Doniphan County.

The plan for a town at the present site of Leona was original with Mr. Kercher, and he was the town's first inhabitant. The actual surveying and platting of the town was done by a Mr. Ellis, who at that time, in 1873, had been living at Robinson.

The complete survey of the townsite had been finished in June and the first residence was erected by Mr. Kercher. The lumber for this building had been hauled by team in the early spring from Norton's sawmill in White Cloud by Mr. Kercher.

Other buildings were put up, and it was not very long until Leona took on a real life-like aspect. Gregg Brothers erected an elevator and J. W. Schock started a wagon shop. Alexander Nigus built a hotel and Robert C. Mailer opened a general store.

Residence of A. O. Delaney

The first drug store of any dimensions was conducted by Doctor Lewis, who was then a practicing physician in Leona, and the first clerk in this store was W. I. Stuart, then a very young man, but with the same energy and integrity that has characterized him ever since.

The youthful Stuart later studied law and has been for the past twenty years judge of the Thirty-Second Judicial District of Kansas, comprising Doniphan, Brown and Nemaha counties.

The first attempt at publishing a newspaper was made by Delno E. Kercher, son of the founder of the town and now one of the leading practicing physicians of Philadelphia. It was a youthful effort, and was a four-page affair, four by six inches in size, and was known as the Leona News. The first issue of the News appeared in 1883, and the paper continued to be published at irregular intervals until about twenty issues had been printed, when it suspended permanently.

Later, in after years, the town of Leona was put on the map of the country in fine shape through the medium of another newspaper that had been started by Harry Mailer. When Mr. Mailer got married he wrote an account of the event in such original style that it was copied all over the United States. This paper did not last very long, as Mr. Mailer saw a more lucrative field in the general mercantile business. So he engaged in that line and discontinued the paper.

Leona boasts of a population of over 300 people at the present time. There is every reason why the town should continue to expand and prosper, as the country surrounding it is splendid for farming and is thickly settled with thrifty and industrious people. Leona was at one time an exceptionally heavy grain-shipping point, but several destructive fires, which destroyed the elevators, gave the town a setback and seriously interfered with the grain shipping industry.

The business men of Leona have great hopes for the future of the town. Their trade compares favorably with that of towns considerably larger, and the fact that farming land in the vicinity sells from $200 an acre up, seems to justify their faith in continued prosperity of Leona.

Among the leading business residents of Leona may be mentioned Ray Randolph, station agent for the St. Joseph & Grand Island Railroad; Thomas McCormick, owner of the grain elevator; Rufus G. Harper, a leading stockman; Ed Kinsley, the town blacksmith; Daniel Moyer, hardware merchant; Henry W. Larson, who conducts the best restaurant to be found in any town in Kansas that is even twice the size of Leona; F. A. Bodwell, postmaster; Murray Childs, barber; George L. Ebeling, cashier of the bank; John Lyons, assistant bookkeeper in the bank; Andy O. Delaney, president of the bank, and one of the prime movers of the town and a public spirited citizen who always boosts; Penn M. Leonhard, druggist; Harry Mailer, general merchandise store; Ransom Mansfield, harness shop; Doctor Carwford and Mrs. Childs, telephone operator.

Leona suffered an immense property loss through a fire which destroyed a number of business houses in the south side of the town, November, 1914. This did not discourage the citizens, however, and many of those who suffered the severest losses at once started preparations to rebuild.

Farmers Bank of Leona. George Ebeling standing in the door.

While there is a fairly commodious school building in Leona the people of the town are considering the advisability of erecting a new building in the immediate future.

The Bank of Leona is a substantial institution, and Mr. Delaney, the president, is one of the most popular men in that section of the state. He has the distinction of having only three votes recorded against him in the Leona precinct, when he was up for election as county commissioner last November.

ANDREW O. DELANEY

Former County Commissioner and President of the Leona Bank Is One of the Most Wide Awake Business Men of Doniphan County—First Twenty-four Years of His Life Were Spent on a Farm Near the Old Town of Columbus—Has Been Justice of the Peace and School Director.

There are few men in Doniphan County better or more favorably known than Andrew O. Delaney. His activities have been varied and his interests diverse.

Mr. Delaney needs no introduction to the people of Doniphan in this brief sketch. He is one of them, from start to finish. He was born among them and has always said that if he lives long enough he intends to die among them.

His acquaintance throughout the county is limited to the boundary lines. He knows about everybody, and it is no exaggeration to state that everybody knows him. Mr. Delaney is endowed with that kind of affable nature which attracts friends and magnetizes most people.

Andrew O. Delaney was born near the old town of Columbus, fourteen miles northeast of Troy, on December 12, 1869. Needless to say, he was born on a farm because he has not gotten over the hereditary inclination toward farming since.

After going through the common schools, Mr. Delaney was graduated from the Christian Brothers College in St. Joseph, Missouri. It must not be forgotten that Mr. Delaney was given an opportunity to forget the farm during school years. There was ample opportunity between school sessions and semesters to renew old acquaintances with the livestock and the farm implements, but it can be truthfully said that Andy was always on the job.

In 1895 Mr. Delaney entered the banking business at Leona, and is at present the executive head of the bank there. He was married to Miss Elizabeth Fenton, also a native of Doniphan County, on November 19, 1894, when he was less than twenty-five years old.

Four children have been born to the union of Mr. Delaney and Miss Fenton, two boys and two girls. Their names are Andrew, Jr., and Richard O., and Elizabeth and Bernice.

In addition to his banking and other interests Mr. Delaney owns a full half section of land in Union Township. Mr. Delaney, although not a politician, has held several public offices. He has been elected a justice of the peace, a school director, and served four years as county commissioner of Doniphan.

In the wind-up it might not be out of place to state that Mr. Delaney was one of the county commissioners who caused the notorious railroad bonds, to be fixed so that the entire amount will be paid off in a few years.

The esteem in which Andy Delaney is held in Doniphan County is indicated clearly by the fact that when he made the race for county commissioner in 1910, there were but three dissenting votes registered against him, the office being secured by almost unanimous approval.

When this former county official turned his attention to the banking business it transpired that his wide acquaintance in the country and splendid reputation were of inestimable worth. He not only transacts the financial affairs of hundreds of Doniphan County residents, but has encroached on Brown County, where he has a wide circle of friends.

A. O.'s friends are trying to induce him to toss his hat into the ring and say that he will be a candidate for the state senate from the Brown-Doniphan district. Should he decide to announce as a candidate for that responsible position, there is no question but that he will be a formidable candidate. He is a versatile man and could make a success of any line of business. Should this successful young business man be nominated and elected, he will serve his constituency in a manner that will reflect credit upon the district.

Earl Akers

Was born in Vermillion County, Illinois, February 15, 1876. Educated is the public schools. Owned Stafford County Republican for fifteen years. Is president of the Citizens State Bank, of Argonia, is a stockholder in the Peoples State Bank at Haviland and in the Zenita State Bank. Was married to Ada Ella Bump, who was born in Eldorado, Kansas, February 9, 1879. She was educated in the public schools of her town. The officiating clergyman was the father of the subject of this sketch, Dr. Geo. W. Akers, of Stafford, Kansas. They have one son, Romaine George. Earl is state treasurer, a competent official, a pleasant man to meet and has discharged the duties required of him faithful and promptly, and in a manner which reflects credit upon the great state of Kansas.

Earl Akers.

Benjamin F. Heaston

Benjamin F. Heaston died Aug. 9, 1909, and in his death the community suffered one of its greatest losses. He was the postmaster at Leona, and reared a large family. Mr. Heaston was a courteous, kind old gentleman, who had the respect and well wishes of all who knew him. His funeral was largely attended.

Good roads will facilitate transportation, add untold wealth to producers and save millions to consumers.

School House Completed

November 5, 1915, was a gala day in Leona and well it might be as they opened a $10,000 brick building for the youth of their town and community. Every face beamed with pride as they viewed this modern structure where their children will be comfortably housed—yea, their children's children. For they have been wrought so well in providing proper lighting, heating and sanitation that the building should serve not only this but another generation. The dedication began by the assembling of the children in front of the building, where a flag was in readiness to be unfurled to the breeze. Mr. Rickenbaugh stood near the flag and told to the eager children and to the patrons the meaning of the American flag. Following this number, the band again played and the children followed by the patrons and friends marched indoors where the room was decorated with potted plants and flags. The Rev. Bodwell gave the invocation, said "As the American flag stands for liberty and justice and the Christian flag stands for peace, the blending of these principles will give America her rightful place among the nations of the earth.

thanking the God of our fathers for civil and religious liberty, such as America more than any other nation has enjoyed. The assembly then stood and sang our national anthem "America." The band played several selections and the pupils then sang in true spirit "Kansas My Home." Miss Ida Janicke gave a reading. The Honorable S. M. Brewster, Attorney General, was introduced by F. W. Kreitzer, the principal. Mr. Brewster gave one of his inimitable addresses in which he emphasized the importance of education and of training the boys and girls for citizenship. He spoke with much earnestness on the constitution and the principles that we as patriotic citizens must uphold. He spoke of Liberty as the corner stone and of Justice as the cap-stone of our government. Miss Whitney, the County Superintendent, spoke briefly of the fitting program that nad been given. She spoke of the flag that should float over every school house, or be therein displayed. She showed the American flag and the Christian banner and

Edward Kinsley

Nowhere in Doniphan County is there to be found a mort comeptent blacksmith than Edward Kinsley, who is known as the village blacksmith in Leona. His shop is kept in order and the latest devices are in evidence. Those visiting the shop say that the proprietor is a methodical man.

Edward Kinsley was born on the farm one and a half miles east of Leona, December 21, 1873, and has resided in that vicinity ever since. He was educated in the Leona school and is a fine man.

On February 13, 1901, he was married to Miss Lilly Bailey, who was born near Phillipsburg, April 18, 1879, and came to Doniphan County with her parents when only eighteen months old.

This union has been blessed with two daughters and one son. Millie Francis, born June 8, 1903, and died in infancy; August Burdette, born August 16, 1905, and Mary Isabelle, born October 3, 1911. Mr. and Mrs. Kinsley are a devoted couple and take great pride in their children.

Ed is a natural born mechanic and endowed with the ability to make good at his profession.

James H. Huss

James H. Huss, one of the substantial farmers in the east part of Wolf River Township, was born July 11, 1858, the same day that Wm. H. Chappell, of near Troy, was born. These gentlemen quite frequently get into an argument as to which is the older.

Mrs. Susan Ann Jones Huss, his mother, was born July 24, 1824, in Hodgenville, Kentucky, and died at the age of 90 years, 11 months, 3 days, on June 27, 1915. She was married to Wyne P. Huss, June 7, 1842. To this union three sons and three daughters were born. Mrs. J. D. Jones, of Kingman, Kansas; Wm. Huss, of Hiatville, Kansas; Mrs. W. H. Shark. The deceased ones were Fielding Huss, who served in Company B, 13th Kansas Volunteer Infanty, and Mrs. Henrietta Shaw. Mrs. Huss came to Doniphan County with her husband August 28, 1856. The funeral was conducted by Rev. A. J. Pertle, Pastor of the First Christian Church, of Severance.

Foster's House Burned

Wm. Foster's house burned Thursday, February 13, 1879, at 6 o'clock P. M. It was located a few miles south of Severance. Pierce Pry, discovered the fire and J. P. Bitner, Fred Harpster, George Robb and the Welsh boys made an unsuccessful attempt to extinguish the fire.

Hotel Burned

The City Hotel, of Severance, burned at 3 a. m., April 30, 1902, Sol Weil, of Severance, was sleeping in the house that night and remembers the circumstances well. The proprietor of the hotel was Mrs. Lillie Hamilton, a sister of Mrs. George T. Baird, of Highland, and a daughter of the late Judge J. D. Smith. Upon the ashes of this building was built the electric light plant.

First Marriage

Congregational Church of Leona

(By Levi Rickenbach.)

A city built on a hill cannot be hid; neither can a city where its entire population consists of indefatigable workers who, at all times, boost with unceasing efforts for its success.

Leona is only a small town, but it has a better church equipment than most towns of twice its size. This is due to the wide-awake and intelligent citizenship of the town, and especially those who are affiliated with the Congregational Church.

At various times there have been different churches organized in Leona, but, on account of lack of interest or finances, they have failed to flourish and, after a few years of rather doubtful existence, became altogether extinct, with the exception of the Congregational and Christian Churches. At this time everyone appears to be well satisfied with the churches they have; and, while the Congregationalists are not egotistically conservative in their ecclesiastical belief, they are nevertheless happy to see members of other denominations attending their Sunday school and church services.

In April, 1882, arrangements were made with Rev. Daniel Kloss, the pastor of the Congregational Church in Highland, to preach each alternate Sabbath in the school house at Leona. These irregular services were continued until 1885. In January of that year a stirring revival meeting was held in Leona by Rev. John N. Reynolds, and a large number of persons professed their faith and expressed a desire to unite with some church.

Reverend Kloss and other Christians decided the time had arrived for a church organization. Accordingly a meeting was called and held in the school house, May 17, 1885, to consider the advisability of organizing a Congregational Church. All the interested parties in the neighborhood attended. The meeting was called to order and a temporary chairman elected, Rev. D. Kloss filling the chair. Levi Rickenbach was chosen temporary secretary.

After some deliberation, it was unanimously agreed to organize. A constitution and articles of faith were adopted, and it was agreed to call a council to meet May 26, 1885, to finish up this preliminary work of organizing a Congregational Church.

At this meeting, on May 17, 1885, the following officers were elected: Deacons, Levi Rickenbach and George Ebeling; trustees, James Jenson and Daniel Moyer; treasurer, Mrs. H. M. Schock, and clerk, Levi Rickenbach. A sick committee was appointed, consisting of Irvin Stapleton, Mrs. Levi Rickenbach and Mrs. A. E. Wallace.

Pursuant to previous plans, the council met in the school house May 26, 1885. The greatest earnestness was displayed by all the officiating members and laymen who attended. Rev. J. B. Richardson was elected moderator, and J. O. Steinbach, clerk. After the business of the meeting was completed, a hymn was sung and a prayer was offered by the moderator.

The following persons constituted the members of the council: From Oneida, Rev. L. A. Smith and J. O. Steinbach; from Sabetha, Rev. A. C. Hogbin; Hiawatha, Rev. J. B. Richardson and Dr. W. W. Nigh; Highland, Rev. D. Kloss and E. E. Simmons. The council advised the full organization of the church and the following persons were received as members. On profession of faith: Levi Rickenbach, Mrs. Caroline Rickenbach, Daniel Moyer, Mrs. Eliza Moyer, Miss Mary E. Hull, Miss S. Jennie Hull, Norman Hickman, Mrs. Hannah M. Schock, Mrs. Mariah Thompson, George H. Ebeling, Mrs. Ida Ebeling, Henry H. Hickman, James Jenson, Irvin Stapleton. By letter: Mrs. H. H. Hickman, Mrs. Annie Jenson and Mrs. A. E. Wallace.

The Reverend Kloss was then extended a call to preach at the meager salary of $100, which he accepted. It might be irrelevant to digress at this juncture, but it occurs to us that a preacher who could live on an annual income of $100 might earn a platform salary now, if he could explain away the high cost of living that confronts the public today.

The congregation continued to worship in the school house, but from the time the church was organized, there was a vague dissatisfaction with this as a place for regular meetings. Accordingly the members began to voice their sentiments in regard to a church building, and on February 25, 1886, it was decided to erect a meeting house during the following summer. A committee to solicit funds was appointed, consisting of J. W. Schock, James Jenson, Levi Rickenbach, Mrs. H. M. Schock, Miss A. Angstad and M. R. Brown. The building committee was composed of the following members: J. W. Schock, John Moeck, Jr., David Kercher, Amos Angstad and Alex Nigus.

The committees evidently did immediate and effective work, as the church was dedicated October 10, 1886. A sermon was preached on Saturday evening, October 9, by Rev. A. Blanchard, superintendent of home missions in Kansas, from Revelations 3-20: "Behold, I Stand at the Door and Knock."

The dedicatory sermon was also preached by Reverend Blanchard, from Ephesians, 2-21, after which an effort was made to cancel the indebtedness against the building. The effort was successful, and the church was dedicated to the worship of God free of debt. This was a day of joy and thanksgiving to the church. The cost of this church was $2,850.

The pastorate of the Reverend Kloss began in April, 1882, with preaching at the school house, and continued until July, 1887. He was a faithful servant, and a good friend to the people whom he served. During the time above mentioned, he preached 221 sermons, added fifty-one members to the church, forty-four by profession of faith, of which number eighteen were baptized, and seven were admitted by letter. Two infants were baptized by Reverend Kloss, one being James Lloyd Jenson, on July 4, 1886, and George Leonard Ebeling, August 7, 1887.

During his pastorate only one member died, Mrs. Mariah Thompson, on August 4, 1885, aged sixty-four years, seven months and twenty-nine days.

After Reverend Kloss left, a number of ministers were employed, among whom were the following: Reverend Winslow, Rev. David Clemer, Rev. David Todd, Reverand Ford, Rev. W. B. Simmons, Rev. Toothaker, Reverend Evert, Rev. A. S. Bacon, Rev. B. A. Sutton. The present pastor is Rev. F. A. Bodwell, who is especially well fitted for the position.

During these years, quite a number of the older members died, and many others have moved away. While there have been a goodly number of accessions to the roll, the membership of late years has slightly decreased.

The only records we have of provisions ever being shipped to Doniphan County, on account of destitute circumstances prevailing among the farmers, is on March 30, 1861, and Geo. H. Robb of Severance was made distributing agent. Many accused him of being unfair in the distribution of the seed wheat and other articles which caused him to write a scathing letter to H. D. Hunt, who was then editor and publisher of the Elwood Free Press, lambasting the unscrupulous class for the criticism.

Ransom H. Mansfield

Popular and Successful Young Harness Maker of Leona Has Finest Twin Babies in Doniphan County.

Mr. and Mrs. Ransom Mansfield have the finest, healthiest, prettiest and cutest twin babies in Doniphan County, and perhaps the whole of northeastern Kansas. With Mrs. Mansfield he has taken them to every fair and baby contest within a radius of one hundred miles and in each case they have simply walked away with blue ribbons—to put it in the language of the slangster. The twins are Amilla and Rhodella, the chubbiest specimens of humanity you ever set eyes on.

Amilla and Rhodella Mansfield

Mr. Mansfield is a harness maker in Leona and has a fine and prosperous business. During the month of March of this year he oiled and repaired 152 sets of harness. This is believed to have set a record for a harness maker. At any rate no word of its ever having been excelled has ever reached this county. His prices are reasonable for all kinds of work and all who trade with him are sure to receive courteous and honest treatment at his hands.

Mr. Mansfield was born in Wright County, Missouri, Aug. 19, 1882, and received his early education in the public schools of his native state. After leaving school he served an apprenticeship at his trade and moved to Leona.

On Nov. 17, 1909, Mr. Mansfield was married to Miss Ruth Brewer, who was born in Robinson, Dec. 1, 1893; the ceremony being performed in Falls City, Nebraska. The twins were born in Leona, April 19, 1912. At the butchers and bakers' convention in St. Joseph, where they were exhibited with 185 babies, they captured first prize with a perfect score. Also they took prizes at the Robinson and Hiawatha fairs. Mr. Mansfield engaged in his present business on May 1, 1911, and is a fine young citizen.

Mrs. Mansfield is justly proud of her twins and will bring them up in a manner which will reflect credit upon their parents and the community.

Fifty-eight Years in Doniphan County

J. P. Bitner Came from His Home in Westmoreland County, Pennsylvania, in September of 1857—Settled on a Farm Near Severance and Married Miss Ellen Robb—Recalls a Number of the Old-Time Settlers in Wolf River Township in the Early Days.

The early days of settlement in Wolf River township surrounding the present town of Severance are graphically recalled by J. P. Bitner, who came to that locality in the month of September, 1857.

Although in his eighty-second year, Mr. Bitner has a distinct recollection of the people and events of those pioneer times. The town of Syracuse was on the map those times, or what was dignified by the name of town.

Mr. Bitner was born in Westmoreland County, Pennsylvania, June 11, 1833, and he was past his twenty-fourth birthday when he started for Doniphan County. He was the son of Daniel and Rachael Ambrose Bitner, both of whom were born in Westmoreland County in 180-.

On Sept. 10, 1857, Mr. Bitner arrived in Doniphan County in company with G. H. and C. D. Robb, also of Westmoreland County, Pennsylvania, and Wilson Larimer, who was at the time county surveyor of Lucas County, Iowa. G. D. Robb, another of the Robb brothers, had come to the county the preceding spring and settled on a claim one-half mile west of Syracuse. He had built himself a little shanty and it was there the newcomers unloaded their goods.

That winter a substantial house was built and it is still standing and being used as a corn crib by Jacob Denton, who owns the land now. The Syracuse Hotel was erected about the same time as the present corn crib. It was put up by Walter Peck and did a thriving business for some time. The hotel building was used as a voting precinct for several years and all manner of political and religious meetings were held there. Rev. Mr. Graham and Rev. Mr. Sever, two well known preachers, used to hold services there and an itinerant exhorter from Missouri occasionally held forth there. The hotel building disappeared into kindling wood a generation ago.

Mr. Bitner remembers all the early settlers who came to that part of the township during the year 1857, 1858 and 1859, and says they have all gone to their reward and likewise nearly all of their children. Early in the spring of 1858, G. W. Robb came with his family from Pennsylvania. Mr. Robb was later county commissioner from Wolf River township, there being seven commissioners for the county at that time. After the death of Mr. Robb his son, G. H. Robb, was elected to fill the vacancy.

The greatest danger which confronted the early settlers of those times was the menace of prairie fires, which frequently caused widespread destruction to property. They were usually started by careless campers and often created terrible havoc among the settlers. Mr. Bitner tells to this day of the precautions that were necessary to insure protection from the fires. He says that the only certain method by which the fires could be checked was by back-firing, and that when the prairie hay was stacked it was the custom to plow several deep furrows around the pile. When the first frost came the growth between those furrows had to be burned off in order to better insure protection.

The chief characteristic of the early settlers, Mr. Bitner says, was their free handed open door policy. No one was ever turned away from a door when calling for food or shelter over night. East of Syracuse there was a settlement known as the Irish settlement, and east of that was located the Norwegian settlement. Two of the most prominent men in the latter settlement were Chris Turkleson and Thomas Steanson. Mr. Bitner recalls that they were highly respected and had the confidence of all the early settlers.

Among the early settlers on the land where Severance now stands and adjacent to the town, Mr. Bitner remembers Uncle Johnny Prawl, Nathan Springer, Jonathan Springer and C. C. Clonch. The Pry family came in the spring of 1859. The only members of the settlement around the present town of Severance, whom Mr. Bitner can name as living today are Athalia Vickery Hollingsworth, of Sumner County, Kansas; Mrs. Thomas Lyons, of Severance; Ellen Robb, of Severance; Maggie Eaton, of Severance; Pierce Pry, who also lives in Doniphan County; Mrs. Dug Hancock, of Severance; the Widow Hall, now ninety years old and residing in Severance; Mrs. Jane Pry, of Severance; Mrs. Dr. McCormack. Peter Prawl is a son of one of the oldest settlers.

Mr. Bitner has a clear recollection of the time Denton and Severance were laid out. Most of the original settlers are still living, but Major Grey and Mr. Waters, who had located west of Syracuse, are now numbered among the dead. Many of the others have moved away and are living in other states, or in other counties of Kansas.

There is one family in particular that lived south of Denton which Mr. Bitner feels it his duty to make mention of in his reminiscences. Those were Cornelius Burke and his wife who came to the neighborhood in the spring of 1858. This was a most kindly couple who had ever a warm welcome and a word of cheer for the stranger and the neighbor alike. This was especially true of Mrs. Burke, who was a most warm-hearted woman and dearly loved by all the early settlers. Her home was always open to the traveler or the wayfarer and it was her inflexible rule to keep the latch-string hung on the outside of the door. Con Burke died over thirty-five years ago and his wife followed him to the grave about seventeen years later, sincerely regretted by all her old-time neighbors. Her funeral was one of the largest ever seen in that portion of Doniphan County and was attended by practically the entire population, who mournfully laid her to rest. There were several children in the Burke family, and Mr. Bitner believes they are all living. He has no knowledge of their persent whereabouts, except that of one son, William, who is a resident of Denton.

Pat Grey, editor of the Severance News, another son and several sisters, and Pat Kirwan and a number of sisters, of Bendena, are among the living of the oldest settlers whom Mr. Bitner can recall. Thomas Lyons, a Severance mercnant, is one of the children or some of the early settlers whom Mr. Bitner was well acquainted with. There may be a number of others living throughout the county at the present time, but Mr. Bitner has lost track of the youngest generation with the passing of years.

A bolt of lightning caused the destruction of a house and the loss of two lives one night during the fall of 1857 on the Pike's Peak trail where the Rock Island railroad runs now. Mr. Bitner remembers the incident very well. The summer of that year two industrious men from Indiana came to Doniphan County and located claims, one near Roger Morley's place and the other near what is now the Diebolt farm. They constructed a rude dwelling on the Pike's Peak trail and at night they slept in the shanty near the Morley farm. During a blinding thunder and lightning storm the house was struck by lightning and burned to the ground. The next morning some of the neighbors saw the ruins of the place, and, not finding any tidings of the two occupants, started to dig among the charred timbers. Sure enough the bones of the two Indiana men were found and reverentially buried in the school section north of Syracuse. Nothing had ever been heard from the relatives of the men, and all papers that might lead to the location of their families had been destroyed with them.

The matter of getting mail was a serious proposition with the settlers around Syracuse during the primitive days of location. The men folks got together and solved the problem in a manner eminently satisfactory to all interested. The mail came to the town of Doniphan and the distance was too great for every man to go there when the boats arrived with the mail. The settlers were busy trying to bring the virgin prairie under cultivation and could scarcely afford the time necessary to make the trip to the postoffice. So they pooled their interests. There were fourteen settlers and their families around Syracuse who got their mail at the town of Doniphan. In order that everybody should be taken care of it was agreed that a list of the fourteen should be pasted up in the postoffice in plain view of all who appeared at the delivery window. Then when any of the fourteen Syracuse men came for his own mail he was reminded by documentary facts that there were thirteen others whom he was in duty bound to look after. And then the mail for each member of the community was called for. Sometimes there would be a mass of newspapers from the East which almost taxed the capacity of the mesenger's hauling ability, but every scrap of mail was always zealously carried to those for whom it was intended. Occasionally the mail carrier, whoever it might happen to be at the time, did not find the owners on his way home. In such instances he left the undelivered mail at "Old Lady Vickery's" and on the following Sunday morning all the old settlers would go there and get it.

J. P. Bitner was married to Miss Ellen Robb on May 11, 1854, one month before he was twenty-one years old. He left his wife at their home in Pennsylvania when he started for the territory of Kansas, but she came West with the children after Mr. Bitner had prepared a home for them about 1858. Miss Robb was the daughter of George W. and Christine Palmer Robb, and was born in Westmoreland County, Pennsylvania, June 15, 1833. Mr. Robb also came to Doniphan County, and as has been heretofore mentioned in these reminiscences was at one time commissioner for the county from Wolf River township. There were six children in the Bitner family, four of whom died young. George D. and Hattie E. were the only ones to grow up. The latter married James Armstrong, and resides near Bendena. Her father lives with her since the death of his wife. When Mr. Bitner came to Doniphan County he pre-empted a quarter section south of Severance, where he built a substantial house and lived until his wife died some years ago. He always followed the occupation of farmer and was successful in that line. Mr. Bitner died May 24, 1915, since this article was set in type. He was a Republican in politics and has held the offices of constable and trustee of the town of Severance.

A Successful Educator

Charles R. Hewins, for Twenty Years Principal of the Severance Schools, Is a Native of Doniphan County—Became a Teacher in 1885-1886 and Has Had Unparalleled Success Ever Since—A Member of the County Board of Examiners—Taught in All the Best Schools of the County.

While Doniphan County has been noted for the high standard of its schools, many people have come to regard teachers who were born in the county as being pre-eminently equipped for the work.

Since the county was organized there have been many able men and women teachers employed in the schools, some of whom have gone to other fields and won fame and fortune. At the present time the schools of the county are under expert supervision and the corps of teachers cannot be excelled for ability.

As a very active and living example in this respect, The Chief takes the liberty to refer to Prof. Charles R. Hewins, who for the past twenty years has been principal of the Severance schools. It's a long time to remain in the same position, but Professor Hewins has evidently made good.

Professor Hewins is a natural born educator. From early in life he manifested a strong inclination for study. He was born on a farm near Palermo on December 1, 1866, and had little difficulty in making rapid headway through the district schools.

After graduating from the local schools, he attended college at Parkville, Missouri, and coming with h[illegible] ors from there, he took a course at the Campbell Normal University, Holton, Kansas. He went to both these last named institutions with the sole object of becoming proficient as a teacher.

Professor Hewins' first school work in Doniphan County was during the term 1885-1886, and has been actively engaged at his profession ever since. He had taught in several schools with a noticeable degree of success until 1892, when he was elected principal of the schools of Severance. Professor Hewins has rounded out over twenty years in that position, and in all that long period he has given the utmost satisfaction, to not only the members of the school board, but to the parents whose children have been so carefully and ably educated under his direction.

Professor Hewins is a popular figure in Severance. His manner is genial and he has the happy faculty of gaining and retaining the confidence of his pupils. With the business element he is regarded very highly, and his quiet and refined disposition has endeared him to the entire community. While he was still a young man, Professor Hewins was appointed to a position on the county board of examiners.

Mr. Hewins was for sixteen years principal of the Severance High School, and is now serving his fifth year as superintendent of that institution to the entire satisfaction of the community. He has always had the welfare of his school at heart, and the Barnes High School owes her high standard today to the efforts of this worker. Improvements in the way of equipment and studies have been suggested by the superintendent and unanimously adopted by the school board. He numbers among his pupils many successful farmers and business men who pursue their occupations in this county now, also thirty-eight teachers and professors, and twenty-four who have graduated from college courses. These all reflect credit upon their former instructor, to whom they acknowledge their various degrees of success and position.

His ability has been recognized on several occasions by the county superintendent recommending him to the county commissioners for the appointment as a member of the county board of examiners, and president of the Doniphan County Teachers' Association. He also is frequently an instructor in the Teachers' Normal Institutes.

Mr. Hewins is deeply interested in politics, and in this, like everything else, he is thorough. His opinion on local and even national politics, is always regarded as well-balanced authority, and the result of much deliberation. In 1889 he was admitted to the bar at St. Joseph, Mo., and this, doubtless, is the foundation of his interest in political questions, and the reason for his clear conception of the technical points. However, Mr. Hewins evidently did not see fit to engage in the law business, as he kept on teaching after receiving his sheepskin. August 2, 1900, he was married to Delia A. Heeney, a prominent school teacher of this county, and she has apparently made him a very congenial and helpful companion, as she has known how to encourage and sympathize with him in his work. Their town home is in Severance, but they own a splendid farm of 160 acres, four miles south of Denton. The Hewins, husband and wife, are well thought of in Doniphan County, and number practically the entire population as their friends. Doniphan County owes a great deal to this man of numerous ideas and great purposes, and may we have the opportunity to honor him for many years to come.

SEVERANCE SCHOOL DAYS

C. R. Hewins, For Twenty-One Years Connected With Severance School, Relates Past and Present Experiences, and Gives Some Interesting Statistics Regarding Progress of School From Start to Present Date—First School House Built In 1871.

(Contributed by C. R. Hewins.)

The first school district of Severance was organized in 1870, and sessions were held at first in a makeshift schoolroom, very inconvenient and very uncomfortable. Miss Laura Herne taught that first winter, and concerning her trials and vicissitudes, we have no record; but, without doubt, her experience was similar to that of scores of pioneer teachers; the usual trouble of inducing the big boys and girls to attend along with the tots; the problem of teaching a half dozen grades at once; the severe winters to contend with in enforcing attendance, and then the quaint, primitive idea that "skules war a bother, and wouldn't benefit nobody nohow."

Nora B. Corbett, Katherine Lancaster, Mary Gray, Ida Berg, Loretta Moyer, Louise Meecke.

The first school house actually built for that purpose was erected in 1871. The original building still stands, and today is owned by the Christian Church. It was a plain structure, very unpretentious and unassuming; however, it was a progressive move for the betterment of future citizens, as it indicated that the settlers were having better times and were in a more agreeable frame of mind regarding education. I do not intend to imply directly or indirectly, that the early citizens of Severance were dullards, and not capable of realizing the benefit of instruction and training for their young. There were all classes represented; there was the few to be found in any locality, who are antagonistic to any change, either one way or the other; those who prefer to remain at a standstill and let the world slip by, but on the other hand, some were ahead of the times and foresaw the profit and improvement to be gained by the establishment of an efficient school system. It is well to remember, though, that times were hard, children were needed at home to help all they could; it was an effort to raise money for books, shoes and the teacher's salary, modest though it was; then it was sure to be somebody's turn to board teacher just when somebody didn't want said teacher. The first to teach in the new structure was D. J. Mawherter, and of his ability not a little can be said. He was a well-educated man, naturally, and to this was added a dignity of manner and perfection of precept that endeared him to all who knew him and caused the school board to appoint him for all but two terms, up to the year 1880. The two terms referred to were taught by D. L. Carpenter.

In 1880 an addition to the schoolhouse was built, and it was necessary to employ two teachers, D. L. Carpenter and Miss Georgia Scott, for the rapidly-increasing school. The next year, three teachers were needed, which is sufficient evidence that the townspeople recognized a good thing when they saw it and were eager to push it along. The curriculum gradually advanced from the indispensable three r's—readin', writin' and 'rithmetic—to a definite course of study, embracing all branches of fundamental study. The teachers for several years succeeding were as follows:

1881—T. B. Marshall, Lena Lindner, Georgia Scott.
1882—T. B. Marshall, Lena Linder, Emma Plank.
1883—M. L. Edwards, Mary Clonch, Mollie Gray.
1884—E. R. Westfall, Amelia Klippel, Mollie Gray.
1885—C. E. Bassett, Jean Whitney, Mollie Gray.
1886—O. B. Sarber, Amelia Klippel, Mollie Gray.
1887—Charles Floyd, Mary Clonch, Georgia Scott.
1888—J. Z. Clem, Ella Wood, Georgia Scott.
1889—J. Z. Clem, Agnes Richards, Maggie Delaney.
1890—C. W. Vaughn, Agnes Richards, Maggie Delaney.

Tempus fugit, or, to put it in plain Yankee, time flies, and the year of 1892 witnessed the construction of a second school house. The old one had been inadequate for several years for a number of reasons. There was the need and demand for a higher course of study than the mere elementary grammar grades, so in 1894, a two-years' high school course was recommended and accordingly adopted by the board of education, much to the satisfaction of the community. Seventy-eight students were graduated from this department, and the material result of the venture was the foundation in these graduates for one lawyer, one professor of music, a county superintendent, twenty-seven teachers, several traveling salesmen, five telegraph operators, many successful farmers and business men, and sixteen who have graduated from college courses. The principals of the new school from 1891 to 1910 were, in their turn, as follows: C. W. Robertson, C. R. Hewins (two years), G. W. Kinkead, C. W. Reader (two years) and C. R. Hewins (fourteen years). The grade teachers in that period of time were: Maggie O'Shea, Anna Revelle, Delia Heeney, Lucy Kiley, Anna Frick, Irene Gifford, Nellie Monroe, Estella Norman, Agnes Corcoran, Josephine Katner, Elizabeth Corcoran, Emma Babcock, Omie Ballard, Helena Gray, William Butler, Anna Ebeling, Cora Howe, John Gray and Nora Ward.

The high school department was very popular, and so hearty was the general approval, that in 1911 the building was enlarged and remodeled into an eight-room building, and given the title of Barnes' High School in honor of the author of the bill.

The grammar grades and lower grades, of course, were retained, but the school is known primarily as a high school, and seven teachers are employed. The equipment of the Barnes High School rivals that of large town institutions, and the board of education is conscientious in employing only competent and skillful instructors. The school boasts of a large reading and reference library, and a good working laboratory. The Barnes High School teachers have been as follows: C. R. Hewins, superintendent (four years); Olive Vezie, H. F. Baustian, Flosse Kennedy, Ina Dixon and Ellen Nystrom. Grade teachers: Edith Corbet, Nora Ward, Erma Davis, Bertha Libel, Edna Broyles, Edith Gamber, Mae Thorp, Mattie Marcell. The present teachers are: High school—C. R. Hewins, G. C. Hartenbower and Frances Terrell. Grades—Mary Gauham, Anna Ward, Ruth Elwood, Mattie Marcell. The board of education is composed of three excellent gentlemen—S. L. Carpenter, T. J. Lyons and J. A. Campbell, each a credit to the community he represents.

The editor has requested that I say something relative to my personal experience in Severance schools, but this is difficult, as whatever success I have achieved and whatever good I have accomplished is due not to my efforts alone, but to the co-operation and support of my many good friends in Severance and vicinity. It has pleased me to have my endeavors rewarded by being allowed to serve in the capacity of instructor, superintendent and principal for the last twenty years. What are considered the best years of a man's life I have spent in conscientious labor to benefit the Severance school, and there is no regret attached. The results are a source of tender pride, and as long as I am permitted, I shall put forth my best efforts to merit the approval and commendation of the patrons of education in Severance.

C. R. HEWINS.

[Editor's Note—In the foregoing article, the author has failed to take to himself the honor due him. C. R. Hewins has been connected with Severance schools for twenty years, and in that time has accomplished many reforms and succeeded in getting the Barnes High School on a recognizable basis with other advanced schools. Its diplomas are accepted by colleges, and its graduates are considered thoroughly informed academicians. Professor Hewins is well known in educational circles, not only throughout this county, but is acknowledged as one of the best informed pedagogues of northeast Kansas, and the City of Severance is lucky to have had his services for so long. He is a man who, once met, is instantly liked, and, no doubt, it is his lovable personality, as well as his extraordinary ability, that has endeared him to a host of friends in Severance.]

Severance School

The first school house to be erected near Leona was built in 1867, but it met with a somewhat unique end after the close of the term. When the fall term for the next year was to begin there was no school building to be found, and it was discovered that some enterprising individual had stolen the house bodily. The theft was committed after a heavy rain, and the missing building was traced to a point near Padonia, in Brown County, but the school house was never recovered. In the fall of 1868 a new building was erected and school taught there until 1879, when a building, 28x48 feet was erected, at a cost of about $2,500. Dr. R. L. Teas and Miss Nannie Nesbit were the first teachers in this building.

In 1871 the first school house was built in Severance at a cost of $1,200. It was a rough wooden affair, and stood on the hill at the east of the town. In 1879 the increase in population necessitated the building of an addition, and this was done at an outlay of $1,300. It was about equal in size to the first school and began to be crowded to its capacity a few years after it was built. The present school building was erected several years later.

Brush Creek School was built and finished all over on August 18, 1871. It was located in School District No. 34, in Wayne Township, and cost $2,500. It was built for a graded school and had sufficient upper and lower rooms to accommodate 150 pupils. The building committee consisted of John Landis, Bethel, and Frank Sproul. I. H. Watson and Miss Mattie Gordon were the first teachers.

Professor Walter A. McCollum

Principal of the Severance Schools Is a Live Wire Who Has Made His Own Way in Life, on Account of Circumstances—Forced to Leave School and Ride the Range When He Was Seven Years Old—Worked His Way Through State Normal School and at Twenty-two Years of Age Had Won a Life Diploma — An Advocate of School Athletics and Other Incidental Activities.

Professor Walter A. McCollum, the now principal of the Severance public schools, is a shining example of what ambition will lead to in the battle of life.

Forced to leave school at the tender age of seven years, Prof. McCollum rode the western Kansas prairies until he was sixteen years old, and now, at the age of twenty-four, he is the proud possessor of a life diploma from the Kansas State Normal School at Emporia.

He has had a career up to the present time, that any young man might well be proud to emulate. He is endowed with sufficient independence to justify him in providing all the funds for his own education, which he did like a veteran.

On March 23, 1891, Professor McCollum first saw the rays of the rising sun through the scant window of an old sod house on a government claim in Haskell County, on the plains of southwest Kansas. His father is Hon. S. A. McCollum, who came to Kansas, March 8, 1886, from his old home among the Ozarks, in Barry County, Mo., and his Missouri friends will be pleased to know that Haskell County elected him to the state legislature.

S. A. McCollum was one of the pioneers of Haskell County, or the entire southwestern section of Kansas, for that matter. Settlers were few and widely scattered and the privations that had to be endured were many and severe, the railroad being located thirty miles distant. In 1888, Professor McCollum's father was married to Miss Anna Smithey, at Garden City, Kan., and together they fought the battle of life to a successful issue in the wild plains of southwestern Kansas. Mr. McCollum was soon afterwards elected county treasurer, and from that date life was much easier.

The professor's father is of Scotch-Irish extraction, having been born in Missouri in 1855, and his mother is of German descent, she being born in Kentucky in 1858. Professor McCollum's paternal grandfather lost his life in the civil war. S. A. is now the owner of one of the finest homes in western Kansas, situated in the heart of Haskell County, land that is estimated to be worth $150,000. He also operates a sugar beet farm near Garden City, and was elected to the state legislature in 1914, where he served with distinction.

At the age of four years, Walter A. first started to school, walking with his sister, a distance of over two miles. At seven he was taken from school and given the task of herding cattle on a broncho over his father's ranch. This continued until he was sixteen, when he entered the country schol again. At eighteen he taught his first school, receiving for this work the small sum of $40. He took this school, however, with the sole object of gaining experience.

The next year he had been given strong inducements to remain on the home ranch or manage a ranch in Mexico, but he declined either offer, and entered the State Normal School in Emporia, with only an eighth grade diploma, at the age of nineteen years. At twenty-one he was graduated from the High School and at twenty-two years he came forth with a life diploma and the honors of the class, being one of the actors in the class play.

The professor's path through the State Normal was not all strewn with roses. He chose to work his own way through school and did most everything from firing a furnace to operating a "beanery" (better known as a student eating house) of his own, although his father's resources made this unnecessary. He was nevertheless one of the most active students in the Normal. He took part in the debates, sang in the glee club, played in the band and orchestra, and made all the squads in the major sports of athletics. During the winter of 1914 Emporia chose Prof. McCollum as one of the delegates to the state Y. M. C. A. convention at Salina, and also one of the delegates to the national Y. M. C. A. convention, at Estes Park, Colo., during the spring of the same year.

This young Christian worker went to Severance as principal of the schools, equipped with a splendid record for school activity. Football, as well as track, was an unknown diversion in the Severance schools until this young exponent of athletics arrived, and he immediately organized teams for football, playing the season. He then coached an "all victorious" team in basketball, which team finished the season without a defeat. He also organized a girls' basketball team which carried well the colors of the school. Track was introduced for the first time in the history of the school. Our first annual track meet for Doniphan County is credited largely to this young mandarin. His specialties are science and history.

The new principal of schools is afraid of no kind of work, is leader of a chorus and orchestra, and can use any instrument in band work. He is not backward in assisting the young people in any form of entertainment. This brilliant young man has not yet completed his college career. It is his intention to take three years at Chicago University, then follow a three years course at the University of Harvard. His final ambition lies between law and journalism. His two sisters will graduate from the Kansas State Normal School at Emporia in June, 1915. The younger sister will follow music and journalism in schools with the professor.

(Since this article was set in type Prof. McCollum has completed his work at Severance and is employed in the Denver, Colorado, schools.)

Basketball at Severance

The historical edition would indeed be incomplete without some reference to the major winter sport—basketball—and the subject of this sketch is going to be the championship basketball team of northeast Kansas, the Severance Conference five. They finished the season early this spring without a defeat in the northeast conference, leading all opponents by a total of 367 to 271. The only defeat met with during the winter was when the five went a little out of their class and were downed by the Atchison high school in the district meet by a score of 15 to 38. This, however, was somewhat expected. The picture accompanying this story shows the victorious quintet.

Professor Walter A. McCollum

The scores during the season were as follows:

Dec. 11, Severance vs. Robinson, 35 to 19; Dec. 18, Severance vs. Wathena, 33 to 17; Dec. 25, Severance vs. Benton High School of St. Joseph, 31 to 21; Jan. 1, Severance vs. Robinson, 27 to 12; Jan. 22, Severance vs. Horton, 43 to 33; Jan. 29, Severance vs. Sabetha, 54 to 22; Feb. 5, Severance vs. Horton, 39 to 37; Feb. 12, Severance vs. Wathena, 31 to 24; Feb. 19, Severance vs. Morril, 26 to 16; Feb. 26, Severance vs. Morril, 33 to 32, and March 12, Severance vs. Atchison, 15 to 38.

Coach Walter A. McCollum.

Reading from left to right in the picture, the members of the team are: John Prawl, 17 years old, 170 pounds; Toll Ware, 17 years old, 150 pounds, captain of team; James Lowe, 18 years old, 155 pounds; Howard Riffer, 18 years old, 145 pounds, manager of team; Harold Riffer, 17 years old, 150 pounds, and William Lancaster, 17 years old, 140 pounds.

The coach was W. A. McCollum, who is from Emporia, Kansas, and one of the best basketball men in the state. He taught his charges the value of a strict training, team play and speed. With these combinations they succeeded in rolling up their splendid record.

Severance Built

Although One of the Younger Towns in Doniphan County, Severance Has Prospered—Its Location Followed the Building of the St. Joseph & Denver City Railroad in 1869.

The town of Severance stands today as a proud testimonial to the judgment and enterprise of the men who planned and built that thriving center of business and industrial activity. Notwithstanding the fact that it is one of the younger towns in Doniphan County, its prosperous condition today can be traced directly to the foresight of its founders and the public spirit of its citizens. The building of Severance was the direct result of the construction of the St. Joseph & Denver City Railroad, now the St. Joseph & Grand Island, through Doniphan County in 1869. The promoters were mostly men connected with the road, and the town was named after John Severance, an officer of the road, who died over twenty years ago at Hutchinson, Kansas.

Captain C. C. Clonch laid out one addition, and the late W. D. Rippey another. From the very first Severance showed every indication of becoming a lively trading point and its importance in this respect was enhanced by the coming of a number of good stores. John F. Wilson, father of the present sheriff, Robert Wilson, was one of the first merchants, and Arch S. Campbell opened the first drug store. The town grew by leaps and bounds, and at no time in its history did it have any inclination to lag. The residents have from the start displayed a true public spirit, and this, coupled with their push and energy, has been the making of Severance. Her people are progressive and wide awake and it seems safe to predict a great future for the town. They own their own up-to-date electric light plant and other municipal improvements.

The original townsite consisted of forty acres, on the northeast quarter of Section 26, Town 3, Range 19.

L. E. Gunn established the first store and opened with a general stock.

In the winter of 1869, a hotel was built by Severance & Gunn. About the same time C. C. Clonch deeded every alternate lot to Messrs. Severance and Gunn, in consideration of which they gave him a one-fourth interest in the hotel.

A blacksmith shop was established in the fall of 1869, by A. Porter.

Dr. Granstaff, of Virginia, located as the first physician in about 1872.

The first school was taught in 1873 or 1874, in a frame building erected for that purpose.

S. L. Ryan located in 1875, as the first lawyer.

The St. Joseph & Western passenger depot was built during the winter of 1874, and S. L. Ryan enjoys the distinction of being the first agent.

In 1877 the place was incorporated as a city of the third class, and the first municipal election was held.

The Severance Silver Cornet Band was organized in 1879 by George Bird, the old soldier who resides in Denton.

Severance is located on the south side of Wolf River, ten miles west of Troy, the county seat, and is situated in the midst of the best agricultural section in the county. The city, although it cannot boast of being among the older places of the county, can lay claim to its being one of the best busines towns on the St. Joseph & Grand Island Railroad in the county.

The Methodists, Christians and Catholics each have organizations and church edifices in the place, two of them having been built in 1914.

The first post office in Severance was established December 29, 1869, and the following is a correct list of the postmasters and the length of time they served up to the present time:

Franklin & Frick were the first millers in Severance and in the early days enjoyed a lucrative business. They located the mill about one-half mile northwest of Severance on Wolf River, and this mill drew trade from a radius of twenty miles.

Severance is located on Section 26, Town 3, Range 19, in Wolf River Township, a station on the St. Joe & Western Railroad; was laid off in the summer of 1869, by C. C. Clonch, J. Severance of 40 acres.

The following is the list of the business people of Severance, Kansas.

looking over the names, it is noticeable that each and every one of them has either been a successful farmer, a prominent business man or well-known professional man of the town. All of them are long residents of Doniphan County and well qualified for the position now held. Squire L. Carpenter, the present mayor, needs no introduction to residents of Doniphan County, as he is widely known throughout the country, also possessing in Severance a host of friends, amounting to almost the entire population. Charles J. Foster, George W. Springer, John F. Ebeling, Arthur D. Hall, Dr. John M. Riley are councilmen, all eminently fitted for their positions. The clerk is J. A. Campbell of the well-known family of that name. John W. Morley guards the finances under the title of treasurer.

The station agent is George W. Riffer and Robert Lee Fuller is the telegraph operator. Both are friendly and obliging, and are well liked.

Lodges and Secret Societies of Severance

Whenever a town begins to encourage the establishment of fraternal orders and societies, women's clubs and the like, it is a sure sign there is some real social activity in that town. Churches are a mighty fine thing, about the best thing a town can build. Stores are good things, too; we've got to have them both, but it's a sign of the times that both of these and lots of other necessary enterprises are permanent institutions, when people begin to wonder what to do with the idle time, and there comes the telepathic answer, "Encourage the establishment of a secret order." Today there does not exist the prejudice for lodges that formerly threatened their existence. People know now that the service of some lodges, the I. O. O. F., for instance, is no less solemn than a Sunday morning sermon. Their intentions are not wholly for pleasure and insurance, either.

The city of Severance is very lucky in having quite a number of orders represented in her domain, a list of which follows, with names of chief officers:

Severance Lodge No. 313, A. F. & A. M.—Sol Weil, secretary; James Gillen, W. M.

King Lodge No. 144, I. O. O. F.—Oliver R. Rowe, secretary; Robert L. Hinckman, Noble Grand.

Woman's Relief Corps, No. 75, of Severance—Edith Heeney, secretary; Hattie E. Peeler, president.

Severance Council No. 3056, Knights and Ladies of Security—Dennis Ward, secretary; Thos. J. Lyons, president.

Severance Council No. 675, Knights of Columbus—Dennis Ward, secretary; Roger W. Morley, G. K.

Severance Lodge No. 399, A. H. T. A.—Roger W. Morley, secretary; Theo. Teufler, president.

Teckley Chapter No. 218, O. E. S.—Sara K. Carpenter, secretary; Hattie E. Peeler, W. Matron.

Mayor and City Officers of Severance, Kan.

A lamp town will be a lamp town all its life, if it is not governed by an efficient city government. There may be any number of progressive citizens, but the men in power must be men of more than ordinary ability in order to think of the numberless things required to keep the town moving and prevent its declining into a middle-aged staidness and stolidness. Not only that, but the governing body must be composed of honest men and true, and men who have made successes of their own lives before they are fit to make the laws for a community.

Severance, Kansas, has now for a mayor and city council a body of men who could not well be surpassed in matter of integrity and ability. In

Jacob Stout, Patriot and Farmer

Born in Ohio, to a Life of Hard Work, He Served in Three Regiments in the Civil War, Then Came to Kansas with $17 and Amassed a Fortune, Including 2,200 Acres of Doniphan County Land, Valued at $250,000.

About eight miles south and west of Troy and not far from Severance, on a magnificent farm of twenty-two hundred acres, lives one of Doniphan County's finest and most respected citizens. He is a man who started in this life with practically nothing in worldly goods and who has been handicapped at many turns of the wheel of Fortune, and yet has amassed a fortune. He is a man who has defended his country, fighting for her during those perilous times when secession threatened the life of the Union. He is a man among men, honest, upright, with a courage that goes with his convictions and one of the best known and most admired citizens of the county. He is none other than Jacob Stout, a Doniphan County resident for forty-five years and one of its leading men in every walk of life.

To those who read this biography, and who know Mr. Stout today, it will seem almost incredible that any man could overcome the handicaps which he has faced during his seventy-two years; yet they are facts taken from his life. Where other children came into the world with at least the semblance of a chance for a start in life, Mr. Stout had none. When other boys were getting their education in the rural schools, Mr. Stout was forced to work to aid his family. When other boys of his age were at play, he was at labor. When other young men of his time were seizing upon opportunities that had been thrust at them, Jacob Stout was at a task of some kind which he was compelled to perform in order to earn his daily bread.

Two factors have brought Mr. Stout to the pinnacle of success. They are grit and work. He faced enough trouble in his early days to equal the burden of a Hercules. There were discouragements in his early days beside which the ordinary big troubles in a lifetime seem trivial. There were moments when it seemed that his shoulders must bend under their burden, but always there came surging to his aid those dormant qualities of work and grit which later were to give him the prominent and honorable sphere in life which he now occupies. No higher tribute can be paid to Mr. Stout than to say that he never shirked a responsibility nor groaned under a weight that would have staggered Ulysses.

Mr. Stout, who is one of the oldest residents of the county, was born in a period of stress. It was in that time just preceding and leading up to the events which culminated in the war of rebellion. Industrial conditions were at an unrest. Factories had not been developed and there were few opportunities for work. It was the period that brought out a Stephen Douglas and an Abraham Lincoln. A shadow of doubt was over the entire nation. Indiana was thought to be a "Western" state. It was in a period such as this that the subject of this sketch came into this world under the greatest of handicaps.

It was on a little farm back in Highland County in the state of Ohio that Mr. Stout was born. Ohio then, as it has often been since, was the turbulent hot-bed of political rebellion. Conditions were far from what they are today. The state, of course, was populated but not thickly. Farming was the principal occupation and the condition of Mr. Stout's parents was similar to that of several hundred other families of that time; all were hard pressed to make ends meet. As a consequence when young Jacob was born he was destined to a life of toil. He has made of it an honorable legacy and is now reaping the fruits of those efforts in the love and honor showered upon him by the whole of Doniphan County.

For three or four brief years it was Mr. Stout's privilege to attend country school. He learned to read and write and "figger," as then it was called. There came the time, however (he was but little more than ten or twelve years old), when the exigencies of life demanded their toll. In other words, young Jacob was needed on the farm. He was healthy, strong and willing, and while his parents hesitated in forcing him from his books, it was imperative that some new factor in their life be added to aid in the struggle for existence. As a consequence of this situation, the boy, for he was but little else, dropped his speller, his reader, his "figgers," and plunged into the gallant fight his parents were making to keep their particular wolf from the door.

Residence of Jacob Stout in Wolf River Township

For seven or eight years Jacob Stout worked in the fields from four in the morning until eight at night. It is needless to draw comparisons between the progress which has been made from the early farming methods to the present; but it is not out of place to say that there were no reapers, binders, rakes, cultivators or any of the modern farm machinery then. The wheat was cradled, bound and shocked by hand. The corn husker had not yet made its appearance to revolutionize its particular field; neither had the ploughshare reached its present state of almost perfection. Farming in Ohio in 1856, and the period that followed until after the Civil War, was a work of the body. It required physical strength and physical stamina.

Soon, however, there was to be a change that was destined to have an important bearing on the life of Mr. Stout. Abraham Lincoln had been elected President, the sizzling period of the Lincoln-Douglas debates had passed over, and now war clouds were gathering swiftly over the nation. At the first outbreak of hostilities Jacob Stout felt the blood course through his veins at a faster pace. He has always been intensely patriotic, whether it be for the nation, state or county. This has been ably shown numberless times since coming to Doniphan County. Whenever the call went out for volunteers for any cause, if it was a worthy one and needed help, Mr. Stout has always promptly tendered his services. His friends, neighbors and practically every citizen who knows him to the slightest extent will bear witness to this fact. It is one of the traits that has made him justly popular.

The first call, 1861, young Stout was passed by, although not without regret. He was only seventeen years old and was not needed in the army as sorely at that time as he was at home with his parents. So the first of the troops marched away from Ohio with banners waving and bands playing and young Jacob Stout wished he was a part of it all. In 1862, however, the situation changed. The battle of Bull Run had been fought and the Union was in danger. The boy realized this. He knew he was needed at home, but he also knew that the nation needed him, and so finally his love of country triumphed over his love of home. One hot, sultry day in the latter part of July he walked to the nearest recruiting station and, although but eighteen years of age, was mustered in as a private in Company E of the 50th Ohio volunteer infantry.

Practically everyone is familiar, through books at least, with the horrors of war. It is work—the old familiar work with which the boy Stout had been on intimate terms all of his life. In all of the campaigns during the fall and winter of '62, in which the 50th Ohio played a part, Mr. Stout had an active part. The following June, after practically a year of service, he was discharged for disability at Louisville, Kentucky. War had taken its toll. He was weak and broken as a result of the tremendous load which the shoulders of all the privates had to bear. And so in this condition he returned to his old home in Highland County, Ohio, again to take up a burden, the work on a farm with his parents. From the latter part of June, 1863 until 1865, Mr. Stout spent in recuperating his broken health and assisting his parents.

Mr. Sout remained with his parents until March of 1865, when he felt himself well again and, with his recovery there once more came the call of patriotism. Again he walked to the recruiting station and offered his services to his country. Again he was accepted. This time he enlisted as a private in Company F of the 18th Ohio volunteer infantry and departed with his fellow soldiers for the front. Again through a period of great stress Mr. Stout served. He was only a private in the ranks with thousands of others, but to his position he brought that same measure of faithfulness and service which has placed him in the front ranks of Doniphan County.

On October 10, 1865, after six months of additional service, Mr. Stout had the satisfaction of seeing his ideal of the Union perpetuated. Lee had surrendered at Appomattox and the struggle had ended. Consequently on Oct. 10, 1865, he was mustered out with his company and honorably discharged at Augusta, Georgia. Once again he returned to his old home in Highland County, Ohio, and took up the tasks that confronted him; and, for five years more, he labored on the farm of his parents and others. In 1870 he began to see that the old familiar site held no opportunities for him, and he decided to go West. It was quite a task to select a field of activity. A number of states were calling for new blood from the East and finally Mr. Stout's selection rested on Missouri.

In June of 1870 Mr. Stout packed his few belongings and, bidding farewell to his family and friends, started on his way Westward. He went first to Rushville. There for nearly a year he worked at whatever presented itself. Some of the time he was employed in the little village and the remainder he worked on the surrounding farms, getting what he could for his efforts and trying continually to save a few dollars. It was difficult work. Labor was scarce and wages were small. A first class farmhand could get little more than $18 or $20 a month. In spite of these hardships, however, Mr. Stout managed to put a little away and early in the year 1871 he made the decision to move. It was a decision which was to have an important part in the history of Doniphan County and bring here one of its foremost citizens.

Rushville was overcrowded. Mr. Stout looked over every possible location and then determined upon eastern Kansas. Here is an interesting fact in connection with his career. It is said that when he arrived in Doniphan County he had only $17 to his name. Certain it is he had very little money, but he had other attributes which were more valuable. He had an indomitable will to succeed and he had a desire to work and earn that success. Therefore, he was richer by far than if he had had millions.

Having selected Doniphan County as the field of his labors Mr. Stout settled near where the Syracuse school house stands today and rented a place. He worked this for a little less than a year and then moved to a place near Severance, again renting. The next ten years he builded the foundation of his present high position. Into his labors he put every ounce of his energy, realizing that it was getting to be the time when he should have something of his own, and a guaranteed income to take care of his wants in later years. His efforts were not in vain, as the county records will show that he has been frugal and saving. In the recorder's office there must be a musty old record which shows that Jacob Stout bought his first piece of Doniphan County land in 1882. It was a good sized tract just south of Severance and for thirteen years it served as his home.

In 1895 however barely twelve years later, he saw a golden opportunity and with the money saved through hard work and frugality he purchased the beautiful 2200 acres which he now owns and lives upon. This was the beginning of his fortune. From it he has amassed enough of these worldly goods to rest content for the remainder of his life if he so wishes. The property has increased in value by leaps and bounds, and today his farm is considered one of the most valuable if not the best in the entire community. It is a significant fact, however, that Mr. Stout still retains, at his present age of seventy-one, the qualities of energy and industry that brought about his marvelous success.

To revert back to Mr. Stout's young manhood, there was one important event that transpired before his migration Westward from his old home in Highland County, Ohio. After his return from the Civil War, he met Miss Elizabeth Stivers of Brown County, also in Ohio, and near to his home. There was a rapid friendship between the two and they were married at the home of Miss Stivers' parents, who were well-to-do farmers, on the fourth day of March, 1869. That was one year before his move to the West.

And through all of the trials and tribulations which he has suffered in gaining his present honored position, Mrs. Stout was a guide and helping wife and companion. It is sad to relate that on June 21, 1914, she passed away, after being his helpmeet and friend for more than forty-five years. To their union were born four children:

Okley K., November 28, 1871, who was married March 3, 1908, to Mollie Loretta Cooney Smith.

Maud Ruth, born April 9, 1879; married May 23, 1907, to Frank J. Libel. To this union have been born Paul Kenneth, Decembeer 15, 1910; Francis Jacob, May 24, 1914.

Pearl, born June 19, 1884. Married September 6, 1905, to John E. Corcoran. To this union were born Ruth Elizabeth, September 26, 1906; Agnes Marie, September 18, 1908; Pearl Louis, March 5, 1912. John E. Corcoran died November 23, 1913. His occupation at the time of his demise was a traveling salesman for the Hamilton-Brown Shoe Company and was considered a salesman of ability.

Grace Elizabeth, born April 5, 1889. Married May 12, 1915, to Ed J. Lyons of Severance.

Mr. Stout, who left home when a young man with but 50 cents in his pocket, at the present time not only has one of the largest farms in the county, but is, perhaps, its largest sheep breeder and feeder. He has made a specialty of this branch of stock raising, although he does general farming on a large scale. His life has been crowned in the fullest measure with success. He has a beautiful home, a family that is near or with him practically all of the time, and he can look back on the struggle of the past with a feeling that after all, perhaps, the Lord knows best. All young men should emulate his life.

H. C. Hansen

The General Agent of The Penn Mutual Insurance Company for Northwest Kansas Was a Danish Boy Who Came to Kansas in 1870 With His Parents—Began in the Life Insurance Business in Doniphan County Ten Years Ago and Worked Up to His Present High Position.

The great life insurance companies of America, which have survived many years and which have hundreds of millions of dollars of insurance written on the lives of many thousands of men, have built up their gigantic business and made their records for square dealing because they have been far-seeing enough to choose for their trusted agents and representatives men of character and ability. In some lines of business "pull" counts a good deal in landing a good position; but it is different in the life insurance business—if you haven't the ability, and character that goes with the position, all of the influence you may be able to bring to bear on the company won't land you.

A case in point to which we would be pleased to refer you is that of H. C. Hansen, who, possessing the ability, in eighteen months worked his way up from sub-agent to general agent for the Penn Mutual Life Insurance Company of Philadelphia, one of the oldest and one of the greatest life insurance companies in America.

Mr. Hansen was born in Denmark, January 17, 1867, and was brought to America by his parents when he was a baby. He was three years old when the family crossed the Missouri River on a ferry at Atchison. From Atchison they migrated to Brown County where the father took a homestead and constructed a "dug out" in which the Danish youth made his home for the first two years of his residence in Kansas. The place is what is known now as the Andy Scheid farm. The "dug out" is still there in good state of preservation, but for many years it has been covered with a neat and substantial frame farm dwelling.

The Hansen family moved to Severance in the year 1871, and it was there the Danish boy got his first schooling. He was an industrious youth with a good deal of hustle about him, and one whom the people of the community vowed would some day make his mark in the world. After he was well through with the district school he went to St. Joseph and attended the Christian Brothers College for fourteen months, working for his board at the home of Freeland Pugh, and receiving in that length of time a classical education such as would take any ordinary young man twice as many months to acquire.

Hansen's business education was received in the hardware store of Ed Heeney, and it took twelve years to acquire a salesman's diploma from that famous institution; but it was a diploma such as would be recognized anywhere as a priceless possession and one that carried with it a recommendation of fitness for service in almost any great institution. It was an education acquired by hard experience and which was a guarantee of success in anything its owner might undertake.

About ten years ago, in the year 1905, the subject of our sketch decided to enter the life insurance business. The decision made, he was not long in getting into the business. The great Penn Mutual Company of Philadelphia was glad to have such a hustler and man of ability on its staff. He was given a sub-agency in Doniphan county to start with; and when he got under headway nothing could stop him. His business training, together with his education and his happy manner of dealing with men, won for him such success in eighteen months as a sub-agent in Doniphan County that he was called in by the company and sent to Atchison. There he was made general agent for the company for northeastern Kansas. In other words, as Hansen himself puts it, he worked his boss out of his job. Work, he says, was the secret of success.

H. C. Hansen's name now stands first on the list of men in the employ of these great life insurance companies in Kansas for having won his high position solely upon his merits. He has been successful in his work for the company which employs him, in the handling of its great volume of business in this part of Kansas; and he has been remarkably successful in the handling of his own personal business. He is the owner of a fine farm in Atchison County of 120 acres, he has a comfortable residence, a lucrative insurance business, with a fine suite of rooms in the Simpson building at Atchison.

Beside all these things Mr. Hansen has a family which is his pride and joy. Mrs. Hansen was Katie E. Browning, of Highland Station and a Doniphan County school teacher. They were married August 20, 1891, at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Um. Lyons in Troy, the Rev. G. W. Wilson, a Baptist minister, officiating. She is a woman of many accomplishments and the kind of a wife to encourage her husband t win great success in the world.

Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Hansen, Anna, Bettie, Christelle and William P., who was christened by Tom Lyons of Severance as "Pat," a name that will cling to him through life, though he is now only eight years old. Anna is one of the first grade teachers in Doniphan County, at present teaching in the Sparks school. Bettie is a graduate and registered nurse in St. Joseph's hospital in St. Joseph, Missouri. Christelle is a milliner in Ramsay's Department Store in Atchison. All the children are an honor to their parents and a fine credit to the good old Danish name of Hansen than which there is none better. Every young man in Doniphan County has as bright a future before him as the subject of this sketch who had no command of the English language when he arrived from the fatherland. It was this young Dane's ambition which lead him to success. The young man of today who will put his shoulder to the wheel and exert every effort as did Chris Hansen, will be successful throughout life. When Chris first came to America, he was unfamiliar with the ways of this country and handicapped by being unable to speak the English language. The first words Chris learned to say when he came to America, "A tank yo gam ma yob," and fortified with this much of our language, he approached a blacksmith and secured a place to hammer iron at which trade he continued several months. Next he engaged in the hardware business, making a success of this, he engaged in the life insurance business and only a few years ago landed the job of general agent for the Penn Mutual Life Insurance Company of Philadelphia, one of the largest and best insurance companies of America.

Killed in a Runaway

On Wednesday, Aug. 23, 1871, Mrs. Henry Pridy was killed in a runaway near Arrington, in Atchison County. She and her husband had been to Atchison on the above date, driving a wagon with a pair of mules hitched to it. Approaching their house on their return in the evening, the children heard the rattle of the wagon, and full of joy and delight, ran to meet and greet their parents. Their sudden appearance and cries of pleasure frightened the mules and they ran away. The wagon was overturned, killing Mrs. Pridy instantly.

On Sunday, Feb. 18, 1872, the Rev. Mr. James Lawrence, pastor of the M. E. church of Troy, preached his farewell sermon.

Joseph W. Howard

Prosperous Farmer, Leader in Movement to Protect County from Horse Thieves.

Joseph Howard is the leader of the anti-horse thief societies in Doniphan County, and was one of the organizers and officers of the Bendena Central Protective Association, formed to prevent the thefts of cattle and horses. His name is well known to every band of these robbers, who used to prowl through eastern Kansas; and there are some left yet who tremble when the name of Joe Howard is mentioned. Beside being active in preventing the loss of his property and that of others, Mr. Howard is a successful farmer, and has the finest 167½ acres in the quarter of Section 4, Town 4, Range 20, and is level, fertile soil of the best that Kansas affords.

Mr. Howard is, perhaps, as well known throughout this section as any other one man. Active and fearless, he is always interested in some project or another which takes him from town to town, north, east, south and west. Whatever movement is on foot, it is safe to lay a wager that Joe Howard has a hand in it if it is for the making of a better county to live in or will be of help to some of the poor families. Although so many outside interests claim his attention, he does not let his farm suffer, and it is doubtful if any piece of land receives any better attention than his. The farm is equipped with all that is latest and best in machinery, and thus much work is saved. Also Mr. Howard is progressive, and much of his time is spent in scientific study, thereby in the long run enabling him to expend a minimum amount of time for a maximum amount of results. He is keenly interested in stock and has some fine specimens on his farm. Horses, too, he likes, and in the past has done considerable breeding although he never pretended to make this a special line.

Joe Howard is an example of what a man can do in Doniphan County. He was far from a wealthy man when he came here with his family, but he had energy and thrift, and he went to work with a will. The result is now showing for itself, for not only is he well-to-do, but he has the esteem and honor of the entire county. Mr. Howard is a native of Illinois, the Sucker state, and that state has sent many of her sons and daughters to Kansas, much to her loss. He was born at Stone's Prairie, Adams County, on Feb. 8, 1849, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Abraham Howard, also farmers in that vicinity. All of his early education was received in the public schools, as he had little or no opportunity for college.

On Sept. 1, 1872, he was married at Colusa, Ill., to Miss Mattie I. Congrove, and to this union six children have been born: Lulu P., now Mrs. Frank Nunn of Ohiowa, Neb.; Roy M., who is on the farm, and Rachael, Franke, Leota and Nellie, the latter four deceased. Seven years after his marriage, Mr. Howard decided that there was little chance for a rapid rise in his native state and decided to come West. He arrived in Doniphan County, Jan. 22, 1880, and for the next two years worked at various occupations, saving his money and waiting for the chance to get a place. On March 1, 1882, he purchased the place he now occupies and has been there ever since, to the credit of himself and the community.

Residence of Joseph W. Howard in Wolf River Township.

Mr. and Mrs. Howard have a fine home. It was built a few years ago and is of solid concrete; a fine example of modern architecture. There they will be found at any time, and there will always be a welcoming hand extended to greet the visitor. Both are interested in civic and religious life, being members of the Knights and Ladies of Security and of St. John's Evangelical Lutheran Church at Bendena. While Mr. Howard has never been elected to any county political office, and does not want any, he is generally to the front in the councils of his party. He is a fine example of the prosperous Doniphan County farmer and a gentleman in every respect. Both Mr. and Mrs. Howard are congenial people and enjoy a pleasurable life.

The Late Noah Rittenhouse

A Pioneer of the 1860's Who, as an Educator and as a Farmer, Helped to Make Doniphan County Not Only a Good Place in Which to Live, But to Lay the Foundation for Our Prosperity for Generations to Come.

Noah Rittenhouse was one of the farmers who, coming to Doniphan County about the close of the Civil War, spent the remainder of his life in helping to lay a sure foundation for future generations. Too much cannot be said in praise of those noble citizens, for it was because of their untiring energy, their intelligent building and their splendid character that the people of this day enjoy so many blessings.

Highland County, Ohio, was the birthplace of Noah Rittenhouse, the date being December 16, 1847. His parents were David F. and Mary Ann Rittenhouse. They started westward from their Ohio home in 1849, when Noah was two years old, locating in Indiana. Six years later, in 1855, the family moved to Iowa, where after a residence of four years they moved, in 1859, to Missouri. Not yet satisfied that they had found the one place of all others they desired to spend their remaining years these parents moved to Doniphan County in 1865, and settled on a farm four miles northeast of Severance.

Young Noah, at the time of coming to Doniphan County, was in his eighteenth year, and a very promising young man. He had had some schooling in Missouri and Iowa which was rounded out after coming to Kansas by a course taken in that excellent school, Highland University. Following this Noah Rittenhouse entered the profession of school teaching and for three terms he taught in country schools with good success.

October 27, 1870 occurred the marriage of Noah Rittenhouse and Cassander Ware at the residence of her parents, John A. and Rachel Ann Ware, two miles north of Severance. She was born in Grant County, Indiana, March 15, 1851, came to Doniphan County with her parents in 1855, grew up in the county and received her education here.

About one year after their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Noah Rittenhouse went to their farm of 270 acres, which is two miles north and east of Severance and seven miles west of Troy in Wolf River Township. Here they improved their fine farm in many ways, and making it one of the best in the county. Aside from the substantial buildings and other improvements that were made, fifty acres of orchard was planted, and a splendid orchard it has been. Besides the home farm they acquired 35 acres in another tract and 320 acres in Logan County, Kansas.

To Mr. and Mrs. Rittenhouse five children were born, all of whom are living. Ann May was born December 13, 1871, and is the wife of Guy Holbrook of Logan County, Kansas. Eva Cassander was born December 13, 1876. She is the wife of Charles Murray, and is now residing in Los Angeles, California. Arthur F. was born April 14, 1879, and is living at home. Noah A., born December 30, 1881, is now a resident of Logan County, Kansas. Grace Rosella, the youngest of the five, was born August 19, 1886. These sons and daughters, all now grown, are prosperous and well to do, an honor to their parents and to the communities in which they reside.

After residing in Kansas forty-three years, and making a fine record as a school teacher, farmer and live stock grower, as well as of a noble and upright citizen, Noah Rittenhouse died February 17, 1908, and was buried here on the Kansas soil he loved so well. He had laid the foundation for the furture of his children in providing for them such a magnificent farm, and had helped to make that part of Doniphan County into as fine a farming region as can be seen in the Middle West. He had helped to pave the way for our splendid system of schools by his constant interest in education, whether he was teaching or farming. He was looked upon as a model farmer and also as a citizen of the highest class. His death was sincerely mourned by many of the people outside of the family circle, for in Wolf River Township there was no grander man, or one whose every act was more upright or more honorable.

The magnificent farm which Noah Rittenhouse cultivated for so many years with such splendid success, and on which he raised some of the finest live stock ever produced in the county, is a beautiful estate. Mrs. Rittenhouse, the devoted wife of so many years, now in her widowhood, resides on the farm with her son, Arthur, and her daughter, Grace Rosella. Having almost reached her sixty-first birthday anniversity, she is able to show an active interest in the farm which is dear to her and on which she will remain until her final summons comes. The family are members of the Methodist Church and active workers therein.

Capper at Severance

The accompanying cut is a true likeness of about 500 people who listened attentively to the address delivered by Gov. Arthur Capper in the Methodist Church in Severance, October 3, 1915. Long before the hour for the arrival of the Governor, the congregation began to gather at the Church. When the hour of arrival came and the Governor did not materialize, the crowd became weary and Rev. C. C. Clampett phoned to Atchison to ascertain why the Governor did not arrive on the appointed hour. A chicken dinner was served to about 500 people on that day and everyone present did ample justice to the bountiful repast. Gov. Capper enjoys the distinction of having been the first Governor to speak in a church on Sunday in Doniphan County. The following program was rendered that day. Solo, Miss Theresa Wagenerknecht; Solo, Misses Castels and Jewell, of St. Joseph; Solo, Thomas Springer; Duet, the Misses Castels and the Craig boys.

William D. Rippey

One of the Pioneers of Doniphan County—Conceded to Be One of the Most Public Spirited Men in Middle West—His Immense Fortune and Characteristic Charities.

It can be truly said that William D. Rippey, who died Mar. 3, 1915, was the Grand Old Man of Doniphan County. He had the years of residence to justify that title, and he had the intelligence, good human judgment, love of his fellow man and sympathetic nature, to have it recorded as a matter of history.

Mr. Rippey was a man who would have brought honor to any community in which he lived, and that community would have felt better and would have been better, because of his having been its resident. His inclinations and efforts always were for the advancement of mankind. While his instinct for business was keen, that accomplishment only came from rational observation and a well-developed intellect. He had been a resident of Kansas since 1856, and saw the country grow from a wild, untamed prairie, to the golden garden of plenty, which it is today. His experiences were wide and varied and his entire life was marked by its usefulness, generosity and faithfulness. All the world can stand up and say: "Here was a man."

William D. Rippey

William D. Rippey was born near Benton, Elkhart County, Ind., Sept. 28, 1833. He was the son of Matthew Rippey, one of the pioneers of that section of the Hoosier state. He received his education at Fort Wayne University. When twenty-one years old he went to Iowa. That was in 1854, when the state was little more than a wilderness. He was engaged by the government for the survey of some of its lands; and, at the completion of the work in 1856, he came to Kansas, arriving in this state on May 4 of that year.

Having been born and reared on a farm, the early environment gave him an insight into land values, in the different states, that was to prove immensely valuable to him later. While he was but a very young man when he came West, it was noticed frequently by the older settlers, and often remarked upon, that he was the best judge of a piece of land it was ever their good fortune to meet.

Immediately upon reaching Kansas, Mr. Rippey started to purchase and cling to land that had been placed on the market by the government. He had never manifested any liking for other pursuits and made a study of property, particularly land values. It was the business of his long and useful life. His judgment was never questioned, and many of his oldest friends believe that he was infallible. The fortune which he amassed gives conclusive proof that they were not far wrong.

Mr. Rippey was reputed to be the largest landowner in Doniphan County and by some was thought to have more holdings than any other man in the state. It was said that he had the title, at one time, to 2,000 acres in Doniphan County alone, all of which is extensively cultivated and is considered the most valuable farming land in the county. In addition to these immense holdings, he owned about six or seven thousand acres in Anderson County, Kan., and almost an entire township of the best land in the Panhandle section of Texas.

Practically all of the Anderson County property is under cultivation, and the receipts from the corn and wheat crops in recent years represent a sum equivalent to a dozen small fortunes. Mr. Rippey was an extensive shipper of fine cattle for more than thirty years, and his time was almost wholly devoted to his landed properties and their allied interests.

The subject of this sketch was noted all during his life for his public spirit. He never had a desire for public office, although there were times when he could have been elected to any place that the people had the power to give. He was always exceedingly liberal in politics and never failed to take a deep interest in public affairs. Whenever the issue in controversy seemed to be nearest the right, Mr. Rippey always gave that side his unqualified support.

In June, 1862, Mr. Rippey was married to Miss Eliza Keeney, who died in 1867. In January of the following year he was married to Miss Amanda C. Hopkins, who, in after years, became one of the best-known women in Kansas. Miss Hopkins was born in Genessee County, New York, on Dec. 22, 1837, and during her childhood, came with her parents to Elkhart County, Indiana. She graduated from Hillsdale College, Michigan, in 1862, and taught school for about ten years. The marriage of Miss Hopkins and Mr. Rippey took place at the home of her mother in Goshen, Indiana, and she left with her husband at once for her future home in Doniphan County.

While taking a post-graduate course at Ann Arbor, Mich., Mrs. Rippey joined the Methodist Episcopal Church and until her death, on Aug. 23, 1901, was a most zealous worker and advocate of that denomination. She was interested in all humanity and gave her attention particularly to Sunday school work and the cause of temperance. Because of her interest in these things, she was elected a delegate to the Methodist General Conference that met in New York City in 1888, and took a leading part in the discussion relative to the admission of the women delegates.

Mr. Rippey, several years ago, made a donation to Baker University of $11,000. This is the college of the Methodist Church at Baldwin City, Kan., and in it he took much pride. In 1906, there was a controversy regarding the proposed removal of the college, and Mr. Rippey offered to donate $100,000 to the institution should it be located in Topeka. President Murlin of the university, received Mr. Rippey's offer, but the school was not moved. Mr. Rippey was of the opinion that the school could do better work if located in the capital city of the state.

Mr. Rippey had but one child, a daughter, Emma, who is Mrs. Robert W. Ware of Severance, Doniphan County. She was married March 16, 1883, and seven children, all living, were born to the union. They are five boys and two girls; William L., Frank E., Harry W., Charles W., and Toll R.; Beulah, now Mrs. J. N. Garretson of Texas, and Miss Vivian, who at present is at home with her parents.

After the death of his wife in 1901, Mr. Rippey made his home with his daughter, Mrs. Ware. He was an invalid and had turned over the management of his huge interests to his daughter. She is one of the leading women of the county and has a delightful personality, inheriting all of her father's sound judgment and expert management in business affairs. She was a great comfort to Mr. Rippey in his declining years, and her soothing touch was with him to the last.

After a useful life Mr. Rippey died March 3, 1915.

Robert W. Ware

His Accomplished Wife and Children—How He Got His First Job and Afterward Secured a Position—The Career of a Farm Hand Who Became the Most Extensive Farmer of Doniphan County — The Wealthiest Man in Doniphan County—Has Extensive Interests in Other Counties.

If ever industry, self-denial, honesty and integrity have been exemplified, it is in the success of Robert W. Ware, of Severance. Much has been written and said of what these qualities can and will do for their possessor, but it is seldom that one sees a concrete example of their virtues in this day and age. We hear much of self-made men in these times; but very frequently there is exaggeration in the tales, but in the case of Mr. Ware there is the literal truth. Born of poor parents, he faced the struggle against the world with a stout heart, a smiling countenance and an unconquerable faith in himself. He never lost that faith; never wavered during the dark times that often shrouded his life and, today, he is reaping the reward in the wholehearted esteem of his fellow citizens, his possession of much of this world's goods, and a family to gladden the heart of any living being. It was not luck with Robert W. Ware. It was pluck, perseverence and energy. They are indeed a most happy combination.

Robert W. Ware was born in Grant County, Ind., on March 16, 1856. His parents were John and Rachael Ware, of those sturdy, strong, vigorous pioneers who invaded a new country and brought with them all of the best traditions of the old, and the energy, intelligence and spirit which has characterized this Middle West of ours. It was into no pampered home that the young Robert saw the first light. There were no pampered homes in those days. The elder Mr. and Mrs. Ware were not wealthy. Neither were they poor. They were of the stern, yet loving, firm yet forgiving, and thrifty yet generous people who had a mission in life and went at that mission with all their soul and body. Their aim was to make a home out of that then unsettled country.

Young Robert, during his infancy, showed the traits that later brought his marked success. There is no record to show that he was any different from any other child, except that he might have cried a little harder when he wanted something or walked a little earlier in life than most children; but these were only the outcroppings of the characteristics that he inherited, and were really a help to him in later life. He pretty generally got what he wanted if he went after it hard enough; and all of his friends and acquaintances will testify that Robert W. Ware always goes after everything hard, once he gets started. At any rate he passed through that period of youth, so dear to us all, in much the same manner as other boys. He played his boyish pranks and did his boyish chores with the same vim and energy; for he has always believed that a man can get as much pleasure out of work as out of play if he goes about it in the right way.

By the time young Robert was nine years old there came a big change in his life—a change that was destined to have much to do with his future. The situation in Indiana did not look favorable to his parents. There was much talk around the family table, and the boy was an interested listener. He did not understand exactly what it meant, but had a realization that from that time on there was to be new work for him to do and new responsibilities. After much discussion, John Ware and young Robert's mother decided to make a change. It was on the first day of August in 1866, that a new family that was to have an important part in the upbuilding of this community, came to Doniphan County. Little did Mr. and Mrs. Ware think at the time of the part young Robert was to play in the history of this county.

In the meanwhile, the growing boy practically began his schooling. At his mother's knee he had mastered his A. B. C.'s and the rudiments of the three R's. In that day and age, Doniphan County was far from being what it is today. The land which his parents had selected was a claim approximately one and one-half miles from what today is the thriving city of Severance. It was practically virgin soil and hard to cultivate. The elder Ware, however, was not to be daunted by such adversities, and plunged into his new task. Young Robert must be sent to school. We who live in this age do not realize the handicaps under which many of the county's foremost citizens received their education. There were only rough, uncouth log huts—they were nothing else—and these served for institutions of learning. The teachers, while kindly intentioned, were on the hit-and-miss plan. Very few of them were erudite. Many worked on the farms during the summer months and practically all received their pay in the form of board and "lodgin'."

The nearest school to the Ware tract was two miles distant, and young Robert Ware started for his education. Week in and week out he trudged his way twice a day. In the winter months it was bitter cold and in the early spring days there were the heavy rains, but there was seldom a day that the young boy missed. And his day was not done with school, for after reaching home there were the chores. What boy does not know the terrible burden they seemed at the time? Robert, however, met them with stolidity, and early and late he was helping his sterling father and mother to make a proper place for themselves in this new land of opportunity. A land where thrift, hard work and intelligent effort were needed to induce the goddess of fortune to pour the golden blessings from her horn of plenty. Young Ware studied with thoroughness. He read everything he could get his hands on, with avidity. The school teacher, perhaps, was of the kind that did not spare the rod to spoil the child, but such treatment was not needed on the boy. He mastered all of the rudiments of what is now the graded schools, and took up some of the higher branches; obtaining in all what would be equivalent to a high school education, although, perhaps, some of the flourishes were omitted.

When he reached the age of sixteen, Robert W. Ware was experiencing the first flush of his young manhood. He was restless under the inactivity of school. His parents were doing splendidly and all around him were harvests of silver-lined opportunities. He wanted to go out in the world for himself and make money. "There is no further need for me here with you," he argued to his father and mother, "and I want to get out in the world for myself. I believe I can make good." How well placed was his confidence in himself is shown conclusively at this later day, by the success he has achieved and the high position he occupies among his co-citizens and fellow-workers. At any rate, he obtained his parents' consent and, bidding them farewell, he started forth.

He was just sixteen years old when his first position was obtained. "Do you want a good man?" he asked of William Symns, a farmer about twelve miles south of Troy in Wayne township. Mr. Symns looked at the interrogator; smiled at his boyish faith in his budding manhood, and then glanced at the stern look on his face. "Yes, come to work," was Mr. Symns' reply, and Robert Ware had his first job. It was a job, too. There was no dearth of work. Just what his first wages were Mr. Ware has never told, but the probability is that he was proud of them. Suffice to say at this point that they were not $20 a day nor $16.00 a month, for that matter, because in those times a farmer could not afford to pay the latter price, much less the former; and there were men to be obtained much cheaper. The boy—for, despite his avid assertions, he was little more than that—made good from the start. It was no easy task, "working out," and it taxed one's endurance, strength and stamina almost to the breaking point. Robert Ware held on, however. He had the opportunity of making frequent trips to his home, and there he received the counsel and advice of his loving father and mother.

Mr. Ware has often said that to his mother, more than to any other one person, he owes his early start in life, and the high ideals and purposes to which he has tenaciously clung. From her he obtained the fine sense of honor which he possesses, his dauntless courage, his fidelity to his convictions, his reverence of God, and his love of humanity and justice. She inculcated in his mind all of the right thoughts and traits that go to make up the real man he has shown himself to be. Her teachings have been forever before him; and during his first troublous years, when the inevitable struggle is going on to obtain a place in the world, it was the remembrance of her inspiring thoughts that kept him firm to his purpose and prevented him from being swept aside in the maelstrom of temptation.

At the conclusion of two years' service with Mr. Symns, Mr. Ware—for he then had reached the age that all young men secretly like to be called by that euphonious title—began to assert his marked tendency to get ahead. While Mr. Symns was a kind employer, that was not the chance that the now famous citizen wanted. It was only a job, and he wanted an opportunity. So he left. And now comes the turning point in his career. The poet tells us that there is a tide which, if taken at the ebb, leads on to greater things, and Robert W. Ware most assuredly grasped his tide at the ebb when he entered the employ of William D. Rippey, philanthropist, humanitarian and grand old man of Doniphan County, who later became young Ware's father-in-law. The occasion, as Mr. Ware has since described it, was the banner day in his life—the day he became Mr. Rippey's employe.

Mr. Rippey, who now has gone to his well-earned rest behind the heavenly gates, had a faculty for judging men, and he must have known when young Ware made application to him, that the future would justify his faith, as it since has so gloriously done. Mr. Rippey may not have had the clairvoyant sense to see to what heights Mr. Ware was to go; but, before his death, he lived to see one of the most successful, honest and honored men in the county grow out of that young man he employed back in 1876. No one has ever attempted to cast an aspersion on Mr. Ware's name, and he is as free from any taint of any violation of the rules which govern the righteous, as a new born babe.

To get back to our story, Mr. Ware received the munificent salary of $18 a month. Imagine with what frugality he lived. Mr. Rippey, while kindly, was also keen. He wanted to help the future honored citizen of Doniphan County instead of hindering him. Mr. Ware was given responsibility from the start. His big, strong, courageous nature did not shrink under it. Indeed, he accepted each new task that brought hard, grinding work, with just a little more of a smile than he had the last, and put into it all of the fine qualifications which he possesses. He also saved money. It sounds incredible, but Mr. Ware accomplished it, for he had a vision and it was of his own pecuniary independence and a higher place for himself in the world.

As time went on and Mr. Ware accepted his duties with that cheerfulness and willingness which has always characterized him, he began to rise in the estimation of his employer. Mr. Rippey was the most generous of men. He was highly respected and honored in the community, had made a place for himself in financial circles and he saw in Mr. Ware the sort of a man he wanted to succeed him. He not only spoke kind words, but he showed his appreciation and interest in a more substantial way. The man who now stands at the top-most rung of the ladder of success, found his salary increasing by leaps and bounds—it was a salary, and not wages; it was a position, he now held, and not a job—and he also began to get chances for improvement, chances that have now shown that they were not a mere chimera.

There was also a greater incentive than ever for him to reach the goal of his ambitions. During his work he had met Miss Emma J. Rippey, who is now Mrs. Robert W. Ware. She was the daughter of his employer, and the two met not infrequently. Their acquaintance, which was a mere friendship at its conception, gradually ripened into that deeper feeling which blesses God's earth. This was in 1879-1880. The attraction and love were mutual. Miss Rippey was not only of a charming manner and disposition, but she had inherited all of her father's wonderful and magnetic qualities, so there was soon the announcement of an engagement. The two were united in holy matrimony on the fifteenth day of March, 1883, and if there ever has been a man and woman exemplifying the nobility, uprightness and felicity of conjugal happiness, they are Mr. and Mrs. Robert W. Ware.

Mrs. Ware is one of the most angelic women that God has placed on this earth. Blessed with a soul as tried and true as steel, a sunny and radiant disposition and a love of all humanity, she has brought not only to her husband and her home, but to the entire population of Doniphan County, a wealth of happiness and cheer. To Mr. Ware, in times of stress and adversity, as well as in his days when the fickle goddess smiled down on him, she has ever been a source of inspiration. Her faith in him was unbounded. She has encouraged him in his every venture, and brought Heaven down to his door. In her home she has been to her family and friends a glorious blending of inspiring and harmonious qualities.

Mrs. Ware, as we have said, inherited many of her splendid qualities from her beloved and honored father. She was born in Holt County, Mo., Oct. 14, 1864. Mrs. Rippey, at the time, was visiting her mother, and, as soon as she was able to do so, returned to her beautiful home here in Doniphan County with the future Mrs. Robert W. Ware. The latter, a pink-cheeked, rosy bundle of humanity, was three weeks old when she arrived in Severance. In girlhood she was given a most thorough education; although, if she had only had the close association of her talented father and mother, it would have been practically sufficient. When seventeen years old she was taken with her father on an extensive tour of Europe, and afterwards on a thorough tour of the United States. This extensive travel gave her a greater insight into the good and beautiful, and was, in itself, a liberal education. She is, perhaps, the most indefatigable worker in the cause of charity, and for the church, in eastern Kansas.

These trips abroad and in this country were just two of the numberless wise and generous steps of her talented father, William D. Rippey. It was to inculcate in her a love of country, which it succeeded in doing. Mrs. Ware traveled over Kansas many times, and there is no woman a more loyal Kansan than she. As for Doniphan County, practically every nook of it is an open book to her, and to her husband. As an instance of her love of sentiment and all that is beautiful in it, it is a noteworthy fact that Mrs. Ware still insists on living in the old home, in one of the rooms of which she was married. Although it is possible for them to build an ideal home if they wanted to do so, she clings to the old with its dear associations and fond memories of her girlhood and her father and mother. Nothing could be more significant of her modest, home-loving and kindly disposition.

And now comes another interesting and grand part of the married life of Mr. and Mrs. Ware, adding luster to their fame as one of the foremost and most distinguished families in Doniphan County. Seven children have been born to their union, and around their hearthstone are clustered all of the traditions which go to make up the ideal. All of the children were brought into the world in the same house in Severance that the family still occupies. What a cluster of hallowed and sacred remembrances there are in that dwelling place.

The first child to gladden the hearts of the two came in 1888, and he was named William L. Ware. As will be seen, he is now thirty-one years old, and at present is superintendent of his parents' enormous properties in Anderson County, Kan. He also is a large real estate dealer, having his offices and home at Garnett. The second child came in 1887 and was named Frank E. At present he is one of the largest farmers in the state of Texas. He has more than one thousand acres in the Panhandle region and all of it is under cultivation or used by the cattle. It is, perhaps, the most valuable land in the Panhandle section. Harry W. Ware is twenty-six years old, and at present is farming the old, original Rippey place, which his grandfather, the well-known W. D. Rippey, pre-empted many years ago when the land was uncleared, as a timber claim. Charles W. Ware is nineteen years old; is clinging to the home ties, although he is a busy young man, being engaged with his father in farming at McAllen, Texas, having charge of practically the entire tract. Toll R. Ware is eighteen, and is also at home. He is still a boy and is in high school at Severance. Upon his completion this year, he will finish his studies at the Kansas University, at Lawrence. This completes the list of the boys. Beulah, thirty years old, who is the wife of J. N. Garretson of Panhandle, Texas, and Vivian A., fourteen years old, who is still at home under her mother's able and kindly training, are the daughters.

Perhaps no family in Kansas has the real estate holdings controlled by Mr. and Mrs. Ware. In all, they total approximately 21,000 acres in different sections of the Middle West and Southwest. And these holdings are not scattered in small parcels. They are compact properties. In Doniphan County alone, they own 1,200 acres; in Anderson County, Kan., 5,000 acres; in the Panhandle of Texas, 14,260 acres; in the lower Rio Grande Valley, near McAllen, Texas, 265 acres, and 14 acres adjoining the city of Topeka, Kan. These holdings are the most valuable that could be had, and it is doubtful if their equal could be found in the United States today.

Needless to say, the children of Mr. and Mrs. Ware are not only "making good" in the lines of endeavor the older ones have selected, but they bid fair to be as popular and as highly honored as their parents. The boys have inherited from their father that high sense of duty, honesty and love of justice and humanity which has made his name famous in the county. As for the girls, they have obtained from their mother her recipe for an unswerving fidelity to a high ideal, her lofty character, charming manner and enticing disposition. Nothing could be of more gratification to Mr. and Mrs. Ware than the knowledge that the offspring of their union will follow in their steps and endeavor to keep emblazoned upon their banners the sacred traditions and purposes of the family name.

Mr. and Mrs. Ware occupy a unique and exalted position, not only in Severance, but in the whole of Doniphan County. They have spent almost their entire lives here, where they have an exceptionally large circle of friends. Mr. Ware, because of the respect with which he is accorded in the community, has frequent opportunities to display those sterling qualities which have made him so universally honored. He is the confidante of hundreds of men wishing business advice. He has their esteem and through it, their confidence. "Honest Bob Ware," he has been called, and he deserves the name. To no man does he turn a deaf ear, when a worthy appeal is made, whether it be for advice or the loan of a sum to put through a business deal or make smoother a rough place in the uneven roadway of life. There is many a good cause that has received its support from Mr. Ware, who is loath to accept the credit for his good qualities. Of Mrs. Ware, every one in the county knows. She, perhaps, is more widely known than any other woman in the county. Her esteemed father left her a glorious heritage which time cannot efface. She is living up to all of the traditions of the family name. Mr. and Mrs. Robert W. Ware, may you live long and continue to bask in the sunshine of God's prosperity, for you are children after His heart, is the wish of the editor of this edition.

Dr. John M. Riley

A Capable Young Man—Has Worked Up An Enviable Reputation as a Dentist—A Good Asset to the Town.

There is an old saying that a fair exchange is no robbery, and it is a true one. For proof, witness the exchange between Dr. John M. Riley, A. B., D. D. S., and the city of Severance. Dr. Riley, a young, progressive and thoroughly competent dentist, went to Severance less than two years ago, and Severance traded him its cordial welcome and patronage for the services of a fine, splendid, upright young man. And Dr. Riley is all of that and perhaps a little bit more. Right now it's hard to state which got the best of the transaction, if there was any best to be had. Dr. Riley is more than satisfied with Severance and Severance has opened its arms to him. What was that about a fair exchange?

Dr. John M. Riley is of that type of alert, sober-minded young dentists, who are revolutionizing old-fashioned theories and giving to the world a service that is both up to date and conscientiously honest. He is one of the men in his profession who combine an expert's knowledge of his business with the ethics of his avocation and yet are hustlers enough to get out and make the opportunity. That is what Dr. Riley has done and is doing. You will see how the citizens of Severance have shown their appreciation of such a young man.

Dr. Riley was born on a farm. Through and through he is a product of the open country. His clear-cut, honest and above-board method of doing business bear witness to this. His birth occurred in Buchanan County, Mo., near the city of DeKalb, on Dec. 18, 1880. As a boy he went to the common schools and passing through the grades, entered the high school at DeKalb. Long before his course was completed he had made up his mind what he wanted to do, but the way wasn't quite clear, so instead of going direct to a dental school, he determined to make a thorough job of it and get a bachelor of art's degree before entering on his professional studies. This step was a laudable one and only shows his sagacity, while the fact that he obtained his A. B. demonstrates beyond any shadow of a doubt that he desired to be well fitted for this life and his profession.

After leaving high school, Dr. Riley entered William Jewell College at Liberty, Mo. Here he studied and worked for four years, paying a part of his tuition through his labors outside of study hours. After receiving his diploma in 1906 it was necessary for him to do something for a time in order to obtain funds to further pursue his intended course in dentistry, so he decided upon teaching. For two years he was professor of history and English at the Edgerton Presbyterian Academy, Edgerton, Mo. Here he was a favorite not only with the pupils who came under this care and instruction, but among the faculty as well. Teaching, however, was not his aim, so he left and went to Kansas City. He had funds enough to matriculate at the Kansas City Dental College, and in 1911 he graduated with the highest honors in his class.

The two years following were spent in actual practice in Kansas City. As is very nearly always the case, his scope was necessarily limited, and he decided to cast about for a broader field. During his investigations he paid a visit to Severance, where he had some friends, and the result was that he purchased the residence and practice of Dr. Eugene Thille. That was on May 1, 1914. To demonstrate with what regard he is now held by the citizens of Severance, he was elected alderman at the last election by a big majority. Dr. Riley is of the type of young men that is bound to succeed no matter what the venture. He has the personality, and much more than the required ability and faculty of making friends. Today practically everyone in Severance knows and esteems him because of his own merit.

He is very active in church work in his home, being a member of the First Christian Church. In all of the movements which are for civic betterment he has his part and it is often a heavy one. Also he is interested in lodge work, being a Royal Arch Mason. Severance citizens of all classes are unanimous in their praise of the young dentist, and all predict a most successful future for him. His business, already large, is increasing daily. Dr. Riley has never married, but hopes to some day, and the young lady who wins his heart will live in joy and peace forever.

Wm. Schwab

Wm. Schwab, who resides one-half mile east of Bendena, was born in New Orleans, Louisiana, December 19, 1851. Moved to Quincy, Ill., when a child. His mother had died in New Orleans, and his father enlisted in the army and died in the army, leaving him an orphan at the age of eight years. He was what they called bound out in those days, to a farmer, and stayed with him until he was married to Miss Melissa J. Howard of Adams County, Illinois, September 10, 1876. Has three sons, Howard, Frederick A., Wm. A.; girls, four, Florence M., Clara D., Nellie M., Carrie R. Came to Doniphan County Aug. 14, 1879, with only $300 in cash, and settled on the farm he is now on, of 160 acres, general farming and stock raising and shipping.

Wm. C. Albers

Wm. C. Albers resides one mile west of Bendena; was born in Doniphan County, near Bendena, Sept. 29, 1879, educated in common schools and Midland College, Atchison. Married Miss Myrtle R. Hackney, also of Doniphan County, June 6, 1906. Has three daughters, Elva, Merle and Vera. Was engaged four years in lumber business and five years in bank in Bendena. Moved on farm he now owns spring of 1913. Farms eighty acres and raises stock.

The Norway Saloon—How It Was Put Out of Business.

Up in Norway, which is now Moray, in the early part of 1884, a man from St. Joseph opened a saloon. It was a small building and a very tough place. Before the doors had been opened for the second week's trade, the boys came in one night, drank a little too much, and ordered the proprietor out. He went. Then they proceeded to shoot up the emporium, after which they simply turned it upside down and departed. The keeper, from a place of security in a corn-field, witnessed the ceremonies and without protest or an au revoir, he departed for home the next day. It was the first and last saloon in Norway.

Charles I. Moyer

Wealthy Doniphan County Farmer Owns Three Thousand, Two Hundred Acres of Valuable Land, Situated in Three Different States—Lives Two and a Half Miles Northwest of Severance in One of the Most Modern and Substantial Farm Houses in the State of Kansas—Extensive Feeder and Shipper of Shorthorn Cattle—Only Child of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Moyer, Who Settled in Doniphan County in 1866—Four Daughters Compose a Quartet in Great Demand for Entertainments All Over the County—Residence Cost Almost $14,000.

Three thousand, two hundred acres of valuable land, situated in three different states, comprise some of the possessions of Charles I. Moyer, one of the leading men among the wealthy farming element of Doniphan County. Mr. Moyer's holdings are in three parcels, one in Doniphan County, one in Sheridan County, Nebraska, and one in Custer County, South Dakota. Every foot of these lands is highly productive for both agricultural, stock raising and stock feeding purposes.

Although not a native son of Doniphan County, Mr. Moyer was reared here since he was eighteen months old. He was educated in the common schools and in Highland University, where he took a two years course. Ever since leaving school Mr. Moyer has devoted his entire time to farming and stock raising and in that capacity proved to be a worthy son of a worthy sire. Charles I. Moyer is descended from sturdy ancestors who for generations were thrifty and industrious tillers of the soil. That they have left an indelible impress of their sterling character on the subject of this sketch is unmistakably evidenced by his many fine qualities of ability, industry and equanimity. Mr. Moyer was born December 23, 1864, on a farm near Belleview, Sandusky County, Ohio. His parents were both raised in the Buckeye State, although his paternal ancestors had for generations back been numbered among the substantial farmers and land owners in central Pennsylvania.

Charles I. Moyer is the son of Samuel and Barbara (Haaser) Moyer. His father was descended from the early settlers in Pennsylvania among the German colony and his mother was descended from French ancestors on both sides of the family. Samuel Moyer, father of Charles I., was born in Union County, Pennsylvania, on March 20, 1839. He was the son of Samuel and Eva (Kline) Moyer, both of whom were natives of the Keystone State. Mrs. Barbara (Haaser) Moyer, Charles' mother, was the daughter of Joseph Haaser and Catherine (Yost) Haaser, both natives of France. She was born in Sandusky County, Ohio, on April 12, 1842.

Charles I. Moyer's father went to Ohio with his parents when a youth and finished his education in that state. The grand parents of Charles I. had settled on a farm in Sandusky County and there his father took up his life work after leaving school. On December 31, 1861, Charles I. Moyer's parents were married in Belleview, Ohio. His father was twenty-two years old at the time and his mother was nineteen. After the birth of Charles I., in 1864, his parents heard the call of "Westward-Ho" being wafted along the zephyrs that originated in Kansas. It was so alluring that some months later they started west and arrived in Doniphan County in March, 1866.

Samuel Moyer settled on a farm near Severance and it was here that Charles I. Moyer grew to manhood and has lived ever since. All his years have been devoted to the pursuits of his ancestors after leaving school. His father had been an intelligent farmer and stock dealer and young Charles was apt enough to become thoroughly familiar with every branch of the business long before he reached his majority.

The success which Charles I. Moyer has achieved in his farming operations in Doniphan County and elsewhere is something phenomenal, and is the result of an almost constant devotion to their interests by himself and his wife, for hand in hand they have worked together and, with the encouragement of their children, have seen the home farm each year yield bountiful returns, and in addition to its acres have added to their landed possessions.

"The old home place," or the Charles I. Moyer home farm, is situated two and one-half miles northwest of Severance and is one of the beauty spots of Wolf River Township. It contains four hundred and eighty acres of as prime land as can be found in any section of Doniphan County. There is considerable agriculture of almost every variety promoted on the place and Mr. Moyer specializes in short horn cattle of which he is an extensive feeder and shipper.

Residence of Charles I. Moyer, located in Wolf River Township.

In addition to the home place Mr. Moyer owns thirteen hundred and sixty acres of fine land in Sheridan County, Nebraska, which is entirely devoted to farming. He also is the owner of thirteen hundred and sixty acres in Custer County, South Dakota, which is all given over to a cattle ranch where some of the finest thoroughbreds in the country are bred and fed until they are in condition for the block.

The residence of Charles I. Moyer is an ideal farm home. It is one of the model places in Doniphan County. The house contains twelve rooms, with two bath rooms and sewing room. Every modern improvement has been installed. It compares favorably with the finest residence in any metropolitan city in the country. The plumbing system is the latest and most approved that has ever been figured out. It is perfect in every detail. There is hot and cold running water, both soft and well water, all over the house, which is heated throughout by the latest improved furnace. The system of gas lighting is a revelation to those not familiar with that method of illumination, and it never fails to work to perfection.

The cost of constructing the Charles I. Moyer residence was approximately $14,000, and every penny of the money shows an intelligent and judicious outlay. From an exterior point of view the house is architectually attractive and has been carefully planned down to the smallest detail. It is the interior, however, where the Moyer home has all the aspects of thoroughness and tasteful arrangement. It is superbly finished in hardwood throughout and the mantels and grates are both artistic in design and elegant in execution. Everywhere the eye rests there is an unmistakable indication of solid comfort, and the furnishings of the entire house are fit for a palace.

The old Moyer home burned February 20, 1910, causing the family a great deal of inconvenience both on account of the loss entailed and the inclement weather.

All of the years of his boyhood were but the stepping stones to the successful career that was to follow. There, associated with his father and with others who were experts in farm managements and in breeding and raising livestock, he gained a knowledge more practical than any that could have been acquired by years of schooling in the best agricultural and animal husbandry schools in the land. He loved the farm and he loved the animals which grew upon the farm—and with such an abiding love there could be no other pursuit for this boy. But thoroughly to equip himself for that pursuit he must have more of an education than the country schools afforded; he realized that in these modern times it is the educated farmer who succeeds best. He entered Highland College and applied himself studiously to acquire the education that was essential to a well-rounded young farmer.

After completing his studies in Highland University, Charles I. Moyer returned to the farm and has been a busy man ever since. His interests kept expanding with gratifying regularity until today he is conceded to be one of the largest and most extensive farmers in this section of the country. When twenty-four years of age he was married to Miss Anna Vigus, whose parents, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. T. Vigus, resided near Severance. Miss Vigus was born in Buchanan County, Missouri, and was a young girl on her marriage on New Year's day, 1889.

The union of this young couple may be said to have been the consummation of an ideal relationship that was to count for success and future happiness for them and for their children and their children's children. Mr. and Mrs. Moyer were son and daughter of farmers who had been successful in farm management and had been honored as among the best citizens of the communities in which they resided. Each was equipped with a good education and with the practical knowledge needed for the establishment of a home in Kansas that would indeed be an ideal home, and such a home as should be the proper place for the rearing of a family of children to honor them and the name of Moyer.

There have been five girls and two boys born to the union of Mr. and Mrs. Moyer, six of whom are living. One of the boys, Samuel, who was named after his grandfather and great grandfather, died October 10, 1914, causing a pall of grief to fall over the happy Moyer household. He was an exceptionally bright boy and a great favorite with his school mates. His death was a terrible shock to his fond parents and to the entire neighborhood, as everybody loved and admired the boy. The other children in the Moyer family are: Barbara, now Mrs. Harry Ware, who was married January 7, 1910, at her home; Alma, Hada, Donna, now Mrs. Arthur Loroff, was married December 11, 1915, the Rev. C. C. Clampitt of Severance, pastor of the M. E. Church, officiating, and Loretta, and Charles I., the baby, who is eleven years old. The children have all been given every educational advantage possible and the Moyer home is marked for its tone of culture and refinement.

The four "A" girls now in the Moyer household—Alma, Hada, Donna and Loretta—are exceedingly musical and constitute the Moyer Sisters Quartette known throughout the state of Kansas for the delightful entertainments they furnish to admiring audiences. There is scarcely a social, religious or philanthropic event of any note held within the confines of the county at which they are not the headline entertainers. They have a natural gift for music and their well trained and modulated voices thrill their audiences wherever the four sisters appear.

A thick volume might be written descriptive of Charles I. Moyer's farms in the three states mentioned, together with their equipment, their management and their productions. It is worthy of note that each of these farms is kept in a good state of improvement and they are given the best of management. The home farm in Doniphan County is one of the best in this part of the United States, while the others are not valued at so much per acre as the home farm, are nevertheless, highly productive and are of great value, as land is valued in these times by what it will produce.

Mr. Moyer is a grower of grains and grasses on a large scale, but he also is a grower and feeder and dealer in livestock on a large scale. His pastures are roamed by cattle, some of which he breeds, others he buys, but all given the kind of care and feeding that shows large returns when they are sold on the market. He is also a breeder and feeder of hogs, with which he has been successful. He is equipped for doing business on a big scale and his operations are, in fact, conducted on a big scale. He raises his own feed, puts it into live stock, sells the stock and then buys more stock to feed and fatten and sell. It is a sort of an endless chain process, and it wins first, last and nearly all the time. Mr. Moyer is a business farmer. He applies business rules and methods to farming, and with his extensive holdings of lands it requires as much or more business ability to successfully manage thirty-two hundred acres as it does to manage the business of many of the large mercantile or manufacturing establishments owned, operated and managed by corporations. Charles I. Moyer is a business manager, although he's a farmer.

It would scarcely be doing full justice to close this sketch without giving the reader a clearer insight to the methods of this successful farmer and live stock man that have so generously aided him at every turn of the highway to prosperity and wealth. In these days thousands of ambitious men and women are seeking to know the methods and rules by which success has come to others. The answer might be given in a word, in a sentence, or in a set of rules. With Charles I. Moyer, however, several things have combined to spell success in capital letters. First, he has a knowledge of farming and livestock, that is based on practical experience. He has confidence in himself, in his ability to grapple with the problems of farming, big and little. He has the ingenuity to plan and the industry to carry out his plan. He has faith in the All-Wise Creator, that he who sows and sows rightly shall reap. And these, along with sane living and right thinking, are all-sufficient for the achievement of success.

Thomas H. Franklin

The Noted Professor of Chemistry in Leland Stanford University Is a Native of Doniphan County, Kansas, and Is Proud of It. —His Brother, William S. Franklin, Also Is a Distinguished Educator, and His Sister, Mrs. Nellie Troutman, an Accomplished Musician—The Father a Pioneer Miller, Now Retired.

Doniphan County people are proud to claim as one of their own the distinguished professor of chemistry in the great Leland Stanford University, Edward C. Franklin, for it was in old Geary City, on the bank of the Missouri River, where stood the house in which Professor Franklin was born in that romantic period when the state of Kansas was in its infancy, the date being March 1, 1862.

Thomas H. Franklin, father of Edward C. Franklin, was a Pennsylvanian, born in Philadelphia, January 31, 1834. He was married June 12, 1861, to Miss Cynthia A. Curtis, who was born June 10, 1837, in Tennessee. Their wedding took place at Wathena, Kansas, the Rev. O. B. Gardner, chaplain of the Thirteenth Kansas regiment, performing the ceremony. Thomas Franklin had come out into the West in 1857, stopping in Missouri, opposite Geary City, June 10 of that year. There, for a few months, he was connected with the saw milling firm of Cadwallader & McCullough. In 1859 he went into partnership with H. Frick and Nathan Price in the saw milling business at Geary City, Kansas. Later Price sold his interest to them and they were together making flour and lumber a period of forty years, and it undoubtedly was the oldest partnership in Kansas. The saw and grist mill was moved to Doniphan in 1865 and continued to operate there until about 1880, the year the Missouri River cut into Doniphan and the mill was torn down. In 1870 Franklin and Frick, in company with Reuben Small, built the water power flour mill on Wolf River one-half mile west of Severance, completing it in 1871. Steam power had to be added a few years later. It was run continuously until 1897, when it was sold to John Ebeling and moved to Severance and rebuilt.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas H. Franklin are now living a retired life in the town of Severance. They celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage June 12, 1911. They are parents of four sons, three of whom are living, and one daughter. The eldest of the sons is Edward C. Franklin, of whose career we shall make more extended mention further on in this article.

Their second son is William S. Franklin, born in Geary City, October 27, 1863. He is a graduate of the University of Kansas, spent one year in the University of Berlin, and also took a post-graduate course at Harvard. For several years he occupied the chair of physics and electricity in the Iowa Agricultural College at Ames, and is still engaged in educational work, having been for eighteen years with Lehigh University as professor of physics and electricity. His wife was Miss Mattie Titus of Washington, Connecticut, whom he married in August, 1888. They have two sons, Curtis Titus Franklin, born at Ames, Iowa, 1893, now with the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, and Vernon Kellogg Franklin, born in Ames, Iowa, in 1898, and now a student at Yale. These young men are endowed with the ability to make a success in their chosen professions.

The other son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas H. Franklin is Thomas Z. Franklin, born in Doniphan, Kansas, May 18, 1874. He is Western special agent for the New York Underwriter Agency in Chicago. He married Miss Ethel Davis of Muncie, Indiana. This talented young man was popular with the teachers of Doniphan County while attending institutes several years ago.

The daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas H. Franklin is Mrs. Nellie Troutman, widow of the late Dr. John Troutman, a leading physician and citizen of Kansas City, Kansas, for many years. Mrs. Troutman has a voice of fine quality and also is an accomplished pianist and prominent in musical circles. She has two bright sons who are an honor to her and to their father. John Franklin Troutman is eighteen years old and Lawrence K. Troutman is fourteen years old.

Edward C. Franklin, the distinguished chemist, grew up in old Geary City and Doniphan and Severance, worked in his father's mill and attended school there and in Severance. His parents were believers in education and Edward, like his brothers and sister, were sent to the University of Kansas. After graduating there he became an assistant professor of chemistry. He went abroad and spent one year in the University of Berlin, that he might receive the benefit of instruction under the noted scientists of Germany. He also spent one year in Johns Hopkins University at Baltimore as an instructor. In 1899 this celebrated Kansas scientist was called to the Leland Stanford University to occupy the position of professor of chemistry in that great American educational institution, and he is still there. While occupying this high position, the United States government, needing his services, called him to Washington, where he remained during 1911 and 1913 under leave of absence. He returned to the Leland Stanford University when his mission for the government was ended.

Edward C. and William S. Franklin are of those learned men with whom it is a pleasure to converse and to know. They are genial, whole-souled and warm hearted, and are favorites with the students who have gone through the University under them and have thousands of admiring friends, and these men are recognized as the world's highest authorities on chemistry and physics.

E. C. Franklin married Miss Effie June Scott of Iola, Kansas. They have three children, one daughter and two sons. Anna C. Franklin is seventeen years old, Charles Scott Franklin is fourteen years old, and John Curtis Franklin is ten years old. These sons could do no better than to emulate their father.

Charles I. Moyer's sheep barn, where thousands of sheep have been fed for market during the past few years.

SHEEP FEEDING

Charles Moyer's Success in the Business.

Sheep feeding has become an industry of considerable importance among the farmers in the western part of Doniphan County, and the largest herd we can think of was fed by Charles I. Moyer during the winter of 1911. The picture accompanying this article shows his barn and stock. During the last four or five years the sheep men have made good money and there have been times when they have received as high as $2 per hundred above any former price paid. The outlook this year is favorable.

About all the sheep fed here are lambs. They are shipped to the St. Joseph market from the big ranges in Idaho and Wyoming. In the stockyards at St. Joseph, where most of them are purchased, that are brought to this county for feeding, they are culled, fat ones being bought by the packers and the lean ones and the lambs culled out for feeding purposes. These are purchased by the local feeders, shipped and fattened for a period of from three to six months and then placed on the market.

The weather has a great deal to do with the success of the sheep feeder, according to Mr. Moyer, who most assuredly knows his business. Cold rains and snow are against their gaining in weight. To do well, feeding must be done with regularity, the feed troughs kept clean and the sheep must be bedded, especially in wet weather. Cattle can be held indefinitely in case it is thought their weight will increase. With lambs it is different. If they go much above eighty pounds they cease to bring good prices, so the greatest care must be exercised. Mr. Moyer has made an exceptionally fine success of the business.

Elbert Ladwig

Was born October 10, 1879, on the Robert Ladwig farm, one mile east of Bendena; was married to Miss Elizabeth L. Zimmerman on April 16, 1907. This union has been blessed with one child, Maureen Margaret, who was born November 12, 1908. Mr. Ladwig's father came to Doniphan County in 1870 and resided here until a few years ago, when he turned the farm over to his son and moved to St. Joseph. Elbert owns 160 acres in the southwest corner of Center Township, but resides on the old home place in Wayne Township. Is an extensive stock dealer and a good citizen.

The Cyclone of 1865

A cyclone which, J. J. Baker says, caused death and injury to persons and great damage to property, passed through the northeast part of Doniphan County on June 15, 1865. The cyclone started near the present Ratcliff station and traveled northeast to the Missouri River bluff before it spent its force. In the path of destruction, some thirty rods wide, it demolished the house occupied by the Rittenhouse family near the present Mt. Zion church, in Iowa Township, also killing a milk cow and carrying away a farm wagon which was never heard of afterward. It uprooted trees and tore down fences on the old homestead of J. J. Baker's father, now the oldest lawyer in the county. It partly destroyed the Rawles home, where A. J. Hedrick now lives, and passing through Sparks wrecked the house of J. A. Kennedy on the hill south of town, now owned by Cyrus Leland. The Shirley house west of Sparks was torn down, and several members of the family were hurt. One-half mile northeast of Sparks, the Frazier home was torn to pieces, Mr. Frazier was killed and all the members of his family injured more or less seriously. One of the Frazier girls is Mrs. Joseph Collins, now living at Robinson, her face still scarred from being struck by a piece of timber. Another daughter of the Fraziers is now the widow of Cal Ball of Iowa Point.

Suicide of Abraham Lincoln Snyder

A suicide for which there apparently was no accounting was that of Abraham Lincoln Snyder, which took place on the farm of Charles F. Acker, April 13, 1895, in Iowa Township. While the teacher was absent Snyder entered the house and crawled under the bed in a room occupied by Miss Hastings, a school teacher, and one of the children. When his presence was discovered by the child he ran from the house with his gun in one hand and a hammer in the other, with which he afterward beat himself on the head. Reaching a secluded place, he rested the gun on the ground and, placing the muzzle to his head, pulled the trigger with his foot. No one heard the report of the gun. A farm hand, who went to care for the stock found Snyder dying the next morning. Dr. Dinsmore, the coroner, when summoned by Mr. Acker, who was attending court in Troy at the time, learned no facts beyond the mere circumstances of the suicide.

Cyclone Struck Troy

About three o'clock Sunday afternoon, May 13, 1897, a young cyclone struck this locality. From all accounts the whirlwind organized some two or three miles southwest of town and expended its force on the first spot it struck. A rain set in the previous night and continued through Sunday forenoon with a cold east wind. About noon it turned warmer and the wind shifted to the south and southwest with showers at intervals. At three o'clock an ominous looking cloud came up from the southwest that attracted the attention of all who saw it. Presently it assumed the funnel shape and travelled with a spiral movement accompanied with a loud roaring. It struck the edge of the town, the bulk of its force coming upon the house at the old Jones nursery occupied by Frank L. Welton. The greater part of the roof was lifted and carried off, the wreck being carried for some distance in the street and neighboring lots. Some of the sidewalk in the vicinity was lifted and moved out of its place; small trees were twisted and broken and one spot the earth was scooped out to a depth of several inches over a space of six or eight feet square. No person was hurt and no damage of consequence was done except that to the one building.

Good roads are civilizers.

Mrs. Mary Maynes

The Widow of Thomas Maynes, One of the Early Pioneers of Kansas, Now Living at the Advanced Age of Eighty-Four Years, Is a Native of Ireland and She Has Seen Many Experiences in Her Life Time.

A remarkable career has been that of Mrs. Mary Maynes, the widow of Thomas Maynes, now eighty-four years old and a resident of Doniphan County fifty-eight years, the mother of eight children and whose landed possessions aggregate 1,120 acres of Doniphan County soil.

Mrs. Maynes' maiden name was Mary Linskey and she was born in County Galway in Ireland. She came to the United States and landed in New York in 1848 and remained there a short time and then she immigrated on to Fitchburg, Massachusetts, and remained seven years there. Thomas Maynes, who was born in County Roscommon in Ireland came to Quebec, Canada, the same year, 1848, and four years afterward he came to the United States in 1852 and stopped in Fitchburg, Massachusetts, and it was there he met Miss Mary Leynsky who after a few years acquaintance he married in 1855. They were married by a priest in Fitchburg, Massachusetts, and at once set out to found a home for themselves.

"Westward, Ho!" Was the cry of the times and thousands of young married couples were heeding the call. New England was a good place to live, but there were few opportunities for young married couples to get a good start in life. The Maynes' moved as far west as Huron County, Ohio, in the fall of 1855, but they were not long to remain in that Ohio community. They remained only 18 months. The following spring (1857) found them on their way to Kansas and they landed off a boat in April in Doniphan.

Reaching Doniphan County Thomas Maynes entered a 160-acre farm one and one-half miles east and one mile south of Severance. After proving up on that claim he moved to the town of Doniphan and remained there nine years and he never moved back to his claim again. He finally grew tired of town life and moved to a farm near Purcell, in 1866, on which he resided one year. Then, in the spring of 1867 he moved to the old home farm which he bought the fall of 1866, which is four miles south of Denton, the farm that was their first home in the new Kansas country and which they held as dearer than any other. It was a good homestead, as fine as any that could be found in the Missouri valley and promised them an abundance of everything necessary to the enjoyment of life.

Eight children came to bless the union of Thomas and Mary Maynes, six of whom are now living and two dead.

John P., the eldest, was born in the Ohio home in Huron County, a few months prior to the coming of the family to Kansas. He is still living and is engaged in farming on the old home place.

Elizabeth B., a twin sister of John P., born in Huron County, Ohio, is living at home with her mother.

Celia A., was the first child of this couple born in Doniphan, Kansas, she died February 10, 1896.

Thomas William, now living at home, was born in Doniphan, Kansas.

Julia E., the fifth child, was born in Doniphan, died July 22nd, 1891.

Catharine Louise, the sixth, was born in Doniphan, and is living at home with her mother.

Mary Agnes, the seventh, was born on the old home farm, and is now the wife of John F. Foley of Dodge City, Kansas.

Mathew L., born on the old home farm, is now living at home.

Thomas Maynes, father of these children, was a plain, hard-working man who usually succeeded at whatever he undertook to do. He was a good manager and as a farmer he learned by experience many things that brought him good returns for his efforts. He trained his sons to be successful farmers and by adding to his acres the family came into possession of one of the best farms in this section of Kansas, embracing in all 1,120 acres. The land is all near Severance and Denton and is finely situated for general farming and stock raising.

The children of Thomas and Mary Maynes are all well-to-do and an honor to their parents and the neighborhood. The sons are all steady going, hard working men like their father and prefer to remain on the big farm and cultivate the soil they love so well, or raise live stock. The daughters are good home makers and are a comfort to their aged mother as well as being esteemed by the people of the community. The sons and daughters have all received a good education and are well fitted for the duties of life.

Mrs. Mary Maynes and Daughter Catharine Louise Maynes.

Thomas Maynes, the head of this family, died at his farm home June 27, 1892, leaving his widow and her sons and daughters to run the big farm. His death was a distinct loss to the family as well as to the community, and his memory is revered by all who were fortunate in knowing his as a fine example of a man who had the nerve and the energy to make the very best of his opportunities.

The Maynes family are members of St. Benedict's Parish Church, of which the Rev. Father Matthew Bradley is the present priest. The parents were here when the parish was established in the territorial days and were among the first members and most devout worshippers.

Mrs. Mary Maynes, the widow, now eighty-four years, is so attached to the old farm on which she and her husband settled forty-eight years ago that she has no desire to leave it. It was the scene of their first triumphs through those first hard years of farming, and under the sheltering roof of the old house her children were reared.

Mrs. Maynes possesses a remarkable memory and she loves to relate the tales of their early trials and experiences and to recite the incidents of her younger days which are indelibly stamped on her memory. She recalls vividly the days of her childhood in old Ireland, of the voyage across the ocean and the landing in Massachusetts in 1848, the meeting with the sturdy young man who was to be her husband and companion for nearly fifty years. She will tell of the wedding and of the journey from Massachusetts to Ohio, of the brief residence in the Buckeye state, and best of all she will tell of the journey to Kansas, the land of promise, which she and her husband made in the spring of 1857.

There are few stories of long lives of usefulness that possess so much of the charm that goes with the life story of a pioneer woman, one who has braved the hardships, the privations and the dangers of pioneering in a strange and undeveloped country. Mrs. Maynes' life story is one which is worthy of the heronies of a great epic poem. To have been here on Kansas soil at the time it was in its wild state as the Indians left it when driven further west on the plains by the encroachments of civilization, meant more to her than the women of today can conceive of. To have witnessed the terrible upheaval that came with the long and sanguinary struggle on the borderland over the question as to whether Kansas was to be slave or free, was a harrowing experience before which most of the strongest of women would have shrunk. Then to have seen the lifting of the war cloud, the victory of peace, the rushing to the Kansas plains of great caravans of prairie schooners laden with brave and hopeful men and women seeking homes for themselves, was an experience such as to fill this pioneer woman with joy enough to recompense for all of the harrowed up feelings of the earlier years. Then, after all of these experiences, let us imagine what a joy and satisfaction it has been to Mrs. Maynes to see the Kansas she loves so well blossom as a rose, to see so many pretty, well kept and well tilled farms, so many peaceful and happy homes—and for her to feel that all of this she has seen and a good part of which she actually has lived.

Mrs. Maynes, now sitting in the twilight of her long and noble life, has been a blessing to her family and to the homes of the people of the community in which she has resided for so many years, and they all call her blessed.

Henry Clay Fleeman

The most potent factor in the success of the newspaper is the advertising patronage which supplies the wherewith for its publication, for without advertising, there would be no newspapers; and, we might add, without men to solicit, there would be no advertising. All of which prompts us to remark that the advertising solicitor—such as is H. C. Fleeman—is a very necessary adjunct to a newspaper.

Henry Clay Fleeman is a Virginian, born June 15, 1860, in Wyethville, in that old commonwealth which had a habit of supplying Presidents in the early half of our national life. His father was Thomas J. Fleeman and was colonel of the Twenty-Ninth volunteer infantry during the Civil War.

When the subject of this sketch was a small boy, the family moved to Clay County, Missouri, and settled near Liberty. The mother of Henry Clay Fleeman died in Missouri and was buried at Chillicothe. Thomas J. Fleeman, the father, however, lived to the age of eighty-seven, dying at the home of Mrs. George O'Rear in El Paso, Texas, about five years ago.

This man has devoted his life to newspaper work and enjoys the reputation of being a successful advertising solicitor. He has worked on various newspapers in western Missouri and eastern Kansas. During the Spanish-American War he enlisted in the Fifth Missouri volunteer infantry, Company C, and was discharged November 9 of the same year, after the regiment had spent the summer months at Chicamauga and in the South.

Mrs. Fleeman, the wife of Henry Clay Fleeman, was a noble example of a wife and mother. Three sons were born to them, and in them the parents had great pride. James is a lieutenant in the United States army and a graduate of Ann Arbor University. William is in the United States navy and is making a record for himself; he is a graduate of Annapolis Naval School. Thomas, the youngest son, now sixteen years old, has an ambition to be a physician, and doubtless will realize his ambition when he completes his education.

Mrs. Mary T. Wheeler.

Mary T. Wheeler died at Case Orchard, Oregon, August 23, 1906. Her body was cremated and sent to Troy for burial. Mrs. Wheeler came to Kansas in 1857 on a Missouri River steamboat and met her husband, who had preceeded her, and located at Palermo. They moved to Troy in the year of 1861. She retained her home in Troy while on prolonged visits to California and Oregon until the year of 1894 when she went to Oregon to make her home with her niece.

William Jackson Ritenour

A Virginian Who Came to Kansas and Worked as a Blacksmith at Iowa Point in the Good Old Days When Steamboats Plied the Missouri River—A Glimpse of the Kansas Country as It Appeared in Its Virgin Beauty—Some Reminiscences —His Companion for More Than Forty Years Still Residing Here.

Those pioneer settlers of the territorial days of Kansas were more fortunate than those who came after them. They saw this country which now is one vast garden and orchard land, than which the nation has no finer, in all its virgin beauty; and having once caught a view of it from the deck of one of those big Missouri river steamers, there was imprinted on the mind a picture that nothing could ever effect. Few of the living of today can form any impression of the beauty of this Kansas of ours as it was in those days before civilization came along to hew down the trees that grew in stately grandeur along the river bank and covered hill and valley far back to the west where the prairie began. There were no cultivated fields or great farm houses and barns, just a few settlers' cabins built of logs. There were no open highways or railroads, nothing save a beaten trail here and there, telling of other settlers that had come before, or of freighters that had crossed the plains with their caravans of merchandise and human freight.

William Jackson Ritenour, a stalwart young Virginian of twenty-six years, caught a view of this wonderful land late in October of the year 1856, when he walked down the gang plank of one of those Missouri river steamboats into the straggling town of Iowa Point. It was at a time when the green of the trees and shrubs and vines and grass was fast turning to royal purple and red and yellow and russet browns—colors and tints and shades that are seen nowhere else than in Kansas. As he surveyed the wonderfully beautiful landscape there was something in the air, in the sky, in everything, that appealed to him, for his was an artistic nature, a lover of the beautiful works of the Creator. Something within him told this young Virginian he had reached the end of the rainbow, the promised land.

William Jackson Ritenour was born at Russell's Ford in Shenandoah County, Virginia, December 17, 1830. He had grown to manhood there, receiving little education other than that which he got at home, for Virginia in that day possessed few good schools outside of the cities and community centers. Reaching man's estate he was filled with a desire for the West, of which he had heard much. Not that he was adventurous, but that he had a longing to follow the advice of Horace Greely—he wanted to "go West and grow up with the country." He chose a most opportune time for making his journey westward. The Kansas-Nebraska act of Congress of two years before May 31, 1854, had thrown open the new country for settlement, and it had precipitated a rivalry between the North and the South as to which should exercise political control over the new Territtory of Kansas. From the North settlers were pouring in, strong and brave men carrying the banner of abolition. From the South those chivalrous followers of the John C. Calhoun doctrine were coming to help bring Kansas into the Union as a slave state. It was a time of excitement all along the border. Men were partisan, for one side or the other. There was little use trying to straddle the fence.

This Virginian of whom we write had sensed all this coming up on the steamboat, one of those floating palaces in that golden age of river navigation. To William Jackson Ritenour it was all clear enough when once he set foot on Kansas soil. Here, he thought, was a country that was worth contending for, if ever there was a country worth fighting over. When he walked down that gang pank with his belongings it was to become a citizen of Kansas for all the remaining years of his life. Walking about the strange little town of Iowa Point on that October 20, 1856, he found the blacksmith shop of his brother-in-law, John White, who was one of the first blacksmiths in the Territory. There began Mr. Ritenour's career in Kansas, for he went to work for Mr. White and was so employed about four years.

Residence of Mrs. William Jackson Ritenour.

It was in the home of Mr. White that Mr. Ritenour met Miss Sarah Ann Heaston, whose home was at Oregon, Missouri, on the opposite side of the river not far from Iowa Point. They were married on Mr. Ritenour's birthday anniversary, December 17, 1857, the ceremony being performed by the Rev. Mr. Menefee. It was one of the earliest weddings in this part of Kansas. Miss Heaston had been living for some time before her marriage with Mrs. Christina White, John's wife, in Iowa Point. This young married couple resided in Iowa Point, Mr. Ritenour working in the blacksmith shop of his brother-in-law, until 1861, when they moved to a fine quarter section of land, homesteaded by Mr. Ritenour, situated three and one-half miles northwest of Severance.

The quarter section which Mr. Ritenour homesteaded was of fine rich soil and its owner was proud of his selection. He set about improving it and soon had it in a fine state of improvement. To this they later added another quarter section of school land across the road from the homestead farm. He paid $4.50 an acre for it—a good price for Kansas land in those days—and thus he found himself in possession of three hundred and twenty acres of fine farming land, not one acre of which has ever passed out of the possession of the family. He afterward acquired two more tracts, of eighty acres each of fine Kansas soil.

With the title to 480 acres of fine Doniphan County soil there was little else a man like William Jackson Ritenour could have desired. He went at farming on business principles, breaking out new fields, producing tremendous crops and growing and feeding live stock. He kept on improving his farm from time to time and after a while found himself possessed of a country estate such as any proud old Virginia family would have liked to own. Mr. Ritenour brought to the West many fine ideas of farming from the state of his nativity. These, combined with his tremendous energy and the Kansas spirit, were the things needed to achieve the great success which came to him and to his family.

Mr. and Mrs. Ritenour were the parents of nine children. Catharine, the first born, died in infancy. Alcinda, the second, died in 1861. The third child, James, died in 1872. The others were Mary Ellen, Minerva Jane, William, Ann Elizabeth, Etta May, Lottie Virginia.

William Jackson Ritenour, the pioneer blacksmith and afterward successful farmer and stock grower, died November 2, 1901, honored and respected by all, for throughout this section of Kansas no citizen was more generally known, or was more universally respected than was he. He was one of the builders of Kansas.

Mrs. Ritenour, the companion of her husband for so many long and happy years, is still residing on the farm with her daughter Minerva. All the other living children are married and are living in homes of their own and are well to do.

A sad blow to this beloved pioneer woman and widow of a pioneer came with the death of her son, William, which occurred December 26, 1914. He was the only surviving son and was a man of fine qualities, possessing many of the splendid traits that distinguished his father as one of the leading and most prosperous and progressive men of northeastern Kansas. Like his father, he had a great heart interest in everything that had to do with the public good.

Although well advanced in years Mrs. Ritenour possesses much of the vigor and sprightliness of her youth and, with a mind ever active, she is giving much attention to the management of the farm. In 1908 Mrs. Ritenour caused to be erected a handsome residence of ten rooms situated across the road from the old home on the quarter section on which she and Mr. Ritenour lived for so many happy years. It is one of the finest country homes in Doniphan County, or in this part of Kansas, and there is no finer farm in this Western country than that which is owned by this noble pioneer Kansas woman.

Mrs. Ritenour is a woman of broad sympathy and fine intelligence. She has during her long residence in Kansas shared with her husband an interest in educational and those things which contribute to the public good, being generous and charitable. While her great interest and her love is for the farm, she finds particular delight in recalling the scenes and incidents of her earlier days in Kansas when she and her then youthful husband—the stalwart Virginian—were making their start on the highway that led to success and prosperity.

To have resided in Kansas nearly sixty years, to have witnessed the wonderful development, and to have observed every step that has been taken by Kansas since before the beginning of statehood, in her upward climb through difficulties to the stars, are a great source of pride and joy to Mrs. Ritenour. There is no more loyal Kansas woman than she, and certainly not one among the over 1,600,000 inhabitants of the state has a higher claim to the title.

From her almost inexhaustable fund of reminiscences Mrs. Ritenour can entertain an interested listener for hours. She loves to think of the old days and finds a sweet solace in the memories of those four years spent in Iowa Point after her marriage to Mr. Ritenour. In fancy she can see the white sides of those great steamboats glistening in the sunlight on the muddy river. Or, she can hear the singing of the darkies as they unload a portion of the cargoes at Iowa Point, or take on great piles of cordwood to feed the ravenous engines down below, the walking down the gang planks of so many settlers and their families, come up the Missouri river from St. Louis to find homes in the land flowing with milk and honey—all these pictures rise before her like a pleasant dream—and it is a beautiful thought that she can look back on those days and smile.

There are other pictures on the walls of her memory, some of them gay and some of them sad. The exciting times of the border strife in which neighbor was arrayed against neighbor and deeds of violence were done. The cruel war that followed and the harrowing news of battles fought, and of the men who died or were wounded, and the wives made widows and children made orphans.

Then, the war cloud disappearing, the great rush of population set in again to take up the lands of Kansas, the Red Man driven further back toward the mountains, but not without a parting struggle, a massecre—perhaps a human holocaust like Custer's last stand. The "pony express," as the riding mail messengers were called, and the overland stage coach supplanted by the railroad trains crossing the river and striking out across the plains over threads of steel.

Most wonderful of all of these pictures is that which tells of the transformation of this beautiful country from its wild untamed state into one vast farm of fields and meadows, and orchards, handsome homes, happy, prosperous and contented people.

All of these things Mrs. Ritenour has seen—and lived.

Nowhere in Doniphan County is there a family held in higher esteem than this family, who reside about three miles northwest of Severance. In all of their dealings with their neighbors, they have but one standard, that being the Golden Rule.

Established in a small way in 1892, the Bank of Severance has now a full paid capital of $15,000 and a surplus fund of $27,500. Individual deposits aggregate $130,000 and certificates of deposit total $58,000.

Total Resources are $233,131.14, as shown by the official statement of the financial condition of the Bank of Severance at the close of business on March 1, 1916.

Severance Banker

John M. Morley Came With His Parents to Doniphan County in 1857 When But Five Years Old—Since Leaving College He Has Resided in Severance—Employed by John T. Kirwan For Fourteen Years in His General Store and His Bank.

John M. Morley is one of the leading citizens of Severance and owner of the Bank of Severance, which he opened in 1892. He is essentially a successful business man and is one of the mainstays of the town.

Mr. Morley is a native of Ohio, having been born in Butler County, that state, on November 23, 1852. His parents were Roger and Margaret Morley, who emigrated to the United States from their home in County Mayo, Ireland.

In 1857 the Morley family came to Doniphan County, landing at the town of Doniphan, and immediately settled on a farm. John M. Morley was educated in the public schools and at St. Benedict's College in Atchison, Kansas.

After completing his education Mr. Morley went to work in the general store of John T. Kirwan of Severance, where he remained for seven years. He next was employed as cashier of the bank owned by Mr. Kirwan, which position he held down for the next seven years.

Fourteen years in such responsible positions gave Mr. Morley a keen insight into all manner of business, and he finally concluded to branch out in the banking business for himself.

On August 5, 1892, Mr. Morley opened the Bank of Severance as a private institution and he has successfully conducted its steadily increasing business to the present time. The bank is one of the strongest private concerns in the State of Kansas, having resources of over $233,000. Mr. Morley was never married, but he doubtless could have had his choice of companions as he is a very worthy citizen and desirable friend, and would make an ideal husband.

It is a curious fact that John Morley owns and conducts the only private bank in Doniphan County. Although a private institution, the Severance Bank is capitalized very highly and is amply protected against all emergencies, and as much business is transacted within its walls as in any bank of its size in the state of Kansas. The policy of the bank and its owner has always been so honest and liberal that the residents of Severance and Wolf River Township generally accept any proposition at its face value if it has the endorsement of John Morley.

It is told of Mr. Morley that when only a small boy he conceived the idea that when he grew up he'd be a banker, and it proved to be not only the dream of an aspiring youth, but the ambition of a lifetime which was realized before he had attained a great many years of manhood. Evidently he sowed his seed in fertile ground, for no business man in the county has a more enviable reputation in a social or financial way than President Morley of the Severance Bank.

Mr. Morley has turned out to be a genius in other lines than banking. He is one of the foremost patrons of charity in Severance. He was a liberal contributor both to the Christian and Methodist churches, although neither faith claims him as a communicant. It simply shows how generous and noble the mind of man can become when party and religious prejudices are forgotten. He also fosters practically every movement that pertains to the betterment of the town. This does not mean that he endorses every wildcat scheme that promoters propose, but he always sifts things out to a reasonable and legitimate basis, and then gives his opinion, which is sure to be honest and fair to every party concerned. Once John Morley decides to push a deal through to completion, then there is no use for anyone to interfere, for his perseverance will win and overcome all obstacles.

In addition to the bank in Severance, Mr. Morley also has the controlling interest in the State Bank of Purcell, and he spends enough time there to see that things are going Morley-wise. The Bank of Severance takes no small credit to itself for having on deposit nearly $200,000 in a town of 300 population.

Christian Church of Severance

One of the Oldest Congregations of the Denomination in Kansas, Has a Splendid Modern House of Worship Recently Erected at a Cost of $7,500—Organized in 1856 and Since That Date Has Had a Number of the Most Prominent Ministers of the Christian Faith as Pastors—Bible School Has at the Present Time Two Hundred and Eighty-Five Enrolled Members.

The Severance Christian Church has the distinction of being one of the oldest of that denomination in the State of Kansas. The congregation has been faithful to their religion from the time the church was first organized and they have the proud record of never having been backward in contributing to the support of their ministers.

The Severance Church was organized during the year 1856 when Doniphan County was very sparsely settled. It was no easy matter to place a church on a successful working basis those days and the Christians of the early times are entitled to all the credit of having maintained their organization.

There were a number of churches of various denominations started in the different towns in Doniphan County between the '50s and the '60s, but the scattering of settlers and the total disappearance of many communities caused several of the congregations to either disband or seek union with church bodies elsewhere.

From the time the Christian Church of Severance was first organized, the members have been faithful in their attendance. Of course, there were periods when their numbers had dwindled considerably on account of adverse industrial, political and agricultural conditions, but they never failed to rally to the old place of meeting.

It is a long way back, but many of the older people, who could recall the incidents leading up to the organization of the Christian Church at Severance, were frequently heard to say that during the memorable year of 1856 there was a strong Christian congregation at Wolf Creek, which was organized that year. Most of the charter members of the Severance Church came from the Wolf Creek congregation.

The Severance Christian Church has taken on new life recently. Although there have been many able clergymen in charge of the congregation, it remained for the present pastor, Rev. A. J. Pirtle, to stir up the people to real church activity. While the church had always been a factor for great and good things in the locality, it has surpassed former efforts since Reverend Mr. Pirtle first paid a visit there.

While Reverend Pastor Pirtle is not in the least a militant churchman, he has the happy faculty of instilling the virtues of activity into the members of his congregation. One year ago Reverend Mr. Pirtle came to Severance from his charge in Powhattan, Kansas, and conducted a revival meeting at the Christian Church which lasted three full weeks. The result was most gratifying. People flocked to the church from all quarters and many professions of faith were recorded.

The great success which Reverend Mr. Pirtle achieved caused the members of the congregation to realize his ministerial abilities. There was need of a new church building, and well they knew it. It took a real live clerical rustler, like Reverend Mr. Pirtle, to point out the way to progress, and the road to greater and better things. During the period when he held the revival he was instrumental in adding eighty-four members to the church, so there was no hesitation in selecting such an able revivalist to take charge of the Christian congregation of Severance. Likewise it was decided that a new church should be built.

Rev. A. J. Pirtle came from Powhattan to Severance on May 17, 1914, and took charge of the Christian Church. His success since then has been phenomenal. A splendid modern church building has been erected during the year at a cost of $7,500. It is finished in the most complete manner throughout. In addition to the spacious auditorium, there is a large gallery where the crowded congregation may find every comfort, and hear and see everything during the services. The pews are made of heavy oak and are both commodious and restful. Electric lights have been installed and the building is heated with the most approved system of furnace heating. The ventilation is superb.

In addition to the eighty-four members added to the congregation during the revival, Reverend Mr. Pirtle has enrolled several others since he assumed ministerial charge of the church. The Bible school is one of the strongest features of the church, there being 285 enrolled at the conclusion of the revival and 74 since then.

Reverend A. J. Pirtle was born near Smithville, Clay County, Mo., September 20, 1874. He was educated in the public schools and later at Drake University, Des Moines, Iowa. His first pastorate was at Edwardsville, Kansas, in 1901. Mr. Pirtle was married to Miss Etta Allan, also of Clay County, Mo., and they have two children, Clarence A, born December 6, 1901, and Eva Esther Sept. 11, 1903, both at Pender, Nebraska.

James A. Campbell

One of Doniphan County's Oldest Citizens, Is a Civil War Veteran and Has Served in Kansas Legislature—Is Member of Various Fraternities and Descendant of Campbells of Revolutionary War Distinction.

The history of Doniphan County for the last forty years is linked inseparably with the name of James A. Campbell. Any worker for the civic, political and religious betterment of his community is an asset and Mr. Campbell has given freely of his best efforts to Severance and Wolf River Township. He served the people in the Kansas state legislature when it meant a financial loss to him and his family and he served his country when the attempt was made to dismember the Union.

Hon. James A. Campbell is a product of the farm. Was born in Lee County, Iowa, Oct. 1, 1842, and, as the name would indicate, is of Scotch lineage. His father was William A. Campbell, and his mother Mary P. (Mason) Campbell. They were of that hardy race of pioneers who gave up their homes in eastern Tennessee, crossed the Father of Waters and penetrated into the then unknown West to hew out a new home for themselves and blaze the way for a future generation that has reaped the fruits of their labors.

The more remote ancestors of James A. Campbell inhabitated the mountainous sections of North Carolina and Tennessee and when the Revolutionary War was declared, joined themselves to the various bands of upland troops under Colonel Campbell and fought gallantly at King's Mountain where the British were badly defeated and put to rout. After the war they returned to their mountain homes and like other families, were partly assimilated in the progress of civilization.

Mr. Campbell's father was born in the far eastern portion of Tennessee and after his marriage and immigration, settled in Lee County, Iowa. This location did not meet with their approval and after a short residence the family moved to Henry County in the same state, where they lived the remainder of their lives. They had five children, all of whom were boys: Joseph P., born in Tennessee and who ran a drug store in Oskaloosa, Iowa, until his death in 1867; James A.; Archibald S., born in Henry County, Iowa, and died at Highland, Kansas, in April, 1886; Jasper, born in Henry County, Iowa, and died late in 1864, from wounds received during the civil war; and William A. Campbell, also born in Henry County, Iowa, who died in December, 1890.

James A. Campbell was left an orphan when only thirteen years old. His father died in 1850, and his mother followed five years later. Left alone, the children found homes wherever it was possible, generally as farm hands. There was little opportunity for education, but Mr. Campbell attended the country school whenever it was possible during the three months of winter and before and after school hours he did such chores as time would permit. In the summer months he assisted at all farm work and was thus employed until he was 18 years old. Wishing to obtain a better education he entered Mount Pleasant Academy in the fall term of 1860.

That year was a troublous period for the entire nation. The slavery agitation was at its zenith. Lincoln had just been elected and there was much secession. When the civil war clouds finally did gather and break, with the attack on Fort Sumter, Mr. Campbell put aside his hopes for an education and went to serve his country. He had saved approximately $150, and with this money he purchased the best cavalry horse he could find, and was mustered into the service June 13, 1861. After his term had expired he re-enlisted and continued at the front until the close of hostilities and he was honorably discharged, March 16, 1866. Mr. Campbell participated in many of the important engagements and served under Generals Grant, Steele, Custer, Pleasanton and Sheridan. He was never wounded, although on three different occasions his horse was shot from under him.

Returning from the war, Mr. Campbell went to Oskaloosa, Iowa, where his brother Joseph P. Campbell, was engaged in the drug business. Upon the latter's death he succeeded to the firm of J. P. Campbell & Company. The following fall, however, he sold out his interest and took a position as traveling salesman for a wholesale drug house in Chicago, continuing with that firm until the fall of 1871. On June 24, 1868, Mr. Campbell was married to Miss Bella J. Fletcher, but she died less than a year later, on April 3, 1869. On the twenty-fourth day of December, 1874, he was married to Miss Mary E. Scott, a native of Pennsylvania, who had been a school teacher in Doniphan County. Four children resulted from this union as follows: William T., now engaged in the drug business in Kansas City, Missouri; Blanche M., the wife of H. C. Rubert, cashier of the Swedish-American Bank at Courtland, Kansas; James A., Jr., professor of music in Los Angeles, California, and Mary Belle Campbell, who has just finished her second term of four years as county superintendent of schools, Tripp County, South Dakota.

After severing his connection with the Chicago drug house in 1871, Mr. Campbell moved to Severance and again went into the drug business, taking with him his brother Archibald, whom he bought out in a short time. He continued the business alone until June, 1891, when Dr. C. F. McCormick was added to the firm. July 1, 1899, Mr. Campbell sold out entirely to him and purchased Grant Cullimore's interest in the Hiawatha drug firm of Pile & Cullimore. On April 1, 1901, he sold out to Mr. Pile and returned to Severance, where he has resided since. He has a fine substantial home with spacious grounds, all thoroughly modern.

Having retired permanently from the mercantile field, Mr. Campbell invested his money in real estate. He is a shrewd judge of property and today is the owner of more than twenty-four hundred acres of good land, the principal part of which is in the eastern part of Kansas. During his residence in Severance, Mr. Campbell has been a leader, not only in political affairs, but civic movements as well. He has held many offices of trust and on two occasions has been elected when every other candidate on the ticket was defeated. This bespeaks his popularity and integrity. He has been elected mayor and police judge of Severance several times and for many years was justice of the peace of Wolf River Township. From June, 1889, to November, 1892, he was postmaster, resigning to take his seat in the state legislature to which he was elected by a majority of 1,050, the largest ever given a candidate for that position.

Perhaps his most notable services to the people of the community were given while in the legislature. It was that memorable session of 1893, when Speaker Douglas used a twenty-pound sledge for a gavel, his seat being disputed notwithstanding his enormous majority. Mr. Campbell was again elected to serve in 1894, and represented his district during the session of 1895. His interest in politics has always been an active one; he is always to be found in the party councils. Also he labors hard and long for the principles which he believes are right. He is a Republican.

Mr. Campbell also is prominently identified with fraternity circles. He is a member of the Odd Fellows in all three branches of that order, the Encampment, Subordinate and Rebekah. Not only has he filled all the chairs in the subordinate and grand lodges, but he also is a past grand master and a past grand representative. As a Mason he is past master of Severance Lodge, No. 313, A. F. & A. M., having been made a Mason in Smithton Lodge No. 1, of this state. Also he is a member of Troy Chapter No. 16, R. A. M., and of Hiawatha Commandery, No. 13, K. T., and a past patron of Thecla Chapter, O. E. S., of Severance and past commander of Severance Post No. 191, G. A. R.

As a public officer, public spirited citizen, and a business man, Mr. Campbell has been efficient and capable. He has been successful in business, has accumulated money and has the respect and well wishes of the community in which he lives. What more could be desired?

George W. Ricklefs Has Elegant Modern Residence on His Farm Southeast of Bendena—Electric Light Generated on the Place—Water Works Plant in Operation and the Latest Approved System of Plumbing Installed—Finished in Hardwood Throughout.

People with a hazy idea of what kind of a life a farmer leads, should get a little education by inspecting the modern residence of George W. Ricklefs, on his 280-acre farm, one mile southeast of Bendena, in Wolf River Township.

This beautiful farm home was erected at a cost of over $6,000 and is equipped with all the latest improvements which are supposed to be found in the finest of city residences.

The Ricklefs mansion — for that would be the proper term to apply to this splendid house—was built in 1913, and the matter of expense was not taken into consideration during the progress of the work.

Residence of George W. Ricklefs, situated in Wolf River Township.

The residence is finished elaborately in hardwood throughout, and is lighted by electricity generated on the place. This is only one or two of the many modern household improvements that have been installed. Both Mr. and Mrs. Ricklefs believe in real living, and want the best, while they are at it.

The plumbing of the Ricklefs house is one of the features of the many comforts that have been put in. There is a system of waterworks which supplies the residence at all seasons. The hot water heat is something new in farm houses, but it is in operation there, and the spacious bathroom puts the finishing touches to the enjoyable comforts of the Ricklefs home.

Mr. Ricklefs is a native of Doniphan County, having been born on a farm in Wayne Township, five miles southeast of Troy, November 14, 1875. He attended the public schools and grew to manhood just about the same as other Doniphan County boys of his own age. He became interested in farming when a boy, because he realized the enormous returns that might be gained from such an occupation.

On December 16, 1908, Mr. Ricklefs was married to Miss Anna Canter, who is also a native of Doniphan County. Mrs. Ricklefs had for a number of years been one of the most popular school teachers in the county, and the residents felt keenly her loss when she decided to abandon her chosen profession for the more womanly duties of presiding over the destinies of a most elegant home.

Mr. Ricklefs is one of the prominent men of the county and follows a general line of farming on his 280-acre tract, near Bendena.

They have one son to bless their home, Robert George, born March 8, 1915, and will no doubt be a blessing to his parents during their declining years.

Theodore J. Teufler

A Sturdy Farmer and Stockman Who Has Deservedly Won the Confidence and High Esteem of the Community By His Self-Sacrificing Devotion to the Public Good.

Perhaps the best possible evidence of confidence in a man is when the public continually honors him with the transaction of its business. This confidence if expressed only once, might without doubt, be misplaced and a mistake; but when it occurs time after time, without any cessation, there can be no error and the recipient of that confidence must of necessity be a worthy and honorable man. Such expressions of regard and esteem have been heaped high upon Theodore J. Teufler, of Wolf River township, three miles southwest of Severance. At the present time he is county commissioner of the first district, and has been respectively township trustee, deputy assessor and county assessor from Jan. 6, 1913 to Jan. 9, 1915.

Mr. Teufler is another of the many self-made men that Doniphan County has given to the state and nation. Like many others, his early days were no sinecure. Education was hard to obtain. The country was in its infancy in this section and the hardy pioneers had more need for strong arms and nimble legs than for much book-learning. The land had to be tilled and the crops harvested in order to meet the demands of existence. Nothing came without an effort and it was in such times as these and into such condition that Mr. Teufler was born.

His parents were John and Mary D. Teufler. They were pioneers in all that the word implies, coming to Doniphan County in 1858. It was little more than a wilderness. Scarcely a furrow had been plowed in its almost virgin soil; and the elder Mr. Teufler selected a site near Wolf River and it was on the farm he now occupies where Theodore J. Teufler first saw the light of day. He came into the world on the 28th day of March, 1865, just at the close of the Civil War. By the time of his birth, his parents had made their place one of the best in the county, although a deal of hard work had been necessary and much was yet needed to make it what it should be.

Mr. Teufler's early education was received in the country schools and he is proud today that he is a product of what is commonly known as the "little red school house on the hill." As was the case of many others, he had to walk quite a distance for this knowledge but, in those days, that was considered nothing of moment. After study hours there was work on the farm. It was interesting to Mr. Teufler, however, as is demonstrated by the fact that he has never left it, but follows farming as his regular vocation to this day. As time went on and he grew in years he rapidly became the head of the place, and by the time he was twenty-one was doing practically all of the management.

On May 21, 1889, when he was twenty-four years old, Mr. Teufler was married to Miss Annie Mertz, the daughter of a prominent Doniphan County farmer. Four children were born to them, two girls and two boys. The girls were twins and through the judgment of the Almighty were taken away in their infancy, being but four months of age. The boys are Frank P. Teufler, born Feb. 25, 1890, who now is a fireman on the Burlington running out of St. Joseph, and Roy M. Teufler, born Oct. 21, 1895, who still clings to his birthplace and is a source of much satsifaction to his parents whom he assists in cultivating their extensive farm. They have a splendid home southwest of Severance and rarely a day passes but what some friends or neighbors are guests of the household. All are made welcome by Mrs. Teufler's pleasing manner and disposition and the family table is always set for extra visitors.

Mr. Teufler's first office was as township trustee. After taking charge of his farm he had grown continuously in the esteem and regard of his neighbors in the surrounding country. They had confidence in his honesty and integrity and in the campaign of 1908, Mr. Teufler was urged to make the race. He spent considerable time thinking the matter over—never having had a desire for public office. The pressure of his friends, however, was too great and he became a candidate. How well his friends and neighbors were justified in their implicit faith and how well he was justified in trusting to them was shown at the polls when he received a flattering majority.

Two years later, in 1910, Mr. Teufler was urged to accept a position as deputy assessor and complied with the request. His service as trustee had been such as to make the demand for his occupancy of a position in the assessor's office almost unanimous. The acceptable manner in which he filled this place is shown clearly and in a much better way than words could express, by the fact that in 1912 he was chosen as assessor by the people of the county. Three facts go to make up the qualities which Mr. Teufler possesses as a public official. He is level-headed, strictly honest and, above all, faithful. Many office-holders use their position merely as a pension. Mr. Teufler did not follow this plan and as a consequence earned the gratitude of all of his constitutients. There was not a day but that he was in his office and attending to the business of the county as was his duty.

There is no question of a doubt but that Mr. Teufler would have been an assessor today, but the year 1914 was to see the last of that office. The state legislature deemed it was unnecessary and as a result it was stricken from the statutes of the state. This left him free to devote all of his attention to his farm, but his admirers who were legion, would not have it so. He was needed they said as a county commissioner. Mr. Teufler demurred at first. When he left the assessor's office he had visions of retiring from public service, having been six years in office. The insistence with which his associates urged him to enter the race, however, prevailed and again his name was placed before the people as a candidate for office. It is needless to say that he was selected once again by a majority larger than any he had ever received.

In addition to his duties as commissioner, Mr. Teufler now finds time to devote to his farm. He is what might be called a general farmer, although to some extent he specializes in cattle and all kinds of stock raising. At the present time he has some of the finest cattle to be found in Doniphan County. The farm, however, is mostly worked by his son and their help; Mr. Teufler taking up insurance as a side-line. He is the Doniphan County agent for Crown Mutual Insurance Company, and has written hundreds of policies.

Much of Mr. Teufler's success in life can be attributed to perseverance. He had other qualities that go to make a successful man; but the pluck, honesty, a willingness to do his duty and to oblige in his make-up, has had a great share in moulding his career. He also was watchful of his opportunities. When they came he was there to seize them and draw from them what measure of bounty they had in store. His example to the county is a fine one and he stands today as county commissioner, one of the most respected of men.

Hazel Frick, an early settler of Doniphan, and at one time one of the richest men in Doniphan County, died Monday morning, April 20, 1914, in Kansas City, at the home of his daughter, Miss Anna Frick, with whom he made his home. Mr. Frick was ninety-three years old and died of general debility. He had been bedfast for three years.

The deceased was part owner of the old Doniphan flour mill and saw mill, the firm name being Franklin & Frick. The flour mill was moved to Severance in 1878, the river having encroached on the Doniphan site. Mr. Frick disposed of many of his interests, including the flour mill, about fourteen years before his death and moved to Kansas City, Missouri. His wife's death occurred there about eight years before Mr. Frick died.

Severance M. E. Church

Handsome New Structure for the Methodists of the Town and Surrounding Territory Recently Erected at a Cost of $13,000—Congregation Organized in 1872 by Rev. George W. Wood and the First Church Dedicated in 1874—Forty Years of Successful Ministrations by a Number of Pastors—New Building Dedicated by Bishop William O. Shepard, January 10, 1915—Great Occasion in Severance.

The members of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Severance can feel happy over having for their services one of the finest houses of worship in Doniphan County.

The building was recently completed at a cost of $13,000, and is a splendid tribute not only to the liberality of the members of the M. E. faith in Severance and adjacent territory, but to the generosity and true public spirit of the people of all denominations in that section.

Rev. C. C. Clampitt

The day of the dedication, January 10, 1915, was a great occasion for the Methodists of Severance and the residents generally. All the other churches suspended services so as to attend the dedication and the new M. E. church was the scene of impressive exercises all during that Sunday. People came from several towns for many miles around, and there was a number of prominent clergymen in attendance.

The dedication exercises were conducted by Rev. Dr. William O. Shepard, bishop of the M. E. Church, who came from Kansas City, Kansas, to officiate. Other ministers who participated were Rev. Dr. C. T. Durboraw, of Atchison, district superintendent of the M. E. Church; Rev. Dr. J. A. Motter; Rev. A. J. Pirtle, pastor of the Severance Christian Church, and Rev. C. C. Clampitt, pastor of the Severance M. E. Church, under whose administration the new building was erected.

The announcement was made during the services that there still remained an indebtedness of $7,000 on the building and Bishop Shepard appointed a committee of prominent members of the congregation to take up subscriptions toward liquidating the amount. The response was spontaneous, and most gratifying to all present. People of all denominations were most liberal in their contributions, and in a few minutes the entire sum necessary to free the church from debt had been donated.

The history of the Severance M. E. Church dates back to the spring of 1872, when Rev. George W. Wood organized the handful of Methodists in that vicinity. Funds were subscribed and the cornerstone of the first church was laid on April 11, 1874. The building committee consisted of Arch Campbell, D. W. Morse and Rev. George W. Wood, the pastor. So rapidly had the new structure been erected that it was completed and dedicated on September 24, 1874, Rev. Dr. A. B. Leonhard, officiating.

The first church edifice continued to serve for the worship of God for forty years, but recently the congregation had grown so large that the old building was too small to accommodate them. So it was torn down in June, 1914, to give place to the elegant modern edifice which is now a lasting credit to the people of Severance. The building committee was composed of J. F. Eberling, W. S. Hamilton, A. F. Rittenhouse, Fred Kinsley and George W. Corbet. It had been originally intended to spend but $10,000 on the new church, but when the interior had been finished and all modern improvements installed the expense had run up to $13,000.

Since the organization of the Severance Methodist Church by Rev. G. W. Wood, in 1872, who had remained as pastor for some years, there have been a number of able clergymen in charge of the congregation at various times. Those who served as pastor since Rev-erend Mr. Wood left, were: Rev. W. A. Boucher, Rev. H. Moyes, Rev. E. W. Vandeventer, Rev. J. S. Davidson, Rev. W. H. Underwood, Rev. E. R. Brown, Rev. J. W. Graham, Rev. W. H. Zimmerman, Rev. H. A. Pasley, Rev. E. F. Holland, Rev. Thomas Scott, Rev. D. R. Moore, Rev. S. E. Pendleton, Rev. W. Whitney, Rev. S. C. Lamb, Rev. J. T. Sawyer, Rev. R. E. McBride, Rev. W. J. Byers, Rev. A. H. Boyd, Rev. F. P. Reno, Rev. A. E. Ryan and Rev. Charles C. Clampitt, the present pastor.

The membership of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Severance is composed of a substantial and highly respected class of people. They are truly representative of that progressive section of Doniphan County, and they take pardonable pride in their beautiful new church.

Rev. Charles C. Clampitt, pastor of the Severance M. E. Church, is an able and worthy divine, and is not only a great favorite with his congregation, but with the residents of the community in general, irrespective of creed or nationality. He is an ideal clergyman, an eloquent preacher and an indefatigable worker in the cause of Christ.

The new Methodist Church at Severance stands today as a monument to its congregation, and is a beautiful structure, yet but few people in Doniphan County are aware of the facts pertaining to its erection. Although the Rev. Mr. C. C. Clampit was the moving spirit behind the plan to build a place of worship, it would not have been possible had it not been for the generosity and deep religious fervor of Herman Day, one of the most popular men in Severance, and who now has gone to his final rest. By the terms of his will, $3,500 was set aside for church purposes.

Mr. Day had lived in Severance practically all of his life, and was identified with every civic and political movement which had a better city in view. He was not a politician in any sense of the word. Particularly, however, was he interested in church work. He was a constant attendant of a Sabbath and gave his time and money to further the Sunday school, Epworth League and other branches of service. He knew of the need for a church in his home city and in making his will made provisions for it. It is beyond any question of a doubt that had he lived he would have given the money for the completion of the structure without ostentation and without hope of praise. The new Methodist Church is only one of the many monuments he has left.

FRANK J. LEVANDOWSKI

Proprietor of the Little Inn Cafe, Severance, Kansas.

Although the subject of this sketch has not been long located in Severance, yet there are satisfactory indications that he is here to stay, inasmuch as he is forging ahead in the front ranks of the successful merchants of Doniphan County. The Little Inn Cafe is quite a popular place with those who are epicures. Most attractive edibles are served here every day in the week, and they taste as good as they look. Everything is clean and, needless to say, conforms with the pure food laws of the state. This neat little restaurant filled a long-felt want in Severance, and there is no question but what it will grow into something greater, with its enterprising owner to boost it along.

Mr. Levandowski was born in Belleville, Kansas, on December 7, 1888, and received his early education in the public schools there. Later he attended Gard's Commercial College in St. Joseph, Mo. After leaving school he followed the painter's trade for a while, but in 1911 he quit painting and moved on a farm near Ajax Station, Buchanan County, Mo.

On January 3, 1913, he was married to Miss Rebecca Foster of Dearborn, Mo., and they have one child, a little girl one year old. In May, 1914, they moved to Severance, and entered into the restaurant and fancy grocery business. He has done exceedingly well, having the best place of its kind in the city. You can give your order to Mr. Levandowski in almost any language and you will be served, as he is quite an accomplished linguist, speaking Polish, German, Bohemian, Russian and English fluently.

THE LUTHERAN CHURCH LOCATED AT MORAY, KANSAS

Founded 1857 By About One Hundred Representatives of Norway, Sweden and Denmark—Peaceable, Industrious and Law Abiding—Chris Turkelson Only Living Representative of the Original Settlers—Lives On Farm He Preempted—Norman G. Steanson Good Student.

A history of Doniphan County would not be complete unless mention were made of the little settlement southwest of Troy, in which about 100 Norwegians live. Consisting of only a few members now, nevertheless so marked has been their influence for good in the history of Doniphan County that they are worthy of very honorable mention. They have adhered to the teachings received by their ancestors in the "fatherland," and for intelligence and virtue of their people, they are not excelled by any sect of people in the country today.

The original colony that settled, set sail on the 17th of September, 1846, from Grimstead, on the extreme southern coast of Norway, on the Louis Caroline, a 400-ton ship, and changed at Havre, France, to the Isette, of about 500 tons. The following are the names of the adult persons of the colony:

Men—Peter Nelson, Osul Nelson, Hanson, Ole Halverson, Ole Bpeland, Hanson, Ole Halverson, Ole Bleland, Halvor Bjeland, Osul Anderson, Osul Kittelson, Lars Hoverson, Knud Iveland, Ansan Iveland, Simon Simonson, Louis Nelson, Nils Knutson, Hans Omondson, Alette Omondson, Hans Enge, Christian Halvorson, Ole Skomager, Torjes Harrabor, Gunar Kjeland, Jon Kjeland, Gjerold Olson, Else Osterhouse.

Women—Karen Nelson, Gunnil Nelson, Gertrude Nelson, Astrid Hoverson, Trone Hanson, Karen Halvorson, Mrs. Ole Bjeland, Maren Anderson, Christine Hoverson, Mrs. Osul Kittelson.

Children—Nels P. Nelson, George Nelson, Sarah Nelson, Mary Christine Nelson, Laura Nelson, Elsie Nelson, Gurine Nelson, Aase Nelson, Tyra Nelson, Mary Nelson, Trine Nelson, Nels G. Nelson, Grater Maria Nelson, Nels O. Nelson, Christian Hanson, Elsie Hansen, Matilda Hanson, Bergetta Hanson, Aletta Halvorson, Orilla Bergetta Nelson, Aletta Omondson, Hans Omondson, Helmar H. Overson, Edward Hoverson, Eli Hoverson, Anne Hoverson, Christine Hoverson, Kittle Hoverson, Hoover Hoverson, John Hoverson, Andrew Hoverson, Tomine Hoverson, Anders Anderson, Gunar Anderson, Nels Anderson, Osul Anderson, Peter Anderson, and a son and daughter of the Kittlesons whose names are forgotten. Some of the children were mere infants, and from that ranged in age into young men and women.

The voyage lasted from September 17, 1846, to January 6, 1847, much time having been lost in the English Channel in making attempts to land at Havre, ten days being spent in Ramsgate, England, and two weeks in France; but they had a smooth passage from Havre to New Orleans, which at that time was the popular harbor. There were no deaths or sickness during the voyage. The colony was bound for either Texas or Missouri, they having sent an agent a year before to select a place, and when the landing was made at New Orleans, it had not yet been decided which state they would reside in.

They arrived when the Mexican War was at its height; the battle of Monterey had been fought a few days before, and that of Buena Vista occurred a few weeks after they landed. New Orleans was the great depot for the shipment of troops and supplies, and all was bustle and excitement. This possibly decided them not to go to Texas. They remained in New Orleans until April 1, and then embarked on a steamboat for Missouri. On arrival, they stopped one night in Weston, Mo., and then pushed on for St. Joseph, arriving April 14. Here they stayed and farmed for a few years, but in 1856 they began coming to Doniphan County, settling on Brush Creek and vicinity, in Wayne Township, and in 1857 those who came over settled at East Norway, in Wolf River Township.

Of those who came over, the following died in New Orleans: Osul Ketleson, wife and boy; Knud Hoverson, Else Osterhous, Gjerold Olson, Mrs. Ole Bjeland and son, Mrs. Trone Hanson, Gertrude Nelson, Isetta Nelson and Hans Omondson.

The descendants of the foregoing are what make up the present population of the Scandinavian settlement. It is sad to relate that the colony of late years has not increased to any noticeable extent, and with the frequent deaths, has dwindled down until not more than a hundred adults survive. At first the few settlers multiplied rapidly, and no better type of citizenship was to be found in Kansas. They are law-abiding and God-fearing.

While not fanatics in their strict application to religious lines, they are very thorough in the manner they bring up their children to be Christians. They have their own church in the settlement at Moray, the Lutheran, and every man, woman and child attends regularly.

There is never any excitement among these people, as they are extremely peaceful, and in season always busy with their crops, orchards and homes, to the extent that there is no time for brewing trouble. They are not sordid and ascetic, either, as they love fun, and their celebrations are often filled with fun for the young people. It is a matter of pride to these simple folk that a lawyer has never been called to their midst. All disputes are settled between themselves in a quiet way and without legal assistance.

The farms of the colony today are regarded as the most valuable in the county, and all produce fine crops of corn, wheat, alfalfa and hay. The orchards yield many hundreds of bushels of fine red apples and other fruits which increase the grower's bank account.

The schools are excellent, the children being taught both their parents' tongue and English, and the progress which they make later, when entering the Doniphan County high schools and the Kansas state colleges, speak volumes for the instructors, procured by the officials of the place.

These people are thoroughly honest in all their transactions, not only with their kind, but with others, and that one quality alone has placed them high in the esteem of the people of Doniphan County.

Their English and German neighbors respect the Scandinavians and, in some instances, a son of a Dane has married an English girl or a German girl has married a Norwegian, and in this way the people in the neighborhood have become acquainted with the customs and habits of the colony.

They are, to a family, reputed to be wealthy, and each family owns its homestead, though at first they endured great hardships and privations, as did other pioneers.

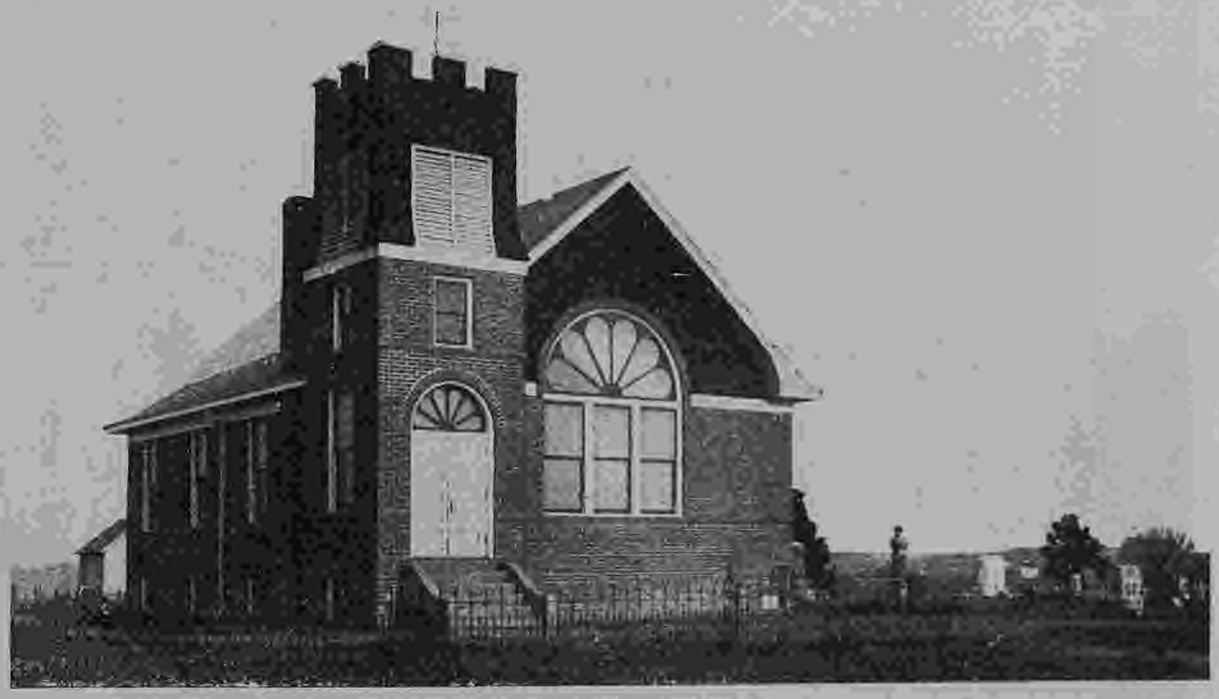
In the early days of their residence in Kansas, many grew homesick for the "fatherland," but as their lands became more easy to cultivate and the emoluments of fortune began pouring in upon them, they soon grew satisfied with their adopted country, state and county. Nowadays no one hears any grumbling among them; everyone is an optimist. In fact, optimism is a part of their creed. The settlement at this time consists wholly of Norwegians.

The only original settler living today is Christian Turkelson, and he remembers many interesting incidents about the early days of the colony. The old gentleman still lives on the place which he pre-empted in 1857. He relates that at first there was no church and services were held at the home of a Norwegian named Osul Nelson.

They had no preacher, and the Rev. David Earhart, who then lived on Stranger Creek, organized a Lutheran church, with fifteen charter members, among them, May 24, 1866, the first meeting being held in the Prairie Grove school house, where Bendena now stands, afterward in East Norway, the present name of which is Moray.

The church building was dedicated August 26, 1883, with Rev. Charles Martin as pastor. Not all the members were Norwegians; there were some Germans. This church burned September 10, 1911. It is a peculiar fact that in nearly every instance, the ministers have been Germans, and have preached in the English language.

They wanted to go back to their mother tongue, having the feeling, which all share, that the gospel in a foreign language lacks the conviction it receives in one's own, and Mr. Earhart was succeeded from 1871 to 1874, by the Rev. N. C. Brun, who was followed from 1875 to 1878 by the Reverend Hendrickson, both Norwegians, and both conducting the services in that language. When Dr. Charles Martin, of St. Joseph, took charge, in 1878, so many years had elapsed since the Norwegians landed, that more spoke English than their own language, and the constitution of the church was revised and a by-law inserted to the effect that hereafter the services be in English only. There were so many Americanized Germans and Danes in the neighborhood that this order resulted in increasing the membership and in 1883, in Doctor Martin's pastorate, the Moray church was built. Doctor Martin led the people for sixteen years, when he was succeeded in 1904 by Dr. F. D. Altman. The old church was a pretty little frame building, thirty-two by fifty feet, with tower and belfry costing $3,200, and had not a cent of indebtedness when it was dedicated, August 6, 1883. The old church burned September 10, 1911, having been struck by lightning during an electrical storm. It had a membership of 112, and there were 168, if one should count the children, a very important and growing addition. Doctor Altman quite frequently speaks of conducting a service with seven babies in his congregation.



The Lutheran Church of Moray

A look over the charter members of the church will reveal many names that stand for prosperity and wealth over all northeast Kansas. Charles Ladwig and wife, Caroline Albert, Osul Nelson, Mollie Nelson, Gunil Nelson, Gura Nelson, Nels Nelson, Hans Nelson, Asa Nelson, Guliorin Steanson, Christian Turklesen, Augusta Nelson and Sarah Wilson.

The church draws its membership from the settlement and services are held twice a month, thirty families representing the church membership. The Moray church is counted the most prosperous in the Kansas synod; its women's home and foreign missionary society stands on a better financial basis than any similar society in the state; it has a King's Daughters Society which, a few years ago, furnished a room at the Western Theological Seminary, and had the money ready to do it. The church gave $725 about four years ago to outside benevolences, which is remarkable; the Atchison church, generous and willing, could not raise half as much, it is said.

The thirty families represented in the church have furnished forty students to Midland College and they are all prize-winners. Three of the Steanson family have won a Harwi prize of $20 offered to the best average in freshman and sophomore classes, and Norman Steanson is credited with maintaining one of the highest all around records ever made. It is the usual thing for someone from Moray to carry off the scholarship prize; the industry and tireless energy and the ambition of their forefathers who made the desert blossom like the rose, is shown in their youthful descendants in school.

All adjectives are superlative in describing the people of this section. Their homes are the finest, their barns the biggest, their farms the best kept, the men the best workers and the wives and children the happiest and best provided for in the state of Kansas. Around Moray the land rolls in such a way that the vision for miles around is not impeded. One can stand on a high point and look in every direction and fail to see a run-down farm or a home that isn't big and handsome and modern. The houses, many of them, are steam heated, with bath, lighted all through with acetylene gas, and if those who came in 1847 could return, what an eye-rubbing there would be. No community in the state is better to its preachers. Many of the farmers plant regularly a "preacher's row" of potatoes. There are always spring chickens and turkeys for the preachers' families, and, on one occasion when Mrs. Altman spent the summer on the Pacific Coast, Mrs. Zimmerman of Moray, knowing she would be gone in peach season, put up eighteen quarts and sent them to the Altman family. It seems a very pleasant and highly appreciated part of the church obligations, as every member interprets them, to be good to the preacher. And they are good to each other, and dissensions, differences and lawsuits are unknown.

On the sixtieth anniversary of their sailing from Norway the colony had a celebration in honor of the anniversary, and the following is an excerpt from a speech made by N. O. Nelson.

"Sixty years ago there sailed from the southern coast of Norway a company of immigrants of its best farmer class. It was not alone the rich soil and mild climate of America that tempted them, not the spirit of the exploiter or explorer, but pre-eminently the width and breadth of a new continent untrammeled by traditions of church or state. Of that company of seventy-four, fourteen survive, and eleven are here today. Most of us have about us our children and grandchildren, and none of us need to offer an apology or wear a blush on their account. We were Americans in spirit when we set sail, we became citizens as soon as the law allowed. From first to last, we have been part and parcel of our new home, proud of its glories, joyous in its open opportunities, partaking in its grand achievements. Before our fathers could understand the words of command, they enlisted in the war with Mexico. When the future of the Republic and self-government hung upon the chance of battle, the younger of us marched under the starry flag. In that early colony there was earnestness, industry, helpfulness and a full cup of innocent enjoyment. In all the years I lived among them, I remember but one quarrel and a single lawsuit. In after years, the merchants who had given them all the credit they had asked for, said they had never lost a dollar. In these sixty years, if there has been among them an arrest or a conviction for crime, a divorce or a pauper, I have never heard of it. We came from farms. Nearly all of us settled on the land, and a large majority have remained on the land.

"We glory in this record of ours and in the achievements of our country, in which we have been modest but loyal actors.

"Let us not be unmindful of the problems that are upon us, responsibilities that must be bravely and wisely met. Freedom alone does not assure justice. Liberty is a jealous mistress. Despotic power may rule by other means than the sword. Property may be a stern and cruel master, as it may be a beneficent and useful servant. From our mother country, we may learn the lesson that peace and virtue thrive without great wealth or splendid enterprises, that millionaires are not a necessary asset to a nation.

John Holzhey

John Holzhey Lives on a Fertile Quarter Section Where He Was Born Near Brush Creek School House, in Doniphan County, the Year After the War of the Rebellion—Looks After the Farm Leisurely While His Good Wife Devotes Much of Her Time to Raising Rose Comb Brown Leghorns.

John Holzhey is one of the substantial farmers of Doniphan County with a happy faculty of knowing how to take life easy. He never worries about cares which crop up occasionally in the conduct of a farm, because he is so situated that he does not have to.

Mr. Holzhey has a fertile tract of one hundred and sixty acres near Severance, which is one of the best farms in Wolf River Township. The old home place which was settled upon by his parents in the early days, is near Brush Creek school house, where he was born on November 30, 1866, and was educated in the common schools of his native place.

The Holzhey place is remarkably fertile, a fact that is chiefly due to intelligent methods of cultivation. A general line of farming is followed with such easy regularity that the work entails no worry and is always rewarded with abundant crops.

While still a young man, the records say he was twenty-seven years, Mr. Holzhey proceeded to look around for a life companion and his vision settled on Miss Idena Clementson, who was born near the town of Doniphan. They were happily married March 28, 1894. There are no children.

Mrs. Holzhey is a great lover of poultry and devotes lots of her spare time from the household duties to looking after her chickens. She specializes in Rose Comb Brown Leghorns and is never without a large flock of this breed in the farm yard.

Little Jersey Bull Treed Two Big Boys

While living on the old farm east of Troy, someone was heard calling for help. As it was a usual thing for boys from town to be at the swimming hole in Albert Perry's pasture, the call went unheeded for some time; but as the call grew more distressed, it was thought best to investigate, as there were always more or less tramps and strangers going up and down the railroads. I took my gun with me, in case it should be needed, and after a time of wandering around in the willows and brush, the parties making the distressing call were located in a large willow tree near the creek—with a Jersey bull under it. The bull was driven away and John Kennedy and Frank Castle came down. They found all their clothes except their hats and, as they were in a hurry to get away, they made a bee-line for town, bareheaded. MARK E. ZIMMERMAN.

Ryan's Station

Ryan's Station, located a mile east of Severance, on the St. Joseph & Grand Island, which was named in honor of Hon. Simon L. Ryan's uncle, in 1869, was the terminus of the St. Joe & Western Railroad for a short time, and during that interval efforts were made to establish a town.

The original townsite as laid off by Joel Ryan, from which the town received its name, on November 12, 1869, consisted of about thirty acres. The first buildings were put up in December of the same year. S. L. Ryan and J. O'Niel built a store and kept a general stock in January, 1870. In 1872, S. L. Ryan built another store, which was operated until 1875.

The town of Severance, which was laid out in 1869, being only one mile west and possessing better advantages, soon took all the trade from this point, and in 1875 the station was discontinued and made a flag station.

William Frederick Myers

A Missourian Who Found a Paradise in a Pretty 160-Acre Farm in Wolf River Township of Doniphan County, Where He Has Resided Forty Years and Reared a Fine Family of Sons and Daughters—Farming That Pays.

William Frederick Myers, whose pretty farm of 160 acres of good land is in Wolf River Township, about two miles southwest of Bendena, is a native of Missouri, but he is glad he came to Kansas, which has been his home for nearly fifty years. Perhaps it wasn't that the soil of Kansas was much different, or much better than that of western Missouri, but there was something in the soil, or the people, or the environment, that brought many good young men from Missouri farms into Kansas in the early years of our state's history when good lands were to be had at low prices or by homesteading. Rather, one might say that Kansas offered the young man who was ambitious to become a farmer better opportunities than did the old state of Missouri.

Mr. Myers was born in Buchanan County, Missouri, near Rushville, April 17, 1853. His parents were among the early settlers of northwestern Missouri, who had lived on a farm and reared their children as best they could under the then prevailing conditions; for it should be remembered that during the period of ten years following the birth of William Frederick Myers the western border of Missouri and the eastern border of Kansas were in a continual state of strife or turmoil over the slavery question. It wasn't a very good time to rear children or raise crops, though a good many boys and girls of that period came through the state of storm and siege and conflict and developed into noble specimens of manhood and womanhood. The subject of this sketch is a pretty fair illustration of the truth of the above statement.

After the close of the Civil War, when the new state of Kansas was rapidly filling up, the Myers family, in the year 1867, moved from Buchanan County, Missouri, to Atchison County, Kansas. There William Frederick Myers put in some hard study in school and made himself generally useful about the home place.

In the year 1874, after he had passed his twenty-first birthday and was a man full grown, William Frederick Myers came to Wolf River Township in Doniphan County and settled on the farm which he has since owned, and where he resides today. For years he applied himself to hard work improving the farm and growing his crops and live stock, with the idea in view of making it one of the best improved farms in the county.

Ten years more had passed by when, in 1884, Mr. Myers concluded that the time had come for him to take unto himself a wife. She proved to be a young woman of culture and just the woman to make his neat little farm home what it should be. She was Miss Dora L. Cotter, who was born April 10, 1864, and was a friend of his sister, Mrs. Herman Klye, and the wedding took place at Mrs. Klye's home, December 31, 1884 in Atchison, Kansas. Mr. Myers brought his young wife to the Doniphan County farm and from the date of her arrival to the present day, she has been the presiding genius of her household and a valued ally to her husband.

Mr. Myers owes a good part of his success to the fact that he has never at any time permitted himself to be discouraged by trifles and temporary adverse conditions. He has gone ahead year after year, working his farm and doing the best he could, and the result has been gratifying in that he is able to say that he was some ahead each year, and in the end has a fine farm of 160 acres, and is numbered among our most prosperous farmers in the district about Bendena.

Mr. Myers has shown good judgment by conducting his farming operations along the lines of general farming, believing that it is better, safer and more profitable to raise a variety of crops than to confine his efforts to one particular thing. He has been successful with corn and wheat, and his cattle and hogs and poultry and fruit have brought him good returns, while all along from the beginning he has employed advanced methods of soil culture and stock raising.

Mr. and Mrs. Myers are among our substantial people and have a host of friends who have known them during their residence in the community. They are public spirited and take an interest in everything that concerns the welfare of the neighborhood. Particularly is this quality of good citizenship shown in the matter of schools, as they believe the young people of today should receive the best education the schools can afford to fit them for the duties of life.

Mr. and Mrs. Myers have reared a family of sons and daughters of whom they are justly proud. Their first child, Henry Benjamin Myers, who was born November 24, 1885, grew up to noble manhood and died April 19, 1915, in his thirtieth year. The other children are: Nellie M, who was born on the farm near Bendena, January 30, 1888; William H., January 25, 1890; John H., November 10, 1894; Irene and Ione, twins, August 10, 1898; Gussie L., May 12, 1901; Fred L., May 14, 1882. The latter boy is a son of Mr. Myers' first wife. Mrs. Myers is the ideal farm wife, and loves to raise thorough-bred poultry, and anyone visiting the farm will find some of the most profitable fowls in Doniphan County.

Freeman Murder

One of the most brutal murders in all the annals of Doniphan County was that of Mrs. Samuel Freeman and her son, and the subsequent suicide of her husband. Samuel Freeman was a man who had fought through the Civil War and he had lived on a small farm near Syracuse for a few years, later moving to Severance. He had become addicted to drink, however, and was furiously jealous of his wife—a purely imaginary cause—bringing on the affliction.

On Tuesday evening, Aug. 4, 1891, shortly after nine o'clock, neighbors heard three shots in the vicinity of the Freeman home in North Severance, and upon investigation found the tragedy. Mrs. Freeman, a woman who was loved by the entire community, was dead in her rocking chair before the fire-place, a bullet through her head. Her little boy, only two years old, lay in front of a window with another bullet through his heart.

Near the door, on the floor, was Freeman, half crazed with loquor and an ugly wound in his forehead. He was still conscious, however, and a physician was called. It was too late and he died a short time after the doctor arrived. Sol Miller, then editor of The Chief, speaking of the double murder and suicide, said: "There can be no sympathy for Freeman and none was shown at the funeral. Although he was a man who had fought bravely for his country, he became a drunkard and by his actions showed himself to be unworthy of the name—defender of the Union."

The school house in District No. 48, near Moray, was built during the months of June and July, 1872, and was completed about the fourth of August.

Klaus Brothers

Hereford cattle proved lucky to the three Klaus brothers, who are now located in Doniphan County on a farm south of Bendena. They started in a small way about three years ago, and now have one of the best stock farms in the vicinity.

L. S. Pinyard—Ed Martin

Isaiah S. Pinyard, a contractor and carpenter of Denton, and Edward Martin of Troy, began repairing the Catholic church in Severance July 14, 1914. They built a new tower on the church and put new woodwork in the interior. They made twenty twelve-foot seats of white oak timber, which took thirty-nine days for the work. The seats are superior in workmanship to most of those turned out by large factories. Ed Martin, who was born in Mason County, near Mason City, Iowa, came to Doniphan County twenty-five years

Joseph W. O'Brien

Joseph W. O'Brien, who has been a familiar figure on the police force around the Union Depot in St. Joseph, Mo., for the past twelve years, is a former Kansas man. He settled at Nortonville, Jefferson County, in 1880, and is recognized as one of the most efficient officials who ever wielded a policeman's club. He is a public-spirited citizen, and by his economical methods saved money enough to buy considerable real estate and city property.

J. O. Marcell, born Jesermine, Ky., Oct. 30, 1840. Enlisted in Company C, 13th Kansas, the 25th of September, 1862, at Troy. Mustered out in 1865, and settled at the old agency near Highland. He resides southeast of Highland, three miles. Has three daughters, (Idella) Mrs. J. T. Thorp, (Brittie) Mrs. J. H. Blevins, (Ella Mae) Mrs. John Lewis. Mrs. Marcell died July 6, 1914. Owns 405 acres of land.

Catholic Fair

The Catholics of Wolf River township held a grand festival and fair at the church near Syracuse, the 15th, 16th and 17th of January, 1867. Music was furnished by the Troy brass band, of which Mr. Nixon was the manager. People from all over the county attended the function and enjoyed themselves to the utmost extent.

THE BENDENA BANK TRAGEDY

Jesse Harris, a Young Missouri Farm Hand, Turned Bank Robber.

The citizens of Bendena and surrounding country recall with something of a sickening feeling the attempted robbery of the Bendena State Bank on November 30, 1906, by Jesse Harris, a young Missourian who had been working in that community as a farm hand for a few weeks prior to the occurrence which we are about to describe.

The Bendena State Bank, Albert T. Albers, Cashier.

It was a quiet day in the village of Bendena, that November day of 1906, when young Harris appeared in the door of the Bendena State Bank. William M. Gillen, cashier, and Theodore Selb, assistant cashier, were alone in the bank. Harris quietly approached them and took them by surprise by flourishing a revolver and commanding them to throw up their hands. Gillen obeyed, but Selb darted to the back door and escaped, followed by several shots from Harris' revolver, none of which took effect.

Selb quickly passed the word through the street and in five minutes the bank was surrounded by men with guns and revolvers. Harris and the cashier were alone in the bank. Seeing the men on the outside, Harris, who was covering Gillen with his revolver, made some unintelligible remark. Then he turned the revolver to his own head and fired.

Thus ended the plan of a poor, misguided youth to rob the bank. A broken-hearted father came from his home in Missouri and took the body away, and every one who saw the grief on the old man's face dropped a tear in sympathy for him.

Joseph W. Bodart

The Son of a Pioneer Farmer of Territorial Days, Who Dug a Goodly Fortune Out of the Soil, Beside Contributing Largely to Social and Religious Uplift.

Not far from Troy, and directly in the path of the proposed highway from the Atlantic to the Pacific oceans, is a beautiful farm and on it one of the most luxurious residences in Doniphan County. The soil is fertile, the distance from town is convenient and in every way it is an ideal country home. On this farm on August 23, 1864, was born Joseph W. Bodart, the subject of this sketch and a through and through Doniphan County man. His father was Mr. Francis Bodart, who came here in 1856, with so many other emigrants from the East, and pre-empted the farm which his son now owns and takes such an interest in.

Mr. Bodart received his early education in the schools of the county, such as they were at that time, and when his courses of study were completed, went to his father's farm and there took up his life's work. On Nov. 22, 1887, he was married to Miss Mary Penny, daughter of an old and respected family, by the priest in the Cathedral at St. Joseph, Missouri. Last November the two celebrated the twenty-seventh anniversary of their union, to which four children have been born: Joseph J., May 12, 1890; Lawrence F., April 2, 1893; Leo V., Feb. 18, 1895; Matthew K., Jan. 10, 1907.

Immediately after their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Bodart returned to their farm and began the work which now has made for them not only plenty in a financial manner, but the satisfaction of knowing they have one of the finest farms in the county. In March of 1893, and just before Lawrence was born, Mr. Bodart was saddened by the death of his father, Mr. Francis Bodart. Four years later, his mother also passed away, and both are now at rest in St. Benedicts' cemetery, one of the oldest and best equipped burial grounds in Doniphan County.

Mr. Bodart farmed on a general scale, but also took a great interest in fine breeds of cattle of all kinds. His farm was equipped with the latest and best machinery of all kinds, and the 160 acres which it covered, always was under the closest cultivation. It is due, in all probability to this close application to his business, that Mr. Bodart attained the success which he has. In his case it is well merited, and comes to a good man.

Outside of his farming, however, Mr. Bodart had time for other things. He was greatly interested in church work and gave freely of his money and time to further the spread of the Gospel. In county affairs he was a public spirited citizen and no civic movement of any kind was ever inaugurated that he did not "get behind" and push with all his might. A little more than a year ago he decided to retire, having worked faithfully and hard for the major portion of his life. Consequently he moved with his family to St. Joseph, where he now resides at No. 1114 No. Third street. His beautiful farm has been leased, but he still takes a great interest in it and is a visitor weekly. He is one of the best products of Doniphan County.

OLD GRAND ARMY POST

Number 191, of Severance, Was Organized Almost Thirty-one Years Ago—Only a Small Percentage of the Original Charter Members Now Living—Ravages of Years Has Decimated the Ranks of the Patriotic Old Soldiers

The Grand Army Post of Severance is one of the inspiring old institutions of Doniphan County which causes the present generation to look back with thrilling pride to the days of '61-'65 when their sires patriotically offered themselves as a sacrifice on the altar of their country in order that the Union might be preserved.

The passing of years has played havoc with the ranks of the original members of the Post, No. 191. It is now almost thirty-one years since the post was first organized and the ranks of the original membership have been sadly decimated in the succeeding years. It is too bad that the brave old boys, who so promptly answered their country's call in 1861, are reaching that age when the great event in life cannot be postponed much longer.

However, it is gratifying to note that the members of Post No. 191 are, as a rule, remarkably hale and hearty, but the absence of some of the old-time members is becoming more noticeable with every succeeding annual gathering. The wounds and privations which the boys in blue suffered during the terrible years of the Civil War had a lasting effect on the constitutions of the men, and with the advance of years the resultant diseases are becoming prevalent.

Since the time Post 191 was organized, in 1884, there has been a total enlistment of about 150 members. Of the original charter members there are not more than eight or nine living at present, and some of these are scattered over the country. The present total membership of the post is twenty-one.

The present officers of Post No. 191 are: George Strahan of Troy, commander; George Bird of Denton, senior vice-commander; George Roberts of Denton, junior vice-commander; H. A. Hills of Highland, quartermaster, and James A. Campbell of Severance, adjutant.

The meetings of Post No. 191 are held at stated intervals in the G. A. R. headquarters at Severance. They are fairly well attended, and the old boys are still as strongly imbued with patriotism as when they marched through shot and shell during the stirring days of the Civil War.

Doniphan County is not lacking in poets. Among those winning fame as a writer of verse is A. O. Johnson of Bendena, one of the prominent educators of Doniphan County. The following are two of his best known poems.

BE A BOOSTER

By A. O. Johnson

Be a booster; get the habit;
Bear a message of good cheer.
Weary souls and careworn faces
Stand in need of friends sincere.
Let all follies be forgotten,
Life's too short for spite and hate.
Be above such bitter feelings,
Boost for all before too late.

Boost for home and boost for country,
Boost for friend and boost for foe.
Boost for him in honest labor,
Boost for all, where'er you go.
Help them on in life's great struggle,
Help them on in all that's true,
And as you measure out to others,
It shall be measured out to you.

Do not spread that evil story;
You are weak and sinful too,
Were you tempted like the fallen
It might be the same with you.
Hate the sin but not the sinner,
He was once a mother's pride.
But for lack of friendly boosting,
He's now drifting with the tide.

Be a booster, up and doing
All you can to cheer along
Life's procession ever teeming,
Busy, weary, bustling throng.
Boost for those whose hearts are heavy,
Cheer them on the best you can,
Be a friend to those in trouble,
Boost and help your fellow man.

COUNTRY COURTSHIP

By A. O. Johnson.

A dainty creature, is the teacher,
The farmer's heart has won;
With many a smile, his time to while,
She archly leads him on.
He's on his way at close of day,
Happy when work is done.
The mules both know the way to go,
They soon arrive at the school ma'am's home.

To his delight, the moon is bright,
He knows they'll take a spin.
His heart's a-flutter; it makes him stutter
When she invites him in.
The mules await, out at the gate,
But their rest is rather short;
For moonlight bright is love's delight—
No better time to court.

Says the farmer, to his charmer,
"Honey, what do you think?
With money to spare, good clothes to wear,
I neither smoke, nor chew, nor drink.
You already know, I love you so.
Ahem! I say— Whoa, mule!
Now, old girl, can't we get married,
When you are through with school?"

There was a pause and all because—
Will leave you now to guess.
Just what took place, in a moment's space,
When the school ma'am whispered, "Yes."
The mules moped on, their part was done,
They slouched along at ease.
And when it's slow you wish to go,
A mule is sure to please.

Wolf River Drainage Ditch

Built at a Cost of $42,000 in 1913—Prevents Wolf River from Overflowing Fine Bottom Lands—Ditch is Nine Miles Long —Has Made Valueless Land Worth $150 Per Acre— —Farmers Well Satisfied With Results.

(By Frank P. Marsh)

Land owners whose farms border either side of Wolf River have fine bottom land and are in no danger of overflow because of the drainage ditch excavated in 1913. This improvement has also made land which was practically worthless sell at $150 per acre. The ditch is nine miles long, extending from north of Severance to near Sparks.

The agitation for the ditch resulted from the almost annual overflow of Wolf River, ruining land and crops. Early in 1903 the writer, who was then county surveyor, ran the lines for the project. The actual work began on April 4, 1913, in charge of Charles S. Black and John S. Rogers, who owned a dredge boat. They hired several men to assist them, and the work of construction was completed December 12, 1914.

The undertaking cost $42,000. The sum was paid by those who owned farms on the creek bottoms, each land owner being assessed in proportion to his acreage benefited. No one interested regrets the expense, and all agree that it should have been done long ago.

Wolf River, the stream which by its annual overflow made the construction of the ditch necessary, enters Doniphan County from Brown County, south and west of Leona, near the Julian D. (Mike) Hazen farm. It flows northeasterly to north of Severance and then in the same direction to a point just east of Sparks, then turns north into the Missouri River at the O. D. Moore and Sam French farm.

It is worth while to mention to the uninformed that 500,000 yards of dirt were handled by the contractors in consummating this mammoth piece of work. Most of the help consisted of Doniphan County's own sons, and the following is a partial list: Frank Koerner, Ralph Ashburn, Jake J. Millson, Jesse Summers, Charles Gillen, Dave Frazier, Mr. Harness, Jerry Brownlee, Frank Caudle.

The bill which made possible the construction of Wolf River ditch was passed and approved February 27, 1903, Chapters 410 and 148 of session laws of 1903, and was in purport as follows: For straightening and changing the channel of Wolf River and the drainage of adjacent lands thereto in Doniphan County, Kansas. Cyrus Leland, Jr., was the instigator of this bill, and the county board of Doniphan County, Kansas, ordered the county surveyor to make a careful survey of said river, following the meanderings thereof, and to make an estimate of the cost under said act. The river continued to overflow until the ditch was completed, December 12, 1914. On September 5, 1905, the county surveyor filed his report in the office of the county clerk; also a plat, showing the river as it then flowed, and the changes recommended to be made from the mouth of said river to the west end of the county, one mile west of Leona. It can be seen that to comply with the letter of the law meant a vast undertaking. Afterward, by order of said board of county commissioners, the surveyor was ordered to procure a right of way of the land owners bordering on or where said changes were to be located. He was very successful in securing said right of way, with the exception of thirteen tracts gratis, and in order to complete said right of way, it became necessary for said county board, under said act of 1903, chapter 410 and chapter 110 of 1899, to petition the court of the Twenty-second Judicial District, to appoint commissioners to appraise and assess damages, if found to be damaged, and on the 5th day of October, 1905, the Hon. W. I. Stuart, in chambers, did appoint Thomas W. Langan, of Wayne Township, Dave W. Edwards of Union Township, and Joseph Gabriel of Burr Oak Township, to go over the ground to appraise and assess damages if found by them that anyone was damaged, and on the 17th day of October, 1905, did begin their work as such commissioners and continued the appraisement from day to day, and on the 24th day of October, 1905, made their report, finding only four persons who were damaged, Jackson Thomas, Dix McKay and Mr. Pry, and some of those right of ways procured have not been used to date of this history, they being in the extreme western and northern parts of the river which was not taken in the district.

The following are the land owners who bordered on said Wolf River, or through whose land changes were made, beginning at the mouth of said river: O. D. Moore, Samuel F. French, Lizzie Boatman, Dix McKay, Josh. B. Dutton, Cynthia Troxell, Louis Degginger, John Collins, Andrew Searles, A. J. Hedrick, John Shirley Est., Anthony Kelly, John Sparks, Thomas Whellen, Don Thompson, Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Co., Charles Gallagher, Neal N. Gallagher, James Gallagher, W. S. Hodson, Misses Ida and Clara Hedrick, Martha Etherton, Jesse Blanton, Thomas Hanlin, Herzing Bros., Jackson Thomas, James Jenkins, Ab. Kent, D. R. Reese, E. L. Lemert Burrel, Est., Samuel Poynter, Cyrus Leland, Jr., R. H. Faucett, A. B. Watkins, John Shay, George Moorehead, J. J. Cronin, Est., J. C. Roland, Dittemore heirs, Jacob Stout, Simon L. Ryan, Steanson Estate, Henry Kersch, John Prawl Estate, Mrs. Emma Ware, Kirwin Estate,

W. D. Handcock, Wm. Stewart, Dresser heirs, Hon. James A. Campbell, John Ebeling, William Ward, John Folley, William A. Pry, H. E. Clark, Ebeling & Laverentz, James Dare, H. G. Laverentz, Noah Rittenhouse, Estate George Ebeling, W. P. Dittemore, John F. Libel, William Janicke, Jane Goforth Kimmel, H. C. Hanson, and a number of lot owners in Sparks, Severance, Leona and Nesbit's addition to Leona; also about all the persons engaged to assist the surveyor in making the first survey and estimate: Frances Marion Steele, S. S. Dawson, L. L. Rawles, Ben Curtis, Perry Dawson, Charles Etherton, L. Bowman, Chas. Saultz, Len Whitlow, Clyde Sharp, Oren Sharp, L. Friend, Elmer Baker, M. McCoy, Dille Miller, John Roland, E. J. Bailey.

Under this special act not much work was done, the same being done with slushers and dynamite, owing to lack of compulsion. Under a special Drainage Act, passed and approved February 25, 1905, chapter 215, there was an election held December 7, 1908, and a board of directors elected.

At a meeting held by the county board March 8, 1908, the work already done under said act, chapter 410 of 1903, and chapter 148 of 1907, was turned over to the board of directors of Wolf River Drainage Corporation, which consisted of the following: W. S. Hodson, David Broom, Charles F. Herzing, Jacob Stout and Edward M. Lemmert; afterward the drainage board held metings as follows: January 16, 1909; February 1, 1909; March 1, March 5, March 8, 1909; April 5, 1909; May 3, 1909; June 7, 1909; July 5, 1909; August 19, 1909; September 16, 1909; September 24, 1909; September 30, 1909; October 4, 1909; October 8, 1909; November 1, 1909; December 6, 1909; January 3, 1910; February 7, 1910; March 7, 1910; April 4, 1910; May 1, 1910; June 6, 1910; August 1, 1910; September 5 and 6, 1910. Under this board no progress was made and a new board was elected.

After making an assessment report by a commission of three, who were Samuel Twombly, Andrew Searles and Clyde L. Conard, and filed with the secretary September 14, 1909, and the 8th of October, 1909. On said day, Mr. Leland, in person, and by S. M. Brewster, his attorney, objected to the report, on the ground it was too high, and to the method of assessment, and the case was carried into court and a restraining order made by the court April 11, 1910, enjoining said district board from levying any tax against said plaintiff's lands and several others who joined in said suit, who were John Jenkins, Thomas Hanlin, W. M. Morris, Josh B. Dutton and Jacob Stout, who had previously resigned from said board; Louis Degginger, Jennette L. Cronin, Charles F. Etherton, John E. Etherton, Thomas Etherton, Martha Etherson, Mrs. J. H. Collins, George Bird, John R. Hale, John Corbett, Jordan O. Marcell and C. L. Marcell, J. C. Jenkins, Jackson Thomas and St. Joseph & Grand Island Railroad Company.

March 7, 1911, another election was held and directors elected, composed of Cyrus Leland, Jr., Moses Rittenhouse, Jackson Thomas, C. F. Etherton and S. I. Newton. Under this board Frank P. Marsh of Doniphan County and Charles Woodworth of Atchison County were hired to relocate a right of way and make a plat and estimate of same, beginning on the center line of Section 24, Township 3, Range 19, east of the sixth P. M., Doniphan County, Kansas, and descending down the valley of Wolf River to the north line of Section 16, Township 2, Range 20. Afterward the drainage board advertised for bids to dig a ditch twenty feet wide at the bottom and forty feet wide at the top and twelve to fifteen feet deep. The contract was awarded to Rodgers and Black of Holt County, Mo., for $42,000. They began at the upper end of the district with a dredge boat, April 4, 1914, to make the ditch. The ditch is a success, as where weeds grew before, now is grown from sixty to ninety bushels of corn per acre. The land owners are paying the taxes on the bonds and land, and still have a fair amount for their work and money invested. The present board was elected March 3, 1914, who are Cyrus Leland, Jr., treasurer; Edward A. Kent, director, and E. C. Winzer, chairman.

The total length of Wolf River, according to the first survey, following the meandering, was 32.15 miles from the west end of the county to the mouth of said river. Total cuts or cutoffs, 8.21 miles through the county, but as the work was finally made, the distance was much shorter, making about 14 miles shorter in the county and a fall of about 47 feet in the district as located, making a rapid current, having a tendency to keep the channel clear of any obstructions. The fall from the west end of Doniphan County to the mouth of Wolf River at the Missouri River, was 79 feet.

Under the first board of directors elected under the laws of 1905, chapter 215, the board employed A. M. Munn of Nebraska City, Nebraska, to make surveys, plats and profiles, which was completed in June, 1909. Said plats show a cut of fifteen feet deep by fifteen feet wide at the bottom and thirty feet wide at the top, and a beam of twenty feet on each side, and his estimate was 397,829 cubic yards at 10c, or $3,978,290. This does not include the expense, if any, for right of way or incidental expense or for clearing 9,000 squares of river channel at $1,350, which would total about $65,000, and does not include ditches already partly done where the same was used.

THE SEVERANCE NEWS

A Good Home Paper—Tells All the Local News in the Vicinity of Severance.

This bright weekly newspaper is edited and published by Pat Gray, and his wife is his associate editor and publisher. Mrs. Gray was Rosa Braun, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wendell Braun of near Doniphan in Wayne Township. She and Pat were married in the Catholic Church in Doniphan, February 21, 1906. Pat has written books, and being a native of Ireland, he possesses much of the Irish wit which naturally creeps into his literary and newspaper writing, while Mrs. Gray is also gifted as a writer.

Mr. and Mrs. Gray purchased the Severance News from Tobias Larson, December 4, 1913, and then sold it to the Rev. A. J. Pirtle of the Christian Church at Severance July 17, 1915, who published it until January 18, 1916, when the Grays bought it back. The Rev. Mr. Pirtle turned out one of the newsiest sheets in Kansas for a small town, but he had too much on hand to give it the attention it deserved. During his ownership he increased the size of the paper, with a department for Bendena and Denton. He was ably assisted by the unceasing efforts of his wife.

Under the Grays the News is an independent newspaper and is devoted to the interests of Severance and community. It has a good subscription list and, as "the old home paper" it is fulfilling its mission nobly, telling of the comings and goings of the people, the events of the town and country, the social doings, marriages, births and deaths, and whatever else is of interest to the people of that fine agricultural community. Beside, Pat has a way of keeping himself well informed on the issues of the day, and when he puts his opinions into type, the readers rest assured they represent the honest judgment of an honest Irish heart.

BENDENA

Town Named By First Railroad Agent in Honor of His Best Girl, Who Afterward Jilted Him for Another Fellow—Station Originally Called Albers Because It Had Been Built on Land Owned By John Albers—First Buildings—Present Postmaster L. P. Johnson—St. John's Lutheran Church Finest in Doniphan County.

The present town of Bendena came into existence when the Rock Island Railroad built through the country. The first station was named Albers, in honor of the man who owned the land and conceived the idea of a town. When the road was cut through, and the little station was built, John Albers decided it would be a good stroke of business to lay off a portion of his farm into town lots.

With this man to start things going, the enterprising people in the surrounding territory were not slow to grasp at business opportunities, and preparations were made by several astute merchants in nearby towns to get ready for business at the new stand.

The first place of business launched in Bendena was a general store that was opened by William Macklin, a resident of Brenner, who constructed a small building in the fall of 1886. The site of Mr. Macklin's store was on the same lot that is now occupied by Mrs. Susie Severin's business house. The Macklin building burned down in a conflagration that was caused by the careless overturning of a lamp.

The Rock Island depot was, of course, the first real building of any importance or substantial significance to be constructed in Bendena, and the first dwelling house in the town was that of Peter Pillod, which was erected in the fall of 1886.

J. W. Howard, who bought and shipped grain for several years, put up a fair-sized scale house where the farmers from the surrounding country came with their grain.

After a store had been opened and a grain warehouse built, the people who had settled there were at a loss to find an appropriate name for the new town. Finally, the matter was left to the station agent, Evie B. Morgan, who promptly named the town Bendena as a tribute to his best girl. The young lady evidently did not appreciate the honor, as she soon transferred her fickle affections to another man.

There was a good store building erected by Victor E. Ladwig and John B. Severin in 1886, and Jake Bastin installed the first blacksmith shop in the fall of the same year. The first elevator was put up by Councilman & Company in 1890. This firm operated it for about three months, when the elevator was sold to C. E. Miller, who transferred his interest in the plant to John B. Severin in 1893.

The first postoffice to be established in Bendena was on January 19, 1888, with Victor Ladwig of the firm of Ladwig & Severin, as the first postmaster. The present postmaster is L. P. Johnson, who is a prominent citizen and highly respected.

The town of Bendena has never made any pretensions to be in line for future commercial greatness, but it is a thriving little community at that. There has been no boom in building, but considerable shipping is done, and the surrounding country is wealthy.

The population of Bendena is not more than a hundred, but those few are prosperous and get along in brotherly love. There is no apparent reason why this prosperity should not continue. The farmers in the country adjacent are making all manner of fortunes, and, for a town its size, Bendena gets its share of trade.

The railroad agent who gave the name Bendena to the town in 1886, left several years ago, and his position is at present filled by A. B. Monroe. Bendena boasts of the finest new church in the county, St. John's Lutheran, which was recently completed, much to the gratification of the surrounding neighborhood.

When Bendena began to take on a commercial atmosphere in 1896, a hotel was erected, and it was opened with F. W. Reipen as "mine host." The town is very well situated from a commercial standpoint. There is any amount of good and prosperous country all around it, and there is no reason why everybody in the locality should not do well and become wealthy.

The lumber shed and office buildings of Rappelye and Brother were destroyed by fire on December 27, 1900, with a loss of $5,000, of which about two-thirds was covered by insurance.

A big well, 24 feet across and 80 feet deep, was dug in 1899 by the railroad company, who also put up a 55,000-gallon tank. An inexhaustible supply of pure water was secured.

"Uncle Johnny" Valmore Hudson, who died at Bendena December 12, 1899, was a first cousin of General Grant, as well as one of the veterans of the Mexican War, who helped to capture Santa Anna. He was buried in the cemetery at Moray.

On July 4, 1899, about 1,000 people were entertained by the town's first Independence Day celebration.

A creamery was built in 1896 by the merchants and farmers who operated it for a time, and then turned it over to the Continental Company. They operated it for awhile, but poor business management made it unprofitable. Finally, in 1903, it was sold to J. C. Albers. He was rebuilding it for a dwelling, when in some unknown way, it caught fire and burned down.

Two cigar boxes and some binder wire were used by Gray and Morgan to construct the first telephone line in town. That was in 1889, and it did very good service between the depot and postoffice. Since then, the Northeast telephone line reached the town in 1896, and in 1902 the first Farmers' line was extended out of town. Now more than a score of lines connect the farmers and the merchants of the country and town.

There is a good school system in Bendena, and the position of principal of public schools was capably filled the past year by Miss Yula Powell, and she is assisted by Miss Katherine Falk.

While there have been many children born in Bendena since the town was placed on the map, the honor of being the first baby in the town belongs to Grace Bastin, who was born in 1887. The following is a correct list of the postmasters who have served since the organization of the town: V. E. Ladwig, appointed January 19, 1888; John Albers, March 2, 1889; L. W. Campbell, August 1, 1891; J. B. Severin, May 21, 1892; John W. Fulton, February, 1898; Howard Schwab, February 7, 1902; H. L. Vanerth, December 14, 1904; Howard Schwab, February 16, 1912; Louis P. Johnson, November 20, 1914.

With George Swartz as carrier, R. F. D. No. 1 was established in 1902, to serve the many farmers south of town. Judge W. D. Gilbert was the inspector.

Gabriel Gerardy, who invented a successful disc sharpener, opened a blacksmith shop in Bendena in 1894.

The first child born in Bendena was Gracie Bastian. One day, while playing on the railroad track, she narrowly escaped death by being snatched from in front of a moving freight train by W. J. Edwards.

Typhoid-pneumonia was distressingly fatal to four members of the Delaney family in December, 1890, when John Delaney, the father, died on the 18th, and his wife a few days later; and on the 31st, the death of two of the elder sons, John and Daniel, followed.

David Morse, who afterward moved to Oklahoma, began the manufacture of brooms in 1859, about one-half mile west of Prairie Grove, on the farm he owned at that time.

The following is a list of residents in Bendena: Mrs. S. A. Severin, Julia Severin, J. B. Severin, Charles Severin, Matthew Severin, Louis P. Johnson, Marie Johnson, Robert Johnson, Ramond Johnson, William H. Myers, Ruth Rose Myers, William H. Steele, Mrs. May Steele, Albert F. # St. John's Lutheran Church

Only Religious Denomination Active in Bendena—Edifice Erected Following Destruction of Lutheran Church By Lightning at Moray in 1912 — The Rev. J. F. Krueger, Ph. D., of Atchison, Faithful Pastor of Wide-Awake Congregation.

(Contributed by Miss Laura Anderson and Rudolph J. Johnson)

When lightning struck the Lutheran church at Moray, and the structure was burned to the ground, there was dismay in the hearts of the members of this congregation. The first thought was their precious church property was gone, and they no longer had a place to worship. Doubtless for a time they felt like the early Christians who followed after the Savior as he journeyed through Galilee with no place to lay his head, and preached in the open air, along the roadside, in the highways and byways, and along the shore of the sea. If such a thought entered the minds of any of these faithful members at Moray, it did not linger long.

Such a sturdy stock as that composing the congregation of the Moray Lutheran church did not take long to dispel their misgivings. The ashes from the debris had scarcely blown away when the resolution came to rebuild the church and even to expand the field of work. Bendena was only two miles to the south and there was no church edifice in that thriving little village. Here was a field untouched as a religious center.

On September 10, 1911, the Lutheran church at Moray was destroyed by fire caused by lightning. For about a year services were held in the Bendena Hall. As most of the members of the church lived in and near Bendena it was decided to organize a congregation and to erect a church at Bendena. The organization of the St. John's Evangelical Lutheran church took place on Feb. 8, 1913, about one hundred and thirty charter members uniting with the new congregation. This nucleus has grown until now this church is one of the thriving organizations in Doniphan County.

Less than three months after this preliminary meeting, a call was sent out for a pastor. It was necessary to secure an able minister to complete the organization and to band the new members together into a harmonious whole. On April 27, 1913, the Rev. Mr. J. F. Krueger, Ph. D., of Atchison, was unanimously called to become pastor of the church. Immediately plans were made to erect a suitable church building. During the summer the main idea of the church members was to carry out these plans and to have everything in readiness for the cornerstone laying before the winter months began. Great preparations were made in advance for this memorable event.

The cornerstone of the church was laid on Sunday, Aug. 10, 1913, with impressive ceremonies. A large crowd gathered from all sections of Doniphan County, many of them driving twenty-five or thirty miles to hear the program and take part in the exercises. The Rev. Dr. Krueger had a large part in these preparations and also took a leading part in the program. He was ably assisted by Prof. Holmes Dysinger, dean of the Western Theological Seminary at Atchison.

This church, being the only church in Bendena, became a union body, the inhabitants rallying to its support. While it is under the Synod of the Lutheran denomination, yet everyone is welcome to worship, and the greater portion of the citizens have taken advantage of the opportunity. The residents of Bendena and the neighborhood belong to many nationalities. There are Scandinavians, Irish, German, Scotch and English, and all are sturdy farmers and townsmen. They dwell together in peace and harmony and the union church is the center and nucleus of their religious and social life. This fact was never more manifest than on the occasion of the laying of the cornerstone. Nationality was swept away, and all were of one blood, thought and interest.

Both the Rev. Dr. Krueger, pastor of the church, and Dr. Dysinger, delivered powerful sermons on the value of the church in the community and the vision which should lay hold upon the people for the future. They held the attention of their hearers throughout the discourses, and when the exercises were over many expressions and comments of favorable import were heard. Old hymns were sung by the congregation, which brought back to their memory the visions of the days in the old country, and of the time when struggles were many in Doniphan County. Reminiscences of the pioneer days helped to fill the time for the older members, while the younger folks made the occasion one of rejoicing and merriment. Dr. Dysinger congratulated the people upon their fine showing in building up a church in so short a time and with such a good foundation for the future. He dwelt upon the necessity for church unity and harmony, which impressed the people with his earnestness and devotion to the highest principles of religion. The fact that they were able to procure Dr. Dysinger for this address was a mark of their high appreciation of the best to be had in the way of intellectual and cultural material. Dr. Krueger was congratulated by the speaker in having such a fine congregation to lead, and he was impressed with the services.

The cornerstone laying was a forerunner of the dedicatory exercises which followed on Nov. 2, 1913. This was a Sunday long cherished by every one who was present. It was in fact a fitting climax to the period of building and planning which was the part of everyone interested in the new structure. The program was planned with all the detail and forethought of an occasion such as would commemorate the completion of a church in any of the large cities. A notable list of speakers was secured in advance and the exercises of the day were given wide publicity in advance. As a result there was an immense audience gathered to listen to the dedicatory addresses and to the beautiful music.

The Kansas Synod and General Synod of the Lutheran church was fully represented. The Rev. Mr. H. L. Yarger, D. D., president of the General Synod of the Lutheran church, the Rev. Mr. G. Clark, president of the Kansas Synod, the Rev. Mr. George Murphy, D. D., of St. Joseph, Mo., and the Rev. Mr. H. G. Garvic of Atchison, were present and took an active part in the ceremonies.

The Rev. Mr. Yarger brought greetings from the General Synod to the members of the new congregation. He expressed his great pleasure and that of the large body which he officially represented, at the successful culmination of the efforts of the summer. He was greatly pleased to see the manner in which the people had rallied after the fire and lightning had swept away the church at Moray. It was to him a glorious day, and in all of his travels throughout the General Synod he declared he had not seen a more unified congregation or one which showed a more sublime faith in the outlook upon the future. He took with him the hearty thanks and good wishes of everyone who heard him speak, and his visit did as much as anything could to rivet the good feeling which had grown up in the church life of the community.

The Rev. Mr. Clark was also deeply impressed with the good work being wrought, and it was perhaps of more vital interest to him because of the fact that his own Kansas Synod had a new congregation, and one which he knew would continue to grow and develop. Here he realized that the work of the kingdom was being extended and pushed out into a new and untried field. In this fact he took great comfort and pride.

It is worthy of special note that the first to unite with this church after the dedication were Mr. and Mrs. Albert Albers, who had returned from Colorado at that time.

The first person to be baptized in the church was Mary Lucille Johnson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Rudolph J. Johnson.

The St. John's Evangelical Lutheran church, being the only church at Bendena, is used as a union church, although it follows the tenets of the Lutheran creed. Services are held on the second and fourth Sundays of each month. There is a large Sunday school and the children from the homes of all nationalities join in the study of the same lessons. Sunday school begins each Sunday morning at 10 o'clock, the enrollment being 115. The church at Moray has been rebuilt and is a growing institution.

The value of the church property is $16,000. The congregation has at present 150 members. The Missionary Society, the King's Daughters, the Ready Helpers and the Lutheran League are active and helpful organizations of the church. They are regularly attended by the various members and a great deal of community good has been accomplished.

An example of the prosperity of the citizens who compose this congregation is shown by the fact that within one-fourth mile west of the church can be found the best laying 160 acre tract in Doniphan County. This land is owned by Joseph W. Howard, one of the substantial farmers of the vicinity, and is valued as high as $200 an acre. Land throughout this neighborhood is priced anywhere from $150 to $200 an acre.

The basement of the church has been fitted up for a meeting place of the young people and for suppers and the spacious room has often been filled with these gatherings. One of the largest suppers in any church in Wolf River township was held here Dec. 5, 1914. People came for miles around, large numbers driving from Troy, Severance, Atchison, Highland and a few from Wathena. The ladies of the church outdid themselves upon this occasion. A bountiful feast was served to everyone with plenty to spare. The bazaar which was held in connection with the supper brought in many dollars for the work of the Missionary Society, and the other organizations of the church. The finest needlework ever displayed in Doniphan County was seen, and many of the pieces brought handsome prices. Cakes and lunch baskets sold well, and the treasury was replenished by these efforts of the ladies.

The St. John's Evangelical Lutheran church in Bendena has been a powerful factor for the uplifting influence of good in the community. It has done a large amount of helpful service, and has filled a vacancy which hitherto has existed in the religious and social life of the village.

The official church board shows the backing that the church has, the majority of the members being substantial farmers, and the total wealth represented aggregates more than $300,000. The officers of this board work under the direction of the pastor of the church, the Rev. Mr. J. F. Krueger, D. D. of Atchison. He has demonstrated his leadership in his labors as a minister and every member has confidence in his ability and guidance. He gives the same effort and attention to the duties of the board as he does to the preparation of his sermons, for he realizes that a successful business administration is essential to the well being of the organization.

Charles M. Albers, a prominent farmer near Bendena, is the vice-president, and gives the same thought to this work as he does to the care of his beautiful farm two miles west of town. He is the owner of 420 acres and was born and reared there. He is one of the good citizens of Doniphan County and has a nice family, and is one of the consistent church goers of the community.

Rudolph J. Johnson, another well known farmer of the vicinity, is the secretary of the board, and finds time from his many farm duties to attend the board meetings and look after the correspondence and other secretarial duties. He is faithful in this charge, and comes to town whenever duty calls from his farm three miles southeast of Bendena. He has a nice level farm of 480 acres and is a native of Doniphan County. He is happy in his family relations.

William C. Albers is a substantial farmer living one mile from Bendena. He looks after the financial side of the board, and has kept this phase of the work in excellent shape. He is a producer of good corn and raises good stock on his 160 acres of Doniphan County land. He has a good family of which he is proud.

Albert F. Albers, familiarly known as Allie Albers, was born and reared in Wolf River township. He is the cashier of the Bendena State Bank, and has the confidence of all the residents of Bendena and those whose business dealings bring them to town. He left Doniphan County a few years ago, but was glad to return, and has since made his home here. He is the father of three children, Robert J., Caroline L., and Mary E., and is distinctly a home man, where he can always be found when he is not at the bank or attending to business affairs.

Martin Anderson is a Scandinavian, and came to America and located in Kansas before he could speak the English language. He has made Doniphan and Atchison counties his home since he came to this section. He is proud of the work of the church and gives it a great deal of his time and attention, seeking at all times to further its best interests. In this he is joined by the other members, who have found it a pleasure to co-operate with him. He rejoices in the nice family which he has.

George W. Ricklefs comes of that strong German stock which has characterized the upbuilding of northeastern Kansas, and given it the substantial character of which it has long boasted. He lives one mile south of Bendena, and a year ago built a farm residence costing $7,000, which is conceded to be one of the best in that part of the state. It is modern throughout and has all the conveniences one would find in a large city. He owns a good farm of 160 acres. Mr. and Mrs. Ricklefs are the proud parents of a son, Robert George, born March 8, 1915.

Garret A. Ricklefs, another German farmer of the well to do sort, has a fine residence on his 320 acres two miles south of Bendena. Here he resides in comfort with his happy family and enjoys what the seasons bring to him and those whose care is his utmost concern. He gives of his time and talents to the church, and takes a keen pride in this line of endeavor.

George Pope, a prominent farmer, was born and reared in Doniphan County only a few miles north of Bendena. He resides on the old Charles Campbell place, which is noted as having the finest lawn in Doniphan County. The stately evergreens cast a magnificent shade, and bring forth comment from everyone who passes the farm. He and his mother-in-law take a great deal of pride in keeping the place up to the standard set by the late Mr. Campbell, who planted the trees in the pioneer days.

William Wilke is another of the prosperous German farmers of the vicinity of Bendena, and has reared a fine family. He resides on the 320 acres of fine farm land five miles east of Bendena. He is one of the strict attendants at church, and every Sunday which it is possible for him to go, finds him and the members of his family in their accustomed pew. He loves the work of his church and is faithful in the service as a member of the board.

Oscar Nelson comes from that sturdy old Norwegian stock which left Norway in 1855, and sailed for the United States. His father came to this country at that time, and Oscar has gathered his acres in the new country until now he is the possessor of 460 of them. He and his good family reside four miles north of Bendena, and he is one of the devout Christians belonging to the congregation.

William Dannevik, one of the substantial farmers of the neighborhood, has his home on the 160 acres of the old Davy Lee farm four miles northeast of Bendena. He is a Scandinavian by birth and has brought up his children to speak the language in the home. He has reared a nice family and when not concerned with other duties, is at home with his wife and children.

With a church board composed of men of this caliber there is little wonder that the work has expanded and grown from the small beginning only a few years ago to the prosperous position which it now proudly occupies in the religious world of Doniphan County.

Edward Heeney

The Life Story of a Young Irish Lad From the Old Sod Who Became a Kansas Educator, Business Man, Member of the Legislature, and Made a Success in Every One of His Undertakings—A Type of Broad-Minded, Patriotic Citizenship That Has Helped to Make Kansas Great.

Born in old Ireland, November 12, 1859, and coming to Doniphan County, Kansas, when a mere lad, Ed Heeney has made for himself a record that entitles him to a place among the leading citizens of Northeast Kansas. His career has been such as many an ambitious lad has pictured in his dreams but which has been realized by few. The lad arrived at Ryan's Station March 30, 1870.

His school days were characterized by his apparent desire to outclass his fellows in getting an education, and doubtless he found time occasionally to indulge in some pure boyish fun. When at last his schooldays were over he went to teaching school, and there wasn't a pedagogue in this section that was better equipped for the calling than was he. His pupils regarded him highly, and many persons to this day tell what a splendid teacher Ed Heeney was.

Mr. Heeney graduated at Christian Brothers College in St. Joseph the spring of 1870, before coming to this county.

When politics interested him, it was his old pupils who rallied to his support and gave his candidacy impetus enough to carry him to victory. This office referred to was the superintendent of public instruction of Doniphan County. He was elected November, 1878, and his record as head of the county schools equalled that he had gained while a public school teacher. The talent and the ability was in him, and what availed more, the love for his profession. It gave him personal pride to have a part in making cultured future citizens out of boys and girls.

Leaving the office of county superintendent, Mr. Heeney did not return to school teaching, although there were many who would have welcomed him in that capacity. He had yearnings for a business career, and was well qualified by education and personality, the like of which has aided in making small merchants big factors in a nation's trade. He bought a hardware store November 10, 1880, starting on a small plan at first and gradually enlarging his stock as he progressed. He soon established for himself the same enviable reputation in business that he had acquired in a professional life. To his stock of hardware, he added implements and all kinds of farm machinery, wagons and buggies. Undertaking was also added to his business and he made a success of it. He did business on a large scale eventually and some of the commercial travelers dubbed him "Carload" Heeney. It was a fitting name and it stuck.

In 1898, the Republicans wanted a live wire to represent the district in the lower house of the Kansas Legislature. He was nominated by the Republicans, and everybody took a hand in electing him. Doniphan County wasn't surprised when the returns showed he had won. In the legislature, he proved to be the man they wanted. He was at once put on several important committees, such as education, railroad, and several others, including the ways and means committee, the most important of all. He was a strong member, ever on the watch for an opportunity to do something for the good of the state and of its people, and equally as alert to attempt to defeat or sidetrack any measure that was not for the best interests of the people.

The marriage of Ed Heeney to Miss Mary Hampson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Hampson, was solemnized July 9, 1882. Mrs. Heeney died October 4, 1893. To this union were born two daughters and one son:

Georgia graduated at Kansas State University, Lawrence, went to Berkeley, California, where she received her Master degree, and is now a successful teacher at Eureka, California.

Edith A. graduated at the Sacred Heart Convent in St. Joseph, from Mt. St. Scholistica at Canon City, Colorado and from Bethany, Topeka.

Edward J. graduated from the Kansas State University at Lawrence and took a business course in the Denver Business College. He is now engaged in the hardware business in Severance with his father.

Mr. Heeney was married in Los Angeles, California, on February 10, 1914, to Miss Ella Shulsky, of a prominent family, who resided in Union Township, this county. Her father was Robert P. Shulsky, who was born in Prussia, May 1, 1826, and came to Doniphan County in 1858. He died at his home in Union Township on February 22, 1913. His wife was Miss Mary Lawhorn of Kiles County, Tennessee, to whom he was wed February 8, 1860. She was born April 12, 1838, and died in December, 1872.

It is seldom that a man is able to achieve success at every turn, as has Ed Heeney. His views are always generous, his ideals high and his sympathy and kindness in reach of every one. He is proud that he educated his three clever children, and of the record he has made, not in the mere winning of political victory, but that the victory gave him the opportunity to do something for his constituency that was worth while.

ALBERT T. ALBERS

A Successful Banker and Business Man—A Native of Doniphan County.

The successful career of Albert T. Albers has been made in Doniphan County where he and Mrs. Albers and their children were born. The date of his birth was July 31, 1871, his parents were Mr. and Mrs. John Albers, who resided on a farm near Bendena and since the death of his father his mother presides over the home. There the present banker of Bendena grew up, employing his time on the farm and attending school. He was an industrious youth who usually accomplished whatever he undertook to do, a quality which aided him in mastering the problems of his school days as well as the problems of later life. He was popular with the boys and girls of the community and was a leader in almost everything that had to do with the life of the country round about Bendena.

In the Bendena social set in which Albert T. Albers moved was Miss Marie L. Gillen who became Mrs. Albers. She is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Gillen and was born on her father's farm in Union Township. The marriage of Mr. Albers and Miss Gillen was solemnized on December 22, 1897, and was one of the notable social events of that community. It was an ideal union of the representatives of two of the best families. To Mr. and Mrs. Albers have been born three children. Roberts, who was born January 19, 1899, is a fine young man now attending Midland College at Atchison. Caroline, born February 6, 1902, and Mary, born September 6, 1903, are both growing up and are attending school, giving promise of becoming attractive and accomplished women.

Hattie E. Peeler, Severance, endowed with literary ability, was the editor of the News, and has written several poems.

Excepting three years spent in Colorado, Mr. Albers has spent his entire life here in Doniphan County. Early in the year 1904, Mr. Albers helped to organize the Bendena State Bank which began business on February 1 of that year. He was made cashier at the time of organization, and has retained the position since.

Mr. and Mrs. Albers are active members of the St. John's Evangelical Lutheran Church, and were the first two to unite with the church after the edifice was dedicated to public worship. They have a beautiful home in Bendena and are ideally situated. Their greatest pride is in their choldren whom they are bringing up with parental care and educating them that they may become noble examples of manhood and womanhood, leading useful and honorable lives.

Rudolph J. Johnson

Rudolph J. Johnson was born in Doniphan County on the farm he now resides on, November 11, 1876. Married Miss Lula M. Zimmerman, who is also a native of Doniphan County, October 7, 1903. Four children—boys two, Milton L. and Paul; girls two, Ruth G. and Mary L.

He owns 420 acres of good land, general farming and stock raising farm situated one mile south and one and one-half miles east of Bendena. He attended common schools and Midland College of Atchison. Is a good citizen and a prosperous farmer.

Mrs. Ida M. Campbell

Mrs. Ida M. Campbell, one mile east of Bendena, widow of Charles Campbell, who died June 16, 1898. They came to Doniphan Co., 1865, rented the old Kent place for five years, and then bought where she now resides in 1870. Children living, five; boys, two, Lucius W. and John E.; daughters, Mary M., Hattie C. and Ida. Owns 160 acres of good land east of Bendena. Has a beautiful lawn. George Pope, her son-in-law, resides with the Campbell family.

Peter Anderson

Peter Anderson, born in Denmark, Sept. 28, 1869, and came to America in March, 1891, and settled in Doniphan County at Bendena. Married Miss Marie Jensen at Bendena Feb. 27, 1893. Has six children: one boy, James P., five girls, Emma, Christina, Anna, Martha, Marie E. Farms 160 acres, farming and stock raising.

Patrick Kirwan—This Irishman Sure Made Good

Born in Ireland and Came to the United States in 1849—Settled in Doniphan County in 1857—Owns Four Farms, iWth a Total Area of Six Hundred and Forty Acres—Father of Twelve Children—Honest and Industrious.

Patrick Kirwan, who resides on a beautiful farm in Wolf River township, about two miles northwest of Bendena, is one of the successful Doniphan County farmers who have made the most out of opportunities.

Born in Ireland, County of Wexford, and unfamiliar with the customs and conditions prevailing here at the time of his arrival, when a mere lad of sixteen years old, he has in the succeeding years amply demonstrated that he was endowed with good business ability and judgment. Although in his teens when he left the land of his birth, Patrick Kirwan did not forget the terrible scenes of privation he witnessed at home and resolved to make the most of his opportunities in the country of his adoption. Schooling was not easy to be obtained those days, but nevertheless young Kirwan managed to acquire a fairly good education in the United States, on top of what he had learned on the old sod.

The Kirwan family records in the Old Country show that Patrick was born on Oct. 8, 1837, and with his parents came to this country in 1849. Full of enthusiasm and determination, Patrick made up his mind to lay up for himself a competency to carry him through his declining years. He engaged in work on the levee in the city of New Orleans for seevral months, and being unacquainted with the customs of the United States, became dissatisfied and started in pursuit of a fortune at Cincinnati, Ohio. Upon his arrival at the Queen City, he was much impressed with those of whom he met and experienced little difficulty in seeuring employment. After a residence in Cincinnati for four years he had become familiar with Horace Greeley's slogan, "Go West, young man, and grow up with the country," and decided to come to the then territory of Kansas. Landing at Leavenworth, where he remained a few days and then drove overland to what was then known as the Phillipps farm, where he drove his stake and took up a farm of 160 acres, on which he has since resided. At that time Elwood was the closest town which had a lumber yard and the young man hauled all of the material for his first house from the river town in the eastern part of Doniphan County. After completing his house, he says he secured work in Jim Lane's mill in Doniphan for a few months, which necessitated him making several trips to Denver, Colorado, as wagon boss for Alex Dunning, and was with Judge Allison at the laying out of Denver, Colorado.

This patriotic citizen served as lieutenant of the militia during Price's raid in the Civil War.

Patrick Kirwan worked at any and all jobs that presented themselves during the first few years of his residence in this country, but his natural bent seemed to be in the farming line. Coming to Doniphan County at the age of twenty years, Patrick took up his permanent residence March 6, 1857, and has continued to live here ever since. He became engaged in farming from the first and has followed that pursuit to the present day.

On Jan. 6, 1863, Mr. Kirwan was married to Martha Dunning, who died March 13, 1866, leaving two children, a son and a daughter, John and Louisa. The first day of March, 1870, Mr. Kirwan married Miss Eliza Foley and ten children were born to this union: Laura, Alice, James, Eva, Dora, Pirmine, Eaden, Linus, Ida and Elizabeth. Out of this number three have died, they being Laura, Eva and Elizabeth. Mr. Kirwan's second wife died Aug. 8, 1889.

Mr. Kirwan's home place consists of 320 acres of good land, located one mile west of Bendena. He also owns 160 acres near Severance and another quarter section in Atchison County. He does not specialize in any particular line, but devotes his attention to general farming and stock raising.

Although well past the seventy-seventh milestone in his life, Mr. Kirwan is a remarkably robust man and looks many years younger. He is active and energetic and his fine physical appearance would indicate that he will be eminently capable to direct the affairs of his extensive holdings for many more years to come. The healthy life outdoors has evidently agreed with Mr. Kirwan and all of his children have the glow of health which is a characteristic heritage from their energetic father.

He has reared a family of which any parent might well be proud. They are all good workers and are respected citizens. They are all endowed with good business ability and are money makers. They are becoming leading citizens and model women. The children inherit the native wit of their Irish father, with a versatility of talent which qualifies them for success in any line of endeavor. While generous, as is usually the case of those of Celtic blood and temperment, they are also thrifty, with a keenness of judgment and executive ability which has made the Irish among the leaders in railroad work all over the country and has placed the sons of the Emerald Isle in places requiring quick and accurate action the world over.

Successful Business Woman

Left With Four Small Children at the Death of Her Husband, Mrs. John B. Severin Is Shining Example of What an Energetic Woman Can Accomplish.

When her husband died in 1899, Mrs. John B. Severin was left to battle with the world and rear four small children, the eldest of whom was only seven years and the youngest fifteen months old. The success which she has attained since the death of her husband is due entirely to Mrs. Severin's courageous efforts to fight the battle of life. Her determination to succeed was one of her most admirable qualities, and the fact that she bravely faced and surmounted every difficulty entitles her to all the honor and credit due to brave womanhood. Mrs. Severin, whose maiden name was Susan Gallagher, was born on the old Gallagher homestead near Sparks, in Doniphan County, November 25, 1864. She was still a young woman when married to John B. Severin, June 23, 1891, and a little more than seven years later she had the misfortune to lose her husband, on October 24, 1899. For several years prior to her marriage, Mrs. Severin was prominent in educational circles in Doniphan County and through the state, and she numbers among her friends several well-known characters, with whom she became acquainted during her connecton with the public schools.

On the death of her husband, Mrs. Severin set about to make a living for herself and small children, and the magnificent manner in which she has succeeded speaks volumes for her grand, womanly qualities. All of her children have been given the best educational advantages available, and they reflect the beautiful character of their mother. Mrs. Severin is generally recognized as being one of the foremost among the successful business women of Kansas. She resides in Bendena, where she has been prosperously engaged in the mercantile business since January 1, 1913. She carries the most complete stocks of general merchandise in that section of Doniphan County, and her customers never fail to find the best satisfaction in their purchases. Mrs. Severin is also interested in farming and owns a fine tract of 120 acres near Baileyville, Nemaha County. This land is immensely valuable and the soil is very fertile and productive. With her prosperous business in Bendena and her land holdings in Nemaha County, there is little to be feared by Mrs. Severin regarding the future. Each one of the four Severin children received a good education and their doting mother spared no expense in equipping them mentally for the world. Julia, the eldest, attended Mt. Saint Scholastica Academy in Atchison, for two years, and the three boys, James, Charles and Matthew, are all graduates of the Christian Brothers College, of St. Joseph, Mo. Charles is at present taking a four years' course in mechanical engineering in the state agricultural college in Manhattan, Kansas.

On Friday night, Feb. 27, 1914, the old brick house at Troy Junction, one mile from Troy, caught fire from a defective flue and was destroyed. This house was built in 1868, about the same time the A. & N. railroad (now the B. & M.) and the St. Joseph & Grand Island railroad was built. It was erected by a man named Cutler, who owned it for about twenty years and who operated it as a hotel. Cyrus Leland bought it from Cutler. Lige Monroe operated it as a hotel about three years after Cutler gave it up and then Bill White occupied it as a restaurant and saloon for several years.

Bill did a flouirishing business, as at that time Troy Junction was a lively place, having a number of residences and a couple of large warehouses. All of the stock was shipped from the Junction then. The railroads kept a car inspector there and a number of other employes. The A. & N. had a transfer track there and the passenger trains were backed down to the depot in Troy, where passengers for Atchison and other points along the A. & N. were taken on. There was no bridge at Rulo then and this was the main line. The "Cannon Ball" train was run over the road and quite a number of freight trains. Every freight train stopped for refreshments at Bill's cafe and to transfer stock and freight. After Bill White retired from business, S. P. Chase occupied the old brick building and used it as an egg and butter establishment. Frank Condit, who now lives north of Troy, worked for Chase at that time.

The Weekly Commercial publication in St. Joseph, Missouri, by C. C. Scott, an independent journal devoted to commercial, local and general news, made its first appearance in Troy about March 17th, St. Patrick's day, 1872.

George C. Keoppen was married to Mrs. Elizabeth Coalhour at her residence two miles north of Highland by the Rev. Mr. A. S. McConnell, Feb. 19, 1872.

R. Leslie Franklin

Aberdeen-Angus Herd Owned by R. Leslie Franklin, of Doniphan County, Has Commanded the Highest Market Price Repeatedly During Recent Years—Mrs. Franklin Specializes in "Everything White" for Poultry Breeding Purposes—Farm Two Miles Southeast of Bendena.

The Aberdeen-Angus cattle from the farm of R. Leslie Franklin, Wolf River Township, Doniphan County, have done considerable in recent years to uphold the reputation of the county for producing the best live stock in this section of Kansas.

This high-grade breed of cattle has several times brought the highest market prices in the big livestock markets of the Middle West during the past few years. Mr. Franklin specializes in the Aberdeen-Angus blood because experience has convinced him that it is the most profitable.

The Franklin farm consists of 280 acres, as good land as can be found in his part of Doniphan County. It is located two miles south and three-quarters of a mile east of Bendena, and is a most desirable piece of property.

Mr. Franklin is a native of Brown County, Kansas, having been born there July 29, 1880. He was educated in the public schools and later took a course at the Atchison Business College, from which institution he was graduated a leader in his class.

During the year 1895 Mr. Franklin moved to Doniphan County and a few years later became actively engaged in farming. In addition to handling exclusively the Aberdeen-Angus breed of cattle he also raises hogs on an extensive scale.

Mr. Franklin was married to Miss Edith May Carpenter of Kennekuk, Atchison County, on April 26, 1905, at her home, by the Rev. Mr. R. S. Scholes. She was born September 15, 1880. One son and two daughters have been born to this union: Twyla Anatalie, September 27, 1906; Myra Martha Coroline, August 11, 1911, and Elwyn Noble, August 2, 1914. The Franklin children are a delightful attraction at the home of their parents and are bright and cheerful youngsters.

Mrs. Franklin is a great lover of white poultry and her motto is "everything white" for breeding purposes. Consequently it is not surprising that her pens are given over entirely to the raising of White Rock chickens, White Pekin ducks, White African guineas and White Holland turkeys.

JOHN F. LIBEL, SON OF A DONIPHAN COUNTY PIONEER

Came to Doniphan County in 1859 from Pennsylvania—Experienced Drought of 1860—Attended School Only Three Months—Natural Business Ability and Application Made Him Prosperous—Owns 300 Acres of Good Farm Land in Wolf River Township, and a Herd of Short Horn Cattle.

One of the prosperous farmers in Doniphan County is John F. Libel, who lives one mile south and one-half mile east of Leona, in Wolf River Township, and owns 300 acres of good farm land and many Shorthorn cattle. He is a son of Doniphan County pioneers and can recall something of the thrilling echoes of the Pro-Slavery versus Free State parties, as well as the great drought of 1860. From the hard times of those early years, he has seen Kansas and Doniphan County bloom from virtually a desert to a place of wonderful fertility and progress.

Mr. Libel was born in Elk County, Pennsylvania, March 22, 1849. His parents were John and Mary Libel, of sturdy Pennsylvania stock. The Pennsylvania farmers are as solid and sure in their dealings as the rocks in the hills of their state. They equal if not surpass the Scotch in "canniness" and thrift. The Libels had all these qualities which their son inherits.

Although the Libels possessed considerable of the conservatism of the Pennsylvania farmers, they naturally were more progressive and more venturesome than many of their neighbors. They were more progressive because they considered migrating to the almost unknown Kansas, and were venturesome in that they were determined to go. John Libel was only ten years old when the family left, yet he has vivid recollections of coming part way in the stuffy railroad coaches, drawn by puffy engines with huge smoke stacks, and the rest of the way in a jolting, lurching, ox-drawn linchpin wagon.

After the long and tiresome journey, the Libels arrived in Doniphan County on a hot August day—the 10th—in 1859. With but little rest, despite the fatigue of the journey, they started out to look for a farm and at length located one mile east of where their son now lives. The same year, George M. Beebe, who became acting governor of the Territory of Kansas, upon the resignation from the governor's chair of the late Samuel Medary, also located in Doniphan County.

As young John grew up, he received but little schooling. In fact, he attended school only three months during his life, as schools in Kansas were then as rare as grand pianos. However, the boy gained his education from other sources—from nature and practical lessons of farm life, from newspaper reading, from stories he heard, and the eachoes of the Pro-Slavery and Free State controversy. Doubtless he was thrilled with the accounts of the disturbances in Linn, Bourbon and the southeastern counties, between the slavery advocates and the abolitionists, whose leader was Capt. James Montgomery, and how the Republican party in Kansas was organized from the Free State party at Osawatomie, May 18, 1859.

The battling against natural forces was a liberal education to the close-observing boy. He well remembers the year 1860, following his coming to Kansas. That was the year of one of the most severe and extensive droughts ever seen in Kansas, and early settlers recall how it was necessary to send to the Eastern states for aid. Then, also, Mr. Libel recalls how that same year he heard, with great satisfaction, of the building of a railroad line from Elwood to Marysville, which was the first railroad in Kansas. Mr. Libel also has vivid recollections of the uncertain crops and the continual discouragements which beset the struggling pioneers, most of whom lived in rude houses, mere "dug outs."

Amid such hardships, handicapped by the most primitive means of farming, Mr. Libel struggled through the early days with his parents. What he lacked in "book learning" he made up by close observation and application of the knowledge thus gained. By shrewdness and saving, and making the most of every opportunity, he began, when a young man, to accumulate land and cattle, and has since enjoyed a liberal measure of prosperity.

From the lessons learned in the first years of living in Kansas, this successful farmer learned what grains were best adapted to the soil and persisted in careful farming undiscouraged by grasshoppers, droughts and hot winds. Today he can look back with considerable satisfaction upon his triumph over these obstacles. In his comfortable home he manages his 300 acres and devotes considerable time to his Shorthorn cattle.

Like many of the Pennsylvania Dutch, the subject of this sketch has more than usual business ability and industry. Like them, he has always practiced economy and has been rewarded by exceptional prosperity in his declining years.

R. Leslie Franklin and Family, Who Reside in Wolf River Township.

He married Miss Mary Halling June 9, 1873, and at the time of her death was the mother of twelve children and was a most lovable woman and a true wife and mother. She died August 21, 1913. Six of the children are living: Frank Libel, farmer; Lambert A. Libel, cashier of the Farmers' State Bank of Wathena; Lena Libel, who was an efficient school teacher and now is Mrs. Roy Carter, of near Wathena; Elizabeth Libel, who is now Mrs. Charles L. Richard of St. Joseph, Missouri; Bertha Libel, who is now Mrs. Michael Twohey of near Purcell.

Mr. Libel's sons and daughters are all respected citizens of their respective communities and reflect great credit upon their parents.

Dr. S. H. Blakely

Among the business men of Severance is Dr. S. H. Blakely, who has been the owner of the drug store in the town, and who for several years was actively engaged there in the practice of medicine. Dr. Blakely has for years been recognized as not only a skillful physician, but as a druggist whose knowledge of medicines and diseases makes him thoroughly dependable.

The subject of this sketch is a native of Kentucky. He was born at Jamestown in that state November 18, 1849. He spent his boyhood days at the town of his birth and received the best education the schools of the 1850's and 1860's afforded. When a young man he had a desire to become a medical practitioner. He went to Louisville and attended the Medical College of that city, famed for many years as one of the best colleges in the United States.

A short time after receiving his diploma Doctor Blakely came west and began practicing medicine at Leona. He was there about thirteen years and had a fine practice. Later he practiced five years at Kansas City and Lamar, Missouri. His next field of labor was at Troy, where for six years he was a leading physician.

Residence of John F. Libel, Located Near Leona, in Wolf River Township.

Fifteen years ago Doctor Blakely returned to Severance and went into the drug business in the same store which he now owns. He has made a success of this business, and he is popular with the people.

The marriage of Doctor Blakely and Florence A. Very occurred in October, 1875. Mrs. Blakely was a native of Indiana and attended the Western Female College at Oxford, Ohio.

Doctor and Mrs. Blakely spent the winter of 1884-5 in New York City, and while there the Doctor took a post-graduate course in the New York Polyclinic School. He is regarded as one of the best informed men on medical and surgical science in this section of Kansas.

Accidentally Shot

Clyde Raymond Sparks, the small son of Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Sparks, farmers who reside west of Bendena, was accidentally shot and killed by his little brother, Thomas Sparks, about 4 P. M. Sunday, February 6, 1915. Clyde was four years and his brother was eight. They were playing and were as unsuspecting of any danger as are all boys of that age. The shooting occurred at their home, in a tenement house owned by Billy Webb, about one mile and a half west of Bendena.

Owns Best Scoring Hen

Miss Maggie O'Shea Quit Teaching School Ten Years Ago in Order to Engage in the More Lucrative and Congenial Business of Raising Thoroughbred Chickens—Specializes in White Wyandottes.

When she abandoned her profession as school teacher ten years ago in order to engage in the business of raising thoroughbred chickens, Miss Maggie O'Shea never dreamed that her venture would shed additional honor on the many high-class enterprises which flourish in Doniphan County.

Miss O'Shea is a natural authority on high-bred poultry and her fame is now nation-wide as the owner of the best scoring hen in the world. Some time ago she was awarded the bronze medal given by the American Poultry Association for the fowl maintaining the highest laying average all the year round.

For about twenty years Miss O'Shea was one of the most popular school teachers in Doniphan County and scores of her pupils are now the fathers and mothers of happy families. Ten years ago she gave up her school work and embarked in the more lucrative occupation of raising White Wyandotte chickens.

Miss O'Shea is a native of Doniphan County. She is the daughter of John and Johanna O'Shea, who settled on the old homestead one mile east of Bendena over fifty years ago. Both of her parents are now dead. With her brother John, Miss O'Shea resides on the old home place, John farming eighty acres and devoting much attention to stock raising.

Since starting raising thoroughbred chickens Miss O'Shea has met with well merited success. She is painstaking to a degree and devotes all her time to her flocks. Her chickens and eggs have been purchased by people far and wide and have more than lived up to the expectations of the buyers.

Both eggs and fowls from the O'Shea barnyard are always for sale and a postal regarding prices will receive prompt attention from Maggie O'Shea, Bendena, Kansas.

The O'Shea family has always been industrious. Josie T., now Mrs. Joseph Rogers, of 616 Pearson street, Walla Walla, Wash., was for six years one of the highest salaried teachers in Doniphan County. She taught at school No. 20 in the Zimmerman district, four miles southwest of Troy, for six years. Patrick O'Shea learned telegraphy and now is the agent at Okarche, Oklahoma, where he is known as the most obliging agent who ever stamped a ticket in the town. From early boyhood his inclination was toward telegraphy. Nora Della is Mrs. James Rannigan of Homestead, Pa., and Mary Agnes is Mrs. Kelley of Munhall, Pa. John resides on the farm and is an honest citizen and a young man of irreproachable character, who has the respect of everyone in Doniphan County who has the pleasure of knowing him personally.

Death of Mrs. McGee

On Monday, March 6, 1871, at Severance, at 8:30 o'clock a. m., of pluropneumonia, Martha the wife of Thomas C. McGee, aged thirty-seven years, died at their residence. The deceased was well known in Wolf River township and many of the old settlers of Doniphan County remember the McGee family today. Mrs. McGee was, for twenty years, a strict member of the Christian church in high standing. A few days before her death she was thought to be out of danger, but the Great Giver saw fit to call her from our midst. She was highly respected and beloved by all who knew her. On the seventh of the month following, her remains were taken to Bellemont or Old Whitehead for interment, where the family formerly resided. She left six children to mourn their loss and the sympathy of the community was with the bereaved husband and children in their affliction.

LENNIE B. HOWARD

A Young and Successful Business Man — Deals in Grain and General Merchandise.

Lennie B. Howard, who resides in Bendena and is one of the most successful business men in this section, is a native of Doniphan County. He was born Sept. 21, 1885, on his parents' farm near Bendena and is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Phillip Howard, both of whom are dead. Mr. Howard, Sr., died on June 28, 1907.

Lennie B. Howard was educated in the common schools and until March 12, 1913, followed farming as a vocation. After that date, however, he entered the grain business at Bendena, building the only grain elevator in that town and also one of the largest and best in the county. It was an unqualified success from the start, so Mr. Howard decided to branch out into other lines, and entered the mercantile field May 18, 1914, establishing a general merchandise business. He is a congenial and popular merchant and a most efficient tradesman.

At the present time Mr. Howard is extremely interested in lodge work, being prominent in Woodman circles and the Knights and Ladies of Security. The only blot on Mr. Howard's career is the fact that he has never married and is cheating some nice young woman. He has three brothers and two sisters. They are John A., who now resides in California; Charles C., who farms the old place; Miss Grace V., Mable R., and Louie L. Howard, who reside in Troy.

Raises Thoroughbred Stock

Ridge View Stock Farm Has Made a Record for the High Quality of Poland China Hogs, Aberdeen Cattle and Splendid Type of Mules Produced There.

William R. Webb, Proprietor of the Farm, Is an Authority on Blooded Animals and the Product of His Farm Is Now Famous From Coast to Coast—Breeding Stables for Horses Most Successful in the Country.

The chief essential to success in breeding thoroughbred animals is to have the best blooded stock to start with and manage the establishment with an expert knowledge of the details necessary to accomplish the desired results.

In order to be a successful stock raiser, the proprietor of the farm must give his undivided attention to the surroundings of his pens and stables, and make particular provision to safeguard the health of the animals in order to secure the strongest progeny possible for propagating purposes. This is especially the case where animals of the highest pedigree are produced and where the reputation of the stock farm is as necessary to be maintained as are the financial returns from the enterprise. No man with an eye to business in the future can afford to let the quality of his product deteriorate. Should he neglect that feature of the business he will soon find out that both reputation and profits will vanish.

Residence of William R. Webb, Situated in Wolf River Township.

Next to sanitation the feed and care given thoroughbred animals kept for breeding purposes are the most important elements to be attended. Blooded stock, like human beings, are sensitive to unpleasant surroundings and improper food. Likewise, they must be properly cared for and attended with the highest degree of intelligence. Conditions adverse to congenial surroundings will react injuriously to the general health of the stock and to the bank account of the owner of the stock farm.

All the foregoing facts had been familiar to William R. Webb when he embarked in the business of raising thoroughbred hogs for breeding purposes about twelve years ago. He was well aware that blooded animals, in order to produce the best possible progeny, should be carefully and judiciously nurtured, and his aim has been to give the world the best ever since.

The Ridge View Stock Farm, owned by Mr. Webb, consists of 320 acres of fertile land, situated one mile west of Bendena. The topographical surroundings of the farm are ideal and the climatic conditions are superb for stock-raising purposes. The feed raised on the farm cannot be excelled in quality and the supply of pure, clear water completes the admirable adaptability of the Ridge View Stock Farm to the purposes for which it is devoted.

Mr. Webb is a native product of Doniphan County, having been born late in December, 1873. He has been a farmer all his life and is perfectly familiar with every branch of the live stock industry. He knows all the best strains and breeds in existence and has nothing to learn in the proper care of breeding animals. That is the secret of his success.

Ever since Mr. Webb made his initial attempt at raising thoroughbred Poland-Chinas his pens have annually added to his reputation as a shrewd and careful breeder. He began with the highest grade of Poland Chinas and his pens are generally recognized for producing the best hogs for breeding purposes from coast to coast. His annual public sale attracts buyers from all sections of the country while a large number of high-class hogs are disposed of at private sale at different times during the year. Mr. Webb never overlooks an opportunity to promulgate the virtues of his product and communications from all persons desiring information regarding high-grade Poland-China swine are promptly answered by the proprietor of the Ridge View Stock Farm.

The success attending Mr. Webb's Poland-China venture induced him to embark in the business of breeding registered Aberdeen-Angus cattle, and six years ago he started with a barn full of the highest grade to be found anywhere. The venture was a pronounced success from the start, and has proved both enjoyable and profitable to the proprietor of the Ridge View Farm.

The cattle turned out from Mr. Webb's place are recognized the country over as being of the most desired strain, and are much in demand wherever they are offered for sale. They are all clean-cut and have the finer points of that particular class of cattle very clearly defined. Since he added the Aberdeen-Angus attraction to Ridge View, Mr. Webb has never had a moment to regret it, because the high grade of his product has not only sustained the proprietor's judgment, but has materially added to the profits of the farm.

It is in the breeding of mules and horses that Mr. Webb takes his keenest pleasure. His breeding stables for this purpose take rank with the best in the country and their reputation has already traveled not only throughout the United States, but to several countries beyond the seas. The horses raised at Ridge View Stock Farm are of the finer grade of work horses, and both the sires and dams are of well-known registered breeds.

For many years the superiority of the Missouri mule as a beast of burden and an all-round "cuss," has been heralded over the universe, but that cantankerous animal has surely lost caste with the mule buyers who visit the Ridge View Farm. When he started to raise mules Mr. Webb realized the nature of the competition he would encounter from the Missouri side of the river, so he played safe by securing the best jack to be had for money, and paid special attention to the fact that none but mares of the cleanest and purest type were served.

A fair idea of Mr. Webb's reliability and high standing among the breeders of blooded live stock may be gained from the fact that he is an influential member of the Poland-China Record Association and the Aberdeen-Angus Record Association. None but the most reliable breeders of pedigreed stock are admitted to these organizations, and Mr. Webb's best recommendation is that he is recognized as one of the leading breeders of blooded stock by the officials of the Poland-China and Aberdeen-Angus Record Associations.

Hog Barn on W. R. Webb's Farm, Where He Breeds Poland-Chinas.

In his youthful days Mr. Webb attended the public schools of Doniphan County, and is a close reader of all literature pertaining to the blooded stock industry. In 1896 he was married to Miss Ella Hancock, who died December 24, 1904, leaving a lovely daughter, Ella Pauline, born December 19, 1904. On May 1, 1907, the subject of this sketch was again married to Miss Mamie B. Jones, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Salem Jones. The wedding was solemnized at the bride's home, the Rev. F. D. Altman officiating. To this union one daughter has been born, Ruth May, May 23, 1909, and one son, William Albert, May 6, 1912. Mr. Webb was born December 28, 1873, near where he resides, and his wife was born in the same neighborhood January 1, 1882.

Mr. Webb and family have a handsome home on Ridge View Farm, where their friends and neighbors are always welcome and hospitality is extended with a plentiful hand. During sale times the visitors are also treated with home-like consideration and leave Ridge View with a fine impression of the proprietor and his interest in gfamily. Notwithstanding the fact that Mr. Webb is an out-and-out stockman, he is progressive enough in his tastes to own one of the finest automobiles in the county, which he operates along the roads at a clip that takes the dust some time to settle. It is during the time of the stock sales that Mr. Webb makes the best use of his auto in meeting trains and taking the prospective buyers to and from Ridge View Farm.

The fences are kept up on Mr. Webb's place and buildings are always in good shape, which naturally gives one the impression when he passes by the farm that he is an up-to-date farmer. The subject of this sketch will tell you that it pays to keep his farm in the best possible condition, and that it always pays to erect good buildings and keep them in order. There are no make-shifts on his place. You don't see things go to rack and ruin, and you don't see farm implements and machinery standing out in the fields, and exposed to the weather when not in use. He says that many farmers are so negligent with their implements and then are unable to account for their loss. It is bad management, coupled with pure carelessness, that costs great loss to farmers and adds expense to their crop production, he says, and he can prove this by comparing the cost of his farm buildings and machinery and their maintenance with the cost of one of the farms where they have no hog barns or sheds for their implements. Another argument in favor of the improved farm advocated by this business farmer is that it furnishes an incentive for the boys to remain at home on the farm instead of running off to the cities to work as store clerks or street car conductors and motormen. A dilapidated run-down farm is discouraging to any boy on the farm, and we do not blame some of the farmers' sons for going to town. A neat, well-kept farm, with good fences and buildings and a place for everything, is calculated to encourage any industrious farm lad and cause him to love the farm. The subject of this sketch has been engaged in general farming and stock breeding since he became a man. In the fields his advanced methods of cultivation produce abundant crops of wheat, corn, oats, alfalfa, while his garden yields plenty of vegetables for family use.

Union Township

Union a Square Township

With Six Square Miles of Prime Agricultural Land the People of This Township Are Prosperous and Well Fixed Financially —Population Is Mostly Comprised of Irish and German Catholics and Has Two of the Most Expensive Churches of That Faith in Doniphan County.

The township of Union is the only one of the eight which constitute Doniphan County that forms a complete square. It is six miles any way and every way along its borders, and is a snug piece of country.

Union Township was created July 10, 1878, out of the southern part of Wolf River Township. The territory embraced in the township had very few early settlers previous to 1857, and did not, in fact, settle up with any degree of rapidity until after the war. Independence Creek, which forms a part of the southern boundary of Doniphan County, rises in Union Township.

The population of Union Township is made up of a substantial class of citizens who have good reason to feel wealthy in the ownership of such fertile land. The farms are all level, and are considered worth from $150 to $250 an acre.

The towns of the township, Purcell and Denton, are bustling little communities, and the merchants are progressive and real live wires. The Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific is the only railroad running through the township, entering it almost in the northeast corner, and running through to the southwest corner, leaving Doniphan County near the fine farms of Ben F. Reichenberger and August Hess.

The township has a strong Catholic population, comprised mostly of some of the original Irish and German settlers and their descendants. Their selection of the southwest corner of the county was judicious, as the years have proved by the great development of the farms and the wonderful fertility of the soil. Two of the most expensive Catholic churches in Doniphan County are located in the township, St. Benedict's in the eastern part, and the St. Mary's Church of Purcell.

Previous to the organization of this township, July 10, 1878, a meeting was held by representatives from the two great political parties of the day, in which the name "Union" was agreed upon as a fitting appellation for the township. The Republicans were represented by R. P. Shulsky, William Denton, W. B. Garten, Hon. D. W. Edwards and J. L. Blair; A. W. Walters, William Gillen, B. Haney and S. Hays representing the Democratic party.

A petition was presented to the county commissioners, Dr. J. S. Long, Cyrus Leland, Jr., and W. H. Deckard, on the 4th day of June 1878, "for setting off and organizing a new township, the same to be set off from Wolf River Township, in said county, and, whereas, a petition has been presented to said board of county commissioners, signed by more than fifty electors residing within the limits of said proposed new township, embraces within its limits territory equal to at least thirty (30) square miles, and at least two hundred (200) inhabitants within the lands thereof, said new township being described and bounded by metes and bounds as follows, to-wit:

"All the territory or tract of land in Wolf River Township, Doniphan County, Kansas, known as Congressional Township Four (4) south, and Range Nineteen (19) east, containing six square miles, more or less, and that said new township be known by the name of Union Township, and that the first election of officers for said township be held at the schoolhouse, situated on the southeast corner of Section sixteen (16), Township four (4) south, Range nineteen (19) east, in said township, on Tuesday succeeding the first Monday in November, 1878, at which time the proper officers of said township shall be elected, and said township shall be known, named and designated for election purposes, as Union Precinct."

The township contains thirty-six square miles, or 23,040 acres, about 22,000 acres of which is corn cultivated to the highest degree.

The surface of this township is all upland, rolling, excepting, perhaps, a mile strip on the eastern boundary of the township, where, being within the confines of Independence Creek and branches, it becomes more broken.

Although no large streams flow through this township, it is well watered by small creeks and springs, there being scarcely a section of land in the township but what living water may be found at all seasons of the year. Well water can be obtained at a depth from thirty to sixty feet.

It has been demonstrated by the farmers of this township that the high prairie land is equal in many respects to the bottom lands. Some of the best farms in the county may be found in this township.

The two principal products are wheat and corn. In regard to stock, Union Township claims to produce more swine and cattle than any other township in the county.

Surface coal was discovered on the southeast corner of Section 10 and on the northwest corner of Section 34 several years ago. In 1880 futile attempts were made to organize a stock company for the purpose of developing the mineral resources of the township, but as the scheme lacked the necessary enthusiasm and co-operation of the people, the idea was abandoned. The first postoffice established in Union Township was located on the northwest corner Section 29, and named in honor of Wm. Normile. This office was established March 21, 1862, and on January 30, 1864, the name was changed to Ridge Farm, and James Underwood was appointed postmaster, serving until September 12, 1865, at which time the name was

John Fuhrken Made Good

Coming to Doniphan County From His Native Home in Germany, Mr. Fuhrken Was Handicapped at the Start By Not Being Familiar With the Language and Customs of America—But He Was an Apt Lad and Soon Picked Up.

Arriving in Doniphan County at the Age of Twenty He Has by Hard Work and Thrift Now Become the Sole Owner of a Fine Quarter Section of Land in Union Township, Near Severance.

The parents of John Fuhrken, over in the Fatherland, must have been patriotic Americans, with John's future at heart, for they had matters arranged so that he was born on July 4, 1871. That's Independence Day in this country, and John is surely independent just now.

When Mr. Fuhrken came to America, he faced a stiff proposition for a foreign-born lad. He was unfamiliar with the language, unacquainted with the customs of the country. But he had the grit which makes all good citizens. He was twenty years old, then. Now he is forty-five, a substantial farmer of Doniphan County, and very well to do.

Mr. Fuhrken was endowed from boyhood with the characteristic trait of thrift and industry. His early years in the old country were just as hard as any of the boys in his own neighborhood. It was a case of work, almost from the time he was physically able, and he has not forgotten his early teachings, but knows how to do a man's part, and is never backward about doing it, either.

Early in the year 1891 Mr. Fuhrken emigrated to the United States and very soon afterward came to Severance with Gus and Herman Laverentz. He could talk German all right then, but that was about all. Now he is one of the good men of his section of the county, and he speaks English as good as most of them.

Before he left home John Fuhrken did not like the dominating military spirit of the Fatherland, and he decided to avoid army service. He is not against nations having a scrap now and then, but he does not like compulsory work feeding cannon, or standing up in the open to be shot down. He feels safer at home, in his snug farm house in Union Township.

When Mr. Fuhrken came to Severance, he was employed for a year by R. P. Shulsky as a farm hand. He had only a dollar and six bits when he landed in America, and he has been adding to that little nest-egg ever since. He was a thrifty young man and saved all his earnings, except what was required to buy clothes.

After getting sufficient money together with which to start farming on his own account, John Fuhrken grabbed at the first available opportunity and rented a place. Soon he had saved enough to buy land, and today he is the owner of a fertile quarter section, with a good house and substantial outbuildings, a short distance from Severance.

He is known all over Doniphan County and the surrounding country as a breeder of fine stock. His specialty is Holstein cattle and O. I. C. hogs. Mr. Fuhrken buys and sells stock, and has realized a great deal of money through his clever judgment.

Mr. Fuhrken was married March 17, 1901, St. Patrick's day in the morning, to Miss May Manchester, at the old Manchester home in Union Township, four miles due south of Denton. His wife was a loving helpmeet and, as becomes a faithful wife, shared her husand's cares, and in making a comfortable home for her husband and children, did as much as Mr. Fuhrken himself to place the family on the comfortable basis on which they now live. Mrs. Fuhrken died November 13, 1911, leaving a heart-broken husband and the following children to mourn her death: Carl John Henry, born February 11, 1902; Jessie May, born March 24, 1905; Diedrich, born August 13, 1906; Martha Jennie, born April 7, 1908.

Mrs. Fuhrken had many friends in Doniphan County before and after her marriage, and she is still mentioned with the greatest respect and reverence. After the death of his wife, the subject of this sketch, although terribly shaken by the awful event, realized that he must now more than ever be a guide to his children, and he has done all that any man so situated could have undertaken, and the children justify his efforts.

Mr. Fuhrken's aged mother still lives in the old German village of Oldenburg and, although eighty years old, is bright and vigorous. The father died some years ago. There is also one brother and sister, in the old country. Whether this brother has served his term in the army, we do not know, but judging from what is required by that land of stern military laws, we would venture to say he has done some years of "straw foot, hay foot," or the German equivalent. Henry, another of the Fuhrkens who immigrated, is a baker in Clay Center, Nebraska, and Anton lives near Willis, Kansas, and owns a fine farm. They are all doing well, illustrating the fact that you can't keep a good man down.

John does not use intoxicating liquor in any form; he naturally wouldn't in this prohibition state, but it didn't take prohibition to make John a total abstainer. It was his innate sense of what is good for a man that prompted him to give his stomach the respect it deserves. As might be judged from the foregoing, his habits are all good, and he is looked up to by his neighbors as an irreproachable citizen and a man who is held up as an example.

Mr. Fuhrken is Republican central committeeman of Union Township, and is recognized as a strong factor in politics. His present position was won through the endeavor of friends to show him that Doniphan County appreciates men of sterling character and true worth, who are not afraid of their convictions and to stand by them. His highest ambition is to educate his children in a fitting way, and to bring them up in honor and integrity. Doniphan County needs more such citizens.

The new barn recently erected on his farm, near Denton, in Union Township, is one of the most immense buildings of its kind either in Doniphan County or the entire state of Kansas.

The barn is octagonal in shape and has a circumference of 192 feet. It is planned so as to give every possible inch of space for utility purposes. It has a concrete foundation and the wagon depth, which is forty-eight by sixteen feet, is also of concrete.

The barn is eighteen feet to plate, and thirty-five feet to the hayrack. An idea of the enormous proportions of Mr. Fuhrken's building may be gained from the following: Harness room, twelve by eighteen feet; five double stalls, two box stalls and one single stall; sufficient room for twenty or more cows and calves, and in the center, two bins for oats and corn, with a capacity of about fifteen hundred bushels, which can be filled from the wagon part. The haymow will hold from seventy to seventy-five tons of hay.

Mr. Fuhrken has a splendid farm, and feeds and raises only the best grade of live stock. He is naturally proud of his new barn, which is the wonder of the farming element in that part of Doniphan County. The owner of this immense structure is one of the best known and most highly respected men in the county. He takes a strong interest in Republican politics and is at present township committeeman for Union Township. Mrs. Fuhrken died some years ago.

Mrs. A. L. Halligan

Mrs. A. L. Halligan, nee Miss Rose McSorley, daughter of Michael McSorley, who lives near St. Benedict's Church in Union Township, will be remembered by many in Doniphan County. She is now the wife of A. L. Halligan of Grand Junction, Colorado, an assessor in Mesa County. Mrs. Halligan has a sister, Miss Ellen McSorley, who resides near St. Benedict's Church in Union Township. Mr. Michael McSorley, her father, has a farm in this county near the same place.

St. Benedict's Catholic Church

Splendid House of Worship in Union Township—Parish Work Started in 1856 By Rev. Henry Lemke, O. S. B.—First Building Erected in 1863—Church Edifice Valued at $15,000 Destroyed By Cyclone May 25, 1903—Present Building Worth $20,000—Rev. Father Matthew Bradley Is in the Twenty-first Year of His Pastorate at St. Benedict's.

The history of St. Benedict's Catholic Church in Union Township, Doniphan County, antedates the history of Kansas, as a state, by fully four years. Likewise it is as supremely interesting to a churchman as the history of the state is replete with thrilling moments to a layman. The Territory of Kansas had scarcely gotten its bearings as an organized government when the nucleus of the present parish of St. Benedict was formed. The existence today of St. Benedict's parish as a church organization is due to the missionary zeal and self-sacrifice of Rev. Father Henry Lemke, O. S. B., the first Benedictine monk to touch upon Kansas soil. Away back in the year 1856 Father Lemke realized the opportunity for spiritual ministrations among the scattered Catholic settlers in the country for many miles around the present town of Bendena.

Upon his personal solicitation the good priest was authorized by his superior to look after the spiritual welfare of the pioneer Catholic people in what was then regarded as a wild and remote country. Father Lemke began his labors by visiting the Catholics all through that part of Wolf River and Union Townships within a radius of several miles of the present towns of Bendena and Denton. On his trips the missionary would call upon the settlers of his faith while journeying through Wayne Township to the objective scene of his labors.

The pastoral calls of the priest were attended with considerable physical hardships. The facilities for travel did not exist those days as at present, and it frequently happened that the good missionary was compelled to trudge on foot from the town of Doniphan to minister to his new charge. The visits of Father Lemke were not frequent at first, but they were made at stated intervals so that his coming was always expected by the people, who would congregate at a designated point to attend the services. The journey from Doniphan consumed considerable time in bad weather, as there were no roads laid out and the trail was sometimes obliterated by heavy falls of snow. It was thirteen miles by the shortest possible route from the town of Doniphan to the nearest place where services might be held, and Father Lemke often arrived at a settler's house partly frozen, after a hard day's journey on foot.

For about three years Reverend Father Lemke labored among the faithful and his kindly nature endeared him to all the people. Services were held in private homes, mostly all of which were but crude log houses. Nevertheless, the self-sacrificing zeal of the good missionary was amply rewarded by the attendance of Catholics who came to the appointed place of worship with as much fervor as if they were to be comfortably housed in a spiral cathedral. With the transfer of Reverend Father Lemke to a new field of religious labor, Rev. Thomas Bartl, O. S. B., was appointed to minister to the new charge of St. Benedict. Shortly after his arrival, Father Bartl placed the parish on a thoroughly organized basis, and the erection of the "Old Rock Church" was begun in 1860. The Catholic settlers in that section of Wolf River Township hailed the proposition to build a church with encouraging manifestations of delight, and they freely gave of their means and their labor toward the completion of the project. The residents of that section were not so plentifully endowed with worldly possessions as they are at present, but they set a good example to posterity by contributing toward the construction of the church to the best of their ability. They wanted a house of worship, and they felt that no burden would be too heavy on their shoulders in order to accomplish the desire of their hearts.

Work on the Old Rock Church progressed very slowly at first. It was easy enough to get labor, for there was not an able-bodied man in the new parish who was not ready and willing to work to assist in completing the building. But the material was hard to get. There was heavy expense entailed in procuring what could not be obtained at home, and the people were poor. The situation was made still more difficult through the breaking out of the Civil War, when most of the male adults among the Catholic settlers enlisted to fight for the Union. From the time the church building was started, under the supervision of Reverend Father Bartl, the operations were slow, on account of the adverse exigencies of the times. It required three long years in which to complete the structure, but when the last detail had been finished, the parishioners felt that they had been instrumental in erecting a substantial building for the worship of God. The church building was thirty-five by seventy feet, and was solidly built of the best materials obtainable.

St. Benedict's Catholic Church, Situated in Union Township,

With the erection of the new St. Benedict's Church and the subsequent settlement of the surrounding country, the Catholics of that part of Wolf River Township concluded Father Bartl should be further encouraged in his efforts to have one of the most complete religious centers in the state. So the people got together and agreed to defray the expense of erecting a parsonage. Under the direction of Father Bartl, a seven-room brick residence was built. Rev. Father Thomas Bartl remained as pastor of St. Benedict's for thirteen years. The fruits of his labor are still very much in evidence all over that section of Doniphan County. He was beloved by his parishioners and greatly esteemed by the people of all other denominations. His departure was sincerely regretted because the entire countryside felt that he had done a great and noble work.

The successor of Father Bartl in charge of St. Benedict's parish was Rev. Father Guitbert De Marteau, who remained in the pastorate one year and was succeeded by Rev. Father Pirmine Koumly, who remained in the parish for eleven years. With the departure of Father Koumly in 1886, the congregation was served two years by Rev. Father Ferdinand Wolf, who was succeeded by Rev. Father John Staeder, O. S. B. For three years Father "John," as he was familiarly known to the people throughout Doniphan County, was pastor of St. Benedict's, until Rev. Father Thomas Burk, O. S. B., was appointed to succeed him in 1891.

In 1893 Father Thomas Burk was transferred to another charge, and was succeeded by Rev. Augustine Baker, O. S. B., who remained as pastor until 1894, when the Rev. Matthew Bradley, O. S. B., was appointed to minister to the people of St. Benedict's Parish. Father Bradley assumed charge over twenty years ago, December 6, 1894, and he is now the oldest resident pastor of any denomination in Doniphan County. Soon after Father Bradley came to St. Benedict's he saw the necessity of a larger church to accommodate the rapidly-growing congregation. The Old Rock Church had been a grand place in the early days, but the Catholic population of the parish had out-grown its capacity. On the suggestion of the pastor, the members of the parish decided to erect a new church that would be sufficiently spacious to meet all requirements. So the Old Rock Church was torn down to give place to a handsome $14,000 brick structure.

The cornerstone of the second St. Benedict's Church was laid April 4, 1895, Rev. Boniface Verheyen, O. S. B., of the Benedictine Abbey at Atchison officiating. Construction work was pushed along rapidly and the new church was solemnly dedicated on October 9, 1895, by Right Rev. Louis M. Fink, O. S. B., bishop of the diocese. The building was a magnificent structure, fifty by ninety feet, and was an object of admiration from an architectural standpoint. In the spring of 1900, the old parsonage which had been built by Father Bartl in 1865, was torn away, and a new two-story, ten-room, brick-veneer building was erected in its place. The new parsonage was equipped with every manner of modern convenience, and when completed the total cost aggregated $3,500. It is a serviceable building and was designed for essential needs, rather than luxury.

The dark cloud which overspread Doniphan County on the evening of May 25, 1903, presaged disaster for the grand new St. Benedict's Church. It was the warning signal of the approaching cyclone which created havoc in its path throughout the section of the county over which it passed. When this destructive aerial element had swept over St. Benedict's, the church building was found to be in ruins. The calamity was a terrible blow to the faithful parishioners, but they viewed the situation with a resolute intention to build up on a large scale what had been swept away by the cyclone. They calmly looked upon the visitation of the elements as a passing check to religious progress and promptly set to work doing what had been undone.

Reverend Father Bradley was undismayed by the destruction of his church and, with the hearty co-operation of his parishioners, the work of rebuilding was at once begun. There was not a single day lost in grieving over the disaster. Plans for a larger and finer building were at once formulated. The members of the parish were prompt to respond with financial resources with which to erect a new St. Benedict's. Before the ruins had settled the day following the destruction of the building, three beautiful altars had been donated by Joseph Richenberger and Joseph Bodart, Mrs. John Kirwan and Mrs. Susan Severin. Donations for the building fund poured in without solicitation from everybody in the parish with such liberality that no time was lost in starting operations on the new St. Benedict's. The $15,000 structure destroyed was soon to be replaced.

The perseverance of the parishioners was grandly rewarded on December 20, 1903, when the present edifice was formally opened for services, and on May 10, 1904, was dedicated by Right Rev. John Cunningham, bishop of Concordia, Kansas, with all the impressive splendor characteristic of the Catholic Church. The event was a memorable one for the parishioners of St. Benedict's. They had the pleasure and gratification to see their hopes for a more beautiful church than the one destroyed realized. People came from all directions to attend the dedication, and the day was notable for the fact that the Catholics seemed happier than if their church had never been destroyed. The cost of building the new St. Benedict's Church was approximately $20,000. So generous were the people in their contributions that little indebtedness remained on the day of the dedication, and what there was had been liquidated in less than one year after the building had been finished. As the church now stands, it is a monument to the generosity and the faith of the Catholic residents of that section of Doniphan County. Also to the inspiring efforts of the pastor, Rev. Matthew Bradley, and his numerous friends in other parishes. St. Benedict's Church is a model of artistic beauty and cannot easily be excelled for attractiveness by any other house of religious worship in the state of Kansas.

There are sixty families in St. Benedict's parish, making a total church membership far in excess of four hundred souls. Rev. Father Matthew Bradley, pastor of St. Benedict's, is one of the best known and most popular clergymen in Doniphan County. He is a friend of everybody. His people love and revere him. During the twenty years that he has been in charge of St. Benedict's Parish, Father Bradley has endeared himself to Catholic and Protestant alike. He is a clergyman endowed with liberal ideas, and his opinions on secular matters are frequently sought by his friends and his neighbors. Father Bradley is a native of Illinois, having been born in St. Clare County, that state. He was educated for the priesthood at St. Benedict's College in Atchison, Kansas, and at St. Vincent's College, Pennsylvania.

St. Mary's Church at Purcell

It Was Organized in 1859, Under the Pastorate of the Rev. Father Thomas Bartl, O. S. B., But Previous to That Time Father Henry Lemke, the Pioneer Priest, Celebrated Mass in the Homes of Catholics.

(By Mrs. Elmo Zimmerman.)

The first Catholic priest to visit what is now known as St. Mary's parish, Purcell, Kansas, and to labor among the white settlers of the territorial times, was the Rev. Father Henry Lemke. He came in the year 1857, and mass was celebrated for the first time in 1858, at the home of John Murray. Previous to that Catholic priests had been doing missionary work among the Indians, and then we remember that as far back as the middle of the Sixteenth Century Catholic priests accompanied the Coronado expedition that came up from Mexico to Kansas, searching for Quivaro, the fabled city of gold. To Father Lemke, however, is due the credit of being the first priest to make a start toward the permanent establishment of a Catholic parish in Doniphan County. Following this pioneer priest came another holy man in the person of the Rev. Father Edmund Langenfelder, a priest of the Order of St. Benedict, who in 1859, with nine Catholic families, celebrated mass at irregular intervals at their homes. Among these nine families were those of Larry Doyle, John Normile, John Purcell and Nick Delzett, and it was in their homes that the good priest had his little sanctuary and celebrated mass.

Thus it came about that from this early pioneer work and with these nine families as a foundation, St. Mary's parish was formed. In 1860, the Rev. Mr. John Mours, who had been sent into the field, began the building of a parish church, a frame building which was 16x30 feet. The Rev. Mr. Thomas Bartl, O. S. B., was placed in charge of the parish during that year and he completed the church. Father Thomas remained here until 1874, and labored faithfully among the people, performing many acts of charity and kindness for the settlers who had come here to establish homes. About twelve families were affiliated with the parish at the time of Father Bartl's departure. These were the families of Francis Scheletzbaum, Sr.; Pauley, Peter, Berney, and Patrick O'Shaughnessy; John Purcell, Nick Delzeit, Nick Hess, McCarthy, John Normile, John Murray, David Whelen, and Peter Schelde.

John Murray had given ten acres of his land for the location of the parish church and the lumber for the building was hauled from Doniphan by ox teams. There was no money. Corn and potatoes were hauled to Doniphan one day and exchanged for lumber, which was brought to the site of the new church the following day. Mrs. Francis Scheletzbaum, who was one of the faithful parishioners, made several such trips to Doniphan with an ox team for building material. Lambert Hauling was the builder.

In 1870, while Father Thomas was the parish priest, an extension was added to the building, making it 55x30 feet. This addition was put up by Hauling & Kennedy, and completed in 1874. Father Thomas was succeeded by the Rev. Father Suitbert Demarteau, O. S. B., who remained in the parish one year.

Father Suitbert is held in grateful memory by the survivors of those days in St. Mary's parish, as he purchased a bell weighing 700 pounds for the church, and a new organ was bought at Mrs. D. T. Bradford's music store in Atchison. An altar also was built at Leavenworth, brought to the church by team and set up. Evergreens were set out around the church grounds and cemetery, giving the little parish church and burial ground a pleasing appearance. Father Suitbert was a great scholar and did much in the short period of his pastorate for the parishioners.

The Rev. Father Pirmin M. Koumly took charge of St. Mary's parish in 1875, and attended the needs of the congregation about ten years, which was the longest period of pastorate of any of the priests who had been sent among us. He was a man of great kindness and sympathy and he did a great work for the spiritual welfare of the parishioners.

The St. Mary's Parochial School, Situated in Purcell, in Union Tiwnship.

After Father Koumly, other priests were here for short intervals. Father Ferdinand Wolf, O. S. B., was priest of St. Mary's in 1887. He was followed by the Rev. Father John B. Stader, O. S. B., who was appointed Aug. 16, 1888. Father John was succeeded by the Rev. Father Bernard Ulbrich, O. S. B. Then came in their order, the Rev. Father Gregory Neumeier, O. S. B., the Rev. Father Anthony Baar, O. S. B., the Rev. Father Aloysius Bradley, O. S. B. They were the pastors of St. Mary's parish church until Father John was reappointed, Aug. 20, 1900. Father John remained six years, being succeeded by the Rev. Father Raphael Weifenbach, O. S. B., who was installed Aug. 23, 1906. Father Raphael in time was succeeded by the Rev. Father Robert Salmon, O. S. B., who is now in pastoral charge of the parish.

The priests who were in charge of the parish previous to the coming of Father Aloysius, in the latter part of the 1880's, lived in the residence of St. Benedict's parish at Bendena. Father Aloysius desired to be near his people at all times and it was during his pastorate the St. Mary's parish residence was built. He therefore became the first resident pastor.

It was Father Raphael who established the Catholic school at Purcell, and who erected the present school building. The first school was opened in September, 1908, with four sisters of the order of St. Benedict from Mount St. Scholastica Academy in Atchison were in charge. The first graduates of the school at Purcell were Misses Anna Gormley, Katharine Whelan and Bertha Baker. At present there are sixty pupils in attendance at St. Mary's parish school. It is one of the best schools in the diocese for a rural parish, and the children of Catholic families are receiving a good education.

Such is the history of St. Mary's Catholic church and of the parish. The good priests who have served the parishioners have proved faithful servants, and through their counsel and their teachings have proved a blessing to the church, the parishioners and to the community.

THOMAS B. SHULSKY, STOCKMAN

Born in Union Township in 1869 and Owns One of Best Farms in County—Specializes in Hereford Cattle—Mrs. Shulsky Is Secretary-Treasurer of Women's Auxiliary of Denton Farmer's Institute and Member of Farm Women's Press Association.

One of the most attractive farms and farm residences in Doniphan County belongs to Thomas B. Shulsky, three miles south of Denton and is known as "The Elms." The fine house is surrounded by big evergreens which add to its beauty and enhance the broad, well-kept lawn as a good setting adds lustre to a jewel. The place as a whole is well cared for and gives evidence of exacting management and thorough attention to details.

Mr. Shulsky was born on this same farm, which he has so well improved, June 8, 1869. As a boy he attended the country schools and experienced the various phases of hard work of the early day farm life. Both in school and at work he was unusually observant and always looking for new ideas. Early in life he realized that systematic cultivation of the soil and careful selection of the best grains brought the best results.

Today he is one of the most prosperous and progressive farmers in the community, up-to-date in every sense and open minded as to the latest methods. These methods he applies to farming the 240 acres he owns in Union township and to the fine land he has acquired in Logan County, Kansas, as well as taking care of the farm he owns in Holt County, Missouri. He advocates and follows diversified farming under scientific methods. He is a member of International Dry Farming Congress, director in the Brown County Fire Insurance Company, and has been secretary-treasurer of the Denton Farmers' Mutual Telephone Company since its organization. He Urges co-operation among farmers.

Mr. Shulsky makes a specialty of Hereford cattle and Duroc Jersey hogs, in addition to his farming interests, and his stock is among the finest in the community.

On Feb. 21, 1900, he married Miss Mary B. Elliott, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. R. Elliott, of Los Angeles, California. Mrs. Shulsky is an ideal farmer's wife. Like her husband she is most versatile and progressive. Her specialty is Barred Plymouth Rock chickens, and in addition to taking care of the home and chickens she contributes to several farm journals and has the distinction of being one of the two Kansas women who are members of the International Farm Women's Press Association. This is considered a high honor and was won only by Mrs. Sholsky's thorough knowledge of farm work and cleverness in writing about agricultural topics. She is also secretary and treasurer of the women's auxiliary of the Denton Farmers' Institute.

A prairie fire on April 13, 1872, five miles northeast of Marysville, in Marshall County, destroyed a lot of fencing, hay, corn, seed wheat and the stables of Mr. Elijah Bentley, amounting in value to about $300.00. A Mr. Love also lost his hay and a number of hogs.

Among the busy and enterprising towns that dot the surface of Doniphan County and add to her fame as a commercial and agricultural center is the little city of Purcell, named in honor of M. T. Purcell's father. It is situated down in the corner of the county, one-half mile from the borders of Atchison and Brown counties. So thoroughly awake and alive is Purcell that not only farmers from Doniphan County go there to trade and transact business, but scores of residents of the two neighboring counties make the place their headquarters on market days. The townsite was bought from the late John Purcell by the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad Company, when the railroad was built through this section of Kansas in 1886. Also as a tribute to the first owner of the land, the directors named the town Purcell in his honor. Like all new towns, it grew slowly at first, and there were only a half dozen business places, but in 1907 the town, through its citizens, shook off the feeling of apathy and added several new enterprises. These proved just the impetus that was needed, and now there are up-to-date stores, a hotel, elevator and all that tends to make a town out of a country village.

The town in itself is prosperous, and is surrounded by valuable farms, which make it an important point for the shipment of cream, poultry, stock and grain. The grain for the whole section of the country is taken care of right in Purcell, as J. H. Pauley has an immense elevator of 15,000 bushels capacity. This elevator was built last year to take the place of a smaller one which Mr. Pauley operated. The new one was rendered necessary on account of the heavy crop yield and increased business, and it is just twice as large as the first plant. An idea of the amount of business handled by this one firm alone is comprehended when it is taken into account that fifty-five cars of grain left its loading bins in 1914. This elevator is all iron-clad, making it a safe insurance risk.

In the spring of 1915, Mr. Pauley, in conjunction with P. K. Devereux of Purcell, the Cashier of the State Bank of Purcell, bought the elevator at Denton; they had it remodeled and made ready for the bountiful crops which are sure to be realized in 1915.

J. H. Pauley is also a stock buyer, and every year handles many thousands of dollars' worth of fine cattle and horses.

There are two general merechandise stores, one owned by Gormley & Co., and the other by J. A. Lednicky. Both stores enjoy a large and satisfied patronage. It would be hard to differentiate between the two, as both have large, clean stocks of fresh merchandise, that is sold at a decent profit only. Prices are always in strict accordance with the quality of the goods offered.

In a country where so much scientific farming is done, it is absolutely necessary to have a supply house where farm implements and hardware can be bought. It is not always convenient to send to a mail order house, and satisfaction cannot be guaranteed unless the purchaser is able to see the article before he pays down the money. This need is taken care of by Gronniger Bros., who have a complete line of such goods. The stock fills double storerooms downstairs, and the upper floor is crowded to over-flowing with a reserve stock. In addition to this, an extra large warehouse is filled with reserve stock for emergencies. Their freight elevator and other conveniences for handling this large stock make it compare favorably with any city store.

The State Bank of Purcell is one of the institutions in which the citizens of the town and surrounding territory repose great confidence and pride. The farmers feel that their financial interests are well and capably taken care of under the careful management of the State Bank. J. M. Morley, the president, is widely known in financial circles and is considered one of the best bankers in this or any other state. Mr. Morley also conducts the Severance Bank, a private institution. P. K. Devereux, who is Mr. Morley's nephew, is the cashier. He tried to resign in the spring of 1915, but so insistent were the requests of the patrons of the bank that he accepted his old position, and his happy countenance is now seen daily behind the bars of the cashier's cage. Messrs. Morley and Devereux, with Pat Gormley, M. T. Purcell and Michael Spaight, constitute the board of directors. The bank is capitalized for $12,000, with a surplus of $3,000.

St. Mary's Church, Purcell.

The C. E. Mathews Lumber Co., of Kansas City, now own the lumber yard and harness shop. They also handle coal, paint, brick, etc. They supply all the wants of the neighborhood with such supplies, and have always given excellent satisfaction.

C. R. Maxwell has been the blacksmith in Purcell for the past two years. He has a modern shop with all the latest equipment, and is able to take care of farmers' needs quickly and in a very competent manner. The farmers all report that he gives thorough service and is very modest with his charges.

Arthur Powell runs the barber shop, and it is one of the cleanest and brightest spots in the town. Mr. Powell at all times keeps his equipment sanitary and worthy of inspection, and does first-class work. He deserves the patronage of the entire male population of the community.

There are a great many travelers passing through Purcell at all seasons, and especially numerous are commercial men who drive through from one small town to another. These are all loud in their praises of the nice hotel conducted by Mr. and Mrs. Whittington, and of the hospitality always shown by this couple. They have several regular boarders in addition to the transient trade.

The station agent at Purcell for the past decade has been W. E. Zimmerman, who was born and reared on a farm west of Troy. He takes care of the Rock Island's business, evidently to their complete satisfaction, as they have seen fit to continue him upon their pay roll for ten years. He is always friendly and courteous to travelers, and has many warm friends in Purcell. His wife, Mrs. Nannie B. Zimmerman, who was born in Jackson County, ten miles south of Holton, also holds a position of trust, that of postmistress. She was appointed December 18, 1905, and is very adept in taking care of the duties of the post-office.

Steve Hayes is the city drayman, and has also been the Road Overseer of this part of Union Township for a number of years.

A great point of interest to strangers always is the elegant St. Mary's Church of Purcell, the interior of which is the prettiest and most costly of any church in this part of Kansas. Two of the statues which adorn it are of solid marble and were imported from Italy. The fourteen "Stations of the Cross" are very life-like, and were presented to the church by the Purcell heirs in memory of their parents, John and Catherine Purcell, the pioneers for whom the town is named, and who constituted one of the first families of the parish. The church was erected in 1896, and Reverend Father Aloysius was the first resident pastor. Father John B. Stader and Father Raphael Weiffenbach served in turn. The present pastor is Father Robert Salmon, who recently came from Kansas City to take charge of this parish. Purcell is equipped with a good school system, and the foremost of its educational institutions is centered in St. Mary's Parochial School. Previous to the completion of this school, the town was seriously handicapped in educating its young in a convenient graded school of first-class equipment and standard. The Catholics realized this need very greatly, and the year 1907 saw the work begun on the school under the careful supervision of Father Raphael, who was then the pastor in charge. School opened September, 1908, with sixty pupils enrolled. The residents of Purcell were indeed proud to have a fine school located right in their midst, as heretofore the children had to tramp two and one-half miles through rain, snow and mud to the nearest district school.

The Parochial is also equipped with dormitories for the benefit of non-residents, two large rooms upstairs being used for that purpose, one for the girls and one for boys, each accommodating about two dozen pupils. It is also a boarding school, and meals are paid for when eaten, or by the day, week, month or entire term. This year has been the banner year as to attendance, there being over one hundred enrolled. Four of these came from Iowa, one from Jackson County, and a score or more from Everest, Pierce Junction, Huron and Denton. The day pupils scarcely miss a day, as the school is centrally located and easily reached, even in the most inclement weather. The environments and general conduct of the place is such that the pupils seldom voluntarily miss a session. Four Benedictine Sisters are employed and prove themselves very efficient teachers. They are all well educated and equipped with that kindly spirit which seems a part of their creed, which enables them to turn out finished graduates from year to year. The courses of study include in the lower grades, Bible history, catechism, reading, spelling, arithmetic, geography, grammar, drawing, penmanship and letter writing; and to these are added, as the pupils progress, classics, composition, civil government, United States history and physiology. For three years first-year high school work has been taught, and this year the second-year high school course has been added, which is being carried by thirteen pupils. In this advanced work are included algebra, geometry, Kansas history, physical geography, botany, Latin and agriculture. One great advantage which St. Mary's Parochial School enjoys is the "accredited system," which was secured through the efforts of Father Raphael and the concurrence of the county superintendent, Miss Edna S. Whitney and State Superintendent W. D. Ross. Mary Brazzel was the first pupil to take advantage of this system, and she successfully passed the teachers examination which was held January, 1915, at Troy.

A method which is taught in all parochial schools which is of incalculable benefit is the "Palmer method" of penmanship. From the seventh grade up, pupils begin practicing for certificates which are issued direct from the A. M. Palmer Co. only, of Cedar Rapids, Iowa. After completing this course, the pupils may, if they desire, take up the advance of the Palmer system, which is the American Penman, from whom Miss Florence Denton secured a diploma in June, 1914. The music course is very complete and very capably taken care of by a teacher who is thoroughly acquainted with her subject. Every year there is a large class of music pupils, which ranges from primary tots to advanced boys and girls. In schools, churches, business enterprises or the development of fine farms and fine citizenship, Purcell always attains for perfection, and the high standard which she is rapidly approaching indicates that her efforts have not been in vain. Purcell is doing all in her power to make Doniphan County known far and wide as the most progressive county in the state of Kansas.

Following is a list of the residents of Purcell:

Mrs. Cora Archambault, Ernestine Archambault, Leon Archambault, and Pierre Archambault.

Anderson's Fine Farm

Namesake of the Great War Governor of Indiana Runs One of the Most Productive Places in Doniphan County—Scientific Methods in Farming Are Oliver M. Anderson's Long Suit—Family Tree of the Andersons Branches Back to Colonial and Revolutionary Days—Fine Family of Children and Lovely Home.

Oliver M. Anderson is one of Doniphan County's substantial citizens who has reduced farming to a scientific basis with the gratest possible success.

About two miles from Purcell, and an equal distance from Huron, the Anderson farm stands out as one of the beauty spots in Doniphan County. It is splendidly improved and is a lasting monument to the ability and industry of the owner.

Mr. Anderson is a close student of all matters pertaining to the proper cultivation of the soil, and his scientific methods, coupled with energy and enterprise, have been prime factors in making his place one of the most productive in Union Township or Doniphan County. Recognized among his neighbors and throughout the county as a man with the most intelligent conception of scientific farming, his progressive methods have been rewarded by the best results.

The Anderson farmstead is the personification of thrift and prosperity, and on every hand there are unmistakable evidences that the owner is possessed with the most modern ideas. The farm home is an ideal residence and contains everything requisite to promote comfort and insure happiness.

Oliver Morton Anderson is a native of Indiana, born in Boone County, January 24, 1862, and named after the great war governor, Oliver P. Morton. His father, Thomas F. Anderson, was born in Ohio, May 9, 1818, later moved to Indiana, and was one of the settlers in Doniphan County in 1870. Oliver M. Anderson's early boyhood was spent on his father's farm in Doniphan County. He was educated in the public schools and has been a farmer all his life. He believes, with the immortal Washington, that "agriculture is the most healthful, the most useful, and the most noble employment of man."

Oliver M. Anderson had found by experience that it requires ability of a high order to intelligently operate a farm with any degree of success. He is a confirmed exponent of the most approved system of rotation in crops, having a thorough understanding of the nutriment demanded by the different varieties under cultivation, and he is eminently equipped with knowledge of the best methods to be pursued. It is a notable fact that when Mr. Anderson settled on his farm the land was worth about $9 an acre, whereas, at the present time, it could not be bought for $150 an acre. That enormous increase in value is sufficient to give an idea of the extent of the improvements on Mr. Anderson's farm, and the high-grade manner in which the fertility of the soil has been conserved.

Oliver M. Anderson has the distinction of having a complete record of his family tree, which extends back to Revolutionary days. His paternal grandfather was Hiram Anderson, who was born on the north branch of the Potomac River, in Maryland, in 1788. He followed the avocations of farmer and shoemaker, and led an active career until his death in 1853.

The records of the Anderson family show that Oliver M. Anderson's paternal grandfather moved to Ohio in 1807, and on March 8, 1813, he was married to Miss Mary Mulford, a descendant of a prominent Welsh family which settled in America in the early Colonial days. Miss Mulford was born August 20, 1792, and died in Jefferson County, Iowa, November 16, 1859. In 1840 Hiram Anderson and his family moved from Ohio to Boone County, Ind., where the father died thirteen years later.

There were twelve children born to the union of Hiram Anderson and his wife, of which Thomas F. the father of the subject of this sketch was the third. Their names and dates of birth are: Naomi, born May 19, 1814, married Wilson Elliott and died in Brandon, Iowa, in 1894; William, born May 26, 1816, and died in Independence, Iowa, in 1894; Thomas F., born May 9, 1818, and moved to Doniphan County, Kansas, in 1870; Mary Jane, born November 4, 1819, was the wife of Isaac Bennett, and died in Indiana about 1873; Nancy, born April 27, 1821, married Jesse Burton, who died in Indiana, and after his death she became the wife of John Ferguson and died in Iowa; Rachael, born December 3, 1822, became the wife of Abraham Bennett and died in Norway, Kansas, December 21, 1893; Robert, born November 11, 1824, and died two years later; Hannah, born February 8, 1826, became the wife of John Lewis, and died September 2, 1902, Omaha, Neb.; Eliza, born May 7, 1828, was the second wife of Elisha Bowlby, and died in 1871 in Doniphan County, Kansas; Hiram B., born August 7, 1830, died in Jefferson County, Iowa, December 4, 1859; Martha A., born May 20, 1832, became the wife of George Chase, and died at Huron, Atchison County, Kansas, in 1885; Joseph M., born August 23, 1834, and resides in St. Joseph, Mo.

The foregoing list of Oliver M. Anderson's uncles and aunts, with his father, shows that his paternal grandfather ignored any such wild theories as race suicide in his active and vigorous life. With the exception of the boy Robert, who died when a baby, all the children lived to practically the allotted age of man, and some of them are still living.

On July 22, 1896, Oliver M. Anderson was married to Miss Rebecca Orem, daughter of W. J. Orem, who came to Doniphan County in 1857 and settled near Bendena. The future Mrs. Anderson was born there on October 20, 1865. Her father took an active part in the politics of Doniphan County for many years. He served as county commissioner and also represented the county in the state legislature. Mr. Orem was a native of Maryland, born in Dorchester County, on January 8, 1836. His wife was Miss Mary Haggard, who was born in Madison County, Ohio, June 27, 1846, and died in Doniphan County, Kansas, July 10, 1871.

Mr. and Mrs. Oliver M. Anderson have four children: Orem O., born May 11, 1897; Mary Clarissa, born Sept. 24, 1898; Howard F., born Aug. 17, 1900, and Alice R., born Sept. 12, 1912. Orem O. and Mary Clarissa are attending the Huron high school, and Howard F. and Alice A. are pupils in the eighth grade there. All of the children are exceptionally bright and capable students. Mary C.'s teachers believe that she has aspirations to be a school teacher, and are inclined to encourage her ideas in that direction, being convinced that she is endowed with all the qualifications necessary to a successful career.

Mr. Anderson never has sought public office, although his friends insisted on continuing to elect him justice of the peace on more than one occasion. His natural inclinations are toward the activities of farm life, and he has no taste for adjudicating legal complications. Recently a number of the leading men of the county urged Mr. Anderson to run for a county office, but he declined. His highest interest in public affairs is in the conduct of the public schools and he only manifests an interest in school matters because of his desire to see the young folks obtain the best education commensurate with their surroundings.

Mr. and Mrs. Anderson enjoy the friendship of a wide circle of acquaintances around Purcell, and through the adjacent country. They are truly representative residents of that portion of Doniphan County, and their unostentatious lives are much to be admired by all right-thinking people.

Mr. Anderson has many distinctive and strong personalities, and among some very worthy of mention is a general philanthropic principle, always ready to sacrifice personal interests for the general good of other people.

O. M. Anderson

Twelve years ago he, in advance of most people, made a great effort to organize a local telephone company, recognizing its worth; accordingly he called a few people together and organized the Huron Telephone Company, and was chosen its secretary and manager, which office he has held to the present time, and he is heralded by all the telephone companies in Kansas and Missouri as being one of the best telephone men known, and it is often remarked, "He is much bigger than his job." His ability and originality is recognized by all who come in contact with him.

Another branch of business Mr. Anderson has become noted for, and which makes him a welcome visitor in many homes in Doniphan, Brown and Atchison counties, is insurance. He started in the insurance business about twenty years ago, and by persistence and confidence of the people has written over $500,000 worth of insurance each year for a number of years past.

We can truthfully say but few men could give this broad scope of business personal attention and at the same time be always ready to assist in every public advancement and find time to attend to the smallest details of all matter which falls on his desk for consideration.

Mrs. Anderson is one of the most accomplished of Doniphan County's productions. She is a thorough scholar, having graduated from the Seneca high school and twce from the Kansas State Normal, from which school she holds a life certificate. She taught eight successful terms of school and one only needs to visit her home to realize her true worth as a wife and mother, and her valuable assistance to her husband in his office work.

Herman Gronniger

The distinction of being the oldest hog breeder in the state of Kansas is unanimously accorded to Herman Gronniger, one of the most extensive hog raisers in the Sunflower state.

Mr. Gronniger has been engaged in his present business practically all his life. He specializes in Poland-Chinas and the product of his pens is recognized over the country for the superior quality of the species bred there.

The Gronniger farmstead is situated four and one-half miles southwest of Bendena and contains two hundred and sixty-four acres of fine land. In addition Mr. Gonniger farms three hundred and twenty acres in Reno County, and three hundred and twenty acres in Thomas County, all in the state of Kansas.

Mr. Gonniger is a native son of Doniphan County, having been born at Brenner, May 22, 1856. His early education was received in the public schools and in 1888 was married to Miss Elizabeth Halling, also a native of Doniphan County.

The business of hog raising appealed to Mr. Gronniger early in life, and he was already engaged actively in the industry when little over eighteen years of age. Starting in a small way he increased his breeding facilities until today his pens are among the finest and most modern in the country.

As the hog breeding business requires many incidental arrangements and provisions in order to be successful and profitable, Mr. Gronniger has had the timely foresight to comprehend all the possible exigencies of the industry. He early realized that in order to be a successful hog breeder, a man should be equipped with all the facilities to give the swine proper care and feeding. His pens were consequently constructed on the most approved modern plans, with special arrangements for watering and sanitation.

Mr. Gronniger has the advantage over many other hog breeders in that he is in a position to raise all the feed he requires and a lot more besides. For the past twenty-four years he has paid special attention to the growing of corn on each of his three farms, and has repeatedly captured first prizes at a number of corn shows.

To the union of Mr. Gronniger and his wife, seven children, six boys and one girl, were born. They are: John L., Theodore B., James B., Herman F., Lawrence C., William H. and Anna B. Mr. and Mrs. Gronniger are proud of their children, who are industrious and a credit to any home.

The following is a list of the city officers of Elwood which were elected at the election in July, 1858: Geo. S. Hough, mayor; councilmen, J. W. Cook president, F. B. Ellsworth, A. H. Sayward, E. Blackiston, John Tracy, G. W. Barr; F. M. Speed, city register; Thos. Osborne, city attorney; R. S. Sayward; city treasurer, T. E. Morris, city engineer; E. Russell, city assessor; Jackson Selover, city marshal; policemen were as follows: A. A. Brander, John Layler, C. Yeager, J. G. Richardson.

Mrs. Abbie Horan

One of the Best Known and Highly Respected Women of Doniphan County, Who Died November 29, 1914, at Her Farm Two Miles Northeast of Purcell, Was the Widow of John Horan, Who Came to Kansas in the Early Days—Left a Widow With Four Children in 1887—Born in County Cork, Ireland, in 1834, and Was Eighty Years Old at the Time of Her Death—Was a Grand Woman and Reared a Fine Family.

There have been few deaths in Doniphan County in recent years which called forth more general regret than that of Mrs. Abbie Horan, which occurred at her residence north of Purcell on November 29, 1914.

She had spent a long and useful life and had attained the ripe old age of four score years when called to the great beyond. Her last years were marked by great vitality and she retained all her faculties practically to the end.

The Old Horan Residence, Situated in Union Township, Near Purcell.

Mrs. Horan was the widow of John Horan, who died November 11, 1887. He came to Kansas during the exciting times of early settlement and was an industrious and hard working citizen. He settled in Doniphan County in April, 1872.

Mrs. Abbie Horan was a native of Ireland, having been born in County Cork, February 2, 1834. In 1854 Mrs. Horan emigrated to the United States and on Christmas Day, 1860, she was married to Mr. Horan in Leavenworth, Kansas.

The Horans continued to reside in and near Leavenworth until 1872, when Mr. Horan concluded the farming prospects were brighter in this part of Kansas than in any other section of the state. Mr. Horan selected the neighborhood of Purcell as the scene of his future operations and he soon was running, what later proved to be, the nucleus of one of the best farms in the county.

When Mr. Horan died in 1887, his widow was left with four children, the eldest of whom was twenty-three years old. She was a woman of wonderful courage and always had an abiding faith in the goodness of God. While not in wealthy circumstances, she had a remarkable gift for management and took up the burden of the household and farm where her husband laid it down.

The family was kept together and the younger children well educated, and reared up to be good and helpful citizens There were three girls and one boy, Mary, Margaret and Catherine, and John. The latter was born on the farm July 10, 1873, and was given the advantages of a common school education. He was married to Miss Margaret Callahan, April 25, 1900. There are no children.

The Horan farm is situated about two miles northeast of Purcell and consists of three hundred and twenty acres of good land. Agriculture and live stock are the principal lines followed. The farm will continue to be run by the son, John.

DONIPHAN COUNTY TAKES PRIDE IN HER EDUCATIONAL AND RELIGIOUS INSTITUTIONS

As citizens of Doniphan County we pride ourselves in our schools and religious institutions, and are pleased to note that in morals and education we are grading upward. Nothing reflects the intelligence and culture of a community more than its temples of worship and institutions of learning, and Doniphan County is doubly blessed in that respect.

While Doniphan County has thrived in business and industry, its educational interests have not been neglected, nor its institutions of morals and social betterment. The people may regard with pride the public school system, annually improving and growing stronger in its power for good.

In this connection we are led to remark that while we felicitate ourselves upon the progress of trade, and financial achievement, it were well to take a retrospective view of our moral condition and make comparison with that of business and other lines.

Spirits of Worship.

We talk of the size of our county, of its wealth and prosperity, of its physical power and enlightenment, but if these things be all that we have to be proud of, we have indeed a small measure of greatness. These are in truth but outward signs of a far more valuable ownership within. We are the pioneers of the new day, or we are nothing worth talking about. Our record thus is fair along lines of morals and education, but has some faults, and presents a few deformities, due to human frailties and limitations; but our general direction has been onward and upward. We are entering upon a new career of spiritual freedom and enjoy a hitherto favorable condition of political, social and moral liberty as distinguished from the earlier days of license in our political and moral conduct.

Here we have a spirit of worship and devotion equal to the average community, a fine degree of tolerance for every denomination with an awakened desire to set a tolerance of religion in example.

Handmaids in Unison.

Here the church and schools work hand in hand, dispensing morals and good conduct, enlightenment and the golden rule of life.

These churches, temples of moral wisdom, have a strong grasp upon the people of Doniphan County, who recognize more perceptibly as the years come and go, the first duty of man in an enlightened community. Nothing can impress more the mind of a prospective citizen than the character of the schools and churches it maintains. We are glad to say that while we have graded up in the scale of business, knowledge and experience, that our morals and education have not been neglected, that we have made material progress along those lines, brought to these valued institutions a high standard of efficiency. With about thirty-five well-established churches in Doniphan County, all in a thriving condition, it would seem that we have made considerable strides in our moral development, and so we have. All these churches have large congregations and an able ministry, well supported both in finance and religious interest, and that there is harmony denotes great power for good in every department of our religious affairs.

Grape Growers' Association

The Doniphan County Grape Growers' Association was organized at Troy June 6, 1871. The officers elected at that time were Adam Brenner, president; Constant Poirier, vice-president; George Brenner, treasurer, and Albert Perry, secretary. The object of the organization was the promotion of grape cultivation in the county of Doniphan. At that time there were 180 acres of grapes under cultivation in the county.

Geo. H. Mosely, who was born in Philadelphia, Pa., on the 22nd of October, 1798, died in Troy, Feb. 12, 1872. He was early in life apprenticed to a carpenter and joiner to learn the trade and by steady application, earned the reputation of a skillful worker in wood. He came to Troy in 1865, and soon after was active in organizing Troy Lodge No. 55, displaying his wonted energy and showing an earnest desire to be within the walls of a temple at home. His highest aspirations were to benefit the cause of Masonry and elevate the morals of the brethren to the standard required by Masonic teachings and principles and he exemplified in the course of his life that it was better to be doorkeeper in a house devoted to morality and benevolence, than to occupy an exalted position among the wicked.

On Tuesday, Feb. 6, 1872, at Troy, Mary, the second daughter of Mr. Sargeant, died of fever.

WILLIAM D. NORMILE

Prosperous Farmer Living Near Purcell Is Native of Ireland and Is Extensive Farmer.

The Scots are called canny, the Germans thrifty, the English crafty, and the Irish witty. If these appellations are true, then there is no better exemplification of them than William D. Normile, now a successful and prosperous farmer who resides near Purcell and who is so well known in Doniphan County that no introduction is needed. His life, which is an open book, speaks for itself.

William D. Normile was born in Leavenworth, Kansas, on Jan. 9, 1859. His parents were John and Anna Normile. They were natives of Limerick County, Ireland, and were from one of the oldest and best families in that country. Gibbons in his history of Rome, tells us that the nobility of France settled in Ireland in the early part of the twelfth century. According to his deductions and the facts which he obtained from the archives of libraries, only noblemen were permitted to make the journey across the perilous North Sea. If this is a fact, and we have no reason to doubt it, then Mr. Normile is a direct descendant from a noble French family. The author further says, "Without a question of doubt, all of the present inhabitants of Ireland are of French descent as their language is similar to that of France and their customs are alike."

Whatever his ancestors were Mr. Normile is the subject of this sketch and is the man to be considered. Like so many other young men who were brought into the world during that period, his early education was received in the public schools, such as they afforded, and he was compelled when only a young lad to give up his lessons and go into the more serious business of making a living. He was brought to Doniphan County when nine months old, by his parents, who preempted a claim of one hundred and sixty acres where he now lives, one mile east and one mile north of Purcell. After graduating from the county schools he saved a little money for himself and went to Saint Benedict's college at Atchison for two years. There he acquitted himself with the highest honors, graduating at the head of his class and leaving with a fine reputation for industry and brightness. On Jan. 10, 1881, he married Miss Carrie Hill of Atchison, Kansas, the daughter of one of the best known and most respected families in the state. She died on March 23, 1903, and will always be remembered throughout Doniphan County for her cheerful disposition and God fearing devotion. To their union were born two children, Frank D., born in 1882, and Anna, born in 1887.

A number of years after the death of his wife, Mr. Normile took unto himself a second wife in Mrs. Catherine Burk Normile, a native of Ireland who lived in Doniphan County. To her step-children Mrs. Normile has been a loving mother and has given them all of the affection which she has showered upon her own offspring. She has been a woman of rare tact and judgment and has brought sunshine and happiness to the home of her husband. To this union have been born three children, William J., seven years old; Michael J., six years, and Edward B., one year.

Residence of William D. Normile, Situated Northeast of Purcell

Mr. Normile is engaged in general farming and has made for himself an enviable reputation throughout the county. He is an honest, successful farmer who has the respect and esteem of the entire community.

He has no desire to be elected to office, but is considered a power in politics in Union township, and is often consulted by the politicians, who consider him a strong factor.

James H. Curtis

The Well Known and Highly Prosperous Hardware Merchant of Denton Gave Up Farming to Engage in the Mercantile Business in 1906, and Now He Is Doing an Immense Business in Handling Hardware and Implements, Beside Having Time to Help Along the Town of Which He Has Served as Its Mayor.

There are some merchants in the cities and towns of Doniphan County whose business operations are of such magnitude as to add vastly to the commercial life of these cities and towns, and whose activities in the civic affairs not only contribute to the welfare of the people, but also makes them indispensible as citizens. It is the old rule of he who prospers most in his business gives his best service to his own people. It requires live and aggressive leaders to make a live town, and Doniphan County is not without such leaders and such towns. A notable illustration of the truth of this assertion is found in Denton's live-wire merchant, citizen and former mayor, Mr. James H. Curtis, who coming in from the farm fewer than ten years ago, now handles a business so extensive as to make him one of the leaders in trade in this part of Kansas, beside which he has time a-plenty to help run the affairs of the town as they should be run, and boost it as deservedly it should be boosted.

Mr. Curtis is of Irish descent which, coupled with the fact that he was born in Kansas, accounts for his being a live wire. His father, John Curtis, and his mother, Bridget Curtis, were both born in Ireland. They came to America in 1870, migrated westward from New York and located in Doniphan County on a fine farm four miles south of the town of Denton. James H. Curtis, of whom we write, is one of the seven children of John and Bridget Curtis, and was born on the farm in Doniphan County, April 6, 1877. The four brothers are John E., William B., Thomas F., Charles V. and the sisters are Margaret and Rose. The father died March 23, 1895, after residing in the county twenty-five years, while the mother is still living on the old farm of 200 acres in Union Township, which has been her home ever since she came to America with her husband.

James H. Curtis was educated in Mount Vernon district school, his last teacher in that school being Anna Mallows, who is now editor of the White Cloud Globe. Prof. J. F. Milbourne was his first teacher. His later education was received in St. Benedict's College at Atchison, the oldest Catholic college in the state.

On July 9, 1915, James H. Curtis and Miss Nellie Murphy, a daughter of Dennis and Ellen Murphy, retired farmers, were united in marriage by the Reverend Father Anthony, the good priest of St. Ann's Church in Effingham. Mrs. Curtis was born in Atchison County April 12, 1882, was graduated from the Effingham high school, was granted a life certificate to teach and prior to the marriage was a popular educator in Atchison County for fifteen years.

Prior to coming to Denton to engage in business Mr. Curtis was engaged in farming. He purchased a stock of goods and began business in Denton June 25, 1906. His first operations were with hardware. Later he put in a lumber yard, which he sold in 1912 to the Bone McLucas Lumber Company of Fairbury, Nebraska. He bought and shipped live stock in connection with his business in Denton. He has been quite successful in all his business undertakings and has re-invested his money here at home until his business and his investments are of considerable magnitude. He has his fine farm of 280 acres, which is in a high state of improvement, beside a residence in town and two store buildings. He keeps a large stock, sells Ford cars, Newton and Peter Schuttler wagons, and Emerson farm implements. Along with his general stock of hardware he has Emerson buggies, McCormick binders and mowers, threshing machines, hay bailers, corn shellers. He has the only harness machine in Doniphan County, with which he makes the harness he sells. He carries all kinds of field and garden seeds. Beside he does an undertaking business. He keeps good, dependable stock, and has unlimited credit with all the firms with which he deals.

Mr. Curtis is also a stockholder of the State Bank of Germantown, in Brown County, and is a stockholder and director in the Denton Mutual Telephone Company.

The business activities of Mr. Curtis have been quite extensive, and he has done his full share toward making Denton a good place at which to trade by reason of his square dealing and his willingness to accept a fair and reasonable margin of profit in the handling of a vast volume of merchandise. Still he has been an active force in the affairs of the town and community, standing at all times as a champion of the town and its every interest.

His interest in the affairs of the town led to his election to the office of mayor, which he filled creditably from 1908 until 1913. He made such a good mayor the people felt they still needed his services, and they elected him to the council, an office he now holds. There are few towns in Kansas which can claim such a public spirited man as James H. Curtis, and should you go to Denton, it will be a pleasure to you—as well as to this man—to call on him.

Successful Practical Farmer

B. F. Reichenberger Operates His Four Hundred Acre Tract on the Lines of Any Well Regulated Business—Stock Raising and a Strict Rotation of Crops the General Plans Followed to Conserve and Improve the Fertility of the Soil.

The splendid farm of B. F. Reichenberger, adjoining Purcell on the south, is a striking example of the success that may be obtained by an intelligent and systematic method of management. The 400 acres which comprise Mr. Reichenberger's holdings are operated on a plan that is calculated to not only secure the best returns consistent with judicial management, but with an idea to improve the fertility of the soil for future generations. The Reichenberger farm is among the oldest in Doniphan County and has been under cultivation for a great many years. It has been in the possession of the Reichenberger family since early days and has been fairly productive, even under obsolete methods of operation.

The present owner was born on the place in 1880. At the age of eighteen years, at the time of his father's death, B. F. Richenbegrer assumed control of the farm by taking it over from the heirs for a cash rental for five years. At the expiration of that time Mr. Reichenberger bought the place outright and devoted his entire energies towards improving it generally and building up its fertility by keeping a liberal quota of livestock.

For almost four years after becoming the sole owner of the farm, Mr. Reichenberger continued to cultivate and improve the land, paying special attention to the livestock end of the business. In 1907, however, when the outlook for immense financial returns in the future was brightest, Mr. Reichenberger was attacked with a severe case of granulated eye lids and was compelled to give up work on the farm and seek some other business which promised a cure or even a relief from his eye affliction. Much as he regretted to do so, Mr. Reichenberger quit the farm entirely and engaged in the hardware and implement business at Purcell. While somewhat out of his chosen calling, the venture proved highly successful, and under Mr. Reichenberger's capable management the business grew extensively. His progressive ideas were a valuable asset in the conduct of the new business and added considerably to its prosperity.

Immediately upon settling in Purcell, Mr. Reichenberger became one of the leading factors in the unbuilding and advancement of the town, and he was instrumental in securing much of the public improvements that have been made there in recent years. He built one of the largest brick structures in Purcell, and his own business was never retarded by his activity in the welfare of the town.

The hardware and implement industry became more profitable each year. In fact its expansion had exceeded Mr. Reichenberger's most sanguine expectations. In the meanwhile, however, Mr. Reichenberger never lost sight of his farm and he realized that the place was running down in fertility, as there was no stock left on the land. It got so that a profitable crop could hardly be produced and with that situation confronting him, Mr. Reichenberger decided it would be poor policy to allow such a condition to continue without some effort at a remedy.

The affection of his eyes had considerably improved by this time, and in fact it had almost disappeared. Mr. Reichenberger decided to dispose of his town business and go back to the farm and his livestock. Selling out to good advantage, Mr. Reichenberger now fully made up his mind to devote the best energies at his command to build up and improve the place where he was born. He fully realized that no makeshift measures would be productive of results and determined to conduct the operations on a systematic and business-like scale. The wornout condition of the soil was sadly apparent and none but the most judicious methods could restore it to its original fertility. The absence of livestock for so long had worked havoc as there were neither droppings nor manure with which the soil might at least be conserved.

This was the situation which confronted Mr. Reichenberger when he gave up his business in town and took up the management of his home place once more. Livestock were again introduced on the farm and extensive preparations made to thoroughly rehabilitate it and improve the fertility of the soil. Mr. Reichenberger is a firm believer in the efficacy of livestock for the success of any well regulated farm and he paid special attention to that end of the management. None but the most approved breeds were installed on the place and their selection was a matter of much concern to the owner.

Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Murray of Colby, Formerly of Denton, a Wedding Picture.

Mr. Reichenberger from the start had decided to operate his farm on strictly business principles, allowing so much for loss or shrinkage and fixing a stated sum for interest charges on the investment. These items are all taken into consideration when the profits are being computed so that the owner may know to a fraction the amount of money it requires to operate the farm. No detail is overlooked and no loophole is left where profits might escape. Nothing is allowed to go to waste and both feeding and cultivation are conducted with a view to securing the best possible results both for present requirements and future contingencies.

With the livestock feature of the farm thus intelligently arranged, Mr. Reichenberger next gave his attention to the manner and methods by which the crops should be raised. He is a firm believer in a short rotation in crops, including some of the legumes such as June clover, sweet clover, cowpeas and other equally good varieties of stock feed. Grain farming had in former years greatly depleted or impoverished the soil so that it failed to give satisfactory or profitable yields. Consequently, Mr. Reichenberger decided to remedy that condition by providing for a regular rotation in crops.

The leading grain crops on the Reichenberger farm are corn, wheat and oats. The chief aim is to rotate them with the legumes so as to keep up the humus content of the soil. With the approach of every harvest the wisdom of Mr. Reichenberger's system becomes more apparent, as the yields are noticeably becoming more abundant with every succeeding year. The system is undoubtedly the most beneficial that could be employed and its continuation is practically certain to restore the soil to its original productivity.

Every atom of fertilizer that may be produced on the Reichenberger farm is utilized to the best possible advantage. All the manure is carefully saved and used to further advantage on the farm by means of lots of bedding for the livestock kept on the place. This is regularly hauled to the field and every spring all the lots are carefully scraped over and the manure that is ordinarily wasted is saved.

Mr. Reichenberger is firmly convinced that without plenty of livestock no farm can be conducted successfully. As far as profits are concerned there is no doubt in his mind that stock feeding is an essential element in the proper management of a farm because the stock not only bring immediate returns to the farmer, but they are unequaled as a soil improver. Consequently as many cows as the place will carry to good advantage are kept there and are summered on clover pasture supplemented with clover hay. The owner has learned by experience that the tendency to bloat is materially lessened by this method of feeding.

It has been the rule with Mr. Reichenberger to place the cows on a permanent pasture about July 1 and keep them there for at least two months so as to allow the clover to go to seed. Later those cows are brought back and permitted to graze on the aftermath before plowing the clover ground for corn. The above rule is never deviated from by the owner of the farm and he seems thoroughly satisfied with the results obtained both as to improving the condition of the stock and the productiveness of the soil.

While Mr. Reichenberger is not setting himself up as an example of a model farmer, he strongly believes that his methods are as good, if not better, than any others that may be adopted in an effort to make profits and restore the soil at the same time. His balance sheet at the end of each year surely confirms his judgment and demonstrates that much may be accomplished where intelligent and judicious methods are systematically pursued.

CHARLES MURRAY

A Successful Business Man and a Good Citizen—Has Made Perceptable Progress in Past Decade.

Whenever we read of wealthy men who once were poor and achieved a fortune while still young enough to enjoy it, we are inclined usually to doubt the tale, but here in Doniphan County we have the case of a man who by pure effort and precipitous perseverance, has amassed for himself and family wealth that he little dreamed of when a boy. This man is Charles Murray of Colby, Kansas. Possessed of indomitable courage and a strong and healthy constitution that assisted him to a great extent, Mr. Murray by small degrees at first began the foundation of his fortune. Carefulness and economy in small things tended to make him shrewd and capable in the management of greater things when they came his way.

Mr. Murray is a Virginian by birth and a Kansan by adoption and inclination. Charles Murray was born in Radcliffe, Giles County, Virginia, on September 24, 1879. His kind and chivalrous manners are no doubt his heritage from that land famous for the courtesy and uprightness of its men and noted for furnishing so many Presidents. Charles came to Denton, Kansas, with his mother at the age of six years, and there they settled and made a home. The boy was sent to school, where he studied, played and broke the rules just like countless other boys. Mother Murray did not despair of her son's future, and when he coaxed her one day to let him sell papers after school and during vacations, she consented, knowing that it wouldn't hurt him, and might encourage his youthful mind to have the privilege of earning money. Charles was a very busy boy then for sometime on the streets of Denton, selling the Kansas City Journal and the Saturday Evening Post. The people became accustomed to his little figure so intent on his business, and missed him if he was absent from his haunts for a day. His income was 25 cents a day. Nowadays Charles Murray spends more than that in a single day for gasoline.

When school days were over, and the lad was strong enough to do heavier work, he secured work on the section, working on the Rock Island Railroad out of Denton. By practicing the most rigid economy and not missing a day's work, young Murray saved $300, and while he was not ashamed of his section job, he decided that he preferred to invest his money and get into a business life. There are few young fellows of today who start out on section jobs who ever figure on reaching the plane where Charles Murray is today. He had no gifts of fortune to aid him; it all came through his own endeavor, and the man of today has even better opportunities than the youth did in those days.
